MEETING OF FOREIGN MINISTERS

Reference: EX-1240 of July 11th, and EX-1249 of July 13th.

Your suggestion, that it might be desirable for the final communiqué of the Foreign Ministers to say that there will be consultation regarding conclusions of the conference with the governments of other NATO countries and Germany, has been passed on to the conference through the State Department. We gather that the current draft of the final communiqué already contains reference to consultation with Germany in the passages dealing with German problems. We were also assured that it was of course intended that there would be consultation with other NATO Governments on the conclusions of the conference and that consideration would be given to making an appropriate reference to this in the communiqué.

TOP SECRET

INFORMAL COUNCIL MEETING — POLITICAL DISCUSSIONS: MEETING OF THE BIG THREE FOREIGN MINISTERS

Repeat London No. 79. (Copy referred to Bonn by air bag).

The Council went into secret session on July 15 in order to hear a report from the United States representative on the discussions recently completed by the French, United States and United Kingdom Foreign Ministers. Mr. Hughes made an introductory statement, explaining that he was not able to distribute copies, and subsequently read the note of invitation which had been agreed upon and was to be transmitted that day to the Soviet Ambassadors in Paris, Washington and London.

2. Mr. Hughes made it clear that his introductory statement was designed to "inform the North Atlantic Council of the conclusions reached by the Three Foreign Ministers on subjects of direct concern to NATO". Stating that a considerable portion of their time had been devoted to recent Soviet policy and the implications of the Beria purge, he mentioned the following points on which one or more of the foreign ministers had expressed a view:

(1) The Beria incident might herald a tougher Soviet line either internally or externally or perhaps both.

(2) It would, however, be dangerous to rely too heavily on this possibility, even though there was historical precedent for it, as there were already some indications that the "peace offensive" was continuing.

(3) It might be that the peace offensive would continue to be pressed, not so much for foreign policy reasons, as to fit in with other steps being taken under pressure of internal unrest in the Soviet Union itself and also in the satellites, particularly East Germany and Hungary.

(4) There was evidence that the broad lines of policy which have been followed by the West were achieving favourable results and should be pursued; nevertheless, it would be important to retain flexibility in tactics in order to cope with new situations as they might emerge.

(5) It had been agreed that an element in Western policy should be the encouragement of the satellite peoples in their aspirations for freedom from the Soviet yoke, although such encouragement should not be designed to incite revolt.

(6) Due recognition should be given to the strong pressures within Germany for unification, but this must not be permitted to sidetrack the establishment of the European Defence Community.

(7) An invitation would be extended immediately to the Soviet Union to participate in Four-Power consultations relating particularly to the solution of the German problem. These conversations should not be held until after the German elections and both their duration and agenda should be specified in advance and limited in extent. The talks should take place at Foreign Minister level and should be restricted to problems where there was some hope of achieving solutions. In particular, they should be directed toward agreement upon free elections in Germany and the establishment of a free and independent German Government which could subsequently participate in the negotiation of a peace treaty. A lesser agenda item might be a peace treaty for Austria.

(8) This proposal for Four-Power talks, to be held perhaps in late September, was not intended to exclude the possibility of subsequent talks possibly at a different level on various other matters.

3. Elaborating slightly on the foregoing, Mr. Hughes said that the Foreign Ministers had recognized the dangers in proposing Four-Power talks before the establishment of the EDC. They had, however, considered that the plan was worth going ahead with in view of the help that it could be expected to give Chancellor Adenauer in his election campaign and perhaps to the French Government in obtaining ratification of the EDC Treaty. The United States and the United Kingdom stressed their continuing determination to support the plan for the EDC, and indicated that they had no intention of allowing the proposed Four-Power talks to lead to its abandonment.

4. Mr. Hughes briefly mentioned other subjects raised at the meeting. The United States had given an exposé of the Korean situation. The French had given an exposé of developments in Indo-China with particular emphasis placed upon the recent declaration of a more liberal policy concerning Indo-Chinese independence; the United States and United Kingdom Foreign Ministers had welcomed the latter initiative taken by the French Government.

MEETING OF BIG THREE FOREIGN MINISTERS AND PROPOSED MEETING OF BIG FOUR

Reference: Our telegram 564 of July 8 and your telegram to Washington EX-1240 of July 11.

External Ottawa please pass to Washington as our No. 10; London No. 80. (Copies referred to Rome and Bonn by airbag).

1. On July 16, we received a visit from the new counsellor in the Italian delegation to NATO, Mr. Belcredi (he was in Ottawa during 1933-34 in their consular service). He wanted to find out informally what the Canadian reactions had been to the Italian proposal for a meeting of the fifteen foreign ministers, including the German (see our telegram under reference).

2. Before replying, we invited [him] to elaborate on the proposal which had been put forward by his ambassador, Mr. Rossi Longhi, in the North Atlantic Council and which we had not fully understood. Mr. Belcredi explained that the political situation in Italy was very delicately balanced, indeed only that day Signor de Gasperi had formed a minority government. It was most important that the big three should not give the impression that they were taking the decisions and that the other smaller countries were being dragged along behind. Hence, the desire of the Italian authorities that the foreign ministers of the big three, whose meeting in the United States was now over, should have made it clear in their final communiqué that they were going to consult with the other countries concerned. The Italian authorities had been fairly well pleased with the final communiqué as it had emerged, with its strong emphasis on NATO as a cornerstone of policy, but they would clearly have preferred some more explicit reference to consultation with the NATO allies, if not with Germany. Looking to the future they hoped that there would in fact be such consultation before the meeting now proposed of the foreign ministers of the United States, the United Kingdom, France and the USSR.

3. We asked how far it was necessary, from the Italian point of view, that such consultations should include Germany. Mr. Belcredi replied that he did not think that the formal inclusion of Germany in the consultations was essential from the Italian point of view. It was the opinion of the Italian authorities that the inclusion of Germany in the consultations would strengthen Dr. Adenauer in the coming elections in the German Federal Republic. However, their attitude on this point, as indeed on others, was flexible.

4. Replying to Mr. Belcredi's original question about the Canadian attitude, we said that we had only received a brief and preliminary report referring to a conversation between the Italian Ambassador in Ottawa and yourself (your telegram under reference). It had been your view that it would have been unwise to press the big three foreign ministers to propose the conference suggested by the Italians. On the other hand, Canada welcomed political discussions in the North Atlantic Council. Subjects to be discussed by the big four (at the meeting now proposed) could well be discussed in advance, as appropriate, in the council, and the council could at the same time consider the matter of consultations with Germany.

5. We made it clear that the discussions which we envisaged as possibly taking place in the council would be at the level of permanent representatives. Mr. Belcredi, on the other hand, felt that from the Italian point of view a special meeting of foreign ministers, or perhaps a meeting of the council at the foreign minister level, with appropriate publicity, would be a good deal more effective in persuading Italian opinion that substantial consultation was taking place amongst the fourteen (or fifteen) countries in advance of the proposed meeting of the big four.

6. Although Mr. Belcredi emphasized the informality of his approach it looks as if the Italians may take some further initiative in the council. We would appreciate further guidance on the issues raised.

ITALIAN PROPOSAL

Reference: Your telegram No. 579 of July 17.
Repeat Washington No. EX-1303; London No. 1244.

We appreciate the desire of the Italians, and indeed of other members of the Council, that the Big Three should not make decisions on matters of common concern without consulting their friends; and even though our channels of consultation with the big powers are better than those of some other countries, we too are most anxious that the habit of political discussion in the Council should be developed.

2. But the chances of a four-power meeting achieving any success would be prejudiced if it were made apparent to the Russians in advance that they were to be presented with the firm views of all NATO countries. For that reason we would not be inclined to favour a special meeting of foreign ministers, or a Council meeting at foreign minister level. A normal Council meeting of permanent representatives would permit an adequate exchange of views, but would not give the impression that the NATO countries were drafting an ultimatum to be presented on their behalf by the big three to the Russians.

3. Another argument against a Council meeting at foreign minister level would be the difficulty of announcing substantial achievements or decisions to justify the publicity such a meeting would attract.

4. It is hoped these rather general ideas may be helpful if the Italians again take the initiative in this matter.

POLITICAL DISCUSSIONS IN THE COUNCIL — SOVIET REPLY TO PROPOSALS FOR FOUR-POWER TALKS

The Italian delegation here have enquired:

(a) As to our views on the Soviet note;

(b) Whether we would favour an exchange of views at an informal Council Meeting on the interpretation of that note; such an exchange of views, they feel, might make it easier, later on, for the smaller NATO countries to make suggestions as to the answer which might be returned.

2. As we have always been in favour of council discussions on such subjects, and as we have supported the Italians in their efforts to bring NATO as much as possible into the results flowing from the three-power meeting in Washington, we feel that we might answer that we would agree to an informal discussion along the lines they suggest.

3. Action required: We should appreciate receiving your views on: (a) The desirability of an exchange of views on the interpretation to be given to the Soviet note and later on, on the answer to be returned; (b) the Canadian reactions to the Soviet note.

COUNCIL DISCUSSION OF SOVIET NOTE OF AUGUST 4

Reference: Our telegram No. 630 of August 18.†

Following from the Acting Under-Secretary, Begins: It is assumed here that the receipt of the new Soviet Note of August 16, and the lack of time for Governments to reach firm conclusions on it and convey them to their representatives in Paris, will mean that Friday's informal discussion will be of a tentative and exploratory nature.

2. It has occurred to us, however, that the presence in Paris of the Big Three experts engaged in drafting a reply to the Soviet Government might provide an opportunity for the Council to obtain up-to-the-minute information on the progress of their work. You may wish to consider the desirability of asking the United Kingdom and possibly the United States and French delegations whether they will be in a position to report to the Council on the experts' deliberations, or whether they would welcome an invitation from the Council to the experts themselves to meet with the Council members. If it appeared appropriate, you might also wish to discuss this suggestion with Lord Ismay.

3. We are in general agreement with the Foreign Office views on a reply to the Soviet Note of August 4, see Canada House telegram No. 1427 of August 15,† repeated to you with my telegram under reference.

4. A subsequent telegram from London, which has not been repeated to you, states that the initial Foreign Office view is that the new Soviet Note need not be replied to in detail, and that the Foreign Office draft reply to the first Soviet Note need not be substantially changed as a result of the receipt of the second one. We also agree with this conclusion. In our opinion, the Western reply might deal with the second Soviet Note at this stage by stating that it had been noted with interest as an indication of the type of proposal which the Soviet representative might wish to advance at the forthcoming Big Four Conference.

5. We have been pleased to note that neither the State Department nor the Foreign Office appears likely to take an absolutely unyielding position on the question of broadening the agenda for a Big Four Conference, although they will seek to keep the discussion of inappropriate subjects to a minimum. We would hope that the Big Three would similarly refrain from insisting dogmatically on the previously proposed timetable of precise stages for dealing with the German problem. It is clear from the latest Soviet Note that the Soviet side will raise questions of substance in connection with the peace treaty from the start of discussions, and that they can and will make effective propaganda capital of any rigid Western insistence on dealing initially with procedural questions only. We realize, of course, the desirability of taking first things first and the dangers of giving the Russians free rein. At the same time we consider it only realistic to accept the fact that the Russians cannot be prevented from advancing proposals of the kind contained in their second Note; some thought might be given to the possibility of denying them the opportunity of capitalizing on what may appear to be Western attempts to prevent the introduction of questions of substance.

INFORMAL COUNCIL MEETING ON AUGUST 19; DISCUSSIONS ON SOVIET NOTES ON GERMANY

Reference: Your telegram No. 644 of August 20.†

1. Mr. Alphand, the French permanent representative, on behalf of the Big Three, read an agreed statement on the Soviet notes of August 4 and 15 and on the principles which it was intended to follow in drafting a reply.

2. The Soviet notes in question, both long and controversial documents, were not clear, but the three governments had now reached tentative conclusions as to their significance.

3. The note of August 4 dealt with a series of international problems rather than answered the specific July 15th proposal for a conference on Germany: it contained all the known clichés in Soviet propaganda and reiterated the known charges of "dictation" and "ganging-up". The reference to military bases on the territory of other states was perhaps its most unacceptable feature as it constituted a direct attack upon NATO. The approach suggested that the USSR were contemplating a return to the abortive technique followed during the Palais Rose discussions: they were prepared to trade the reunification of Germany against the dismantling of the Atlantic Alliance. The reference to Communist China, was also a clear attempt at dividing the alliance. On the whole the note was essentially a Communist propaganda device. The concluding paragraph, for instance, if read apart from the rest could be presented as an acceptance without conditions of the allied proposal for a four power meeting. The key words, "having regard to the foregoing", could however be referred to, if later on, it became desirable to prove that Soviet acceptance had been qualified. The implied Soviet contention that a settlement of the Austrian problem was linked to the negotiations on Germany was also considered to be significant and discouraging.

4. While the first note dealt with general problems, the second one was limited to the German issue. The latter in particular was attempting to influence Germany and more particularly Eastern Germany; and the former to weaken the Western powers by wrecking the prospects of the EDC and by provoking the dismemberment of the NATO alliance. It was obvious that Soviet leaders were trying to bolster the unstable regime in Eastern Germany and to influence elections in Western Germany by suggesting that the adhesion of Adenauer to the EDC would result in the division of Germany for an indefinite period. It was clear from the note that they were not trying to work out a solution to the German problem and that they were not desirous of attending at this time a conference on Germany. Their main theme was the return to Potsdam which was not mentioned less than six times in the note: the paragraph relating to the proposed provisional government did not refer to the controls which would be exercised by the Big Four.

5. In summary, while the second note was addressed primarily to German opinion, the first one was aimed at non-German opinion and, both represented an all-out propaganda effort to divide the west and to increase hesitations as regards the EDC. It was proposed to send only one reply to these two notes and the agreed purpose was to make it possible to have a four-power conference on Germany on a practical basis. The reply would make it clear that the principles underlying the Soviet notes could not be accepted and that, if no meeting could take place, the responsibility must rest with the USSR. The exact terms of the reply had not been agreed to: any comments which might be made by permanent representatives would be considered by the three governments.

6. The discussion which followed Mr. Alphand's statement disclosed wide agreement among the permanent representatives. They expressed the appreciation of their governments for the opportunity which was given to them to comment on the Soviet notes and on the broad terms of the reply. All agreed that one reply should be sent to the two Soviet notes, that it should be in short and simple terms, that we should not attempt to refute in detail Soviet propaganda points. The general view also was that Germany should be item No. 1 on the agenda but that the possibility of discussing other subjects should not be excluded (apparently, the Big Three had not yet reached agreement on this point, according to Mr. Alphand, who replied to a direct query from the Netherlands representative.)

7. In the course of my remarks, I made the point in particular that the three power reply should not exclude the possibility of discussing in addition to Germany, other questions which might affect international tension. I suggested that it might be left to the foreign ministers themselves to broaden the agenda if it appeared that some progress was to be made. A number of permanent representatives agreed that it was most important not to give the impression that the West was not prepared to discuss broader subjects than Germany at the proposed conference.

8. The Belgian representative drew attention to a number of contradictions in the Soviet notes and suggested that they should be interpreted as a confirmation of the logic of our position. The Netherlands representative reported that, in the view of his government, while Germany should be the first item on the agenda of a four power meeting, the Korean question would be discussed simultaneously in the political conference and, if some success was achieved, the opportunity would have been created for wider exchange of views. The Danish representative argued that there was a widespread feeling in NATO countries that a meeting should be held and that quite apart from its possible results, the decision to hold a conference would be politically important.

9. The Turkish representative referred to the related subject of the recent Soviet notes on the straits: they represented in the view of his government a revival of old Russian claims to security against threats from the straits and were connected with demands for the organization of their defence on a bilateral basis. There were indications, in the Soviet notes, e.g. the reference to bases on foreign territory that the Soviets might raise the question at a conference of foreign ministers. The Turkish view was that such pressure on Turkey fitted into a general policy aiming at the disruption of Atlantic unity: the Turkish Government believed that any problem relating to the straits must be dealt with on a multilateral basis, within the framework of the Montreux Convention. On the general issue, the Turkish Government felt that the allied answer should be firm without being provocative and that NATO unity should be maintained. No concessions should be made through separate negotiations. There was certainly no concrete evidence in the notes that the USSR had any genuine desire of settling outstanding issues.

10. It was agreed that at the informal meeting which is scheduled for Wednesday, August 26, next at 4 pm, discussion might be resumed on the subject, if any permanent representative had further views to express. At that meeting the representatives of the Big Three may be in a position to pass on information as to the progress made in drafting the reply to the Soviet notes.

11. It is significant that there was no discussion whether the reply should be returned before the German election. I did not feel that it would be appropriate to make the suggestion in paragraph 2 of your telegram 639 of August 19 that the Big Three experts engaged in drafting the reply might meet with the Council to discuss the progress of their work as it seemed to me that this would be inconsistent with the special responsibilities of the Big Three for drafting this reply.

12. Action required: I should be glad to learn whether you feel that we should make any further comments at the meeting on Wednesday, August 26th.[15]

INFORMAL COUNCIL MEETING ON AUGUST 26: DISCUSSION ON THREE POWER REPLY TO THE SOVIET NOTES ON GERMANY

Reference: Our telegram No. 629 of August 21, 1953.

1. The United States Permanent Representative reported that the Tripartite Working Group had reached agreement on the draft reply. He added that the three governments had taken into consideration the views expressed by the Permanent Representatives of other NATO countries at the meeting on August 19. The draft had been referred to the three capitals for approval. It was thought that the other NATO countries would be pleased with it generally. The French representative added that the draft reply, which had been agreed, was to be short. There would be no attempt to discuss in detail Soviet propaganda points but the basis of the Soviet notes would be rejected. The draft reply envisaged a Four-Power conference at a fixed date and place. The suggestion was that the Four-Power conference might deal first with Germany but there were no preconditions; while it was naturally expected that there would be a discussion of the question of free elections, other problems such as a peace treaty and German unity were not excluded. The door had not been closed to the examination of other problems. It would be apparent he thought from the foregoing that the three governments had borne in mind the points made in the course of the discussion in the Council on August 19. The United Kingdom representative said that no agreement had been reached yet as to when the note might be presented. He thought, however, that there might be time to communicate the text when it became available to the Council.

2. The Norwegian representative had not received instructions before the meeting on August 19. He was now in a position to indicate that in the views of his government, it was very important that a Four-Power conference should be held. For this reason, the reply to be returned by the Big Three should make it very clear that they were taking a positive attitude in this regard. For this reason also, the Norwegian Government felt that the formula to be adopted in the reply should be as flexible as possible. It was thought in particular that no strict terms or conditions should be given in the reply so as to make it clear to German opinion as well as to the people in the NATO countries that if no conference could be held, the responsibility would rest with the USSR. The Norwegian Government had no definite views as to the timing of the reply; there were advantages both ways, but it was felt it might be preferable to wait until the elections had been held in Germany as then the situation would be clarified.

3. The Italian representative suggested on instructions from his government, that the proposed Four-Power conference might consider the requirements of Soviet security: it was thought that it might be possible to suggest to the Russians in the course of the conference that the integration of Germany into a European community could be reconciled with Soviet security.

4. The United States representative then made a short statement outlining the United States views on the USSR — East Germany agreement announced on August 22. The Soviet Government were trying to recover the initiative they had lost in Germany as a result of the June 17 events, the United States food programme and the tripartite note. In the view of the United States Government, the Soviet reply of August 15 and the agreement of August 22 were indications of the dilemma facing the USSR. They were expressions of the Soviet policy of trying to "ride two horses at the same time"; the reunification of Germany and the rehabilitation of the Soviet regime in Eastern Germany. Both the note of August 15 and the August 22 agreement sought to influence elections in Western Germany. It seemed, therefore, to the United States Government that it was more necessary than ever to reply to the Soviet notes of August 4 and 15 in such a manner as to show that the USSR were not prepared to negotiate over Germany. Mr. Alphand, the French representative, supplemented the United States statement on the basis of reports received from François-Poncet. The Soviet leaders were maintaining in their note of August 15 a thesis which they knew to be wholly unacceptable to the West. It was possible to deduce that the USSR were not interested in a Four-Power meeting and were really more concerned with the continuation of the present division of Germany. The agreement of August 22 had been received coldly and suspiciously by public opinion as a whole in the Western Zone. The concessions made by the USSR were less important than they appeared. They involved rights which had already been conceded to the Eastern German Government and there were many ways of recouping what they had yielded in appearance only. Adenauer had not been affected by the announcement of this agreement. In the course of an electoral meeting, he had stated that if Malenkov was worried over the revival of German militarism, he should congratulate himself on the establishment of the European Defence Community which was aimed at limiting the military potential of Germany.

5. The United Kingdom representative took issue with the point made by the United States representative that the USSR had lost the initiative in Germany since the June 17 events. In his view the Soviets had been losing ground in Germany since the air lift and more particularly since the establishment of NATO.

6. The Italian representative concluded the discussion on these matters by indicating that in the view of his government the agreement of August 22 was basically directed against the unification of Germany and provided another proof that the USSR did not intend to have a Four-Power conference.

INFORMAL COUNCIL MEETING ON SEPTEMBER 1: DISCUSSION OF THREE POWER REPLY TO THE SOVIET NOTES ON GERMANY

Reference: Our telegram No. 640 of August 26.

At a special Council Meeting held at 5 PM on September 1, the Permanent Representatives of the Big Three circulated the agreed text of the reply to the Soviet Notes, making the point that this was being done in accordance with a now established procedure and emphasizing the importance of taking every precaution against premature leaks. The Note was to be delivered on September 2 and released shortly after midnight on September 2/3.

2. In reply to a query from the Belgian representative, the French representative agreed that the last part of paragraph 5 constituted a definite and limited agenda but that if these problems could be solved or reasonable progress made towards a solution, broader issues could then be considered. This, it was recalled, is in accordance with a suggestion made by Mr. Wilgress at the meeting on August 19 (paragraph 7 of our telegram No. 629 of August 21).

3. In conclusion, the Permanent Representatives of the Big Three drew attention to the fact that in its brevity and positive character, in its suggestion for a meeting at a definite time and place and in other respects, the text of the reply conformed to suggestions made in the course of the Council discussions on August 19.

FOREIGN MINISTERS MEETING OF THE THREE POWERS IN LONDON

In conversations with Douglas MacArthur,[16] who is accompanying Mr. Dulles to the London meetings, as well as with a number of other State Department officials, we have obtained some information on the background of the conference and some indication of the attitude which Mr. Dulles may be expected to take on some of the problems to be discussed. Apparently the idea of having a meeting of the three Foreign Ministers after Mr. Eden had returned to the Foreign Office had been under consideration since September. Originally the thought had been to have the three Foreign Ministers meet in Washington when Mr. Eden and Mr. Bidault were in the United States in connection with the opening of the United Nations General Assembly meeting. However, for various reasons Messrs. Bidault and Eden were unable to attend the General Assembly opening. The actual proposal to meet in London was only received in the State Department from Mr. Eden last Friday after Mr. Dulles had left for a weekend trip to his retreat on Duck Island. Thus, the acceptance of Mr. Eden's invitation was not sent from Washington until last Monday.

2. The meetings are to provide the three Foreign Ministers an opportunity to exchange views on a wide variety of international issues in which the three governments have a particularly direct concern. No important decisions are expected to be taken. Indeed, there has been no time to exchange views on the agenda. However, the obvious outstanding issues in Europe and the Far East are bound to come up and the State Department gave us some indication in confidence of the approach which Mr. Dulles might be expected to adopt in the discussions.

3. Mr. Eden is surely expected to raise the question of a top-level meeting with the Russians, to which Sir Winston referred again in his Margate speech. Apparently no new proposals have been received from the British Government on this question. We were given to understand, however, that the United States Government has not altered its rather cautious attitude to this type of meeting. They think that this procedure is inadvisable, unless through careful advance preparations there was clear evidence that the Soviet Government was in a position to make some specific agreement. Such advance preparation would presumably involve meetings of the Foreign Ministers at which real progress had been made. Two main considerations seem to dominate State Department thinking. Past experience with the Soviet [16] Douglas MacArthur II, conseiller, Département d'État des États-Unis, (mars-).

Douglas MacArthur II, Counsellor, Department of State of United States, (Mar.-).

Government has shown that unless agreements are spelt out in the most unambiguous terms, the Soviet Government may be relied upon to exploit any ambiguities in its favour. Therefore, the State Department wish to avoid any hastily drafted statements or agreements affecting relations with the Soviet Union. The type of meeting that Sir Winston has emphasized — without an agenda and advisors — could only lead, in the opinion here, to some kind of general statement which would either be meaningless, or dangerous because it might give rise to misinterpretations and misunderstandings. Thus, in short, while the State Department does not rule out entirely the possibility of such a meeting taking place, it would, in their view, have to be preceded by most careful diplomatic preparation.

4. The three Foreign Ministers are expected to agree on the text of a reply to the Soviet note of September 28 on Germany and world tensions. The drafters in London have apparently found no difficulties in reaching substantial agreement, but the Ministers will no doubt add the finishing touches.

5. While the State Department hope that the question of the ratification of the EDC will not come up for discussion because of the sensitivities of the French (further exacerbated by Sir Winston's references to the French attitude on the question at Margate) but the EDC will naturally be expected to loom large in the discussion of the security of Western Europe. The hope here is that there will be general agreement with the United States view that the opportunity created by Chancellor Adenauer's victory should not be lost to accelerate the development of a rapprochement between Germany and the Western Powers generally, and France in particular. As we have previously reported, the State Department is rather optimistic that the French Government will try to get the ratification of the agreement this year, provided that some progress is made towards the settlement of the Saar issue.

6. The question of further guarantees or assurances to the USSR is also expected to be considered in the context of the discussion of Western European security. The State Department have not progressed very far in defining their attitude on this question. However, they do not favour any new treaty standing by itself. They believe that any new assurances of non-aggression to the USSR would only make sense in the context of a general European settlement and after the ratification of the EDC. This is on the assumption that the Soviet Government intends to hold on to Eastern Germany at all costs and that any new assurances would be of value mainly from the point of view of their psychological impact in Europe. We also gather there is no enthusiasm here for a demilitarized zone in Eastern Germany. In State Department opinion, such a proposal is full of pitfalls, such as the question of the delineation of the boundaries of Germany. In any case, they would not be prepared to negotiate for a demilitarized zone in Europe until after the EDC had been established, since it might be seized upon by the opponents of the EDC as an alternative measure to provide for European security.

7. The question of a German settlement is also expected to be discussed. The United States approach, we gather, has not changed in substance; the objective still is to establish an all-German Government by free elections which would participate in the working out of any settlement of Germany. The State Department do not exclude the possibility that the Soviet Government might agree to a Four-Power conference and that is certainly the immediate aim in the exchange of diplomatic notes now proceeding. However, the State Department are not sanguine that such a Four-Power conference would be able to go much beyond an exchange of general statements and the reiteration of respective Soviet and Western positions.

8. The violent reactions of Tito to the United Kingdom-United States announcement on Trieste will also be discussed. Since neither Italy nor Yugoslavia seemed to be able or willing to agree to any solution voluntarily, it was decided to confront both sides with a "Solomon's judgement". However, it was apparently hoped here that Tito might limit his reactions to the occupation of zone B and would not challenge Italian occupation of zone A. Consideration of some new assurances to Yugoslavia against Italian further expansion is expected by the three Foreign Ministers.

8. There will also be some discussions on Korea and Indo-China.

9. The meetings will last two days. In addition to MacArthur, Mr. Dulles will be accompanied by Robert Bowie, Director of the Policy Planning Staff; Ridgeway Knight, Deputy Director of Western European Affairs; and Roderic O'Connor, Special Assistant to Dulles. The Secretary of State is expected back in Washington by Monday morning.

SECRET. IMPORTANT.

Following for Robertson from the Minister, Begins: I should much appreciate any information which you can let me have regarding the tripartite Dulles, Eden, Bidault meeting in London. We know nothing of the background of this meeting here. In fact we first learned of it over the BBC. Nor have we been told anything so far in Washington about the background or agenda of the meeting.

2. When you saw Eden on Tuesday did he give you any information on this subject. Although press reports indicate that the meeting had been planned some time in advance, we are inclined to think that this might be cover for a more hasty decision to arrange a meeting arising out of the aggravation of the Trieste situation.

3. The Canadian newspapers today are full of a story originating with Drew Middleton of the New York Times to the effect that "Canada, the United States and Britain, three non-Continental powers, should guarantee Europe against aggression by any party signatory to EDC or member of NATO". We are denying that any such proposal has been put to the Canadian Government.

4. You will recall that in the United Kingdom memorandum on "Security arrangements with the Soviet Union" (contained in your telegram 1624 of September 25†), one of the alternatives advanced is along these lines. This was described in your telegram 1623 of September 25† as "a Foreign Office memorandum" and we have no indication that it has received Ministerial approval in the United Kingdom or that any one of the alternatives mentioned therein has been adopted by the United Kingdom Government. Meanwhile the document has been studied in the Department at the official level and we hoped to let the United Kingdom authorities have our tentative and preliminary views in the near future.

5. I must say that I am somewhat disconcerted at the complete lack of prior information either from United Kingdom or United States sources about the purpose or agenda of the present tripartite meeting; especially in view of reports that Canada might be involved in the discussions. I assume that no such discussions of Canadian participation in any guarantee will take place without reference to us. Ends.

Following for the Minister from Robertson, Begins: When I saw Selwyn Lloyd on Saturday last, he did inadvertently say something about "if or when Eden sees Dulles". He was obviously embarrassed by saying something he hadn't intended to say, started to explain, and then said that this was a subject on which he was not authorized to say anything to anybody. I said that in the circumstances I wouldn't pursue the question.

2. I did not see Eden on Tuesday as arranged in my interview with Lloyd, because in the meantime the Chinese reply had been received and the United States answer despatched, and the urgency of considering the alternative approach was obviously lessened. I think if I had seen Eden he probably would have told me a little more about his plans than Selwyn Lloyd felt authorized to do.

3. At a high but unelected level I am given to understand that the immediate occupation for the meeting is the return of Churchill and Eden to London and the need to follow it up with a visible initiative which will fill the gap between the Margate Conference and the coming Holborn bye-election. A good deal is expected by public opinion here of the return of the Prime Minister and the Foreign Minister to their posts, and the tripartite review of the situation in London seemed to the Foreign Secretary and his advisers a useful first step in meeting the requirements of this situation. Another reason why they wanted to have talks in London is that meeting here will permit the Prime Minister to put his oar in, if he wishes to, without necessarily waiting for the arrangement of meetings at the highest level. The general impression I got from Frank Roberts,[17] who is sitting in with Eden in the talks, is that though the range of discussions will probably cover all the topics listed in our telegram No. 1708,† most of them are likely to be dealt with fairly lightly. The United Kingdom do attach a good deal of importance to getting their position vis-à-vis the United States really straightened out at this time on Egypt and if possible on Persia. As a result of Adenauer's comments, which have been reported separately, the reply to the Russian Note, which had been tentatively agreed between the three Western powers, will undoubtedly receive more consideration than the Foreign Office expected when they gave us the list of topics which they anticipated would be brought up during the discussions. I have no reason to disbelieve the official disclaimer that developments in Trieste were not the real reason for calling a meeting at this time. Hancock[18] of the Foreign Office has told us that there is no truth in Middleton's story so far as the Foreign Office is concerned. The Foreign Office memorandum, to which you referred in paragraph 4, received Ministerial approval, but was purposely left in the form of alternative methods of offering guarantees in order that the alternatives might be considered at the tripartite meetings of experts. None of the alternatives mentioned in the memorandum have been adopted by the United Kingdom Government, and Hancock went so far today as to say that he rather doubted whether the United Kingdom Government would come down in favour of any particular alternative in the near future. We assumed from this remark that the Foreign Office for the moment regards this particular memorandum as a paper exercise which could not be taken much further without having some indication of Soviet thinking. As any detailed examination of this question by the Foreign Ministers would anticipate exhaustive consideration by the tripartite meeting experts, Hancock did not expect anything more than general discussion, if any, at the current meeting. Ends.

SOVIET NOTE

Reference: London telegrams Nos. 1834 and 1837 (repeated to us as Nos. 147 and 148) of November 6.†

It is now very likely that there will be a Council discussion of the Soviet note and of the various related problems. We are not yet sure whether this discussion will take place at the regular Council meeting on November 18 or in the course of the informal luncheon session which has been arranged by Lord Ismay for the same day.

2. It seems to us that, in the future, there would be advantages, as suggested by MacArthur, if the Council and Germany could be consulted by the Big Three earlier than hitherto in the proceedings.

3. In this regard, we should welcome your views on the appreciation of the Soviet note and the reply to be returned. For my part, I agree with the Foreign Office view that the reply should be brief but that it should not close the door nor give the impression that the West is relieved that the USSR have turned down their suggestion for a four-power conference and that the offer had merely been a formal effort to appease certain elements in the West before proceeding with the ratification of the EDC.

4. A more important problem arises as to future policy for NATO. Both the State Department and the Foreign Office, apparently, envisage some kind of statement or resolution by the NATO Council. I should appreciate receiving your comments as to the timing and the nature of such a statement.

5. My own opinion is that the next ministerial meeting might provide a good opportunity to review NATO policy and to issue a statement on the policy of the member countries as regards their defence arrangements and their desire to reduce east-west tension through negotiations, whenever the USSR give any reason to believe that they are not demanding impossible conditions and are prepared to accept a procedure which involves reasonable hope of success.

6. I am somewhat disturbed by MacArthur's "back seat" approach to the problem of European security. The United States are, whether they like it or not, the leaders of the alliance, and the prospects that it will be continued and the EDC ratified are directly related to the United States determination to remain in the front seat and to accept the necessary responsibilities. If European security is to be organized within the Atlantic framework, e.g. on the basis of the alliance with the United States, the United States must, as a matter of urgency, consider what steps may be required to enable France and Italy, particularly, to meet the latest and perhaps the most formidable Soviet challenge so far. Atlantic Council resolution will not replace sober discussions on the necessary United States contribution if the requirements of European security are to be met.

7. Action required: I should appreciate receiving, before November 18, if at all possible, your comments on the above points and your suggestions as to the line I might take when these various problems come up for discussion.

INFORMAL AND RESTRICTED COUNCIL MEETING ON NOVEMBER 12: TRIPARTITE REPLY TO THE LATEST SOVIET NOTE

Reference: Our telegram No. 795 of November 9.
Repeat London No. 112.

At the suggestion of the United States representative, a short but interesting meeting of the Council was held on Thursday, November 12, at 11.

2. The United States representative made a survey of the seven communications exchanged with the USSR since July 15 last summarizing the main points of each tripartite and Soviet document.

3. The United Kingdom representative then outlined the latest Soviet note of November 4. He recalled that on three occasions the western powers had proposed a conference to consider the German and the Austrian questions. Each time, the USSR had replied at greater length, arguing that the basic causes of international tension required prior consideration and that China had to be present even if she was not to take part in the discussion on Germany and Austria. The western powers could not agree that any progress could be made unless specific issues were discussed and, above all, they wanted to avoid a repetition of the Palais Rose precedent where agreement could not be reached on the agenda.

4. The Soviet note of November 4 was longer than ever and while it maintained the same line of argument as the previous ones, the demands and pre-conditions were more explicit.

5. The note pointed out that there had been no reply to the Soviet note of August 28 on Austria. The Big Three were considering this point. They would have preferred to deal with the Austrian question at a conference.

6. On Far Eastern problems, the USSR were suggesting Chinese participation in the proposed conference, the seating of China at the United Nations; the Big Three were of the opinion that there would be no point in attempting to reach agreement on other issues before a settlement was agreed as regards Korea.

7. The Soviet note demanded the dismantling of NATO and the elimination of western bases in Europe. It also required that all progress on the EDC should cease before there could be a conference. This was wholly unacceptable.

8. The Big Three had maintained all along that the correct procedure concerning Germany was to organize free elections and then to set up an all-German government which would negotiate the peace treaty; the Soviet proposed a provisional government which would be an amalgam of the Bonn and of the Pankow regimes: the peace treaty would be negotiated forthwith with this government rather than with one which had been freely elected. It was clear from the Soviet note that the Soviet Government were unwilling to negotiate.

9. The USSR was certainly concerned as to security but the western powers had also to take into account their own security requirements and they could not agree that a defenceless Europe should be the price for a conference with the USSR. Under the circumstances, they had reached the conclusion that no useful progress could be made by further exchanges of notes.

10. M. Alphand, the French permanent representative, then proceeded to go over the main points which should be covered by the tripartite reply. He suggested that the USSR were unwilling to negotiate because they were engaged in a difficult internal reorganization which could not yet be assessed in all its aspects but such being the case, the main features of the tripartite reply to their latest note were clear enough. It had to be simple and short, it had to indicate that the Soviet offers were not acceptable as a basis for negotiations and it had to leave the door open for further discussions without, however, suggesting a definite date for a conference. The Big Three intended to send their reply very soon probably early next week, but they were prepared to consider any suggestions or comments which might be made by other members of the council.

11. In the short discussion which followed these three statements, it appeared that there was general agreement that: (a) There should be a reply to the Soviet note; (b) it should be short; (c) policy could not be changed as regards NATO and the EDC as the price for a conference, (d) the door should be left open to further discussions.

12. We made the suggestion that as the Soviet note attempted to demonstrate that international tension was due to NATO rearmament and bases, it might be well, in one or two sentences of the tripartite reply not to leave this point unanswered. The Netherlands representative agreed, on the understanding that the reference to this point should be short. The Portuguese representative thought that it might be pointed out that NATO rearmament had followed not preceded the present tension: the NATO countries had been forced to rearm against the threat represented by Soviet policy. The Norwegian representative supported also my suggestion and invited the Big Three to consider what steps might be taken to counter Soviet propaganda. It was clear that the USSR did not intend to negotiate. Its reply was devised for propaganda purposes chiefly and adequate NATO measures would have, in time, to be concerted. The representatives of the Big Three took note of my suggestion and agreed to bring it to the attention of their respective governments.

13. As an informal meeting is to be held next Wednesday, it was suggested that either at that meeting or on a suitable occasion soon thereafter, it might be useful to have an exchange of views as to what the next steps for NATO might be now that the exchange of notes with the USSR was to be brought to an end and we might be entering a new phase. It was agreed that this would be very desirable particularly in view of the forthcoming Bermuda Conference which would be concerned with these and related problems. The general view was that not only should the Big Three indicate what plans they may now have in mind as regards the future course for NATO, Germany, the EDC, but that the other member countries should also be prepared to give their own views on these problems.

14. Action required: In view of the discussions which will take place probably on Wednesday next, November 18, or soon thereafter, on future NATO policy concerning Germany, the EDC, security arrangements and related problems, I should appreciate very much any comments or guidance you could let me have in this connection.

NATO DISCUSSIONS OF SOVIET NOTE

Reference: Your telegram No. 795 of November 9, and No. 806 of November 12 (received Nov. 15).

Following from the Under-Secretary, Begins: Since the Soviet price for negotiation on Germany has now been stated explicitly as the abandonment of NATO bases and the EDC, I think there is some merit in an early Council resolution expressing determination to go ahead with our defence plans. However, it might not, repeat not, be desirable to involve the NATO Council in any direct exchange of verbal hostilities with the Soviet Government. I think, for example that it should not be expected that a NATO Council resolution would henceforth be produced to meet every official Soviet pronouncement criticising NATO. I therefore agree with you that the next ministerial meeting would be an appropriate occasion for the suggested resolution. This would give the Council action a more general nature than that of a direct reply to the Soviet Note. The fact that NATO was specifically taken to task in the last Soviet Note, however, shows the importance of the NATO Council being not only consulted, but consulted at a sufficiently early moment in regard to the reply to be sent, for such suggestions as you have made regarding the contents of the reply to receive the consideration which they deserve. (Consultation of the NATO Council could well be made earlier in a parallel progress with the earlier consultation of the German authorities.)

2. I also agree with your views on the futility of any serious United States attempt to "take a back seat" on these matters, but I do not see that we can make any explicit objections if the United States wants to have this particular resolution fostered by United Kingdom and France.

3. The foregoing relates primarily to the points raised in your telegram No. 795 of November 9. On the broader question mentioned in your telegram No. 806 of November 12, regarding the future course for NATO, Germany and the EDC, it seems to me that the very explicit Soviet Note has to some extent cleared the air. There was never any serious hope that the USSR would meet Western terms on Germany (in effect, surrender of East Germany), without a solid concession in return. Although there was talk of a reciprocal security guarantee of some sort, it was always fairly clear that the minimum Soviet price would be a "neutralized" Germany. That is to say no German participation in EDC. Now that the USSR is explicitly on record as demanding not only this, but also, in effect, the scrapping of NATO, as the price for talks, it should be easier to press ahead with the ratification of the EDC since there is clearly no likelihood of any early bargain with the USSR. It would seem that Germany will continue divided and that there is very little NATO can do about it, at any rate by peaceful means. The attack on NATO itself in the Soviet Note can perhaps be handled satisfactorily by the proposed resolution at the ministerial meeting.

4. In regard to the EDC, I would also think that, although the air should have been cleared by the definiteness of the Russian stand, there would be a case for entering a caution against a policy of drift, because of its effects on the German attitude. The day will soon come when the Federal Republic will have ratified the Bonn and Paris treaties, and preparations should be made to meet the normal German expectation of progress towards the ends envisaged in the Bonn and Paris treaties. The result of a failure to act cannot but be sourness in the Germans, a loss of momentum for the Western-looking policies to which the Chancellor has shown his dedication and on which he received such resounding support in the September elections, and the inevitable ascendancy of alternative policies in German minds and a search for alternative solutions.

5. There has been no opportunity to discuss this telegram with the Minister. Therefore please speak with reserve on the idea of a Council Resolution about which we do not feel much enthusiasm. Ends.

ATTENDANCE OF LORD ISMAY AT BERMUDA CONFERENCE

Lord Ismay gave a luncheon for the Council today at the conclusion of which there was an informal meeting. The United Kingdom representative made a statement about the Bermuda Conference, stressing the fact there would be no agenda and that the discussion would range over all matters of major concern to the Three Powers. He then said that it had been decided to invite Lord Ismay to attend the conference.

2. Lord Ismay elaborated by stating that he had been invited to arrive on December 6, two days after the conference opened. He wished to receive guidance from the Council as to what his status at the conference should be and what general line he should take. He also wished to know whether he should take an information officer with him. Finally he said that he would like to have another informal meeting next week to go into this matter further.

3. There then ensued a very guarded discussion. The Netherlands representative was the first to state that he did not think it would be right for Lord Ismay to express the views of all fourteen NATO countries at a meeting of the Three Powers. As far as publicity was concerned he said that it would be wise to keep the Bermuda Conference and the NATO Ministerial Meeting quite distinct. There was support for these views from several representatives, including Alphand.

4. When I spoke I said that what had been said indicated the importance of the informal meeting which was to be held next week. I felt that all concerned should give careful consideration to the guidance we wished to give to Lord Ismay. I added that my tentative views were that Lord Ismay might outline at the Bermuda Conference the present state of NATO as revealed by the Annual Review and recent Council discussions, but that he should not express views on the substance of the issues that were being discussed by the Three Powers, indicating that the appropriate place for the views of the NATO countries to be expressed would be at the Ministerial Meeting of the Council. He could report back to the Council his general impressions of the Bermuda Conference, in this way supplementing the reports we will receive from the representatives on the Council of the Three Powers concerned. Finally, I said that he should take along an information officer with him as a protection against the importunities of the press.

5. After the meeting broke up, a number of the representatives expressed concern at the possible implications of having Lord Ismay go to Bermuda as the spokesman of the NATO Council. As a result Starkenborgh suggested an informal meeting tomorrow in his office, at which will be present the representatives of Belgium, Canada, Italy and the Netherlands. I shall send you a telegram on the results of this meeting.

6. It seems to me that the other member countries should have been consulted before the invitation was extended to Lord Ismay by the Three Powers. If he is to attend, I think that, in addition to the points mentioned in paragraph 4, he should stress the importance of consultations within the Council on any problems which may face the alliance. In particular, he should urge that the Three Powers should not make and announce before the ministerial meeting any decisions as regards current issues affecting NATO countries as a whole.

7. As to the presentation to be made of Lord Ismay's attendance at Bermuda, it may be desirable to stress that, while he will not speak on behalf of the other members of NATO, he will report to the Three Powers on the present state of the organization and bring back from Bermuda impressions which should assist in preparing for the ministerial meeting. If it were so presented, Lord Ismay's presence in Bermuda would contribute to lessening the impression that the Three Powers were lining up on the major issues and that the NATO Ministerial Meeting would merely endorse their decisions.

8. The informal meeting of the Council to discuss the guidance to be given to Lord Ismay on the attitude he should adopt at the Bermuda Conference will be held at 4:00 p.m. on Tuesday, November 24.

9. Action required:

Your views on this subject are requested before November 24.

NATO DISCUSSIONS OF SOVIET NOTE

Reference: Your telegram No. 838 of November 17.

I agree with the various points made in your telegram under reference.

2. At the informal meeting on November 18 the Council discussed the invitation which had been extended to Lord Ismay to attend the Bermuda Conference and there was no time to examine the future course of NATO policy in view of Soviet unwillingness to attend a four-power conference. I am confident, however, that there will be an early opportunity to exchange views on this most important subject.

3. While I still feel that at the next Ministerial meeting some expression should be given to the view that as a result of Soviet policy the NATO countries have now no alternative but to continue their defence build-up while remaining ready at any time to discuss with the USSR on any basis which offers reasonable hope of progress, I am not sure that this should be done in the form of a separate NATO resolution.

4. On further thought, it seems to me that it might be better to deal with this point in the general communiqué:

(a) A separate declaration on NATO policy would weaken the general communiqué as it would isolate from it one of the most important issues to be discussed at the meeting;

(b) Such a statement might be received with some suspicion: it might possibly give rise to speculation that the NATO countries were not in full agreement, that unanimity on the policy involved had been difficult to reach and that it had been thought necessary to underline this achievement in a special statement. The declaration would therefore be considered to be more significant possibly in relation to NATO countries than vis-à-vis the USSR.

5. If you agree, I propose therefore, when this point comes up for discussion, to take the line that:

(a) NATO determination to go ahead with its defence plans must be reaffirmed at the next Ministerial meeting;

(b) That on the whole it may be more effective to deal with this matter in the general communiqué rather than in a separate declaration.

ATTENDANCE OF LORD ISMAY AT BERMUDA CONFERENCE

Reference: My telegram No. 827 of November 18.

The discussion between the representatives of Belgium, Canada, Italy and the Netherlands referred to in paragraph 5 of my telegram under reference took place this afternoon. One result of the discussion was that it was felt that the best formula for public presentation would be that Lord Ismay was attending the Bermuda Conference as an observer and that he would report to the North Atlantic Council the results of the Conference.

2. An inclusive discussion then took place as to what should be the attitude of the representatives of the other countries if at the informal meeting on Tuesday Lord Ismay should ask for guidance as to what he should say on any questions of substance that might come up at the Bermuda Conference. It was felt that while it would be in order for Lord Ismay to answer questions on the present state of the Organization it would not be appropriate for him to appear as a spokesman for the eleven other countries. It was also felt that this was not an occasion for the representatives of the three powers to sit back and listen to what the representatives of the other NATO countries had to say. This was appropriate in the case of discussions on Germany or on replies to the Soviet notes for which the three powers had special responsibilities, but was hardly appropriate in the case of a general discussion on the present state of NATO. Moreover, such a general discussion would anticipate what the Ministers would be saying at the forthcoming Ministerial meeting.

3. It was finally agreed that we should have to await the instructions which each representative would receive from his respective government and that the course of the discussion on Tuesday's meeting would depend not only on these instructions but also on what the other representatives might have to say.

4. It was disclosed at our meeting that the initiative in inviting Lord Ismay to the Bermuda Conference came from the United States who felt this might serve to reassure the other NATO countries that their interests were being protected. It was also disclosed that the Norwegians welcomed the invitation to Lord Ismay because they feel that this will mitigate the impression in Norway that important questions are decided by the three powers without taking into appropriate account the views of the other NATO countries.

Reference: My telegrams No. 827 of November 18 and No. 831 of November 19.

I called on Sir Christopher Steele, the United Kingdom representative, to obtain his views as to the subjects we might touch upon at the informal meeting which is being held on November 24 to discuss the Bermuda Conference. I told him that I had not yet heard from Ottawa but I thought we might have misgivings about the three powers discussing subjects of concern to NATO and then confronting the other NATO countries with decisions which the Ministerial meeting of the Council would be expected to ratify. He defended the invitation sent to Lord Ismay by saying that he felt the other countries would have had more reason to complain if nothing had been done to ensure that their views were taken into account at Bermuda. Moreover, he regarded the meeting on Tuesday not so much as an occasion to give Lord Ismay guidance, as to enable the representatives of the three powers to inform their governments on the views of the other NATO countries regarding the subjects likely to be discussed at Bermuda.

2. This led me to ask what subjects were likely to be discussed at Bermuda. He said that while there was no formal agenda, exchanges were taking place on the subjects that were likely to be raised. It appears from this that more time would be taken up with Far Eastern than with European questions. However, the present position of NATO and the German contribution to western defence were certain to be discussed. Another of the principal topics would be what should be the future attitude towards the Soviet Union. As regards the latter topic the three alternatives were (a) there should be a further initiative for a four-power meeting, (b) the door should be kept open for discussions, or (c) any attempt to enter into discussions should be abandoned. He thought that comments from the representatives of the other NATO countries on these subjects in advance of the Bermuda Conference would be most useful.

3. As regards the present position of NATO, he showed me the copy of a telegram which had been sent by the Foreign Office to the United Kingdom Ambassador at Washington. A copy has been sent to the United Kingdom High Commissioner in Ottawa so you may already have seen it. The telegram dealt with the "long haul". It was based on the premise that the present level of forces, plus the German contribution, is all that the NATO countries can afford to maintain over a long period. Even this presupposes, however, continuation of the United States end-item aid and offshore procurement. It means, in effect, a flattening out of the NATO defence effort and concentration on improving the quality rather than increasing the quantity of forces. It also means the abandonment of efforts to attain the force requirements set at Lisbon. This proposal is now being discussed with the United States and French Governments. The other Brussels Treaty countries are also being informed. It is intended to be the basis of discussion at the Ministerial meeting. It will require careful consideration as to its eventual public presentation. If the other two countries agree, the United Kingdom intend to discuss it fully at the Bermuda Conference.

4. I said that this was a topic on which we should be prepared to express fully our views at the Ministerial meeting, but I did not see how, in view of the short time available, we could say much at the meeting next Tuesday. Of the other topics he had mentioned I thought that our views were well known and, therefore, if I was to speak on these topics on Tuesday, I would be repeating what we had already said on previous occasions. I told him that I would seek instructions as to how far I should go in expressing views on these questions.

5. I then said we would not want a situation developing whereby the three powers became a political standing group, or that Lord Ismay became the spokesman for the eleven other NATO countries. He repeated what he had said about the views of the other NATO countries being communicated to the three powers in advance of the Bermuda meeting by their representatives on the Council. He thought that Lord Ismay, at the Bermuda Conference, would be in the position of an international civil servant. He would give information about what had transpired in the Council and could state that he did not think a certain course would appeal to some of the NATO countries, or the reverse. I said one view was that he might be in the position of an observer who would report back to the Council his impressions of the Bermuda Conference. Sir Christopher Steele did not disagree with this definition of Lord Ismay's position but repeated that in his view he was an international civil servant without political responsibility, and, therefore, any views he would be expressing would be in an advisory capacity.

6. I trust that this telegram will assist you in preparing instructions on what I should say at the informal meeting of the Council on November 24.

SECRET. IMMEDIATE.

ATTENDANCE OF LORD ISMAY AT BERMUDA CONFERENCE

Reference: Your telegrams No. 827 of November 18, No. 831 of November 19 and No. 835 of November 20.

Repeat Important to London as No. 1849 and Washington Important as No. EX-2020.

Following from the Under-Secretary, Begins: It is important that there be no misunderstanding between the Three Powers and the other NATO countries concerning the important issues raised by the Bermuda Conference and Ismay's attendance.

2. Concerning Ismay's role, we agree in general with the line you have already taken (paragraphs 4, 6 and 7 of your No. 827). In particular, we would stress:

(a) that Ismay should go to Bermuda only in his capacity as Secretary-General, not, repeat not, as Vice-Chairman of the Council (i.e. not as spokesman of the North Atlantic Council or of member governments);

(b) that Ismay's primary role should, therefore, be limited to imparting strictly factual information on the present state of NATO as revealed by the Annual Review and recent Council discussions; and

(c) that, as a secondary role, he could report to the Council his impressions of the meeting, although this should not, repeat not, be allowed to detract from the full responsibility of the Three Powers themselves for informing the Council of the results of the meeting insofar as they affect NATO.

3. We agree that it would have been better if the Council had been consulted before the invitation was extended to Ismay. However, since the invitation is now an accomplished fact, we would not (repeat not) wish to raise objections, provided:

(a) his role is as outlined above;

(b) the Three Powers recognize that his attendance will in no way serve as a means of taking into account the views of the other NATO countries at the Bermuda meeting; and

(c) that the publicity given his attendance should also make these points clear.

4. Concerning the substance of the subjects to be discussed at Bermuda, it is clearly impossible for us to let you have, in time for the informal Council meeting tomorrow, our considered views on the wide range of important matters mentioned by Steele (your telegram No. 835). Indeed, if the Three Powers really regarded this as a serious effort at consultation, it is difficult to understand why they did not take some initiative themselves earlier to inform other members of the Council of these matters and their own preliminary views on them. Of course, it is open to us to make our views known directly to the Foreign Office and the State Department later if we wish. The Foreign Office telegram, referred to in paragraph 3 of your No. 835, may give us an opportunity of doing so (but it has not yet reached Earnscliffe). We feel, however, that tomorrow's informal meeting cannot repeat not be considered as providing adequate consultation with member Governments.

5. The Three Powers are, of course, free to discuss at Bermuda whatever questions they wish, including NATO questions, and to reach whatever preliminary agreement they can on the subjects that will be considered subsequently at the Ministerial meeting, but it would be most unfortunate if the public were led to believe that the Ministerial meeting will merely be ratifying decisions reached by the Three Powers. We would, therefore, hope that publicity on the Bermuda meeting, and particularly the Communiqué, might refer to "an exchange of views" rather than to "decisions" with respect to matters on the agenda of the Ministerial meeting.

6. It would also be unfortunate if the impression were given, either that Ismay was going to Bermuda to ensure that the views of the other NATO countries were taken into account (in this connection, Steele's views as reported in paragraph 1 of your No. 835 give some cause for concern), or that he would be returning to Paris to present tripartite decisions to the Council. It is, therefore, important that publicity should emphasize Ismay's role as outlined in paragraph 2 above. We could accept the formula that he would attend as "an observer" but would have reservations about the formula that "he would report to the North Atlantic Council the results of the Conference" (your telegram No. 831). We agree that it would probably be advisable for him to be accompanied by an Information Officer in order to make quite sure that the Press is properly informed about his status.

7. In passing I might say that we find it rather difficult to understand why Ismay should arrive two days late to act as an observer if the meeting is to have no fixed agenda. Presumably, an observer would be more useful if he could observe everything. If there were a definite agenda, it would be natural to have Ismay attend only sessions devoted to matters of direct concern to NATO.

8. I have not (repeat not) been able to discuss this telegram with the Minister. I know, however, that he is in general agreement with the line you have so far taken.

ATTENDANCE OF LORD ISMAY AT BERMUDA CONFERENCE

Reference: Your telegram No. 854 of November 23.

The Council met in an informal and restricted session on November 24 to consider a draft press release and a guidance note for press officers which had been circulated by Lord Ismay. Your very helpful telegram had reached me just before the meeting.

2. The press release which is very short provides that in agreement with the Prime Minister of France and the President of the USA, Sir Winston (as host) has invited Lord Ismay, the Secretary General of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, to be present as an observer during the Three-Power conference at Bermuda next month, and that Lord Ismay has accepted the invitation with the approval of the Council.

3. The background notes for use by press officers at a press conference which was to be held at 5.45 p.m. on November 24 specify that:

(a) Lord Ismay will attend the Bermuda conference as Secretary General, that is the senior international official of NATO.

(b) The invitation extended to the Secretary General of NATO emphasizes once again the importance which France, the United Kingdom and the United States attach to NATO as a keystone of their foreign policy;

(c) Lord Ismay will attend the conference as an observer. He could express a personal opinion upon matters connected with the North Atlantic Alliance;

(d) Any opinion which Lord Ismay might express at the Bermuda conference could commit none of the fourteen states members of the alliance;

(e) As an observer, Lord Ismay will be in a position to give his views upon the conference to the North Atlantic Council upon his return;

(f) Lord Ismay will be available in Bermuda from the morning of Sunday December 6;

(g) Lord Ismay's party will consist of himself and three members of his staff.

4. The permanent representatives were very guarded in their comments; only the Dane and the Italian supported the Norwegian who expressed the view that it was a good thing for NATO that Lord Ismay had been invited to Bermuda. The Council agreed, however, that the above release and notes were satisfactory. The essential points in your telegram under reference have been met.

5. As to Lord Ismay's role in Bermuda, the Council firmly rejected a suggestion by the Norwegian representative that Lord Ismay might convey to the conference any points which member governments might put to him in private correspondence. It was agreed that if member governments had any views to express they should put them forward in the Council and that they would be noted by the representatives of the Three Powers attending the Bermuda conference.

6. Lord Ismay then invited permanent representatives to express their views on any points which it was thought he might bear in mind while in Bermuda. The Belgian and the Italian representatives argued that it was very difficult for them to express any views in their ignorance of the particular subjects which might be raised in Bermuda.

7. The Norwegian representative suggested that Lord Ismay might draw the attention of the conference to the following three points:

(a) While the last Soviet note was not encouraging and gave little reason to believe that the USSR were willing to attend a conference, it was important that the west should continue to make every reasonable effort to establish a basis for discussion. It was possible that in a given situation, a personal meeting at the highest level might be instrumental in establishing such an acceptable ground.

(b) The NATO countries should continue to aim at reaching a settlement with the USSR on outstanding issues; they should stress the non-aggressive character of their intentions even if, so far, the USSR have not disclosed an interest in a system of mutual security guarantees;

(c) The problem of annual recurring costs for NATO forces: it was necessary that the Ministerial meeting in December[19] should establish a basis for further work towards a solution of this problem.

8. The Danish, the Italian and the Netherlands permanent representatives thought that the Council should not suggest that the problem of recurring costs should be discussed in Bermuda as this was one of the most important points on the agenda for the Ministerial meeting. The Norwegian representative made it clear that he did not wish to suggest that this point should be discussed but he felt that if it were to be raised, it would be proper for the Secretary General to emphasize its importance for the alliance. The United Kingdom representative then intervened to indicate that while his government wanted to discuss the problem in Bermuda, they did not intend that any decisions should be made nor indeed that the other members of the Council should feel that issues of general NATO concern would be settled behind their backs; a number of problems would be raised and it would be helpful for those attending the conference to have the views of their partners.

9. In the end, it was agreed that the representatives of the Big-Three Powers could report that there was strong interest within the Council on the problem of recurring costs but the general view was that a solution could only be found within the Council which was the appropriate forum for a thorough discussion of the question.

10. In the course of the discussion, as suggested in your telegram under reference, I welcomed the assurance that no decisions would be made in Bermuda on issues affecting NATO as a whole and expressed the hope that in the final communiqué of the conference, care would be taken not to give the impression that decisions had been taken on NATO matters.

11. On the whole, I am satisfied at the outcome of the meeting. It was important to bear in mind Lord Ismay's feelings and at the same time to make a number of points. The press release, the background notes and the Council discussion have, I feel, achieved and reconciled these objectives adequately.

TRIPARTITE REPLY TO THE LATEST SOVIET NOTE

Reference: Your telegram No. 891 of December 2.†

At an informal and restricted session of the Council on Thursday December 3, the acting United States representative read a short statement on behalf of the three western occupying powers in Germany outlining their appreciation of the latest Soviet Note and indicating the line they propose to follow in drafting the reply. It was agreed that while the latest Soviet Note did not represent a basic change in Soviet policy it may have been influenced by the following considerations:

(a) A recognition of the damaging impression which had been created by their last note, especially among their adherents in Western Europe;

(b) The conclusion may have been reached by Kremlin leaders that something more than a negative attitude was necessary if the ratification of the EDC Treaty was to be prevented;

(c) Their conduct might also have been influenced by the prospects of further reaffirmations of western unity which were likely to emerge from the Bermuda and Paris meetings;

(d) A determination to interfere with the French Foreign Affairs debate which was then taking place. The chief point in this latest Soviet Note was broadcast over the radio as soon as the note had been delivered.

2. The USSR seem to have reversed their views on the priorities to be given to four or five-power meetings. This did not necessarily mean Soviet acceptance of the western view that a four-power conference should discuss first Germany, Austria and European security. In fact, it was anticipated that the USSR might emphasize the desirability of a five-power meeting first to consider the means of reducing international tension.

3. While the previous note of November 3 had been primarily aimed at NATO, the recent one, although somewhat milder in tone was chiefly directed against the EDC. The three occupying powers had reached the conclusion that there was no reason to modify their previous view that there had been no basic change in Soviet policy. There were very serious doubts whether the USSR were ready to undertake serious discussions.

4. In the view of the three powers, it was felt that their reply should agree to a meeting to be held on a date as early as practicable, without any prior conditions.

5. The terms of the reply would be considered in Bermuda and would be influenced by the decisions reached both on its timing and on its substance. The views of other NATO delegations were invited and a copy of the reply would be made available to the Council shortly before it was delivered in Moscow.

6. From the very short discussion which followed, it was clear that all delegations were in full agreement with the tripartite analysis of the motives behind the latest Soviet Note and particularly on the terms of the proposed reply.

7. The Netherlands representative gave his personal opinion that it might not be wholly undesirable from the point of view of the west if discussions were to range over a wide series of subjects. It was not likely that at this time the USSR would be prepared to agree to the unification of Germany on terms acceptable to us but in other fields it might be that some basis for reaching limited settlements might be found.

8. I made the points in your telegram under reference and added that while the USSR might not be prepared to discuss at the conference the various subjects in the order which might appeal to the western powers, there should be no insistence in the tripartite reply on a strict order of procedure. I also said that I did not think that an issue should be made as to the place suggested for holding the conference.

9. The Greek representative recalled that on previous occasions he had made the point that there would be no reduction in east-west tensions as long as the USSR and China could not somehow be divided and he thought that this objective should be borne in mind in preparing for the five-power conference.

10. In the course of the discussion, the Norwegian and a few other representatives stressed the point that the tripartite reply should not be argumentative and that in particular it should lay down no pre-conditions. If the tripartite reply were now to raise problems as to the agenda or the order of procedure, certain sections of public opinion which have been suspicious of western diplomacy all along might claim that these pre-conditions provided confirmation of their view that the west were not really anxious to meet with the USSR; they might argue also that western insistence on these pre-conditions had been responsible for the negative outcome of the meeting.

11. The Belgian representative referred to the Soviet insistence in their latest note on European security arrangements. He enquired whether any thought had been given to this subject by the three occupying powers, adding that as this was a subject which affected all NATO countries, they would be particularly interested in the outcome of any tripartite discussions on this subject. The United States representative replied that this would probably be one of the subjects to be considered at Bermuda. He added that further expert meetings, similar to that which had been held in Paris recently, might also be arranged in the near future.

TRIESTE CRISIS AND NATO

Telegram No. 118 of October 14 from Rome says:†

"In the course of conversation with Mr. de Gasperi yesterday, he gave me his opinion on what the Italian Government should do in case Yugoslav troops move into Zone A.

"He considers that this would be an armed attack on a NATO party who should at once ask for support of other parties as provided in Article 5 of the Atlantic Pact."

Although Mr. de Gasperi is not at present a member of the Government, his opinions should be taken seriously. Perhaps we should have thought earlier of the place of NATO in this dispute.

2. The US – UK decision, as announced on October 8, is to terminate the Allied Military Government of Zone A, to withdraw their troops, and to "relinquish the administration of that zone to the Italian Government". Although the announcement does not say so, it was understood that Italian troops would move into Zone A not later than the time of withdrawal of US – UK troops. Tito then said that Yugoslav troops would enter Zone A the moment Italian troops did so, which would make a clash between the two forces inevitable.

3. Until Article 6 of the North Atlantic Treaty was amended effective February 1952, the US – UK forces in Zone A of Trieste were covered by Article 6 not because Zone A was a territory of a Contracting Party but because Article 6 covered "armed attacks on the occupation forces of any Party in Europe", and the US – UK troops in Zone A were deemed to be occupation forces. (See minutes of 18th meeting of Washington talks on drafting of North Atlantic Treaty, held March 15, 1949.)

4. The new article 6 reads in part as follows:

"For the purpose of Article 5, an armed attack on one or more of the Parties is deemed to include an armed attack —

(i) on the territory of any of the Parties in Europe . . . ;

(ii) on the forces, vessels or aircraft of any of the Parties, when in or over these territories or any other area in Europe in which occupation forces of any of the Parties were stationed on the date when the Treaty entered into force . . ."

It is open to argument whether Zone A will be "territory" of Italy[20] within the meaning of paragraph (i) at the moment when the threatened attack takes place. However it is clear that Italy could invoke paragraph (ii) of Article 6; so could the US and UK if their troops were attacked in Zone A. Of course, if Tito's troops entered Zone A without "attacking" any forces, it could be said that Article 6(ii) was not involved; can we imagine Italian and Yugoslav troops peacefully inhabiting Zone A together?

5. There is no ground for saying that Article 6 applies to the entry of Tito's troops into Zone B and no one has said it.[21]

6. If Mr. de Gasperi is correct and Article 6(ii) would apply to an attack on Italian forces in Zone A, it would seem to follow that the North Atlantic Council should at once be seized of this dangerous situation which might involve an "armed attack" within the meaning of Article 6. Other members of NATO are entitled to insist that the Council discuss it at once and furthermore that no further action be taken — by the US, UK, or Italy — that might incite an armed attack within the meaning of Article 6 before those future actions have been discussed in the Council.

7. It seems to me that, if the Minister approves, Mr. Wilgress should be instructed to ask Lord Ismay to call the Council to discuss Trieste. Whether we should consult the US and UK before asking Lord Ismay is open to question — perhaps it would be sufficient to tell the US and UK what we are doing without waiting for their comments. Another gambit, if we wish to be extra kind to the US and UK, would be to urge them to ask for a discussion in the North Atlantic Council.

8. I should think that our Ambassador in Rome should not at this stage tell either Mr. de Gasperi or the Italian Government what we think of Article 6.

9. I assume that our Embassy in Belgrade will be kept informed of all communications.

TRIESTE AND NATO

Repeat for information CANAC No. 770; Rome No. 137; Belgrade No. 99.

The threat by Marshal Tito (whether he means to carry it out or not) that he will send his troops into Zone A of Trieste if Italian troops enter, means that all NATO members are now affected by the US – UK decision to withdraw from the Zone in favour of Italy. For, if Yugoslav and Italian troops should clash, Italy can invoke Article 5 and 6(ii) of the North Atlantic Treaty.

2. It is understandable that the US and UK did not bring the Trieste problem before the North Atlantic Council prior to the announcement of October 8, since it would have apprised the Italians in advance of what was intended to be a concurrent approach to Rome (a NATO member) and Belgrade. On the other hand, there was no important reason not to bring it up after the announcement; and there was positive justification for bringing it up when Marshal Tito issued his threat.

3. If the UK and US did not wish to bring the matter up in the Council, they should have given some information to other member states by other channels as to how they plan to counter Marshal Tito's threat. The cryptic reference to Trieste in the Three-Power communiqué of October 8 gives the NATO members no greater assurance that they will not become involved in Trieste.

4. I think the Council should discuss Trieste for two reasons. First, in order to safeguard the principle that it is desirable for the Council to discuss any situation or plan of action affecting other members, particularly those situations which may involve NATO members in hostilities with other powers (acquiescence in by-passing the Council cannot but have a bad effect on the future of the organization). Secondly, in order that we may hear of the provision made in UK – US plans for the possibility of a Yugoslav – Italian clash in Zone A. (It is not so much a case of the North Atlantic Council trying to resolve the issue as its being informed of actions contemplated and solutions envisaged by the two parties directly responsible (UK and US)).

5. Will you, therefore, please tell the Foreign Office/State Department that we hope that they, in conjunction with their US/UK colleagues, will request Lord Ismay to place Trieste on the agenda of the North Atlantic Council for discussion at the earliest possible meeting, in order to apprise all members of their plans in Trieste and answer whatever questions or apprehensions these members may have.

You may use the considerations outlined in paragraphs 2, 3 and 4 above, and should also say that we are making a similar approach to Washington/London.

TRIESTE AND NATO

Reference: Your EX-1776 of October 21, 1953.

In an interview with Ben Moore, Director of the European Regional Office in the State Department, we put to the State Department the hope that the United States might agree to place Trieste on the agenda of the NATO Council for discussion at the earliest possible meeting. Byington, the Director of the Western European Office, and the Officer in Charge of the Italian Desk were also present at the interview.

2. Moore said that while appreciating the desirability of using the NATO Council to apprise all members of the situation which is giving rise to concern, the State Department would strongly oppose a discussion in the Council on this question, either in an open or a closed meeting, at the present time.

3. He advanced two main reasons for this opposition. First, the Trieste situation was regarded by the United States and the United Kingdom not in terms of a threat of military aggression, but as a long-standing dispute which the two powers were endeavouring to settle peacefully by diplomatic negotiation. These negotiations were in a very delicate stage, in which the two powers were trying to persuade the Italian and Yugoslav Governments to sit down to a round-table discussion in a Five-Power conference. At this meeting it is hoped that the two parties in the dispute will sit down as equals and that the United States, United Kingdom, and France will endeavour to exercise moderating influences in order that a final and peaceful solution may be worked out. To introduce this subject in any form into the NATO forum at this time, would result in having one of the parties to the dispute involved take part in a discussion which would inevitably only tend to increase the suspicions and consequent intransigence of the other party, Yugoslavia. Even a closed meeting would inevitably have the danger of leaks, and the hyper-sensitive Yugoslavs would tend to misinterpret a NATO discussion.

4. The second reason is that Tito's threat to send troops into Zone A of Trieste if Italian troops enter, does not actually involve, in the opinion of the State Department, NATO territory, as defined in Article VI of the North Atlantic Treaty. The free territory is not regarded as part of Italy. Such a threat would be a direct NATO concern only if (a) the occupation forces in Zone A were attacked; or (b) if a de facto annexation of Zone A to Italy had taken place. In the present circumstances neither the United States nor the United Kingdom believe that a military threat exists and in fact they are, as you know, consulting about the postponement of the withdrawing of the occupation forces so as to prevent the possibility of a clash, while they continue their efforts to get the two parties to the dispute around the conference table.

5. The State Department officials said that since the tripartite conference in London, the United States and the United Kingdom representatives have been sounding out the Italian and Yugoslav Governments on their reactions to the desirability of holding a Five-Power conference. So far, their reactions are not encouraging since each has balked attendance for opposite reasons. Italy, because of its reluctance to depart from the October 8 decision, and Yugoslavia because of its reluctance to negotiate on the basis of acceptance of that decision. Thus, at present the two powers are trying to persuade the two governments to come to the conference without a fixed agenda and what, in effect, would be exploratory talks. The State Department professed the belief that there was still some hope that they may be successful in these efforts.

6. Thus, the State Department hope that we will not press for a discussion at this time, believing that any discussion while these delicate negotiations are proceeding would do more harm than good. In effect, if the matter were placed on the agenda, despite United States and United Kingdom objections, they said that the report which the two governments would have to submit would be so uninformative as to provide no useful basis for discussion and would quite justifiably be resented by members. In the meantime, they will keep us informed of developments on a bilateral basis.

TRIESTE AND NATO

Reference: Your telegram No. 1644 of October 21.

1. Your telegram under reference was not received until Saturday, October 24. I conveyed its contents to the Foreign Office yesterday. I thought in view of the time that had elapsed since its despatch that the Foreign Office might already have heard of our parallel representations in Washington and perhaps have exchanged views with the State Department as to the reply to be returned to them.

2. I was informed that there had as yet been no exchange of views with Washington about the feasibility of bringing the Trieste question before the Council of NATO. Harrison, who is the Under-Secretary dealing with Trieste, said that the Foreign Office had canvassed the possibility of bringing the matter before NATO, but had been defeated by the fact that Italy was a member and Yugoslavia was not. The immediate objective of the three powers was to try to find some acceptable basis on which the immediate parties to the dispute could agree to come into a conference. The United Kingdom feared that a reference to NATO at this stage might prejudice this effort. There was no precedent for asking a NATO member to step outside while a subject was under discussion, nor was there any precedent for inviting a non-member country to associate itself with discussions in NATO. Without prior agreement on some such procedural arrangements, a reference of the Trieste question to NATO might further upset Yugoslav susceptibilities and suspicions and make it even harder to get them into a conference.

3. Harrison made it plain, however, that the United Kingdom had not definitely rejected a reference to NATO; it simply had not thus far been able to see how such a reference was likely to advance the search for a solution of the problem. In the meantime the United Kingdom and the United States were definitely agreed that they could not, under present conditions, proceed with the planned withdrawal of their troops. They would have to stay where they were while efforts to arrange a conference were proceeding. So long as they stayed where they were, Tito's contingent threat did not arise nor was there a threat to NATO security within the meaning of Articles 5 and 6 of the North Atlantic Treaty.

The Foreign Office and State Department are opposed to bringing up Trieste in the North Atlantic Council, primarily because they fear that this may increase Yugoslav susceptibilities and thus prejudice their efforts to reach a settlement in Trieste by getting the parties immediately concerned to agree to a conference. We are not, therefore, pursuing the matter further.

2. By our approach to London and Washington we have learned, at any rate, that the UK and US definitely will not withdraw their troops from Zone A under present conditions, so as to prevent any possibility of a clash between Italy and Yugoslavia. This answers our question about possible involvement under Article VI (ii) of the North Atlantic Treaty. By our approach, we have also at least recorded our concern that the Council should not be by-passed when problems arise which might affect all members under the terms of the North Atlantic Treaty.

Yugoslav Ambassador called on November 6 to enquire, on instructions from his Government, about the truth of a report concerning the movement of Italian troops, which recently appeared in Le Monde. According to him the report stated that Italian troops which are integrated with NATO forces had been moved by the Italian Government to the vicinity of Trieste. His Government is under the impression that any such movement of NATO forces should first be cleared with the other NATO Governments and he was asked to find out whether any approach had been made to the Canadian Government. He said that a similar enquiry was being directed by Yugoslav Missions to the other parties to the North Atlantic Treaty.

2. After inquiries in Ottawa, we told Ambassador on November 10 that no approach was made to the Canadian Government (by the Italian Government or anyone else) about the proposed troop movement, and that we do not know officially whether the troops in question are "integrated with NATO", i.e. under the command of SACEUR. He seemed content.

3. Le Monde of November 3 quoted a SHAPE spokesman as saying that the troops were under SACEUR and that SACEUR had been informed of the move.

On November 10 I received similar memoranda from the United Kingdom High Commissioner and the United States Ambassador on the subject of Trieste, and, at the same time, a Note from the French Ambassador on the same topic. These communications had been sent to all members of NATO except Italy. The United Kingdom and United States memoranda outlined the considerations which led the United Kingdom and United States Governments to their decision of October 8, and then dealt with the problem of the relationship between Trieste and NATO. It was stated that the two Governments recognize that NATO members have a legitimate interest in the situation in Trieste, that a Council discussion at present would not be opportune, but that this attitude is not meant to prejudice a possible future Council discussion should the need arise. The French Note associated itself with the position of the United States and United Kingdom.

2. Subsequently, on November 12, the Office of the United Kingdom High Commissioner informed the Department that the United States, United Kingdom and France had decided that Italy should not be left in the dark about these communications. Consequently, the Permanent NATO representatives of these three countries have been instructed to tell their Italian colleague, informally, that other NATO members have been informed through diplomatic channels that it might be possible to arrange a conference very soon and that, meanwhile, a Council discussion would be undesirable.

3. Copies of the United Kingdom and French communications and of my replies are being sent to you by bag.

TRIESTE AND NATO

Reference: Your Telegram WA-2435 of October 24.

Although we have accepted the United States and United Kingdom view that Trieste should not be discussed in the North Atlantic Council at this time, we have not been able to agree with the argument which the State Department used when you discussed this question with them, to the effect that Articles V and VI of the Treaty could not be invoked by Italy if Yugoslav troops clashed with Italian forces in Zone A.

2. We understand from your telegram WA-2435 that the State Department argued that a Yugoslav – Italian clash in Zone A would not legally involve NATO countries under the terms of Articles V and VI of the North Atlantic Treaty because Trieste is not a part of Italy and is not therefore "NATO territory", and because the Italian troops which might have been allowed there would not have the status of "occupation troops" which United Kingdom and United States forces enjoy. Consequently, if a clash occurred, Italy would not be justified in invoking Articles V and VI of the Treaty.

3. Our view, as stated in telegram EX-1776 of October 22, has been that Italy could invoke these Articles and that this meant that all NATO members were affected by the October 8 decision. Our reason for holding this view has been that Article V with Article VI (ii) of the North Atlantic Treaty provide for assistance in the case of an attack on the forces (and not just on the territory) of the parties to the Treaty when these forces are in any area in Europe in which occupation forces of any of the parties were stationed on the date when the Treaty entered into force. Therefore, under Article VI (ii), it is immaterial whether Trieste is a territorial part of Italy, or whether Italian troops there would have the legal status of being "occupation forces"; it is sufficient that the armed forces of Italy, a NATO member, be attacked in an occupied or formerly occupied area, for Article VI to come into play.

4. The Foreign Office have now given us their views on this point, which we find agree with our own. A copy of their telegram (CRO telegram Y.329 of November 12)† has been referred to you. In this telegram the Foreign Office state that "the Americans" agree with their views.

5. The United States view as reported from the Foreign Office is in agreement with our own but at variance with that which we received earlier through you from the State Department. For this reason, and in order that the United States officials concerned should know the legal considerations behind our own position, we think it desirable that the question of the applicability of Articles V and VI (ii) of the North Atlantic Treaty to Trieste should be reviewed again with the State Department. We should appreciate it if you would find a suitable opportunity to give the State Department our legal position with regard to these Articles. This is given in detail in two memoranda dated October 20, copies of which are attached.† In the discussion with the State Department, we would hope that you would also be able to elicit from them a further expression of their opinion, which we hope would accord with that reported by the Foreign Office. You should be sure that your approach is not taken by the United States authorities to mean that we wish to resurrect the question of the desirability of the North Atlantic Council reviewing the possibility of its involvement in Trieste under these Articles of the Treaty. For we accept the United Kingdom and United States view that such a discussion should not be held at this stage.

PROPOSED PARLIAMENTARY ASSEMBLY

Note du sous-secrétaire d'État suppléant aux Affaires extérieures pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum from Deputy Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Secretary of State for External Affairs

SECRET [Ottawa], August 18, 1953

ASSOCIATION OF PARLIAMENTARIANS WITH THE WORK OF NATO

The Norwegian Representative to the North Atlantic Council, on instructions from his Government, has circulated a Note (document C-M(53)112) suggesting that contact be established between the Council and the legislatures of member countries. A copy is attached as Annex A.† The proposal is that, as a "tentative and modest" step in this direction, "a conference of a limited number of parliamentarians from each of the NATO countries be arranged in the autumn of this year, preferably after the Ministerial meeting of the Council". It is stressed that the conference should be short (one week) and purely informative (not consultative), but it is also suggested that arrangements might later be made for similar meetings once or twice a year.

2. Norway has, for several years, been a consistent advocate of a measure along these lines. It is evidently its educational value that is the chief attraction to the Norwegians, the Government hoping thereby to exercise a more direct influence on Parliament and the parliamentarians hoping to influence Government policy more effectively. The present initiative has arisen out of a recent recommendation by the Foreign and Constitutional Committee of the Storting that the Norwegian Government should propose in NATO a parliamentary assembly which might foster a series of new and useful ideas and would give an opportunity for Western cooperation in fields other than the purely military. The Committee felt that such an assembly would not need any formal advisory authority as its debates would provide sufficient guidance to the Council.

3. The idea of a North Atlantic assembly of parliamentarians has, of course, been put forward in different forms on a number of previous occasions. An outline of the background history is contained in Annex B.† The Committee of Five[22] which considered the question in connection with its study of Article II matters, made no general recommendations and concluded that this was a subject which could best be dealt with on the basis of experience. When the matter was taken up again after the Lisbon meeting, the Council was of the opinion that, rather than call conferences of parliamentarians, Governments should encourage the creation of parliamentary Atlantic Community groups on an informal basis. International meetings between parliamentarians interested in NATO might be considered later and might, it was thought, develop gradually and spontaneously as a result of the activities of national groups.

4. The attitude of the United Kingdom and the United States has, in the past, been unfavourable toward the actual establishment of a NATO parliamentary assembly. Recently, however, (during the Three-Power Conference of Foreign Ministers in Washington) Mr. Dulles suggested that study might be given to the possible arrangement of meetings, under NATO auspices, of parliamentary representatives from NATO countries and the possible creation of some official parliamentary structure. Apparently the suggestion was enthusiastically received by Lord Salisbury and M. Bidault "did not demur".

5. Our NATO Delegation in Paris have warned us that the Norwegian proposal will be discussed in an informal meeting of the Council on August 21 and have requested our views both on the question of principle involved and on the financial implications. They have expressed sympathy with the objective but have warned that, judging from the experience of the Council of Europe, parliamentarians may not be satisfied to come to Paris only to meet each other and to receive general information on NATO activities; they may raise questions as to their corporate status and may take up the idea of a NATO parliament. What may be involved ultimately may be no less than the relationship between the Council and national parliaments. As to the financial implications, the Delegation have suggested three possible solutions if a parliamentary conference were, in fact, to be held: expenses could be paid by the parliamentarians themselves; by their governments; or by NATO.

This was a ministerial committee composed of representatives of Belgium, Canada, Italy, the Netherlands and Norway established by the North Atlantic Council at its meeting in Ottawa, September 15-20, 1951, "to consider the further strengthening of the North Atlantic Community and especially the implementation of Article II of the North Atlantic Treaty."

6. Some of the arguments for and against the Norwegian proposal may be briefly summarized as follows:

For:

(1) Such a meeting of parliamentarians would increase the public understanding of the work of NATO and would thereby widen the base of public support which is essential to the carrying out of Government policy.

(2) At the present time, in particular, when NATO is no longer making spectacular headlines, there may be a special need for bringing home to the public the true significance of NATO.

(3) Such a meeting would provide useful contact at the parliamentary level between North American and European elements in the Atlantic Community and would, in particular, expose United States congressional representatives to outside opinion on international trade policies.

(4) It is perhaps an appropriate time to encourage public and parliamentary interest in the Atlantic Community and the non-military aspects of the North Atlantic Treaty.

Against:

(1) An unguided general debate by parliamentarians might, like some of the debates in the Council of Europe, be so discursive and ill-informed that it would produce more obfuscation than clarification of the important issues.

(2) There may be a security risk in releasing to parliamentarians (particularly those from some of the European member countries) sufficient information to enable them to discuss seriously the most important problems involved in the work of NATO.

(3) Such a meeting might be irresponsible in producing proposals which have no chance of acceptance by Governments and which, therefore, might lead to public disillusionment.

(4) Such an assembly might concern itself with its own status and attempt to establish some formal consultative link with the North Atlantic Council.

7. It would seem that the pros are based mainly on the possible educational value of the proposed meeting of parliamentarians, and that the cons involve the practical difficulties in achieving these advantages, difficulties which arise, for the most part, out of the danger that the scope of such an assembly may quickly expand far beyond the bounds of an informal meeting. This may, in turn, raise the fundamental issues of the relationship between the North Atlantic Council and national parliaments and the ultimate shape and form of the Atlantic Community. If the advantages to be gained merit taking the calculated risks involved, we should presumably support the Norwegian proposal. On the other hand, it might, in fact, be argued that these advantages could be obtained as effectively and without the same attendant risks by other means, such as visits to NATO Headquarters by groups of parliamentarians and various public information methods. The safest course at this juncture, however, may be to wait and see how much support the proposal attracts in the Council and, if it appears to be generally supported, to emphasize the educational and informative aspects of the proposed meeting. In this connection, we might refer back to the proposal considered by the Information Policy Working Group last October, that the programme for a parliamentary session at NATO Headquarters might include a briefing on the work of NATO, private background discussions and perhaps, also, visits to NATO Commands.

8. I have consulted officials in the Department of Finance on the financing of such a meeting if it is held and would suggest that, of the three possible methods, we should favour financing by Governments.

9. Would you agree to our sending guidance along the lines of the foregoing paragraphs to Mr. Wilgress in Paris?

SECRET Ottawa, September 30, 1953

Dear Dana [Wilgress],

I refer to the Department's numbered letter D-516 of September 10 concerning the Norwegian proposal for a conference of parliamentarians this autumn under NATO auspices.[23] The Prime Minister has been following this proposal with interest, and his present view is that there would be a risk in having any meetings at which parliamentarians from all NATO countries were present simultaneously. He is inclined to the view, therefore, that something along the lines of the suggestion by the French and Italians, as set forth in paragraph 5 of your letter 2677 of August 21,† might be preferable if anything is to be done. That proposal, as you will recall, is that parliamentarians might be brought to Paris in small groups at different times to gain an acquaintance with NATO and its work.

I appreciate that the arrangements proposed by the Norwegians are still in a very preliminary stage of discussion and that the Committee over which you preside is still considering this matter. It may be that the general feeling in the Committee would be in favour of the principle of a general meeting of parliamentarians for the purpose of increasing their interest in and knowledge of NATO, and, if this is the case, we should of course be prepared here to consider the matter. I am sure you will agree, however, that there are a great many practical considerations to be worked out and that, as emphasized in my earlier telegram No.547 of August 19,† a good deal of caution is required in approaching this suggestion. This is particularly necessary if the reports which appeared in the New York Times of September 2 from Copenhagen, following the Second International Study Conference, are substantially correct. According to this report, the Norwegian suggestion, sponsored by the Storting member, Mr. Finn Moe, is "that a permanent Atlantic Parliament be set up in Paris to which each North Atlantic nation would name representatives drawn in equal proportions from Government and Opposition parties". This, of course, is going a great deal further than we would be prepared to go, as you will see from the indication I have given above of Mr. St. Laurent's current thinking on this subject.

Yours sincerely,

Dear Mike [Pearson],

Your letter of September 30 concerning the Norwegian proposal for a conference of parliamentarians under NATO auspices was received at a very opportune time. Your letter came late yesterday afternoon. As indicated in my telegram No. 720 of today's date,† Mr. Fenoaltea[24] came to see me in the morning to show me a paper prepared in the Secretariat in order to provide a basis for further discussion of this question in the Council.

You will note from what I told Mr. Fenoaltea that we in the Delegation have become apprehensive of the risks involved in the Norwegian proposal. I was therefore very glad to have your letter indicating that the Prime Minister feels there would be a risk in having any meetings at which parliamentarians from all NATO countries were present simultaneously. I had had the impression that both the Prime Minister and yourself were favourable to the general idea of a conference of parliamentarians under NATO auspices. In departmental letter D-516 of September 10 the comments of the Prime Minister were given in para.3 as follows: "I see no objection either to principle or financial implications". In departmental telegram No. 638 [683] of August 19† you were quoted as commenting that "We should support the principle of meetings of parliamentarians to increase their interest in and knowledge of NATO, but I agree that there are a good many practical considerations to be worked out and that without careful preparation the meetings might be without great value and, indeed, with real disadvantages". Accordingly you went on to support a cautious but not unfriendly attitude.

I might say that our own views in the Delegation were at first somewhat similar, but the more we have been thinking over the matter the more apprehensive we have become of the dangers in the Norwegian proposal. Following my talk with Mr. Fenoaltea I was going to send a telegram to the Department, setting forth our apprehensions and, therefore, it was a relief to receive your letter of September 30 indicating that these apprehensions were shared by the Prime Minister and by yourself.

We shall await your further instructions on this matter with great interest.

Yours sincerely,

RELATIONS BETWEEN NATO AND PARLIAMENTARIANS FROM MEMBER COUNTRIES

Note by the Secretary[26]

The purposes underlying the various proposals concerning relations between NATO and parliamentarians from member countries are briefly the following:

(a) to make parliamentarians of member countries better acquainted with the aims and activities of NATO;

(b) to foster mutual knowledge and understanding among NATO parliamentarians;

(c) to promote deeper understanding of and wider support for the aims and activities of the Alliance.

2. Any steps which member governments might decide to take in order to further these objectives would, however, be conditioned by considerations both of a constitutional and of a practical nature:

(a) The forum for the consultation between member countries on matters of common concern within the framework of the Treaty is the Council and its subsidiary bodies composed of representatives of member governments.

(b) As security aspects of NATO activities are very relevant, it is particularly difficult to arrange detailed discussions on NATO matters based on factual information, with any group of people outside authorized government officials.

3. In the following proposals account has been taken of the aims and safeguards set out in paragraphs 1 and 2 above:

i) Member governments should use all suitable opportunities of informing parliamentarians of the activities of the Alliance, and, whenever it is felt to be useful, of arranging parliamentary debates on NATO and the Atlantic Community. The report by the Secretary General now in preparation would presumably receive wide distribution among parliamentarians.

ii) Interparliamentary contact:

a) Member governments should encourage the setting up within their countries of groups of parliamentarians especially interested in NATO.

b) These groups should be encouraged, so far as is possible, to develop their own interparliamentary contacts on the basis of mutual interest in and support for NATO either among themselves or in affiliation with pro-NATO voluntary organizations.

c) When, as a result of such contacts, approaches are received by NATO from the group or groups concerned, every effort would, of course, be made to encourage their active interest in, and support for, NATO by meeting requests for guest speakers, visits or interviews, and if necessary furnishing secretarial and interpreter assistance in Paris for meetings organized by such a group or groups.

iii) Tours and visits for parliamentarians from member countries:

a) Parliamentarians should be encouraged to visit NATO Military and Civilian Headquarters whether in smaller or larger groups.

b) Visits might be arranged by NATO for parliamentarians from one or more member countries to the Military and Civilian Headquarters. These visits might be combined with tours to one or more member countries.

The tours outlined in a) and b) might be initiated and arranged either by NATO or by member governments.

MEETING OF THE COMMITTEE ON INFORMATION AND CULTURAL RELATIONS ON NOVEMBER 26

Item I — Relations between NATO and Parliamentarians from Member Countries

As Chairman of the Committee, I reported that the Secretary General wanted to have a report from the Committee on this subject for discussion at the Council meeting on Wednesday December 2, as he hoped to refer to it in his general report to the Ministerial Meeting. I then invited the Committee to discuss the two main proposals which had been considered so far: the Norwegian proposal as amended in the Secretary General's Note and the latest compromise Secretariat proposal (AC/52-D/24).

2. It appeared that all delegations except the United States were prepared to accept the Secretariat proposal.

3. Some delegations, the Belgian, the Danish, the Icelandic and the Netherlands, would have been prepared to go further and to support the Norwegian proposal, but as it did not seem to be generally acceptable, for the sake of an agreed solution they could accept the more modest Secretariat scheme.

4. The Italian and the Portuguese Delegations agreed with the Secretariat proposal but on the understanding that the various proposals involved were not mandatory for Governments or Parliaments.

5. The Norwegian Representative recognized that there seemed to be no possibility that agreement might be reached at this time on the scheme put forward by his Government. While he was ready to accept the Secretariat proposal, he made two points: (a) the Norwegian proposal was not being withdrawn and his Government reserved the right to revive it later on; (b) the Norwegian Government did not intend to suggest, in making their original proposal, that a consultative body should be set up within the Organization. They had in mind a meeting for information purposes only and they could not agree that such a meeting might create constitutional problems.

6. The United States Representative felt that he could not accept the Secretariat proposal as it stood. In explaining his position he pointed out that:

(a) If the United States Government had been prepared at this time to accept the Norwegian proposal they would have suggested more detailed arrangements, in some respects. Congressmen had, however, a heavy programme early next year and it was not considered possible that any could be available to attend a NATO meeting of the kind envisaged;

(b) It was not desirable to set up within the Congress small groups concerned more particularly with NATO; in both Houses, there were committees dealing with foreign affairs and sub-committees concerned with European questions. It was not desirable to segregate some Congressmen for NATO purposes;

(c) A number of Congressmen had already come to Paris. Although the United States Government saw no harm in the proposal that Parliamentarians should be encouraged to visit NATO Headquarters, they did not consider that it was particularly useful or relevant in the case of the United States.

7. The United States Representative concluded his statement by suggesting that the Committee might prefer to send a report to the Council, outlining the various proposals which had been made so far, and giving an indication of the stage which had been reached in considering them. The discussion on the substance of the problem could be resumed after the Ministerial Meeting. Apart from the Turkish Representative, nobody supported this particular proposal and the Committee proceeded instead to consider which amendments might satisfy the United States Representative and make it possible for him to support the Secretariat paper.

8. After some discussion, it appeared that the United States Representative was concerned with the mandatory character of some of the recommendations which he felt might not be equally applicable in all member countries. Finally, he agreed that if the word "should" in sections (a) and (b) of paragraph 3 (ii) of the Secretariat Note could be replaced by the word "might" he would withdraw his objections. This was readily accepted and with this slight amendment the Secretariat paper was unanimously approved.

9. The Committee agreed that the Secretariat Note should be submitted to the Council under a covering note pointing out that:

(a) the proposals embodied in the Secretariat Note represented the largest degree of agreement which could be reached at this time on this subject;

(b) approval by the Council of these proposals would not, in any way, be an obstacle to the consideration later on of the Norwegian or of other more far-reaching proposals.

This Note, it was agreed, would be drafted by the Chairman and the Secretary of the Committee in consultation with the Norwegian Representative.

10. These agreed proposals will be considered by the Council at the meeting on December 2. In view of your telegram No. 850 of November 21, no further instructions are required.

CONFIDENTIAL

COUNCIL MEETING ON DECEMBER 2, 1953 — ITEM IV: RELATIONS BETWEEN PARLIAMENTARIANS AND NATO

Reference: Our letter No. 3839 of November 27, 1953.

At the invitation of the Secretary General I read the attached statement to introduce the report of the Committee on Information and Cultural Relations (C-M(53)158).

2. The Netherlands Representative said that while, at first, his Government had had very serious reservations as to the desirability of allowing the NATO Council to take the initiative of convening meetings of Parliamentarians in Paris, after consideration they had reached the conclusion that this would be a desirable development and that it did not involve very serious constitutional implications as was feared by some delegations; he expressed the hope that later on it might be possible to take further steps to develop closer relations between Parliamentarians and NATO. In the meantime, it was thought that the Report might be strengthened somewhat if in paragraph 3(ii), sections (a) and (b), the word "should" could be substituted for the word "might". There was some discussion on this point. The Portuguese and the US Representatives argued that as the Report was not mandatory on governments and parliaments, there seemed to be little advantage in effecting the change suggested. In the end, it was agreed that as governments were fully protected by the general understanding as regards the purely hortatory character of the recommendations, the commitments involved would not be increased if the amendment suggested by the Netherlands Representative was accepted.

3. In the course of the discussion the Representatives from Denmark and Belgium supported the Netherlands Representative in expressing the hope that it might be possible, later on, to consider somewhat more ambitious schemes in this field.

4. The UK Representative made the very interesting and useful point that when Parliamentarians from member countries came to Paris, the opportunity should be taken of advising them on the part played by the OEEC in the economic side of NATO operations.

5. Subject to the slight amendment suggested by the Netherlands Representative the Council approved the Report of the Committee.

STATEMENT TO BE MADE BY MR. WILGRESS AT THE COUNCIL MEETING ON DECEMBER 2

As the Council is aware, the subject now before us has been carefully considered by the Committee on Information and Cultural Relations during a number of meetings.

In the course of the discussion, it appeared that the choice was really between three basic sets of proposals:

(a) A Conference of Parliamentarians from all the member countries, called at the initiative of the Council, informative in character and without consultative powers;

(b) The setting-up of groups of pro-NATO Parliamentarians in member countries interested in NATO on the understanding that these groups would be encouraged to establish contacts between themselves and that assistance would be provided by NATO if they decided to meet in Paris;

(c) Tours and visits for Parliamentarians arranged either by governments or by NATO to the Headquarters in Paris and to one or more member countries.

After further discussions, it became clear that proposals (b) (voluntary groups) and (c) (visits) could be combined and that while some delegations were prepared to accept the idea of a NATO – sponsored Conference many other delegations were not prepared at this time to follow them and unanimity could only be reached on more modest proposals combining the two other more limited schemes, as you will find them in the report which has now been approved by the Committee.

I should perhaps also draw attention to two particular points.

First, the recommendations in the report of the Committee are not mandatory for Governments or Parliaments of the Member Countries. It is hoped naturally that, whenever possible, they will attempt to carry out these proposals but we must recognize that conditions differ widely from country to country and that Governments must retain the right to decide when, and if so how action can be taken in this particular field. What is important is that Member Governments should recognize the importance of promoting with the assistance of Parliamentarians further interest in NATO. Once there is agreement on this point, they can be left to decide how best this can be achieved in their own country and the recommendations which are now submitted to them provide merely indications as to which schemes have seemed to us to be generally acceptable and suitable for this purpose.

The other point I wish to make is that the report now before you embodies the maximum degree of agreement which could be reached at this time on the subject. Some delegations were prepared to go further and they accepted in the end more modest proposals for the sake of reaching a common solution; but, as is quite proper, they only accepted them on the understanding that the door would be kept open and that later on they could suggest perhaps more ambitious schemes. It is wise not to consider that these agreed proposals represent all that can be done to stimulate Parliamentary interest in NATO. Later on, perhaps as a result of the operation of the schemes which are now recommended, conditions may be different and member governments may be prepared to take another step. Here again, we are agreed as to the objective and as to the method. We are all determined to increase support for our Organization and we are determined to work together on the largest possible basis which can be found among us to achieve this aim.

Rapport d'une réunion

Report of a Meeting

TOP SECRET [Ottawa], January 20, 1953

TO DISCUSS THE QUESTION OF A CLOSER ASSOCIATION OF THE UNITED KINGDOM WITH THE EUROPEAN DEFENCE COMMUNITY

Present:

Mr. L.D. Wilgress, Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs — Chairman
Mr. C.M. Drury, Deputy Minister, Dept. of National Defence
Lt.-Gen. Foulkes, Chairman, Chiefs of Staff
Lt.-Gen. Simonds, Chief of the General Staff
Air Vice-Marshal Miller, Vice-Chief of the Air Staff
Mr. C.S.A. Ritchie, Deputy Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
Mr. R. Duder, Dept. of External Affairs — Secretary

Mr. Wilgress opened the meeting with a reference to the difficult political situation created by M. Mayer's recent declaration concerning the need to revise the EDC Treaty. This situation had eased somewhat and recent messages from Washington and Paris indicated that the French intend to submit the EDC Treaty to the National Assembly for ratification, and to begin negotiations for additional protocols which would ensure a liberal interpretation of the provision of the EDC Treaty which requires the authority of SHAPE for the withdrawal of French troops from the European Army for service in North Africa and elsewhere. The aim of this modification would be to guard "the integrity and unity of the French Army and the French Union". It was also their intention to endeavour to obtain closer United Kingdom association with the European Army. Mr. Wilgress outlined the talks which he, Mr. Claxton and General Foulkes had had with leading European and American personalities during their recent visit to Europe on this question of the participation of British forces in the European Army.

2. There was now a more hopeful feeling in Europe concerning the new French approach to the European Defence Community. The Department of External Affairs has been looking at the political issues involved and has concluded that it would be most inappropriate for Canada to make any approach to the United Kingdom on the question of closer British association with the European Army. Moreover, there was no indication at present that the Americans had decided to make such an approach and there might be disadvantages to their doing so in view of the reaction in Europe to Senator Wiley's[27] recent statement on American aid and European integration.

3. It is clear that there will have to be negotiations for an additional protocol or protocols to the EDC Treaty. This may mean that the Germans, as well as the French, and possibly others, e.g. the Belgians, will make fresh demands. In this new situation, Mr. Wilgress distinguished three possible developments in order of probability:

(a) Ratification of the EDC Treaty plus negotiation of the additional protocol(s);

(b) Some participation of British forces in the European Army;

(c) A contribution of Canadian and United States forces to the European Army.

It was agreed to discuss the political and military considerations bound up with these possible developments.

4. General Foulkes said that Field Marshal Montgomery was of the opinion that from the military point of view, the Germans are bound to dominate the European Defence Community because of the lack of French leadership. Hence there was a need for a contribution to the European Army from the United Kingdom and from the United States. General Foulkes thought that the United Kingdom Government was likely to ask us before very long what our attitude, as a Commonwealth country, would be to United Kingdom participation in the European Army. General Simonds thought that Field Marshal Montgomery's solution could be nothing but a temporary one, but that German dominance of the EDC might be postponed by British participation in the European Army provided that the Americans were willing to agree that their forces would remain in Germany so long as United Kingdom participation in the EDC continued.

5. There was general agreement that the simplest solution militarily would be German membership in NATO but it was clear that the French would not accept this. On the other hand, the United Kingdom, even if from a military point of view it could accept British participation in the European Army, would never agree to an association leading to a federation. If they did come in they would try to loosen the federal ties of the EDC Treaty. This, in turn, would give the Belgians and others an opportunity, which they would welcome, to water down the EDC concept. Hence, the only association which would be possible for the British would be one which did not involve full participation in the constitutional superstructure of the EDC. It was agreed that a contribution of American, British or Canadian corps commanders, unless it arose logically as a result of a contribution of troops to the EDC, was not possible since this would offend the national pride of both the Germans and the French. Some consideration was given to the possibility of the British having observer's status or associate membership in the higher institutions of the European Defence Community, but there was no general agreement that this was a workable solution.

Senator Alexander Wiley (R.-Wisconsin), Chairman, Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

6. In the particular matter of a Canadian contribution to the EDC, it was agreed that we could only go as far as the Americans. Although, militarily speaking, Canada could go into the EDC, since Canadians have to fight under other than national commanders in any case, it was thought that the Canadian people would not want their troops in a European Army unless United States troops were also included in that Army. It was also suggested that the Europeans might not welcome American, or perhaps even Canadian, participation as this might undermine the whole concept of specifically European integration.

7. Summing up, General Foulkes said that the military side of the question of US or Canadian participation in the European Defence Community would not be too difficult to overcome, but the political issues involved were not easy to solve. He gave as his opinion that if the EDC fell apart, this might well mean the end of NATO.

8. After considerable discussion, it was agreed that Canada should not offer advice to the United Kingdom on this difficult problem but that we must be prepared to answer questions which might be put to us by the United Kingdom. The meeting closed with a discussion of possible questions and suggested answers as follows:

(1) — Q. Would Canada have any objections to the United Kingdom participating in the European Defence Community?

A. No, if such participation is considered a sine qua non of obtaining German rearmament without which no forward defence of Europe is possible.

(2) — Q. Is Canada willing to participate in the European Defence Community?

A. The people of Canada would not agree to this unless the United States were also to come in.

(3) — Q. If the United Kingdom and the United States came into the European Army, would Canada join?

A. In all probability, yes. We should have no grounds for staying out.

Question (1) above might be put somewhat as follows: "We are considering the grouping of part or the whole of the British Army of the Rhine within the European Army. This raises the question of the disposition of the Canadian Brigade. What are your views?" In this case, our answer would be that we should have to consider whether or not to change our affiliation with the BAOR to one with the United States Army in Europe. It was agreed that it was highly improbable that the United Kingdom would ever contemplate putting the whole of the BAOR into the EDC.

9. It was agreed that Canada must resist any attempt to put Canadians into a common uniform and to subject them to the conditions of pay, etc., planned for the European Army. The Americans and probably the British would have the same objections.

EUROPEAN DEFENCE COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENTS

M. de Laboulaye[28] called to see Mr. Ritchie this morning. In the course of conversation, he remarked that the French Embassy in Washington had received some indications of thinking in official quarters there with regard to the future of the EDC. M. de Laboulaye said that M. Bonnet[29] considered that these might be the views of General Eisenhower on the subject although Mr. Ritchie gathered that the French Ambassador had not discussed the subject directly with the President. According to these French reports, President Eisenhower is anxious that there should be no diminution of French Forces in Indo-China in 1953. Under existing French plans, it was intended to bring back 20,000 French soldiers from Indo-China in the course of the present year, leaving the French military contribution in Indo-China in terms of personnel at 165,000 men at the end of 1953. American thinking, however, was now more and more emphatic in its emphasis on the importance of Indo-China. It was the view in Washington that an all-out campaign in Indo-China might push the Viet Min Forces back to the Chinese frontier and make it possible to proceed with the development of Viet Namese political institutions and a Viet Nam Army. This would certainly require increased American support, military and economic, but not in the form of American military personnel as the presence of American Forces in Indo-China might, in the American view, lead the Peking Government to enter the struggle in Indo-China directly by means of Korean-style Chinese Communist "volunteers".

2. According to these reports, General Eisenhower completely understood the close connection between the continued presence of French Forces in Indo-China and the fate of the EDC. He was reported to be well aware of French fears that the latter Organization might come to be dominated by the Germans while the French were making their contribution in Indo-China. General Eisenhower was fully aware also of the undesirability of the creation of a German National Army. In these circumstances, the Americans were contemplating some kind of guarantee to France which would allow her to undertake a renewed offensive in Indo-China without being hampered by the fear of German dominance in Europe. They were contemplating the possibility of suggesting the association of British, American and perhaps Canadian forces with the EDC. Mr. Ritchie enquired how far American thinking on this subject had gone and at what level. M. de Laboulaye was somewhat vague in his reply. He said that what was under consideration was the guarantee to France of a straight military contribution. There would be no association of the United States or the United Kingdom with the political and quasi-federal superstructure of the European Defence Community. Mr. Ritchie enquired whether such a development might not lead the European adherents of the EDC to believe that the whole show was being taken over by the Americans and hence to diminish support for European federation. M. de Laboulaye did not think that this would be the case. He contemplated a situation in which the development of the federal political institutions of Europe would be a slow process, extending over a period of say five years. Meanwhile, to fill the immediate situation caused by the need for a renewed French military effort in Indo-China and the danger of German domination in the EDC, American, British and possibly Canadian Forces might be associated with the EDC.

3. Mr. Ritchie asked how such a development would be viewed in Germany, particularly if the German Socialists were successful in the forthcoming German elections in October. M. de Laboulaye replied that he thought, on the basis of reports from M. François-Poncet,[30] that the German Socialists would be more opposed to the political aspects of the EDC which they might regard in terms of the Schuman-Adenauer period of collaboration than to the presence of British and American Forces in the EDC and that they would in fact welcome the latter development.

4. M. de Laboulaye said that when M. Mayer came to Washington in February, he would probably be accompanied by M. Bidault. He hoped that M. Mayer would come to Ottawa. M. Mayer would be discussing in Washington (a) aid for Indo-China, and (b) the future of the EDC.

5. Mr. Ritchie did not comment on the possibility mentioned by M. de Laboulaye that Canadian Forces might join those of the United States and the United Kingdom in association with the EDC.

6. Incidentally, M. de Laboulaye said that he had heard of the support which Mr. Claxton had given to American thinking in support of British and American military contributions to the EDC. He referred in this connection to Mr. Claxton's conversations with Mr. Draper in Paris. He thought that this Canadian initiative might have played its part in the present development of American thinking. Mr. Ritchie said that he had not himself been present during these conversations but he thought that M. de Laboulaye might have an exaggerated idea of the initiative taken by Canada. He understood that the discussion had been very informal nor had we had any confirmation from Washington of the developments in American thinking which he had mentioned.

7. As you may recall, I mentioned to you recently that I had had an informal meeting with General Foulkes, General Simonds, Mr. Drury and A.V.M. Miller to discuss the possibilities of American, British or possibly Canadian military associa-

UNITED KINGDOM ASSOCIATION WITH THE EUROPEAN DEFENCE COMMUNITY

I refer to my memorandum to you of January 26th on EDC developments. You will remember that you pencilled on the memorandum a request for a note on Canada's possible association with the EDC. This subject came into the discussion of the problem of a possible closer association of the UK with the EDC which took place in my office on January 20th between Mr. Drury, General Foulkes, General Simonds, Air Vice-Marshal Miller, Mr. Ritchie and myself. I attach a copy of the notes which were made of that meeting.[32] These were circulated for comments to all those who had attended the meeting and the last reply has just been received.

2. The only comment made was one by General Simonds which reads as follows:

"No reference has been made to one point which I made in the course of the meeting, and I think it an important one. I refer to the question of the changed position of a Canadian Commander if he is serving in EDC as opposed to serving under our existing arrangements. It is true that there appears to be little difference between the two, but in fact under present arrangements a Canadian Commander has direct communication with me and the right to protest through me to his Government if necessary, if he considers he is called upon to take action which he regards as militarily or politically undesirable from a Canadian point of view. This right of appeal is known to all superior commanders under whom he serves and ensures due consideration is given to both sound military and national factors. It appears to me that in the proposed constitution of the EDC the right of appeal of a national commander to his own Government is removed."

3. On February 4th the UK Delegation to the Interim Commission of the EDC circulated to other members of the Commission a memorandum on military association between the United Kingdom and the European Defence Community. We have not yet received this memorandum but a copy of the accompanying note was sent to us by Mr. Heeney. This you will have seen but I am attaching a copy of it for ready reference.† It is interesting to note that the UK Delegation expresses the desire that close military relations between the UK forces and those of the EDC will also be reflected "in close relationship between the UK and the military and political institutions of the EDC". Our latest information from our Embassy in Paris is that at the official level the Quai d'Orsay is not convinced that the French Deputies will consider the British suggestions satisfactory since they mainly concern technical collaboration and the National Assembly will want the additional protocols to the EDC, which M. Mayer has promised to negotiate, to be accompanied by additional British guarantees, not only technical but also political.

EDC: ADDITIONAL GUARANTEES TO FRANCE[33]

Last week there were press reports that the French were asking an extension of the duration of the North Atlantic Treaty from twenty years to fifty years which is the term of the EDC Treaty. We have not had anything from official sources to this effect. If such an extension were seriously contemplated, it would, of course, have a definite bearing on Canada's commitments, both as a member of NATO and as a signatory to the NATO–EDC protocol. What Canada would be faced with in such circumstances would be an extension to the end of the twentieth century of the potential period during which we would be expected to maintain forces in Europe. A telegram was sent to our Embassies in Washington and Paris and our Delegation to the North Atlantic Council on February 14 asking them to send immediately whatever information they could obtain informally on this matter.

2. However, this alleged proposal to extend the life of the North Atlantic Treaty may have been dropped in favour of a move by France to persuade the United Kingdom and the United States Governments to extend the tripartite guarantee of the EDC, signed by them and by France at Paris on May 27, 1952, from twenty to fifty years. Such, at any rate, is the report which appeared in the New York Times of Sunday, February 15. According to this story, the British Government, as a result of the recent London talks between Messrs. Mayer and Bidault and Messrs. Churchill and Eden, are prepared to consult the United States Government regarding an extension of the tripartite guarantee for the full term of the EDC Treaty. This extension would, it is reported, allay French fears that Germany might, in time, dominate the European Defence Community or even leave it to pursue her own national ends.

3. The New York Times story, which is datelined London, February 14, suggests that the United Kingdom, although unwilling to join in any supra-national political community, would be willing to associate herself more closely with a unified Europe "provided that the United States and Canada go along with her in developing the interdependence of British, Canadian and American forces".

4. You will remember that on February 13, Mr. Diefenbaker, referring to France's fear of a restored German national army, suggested that Canada could give a lead in calming French fears by asking the nations who have signed the North Atlantic Treaty, "to give France the assurance that Canada will join with Britain in supporting the extension of the NATO Charter from twenty years to fifty years so that it will coincide with the period of the European Defence Treaty".

5. There are thus two suggested courses of action, on neither of which we have as yet official information. These are:

(a) the extension of the North Atlantic Treaty from twenty to fifty years;

(b) the extension of the tripartite declaration from twenty to fifty years.

6. The first of these would require consultation between the 14–member nations of NATO and, as far as each nation is concerned, it would also, no doubt, require the equivalent of a Cabinet policy decision. In several countries, including Canada, it would require parliamentary approval. Since, however, the matter has been raised in the House, you may wish to make some reference to it in winding up the debate. If you decide to do this, you may wish to use the attached statement. (Appendix A†)[34]

7. The second course of action concerns primarily the United Kingdom, the United States and the French governments. Canada is, of course, not a signatory to the tripartite declaration and would not, therefore, either be legally committed by its extension or necessarily consulted about it. The declaration itself does not specifically mention the number of years the guarantee will be in force but it has such clear reference to the obligations under the North Atlantic Treaty that there can be little doubt that with the cessation of that Treaty, the United Kingdom and United States Governments would no longer be legally bound by the tripartite declaration. It should, perhaps, be mentioned here that Article 13 of the North Atlantic Treaty reads: "After the Treaty has been enforced for twenty years, any Party may cease to be a party one year after its notice of denunciation has been given to the Government of the United States of America which would inform the Governments of the other Parties of the deposit of each notice of denunciation". In other words, the Treaty need not automatically come to an end after it has been in force for twenty years.

Pearson discussed this on February 16, 1953. See Canada, House of Commons, Debates, Session 1952-1953, February 16, p. 1992.

8. Bearing these considerations in mind, it appears to us that Canada should not at this stage take any initiative on either of the two proposals considered in this memorandum. We are not a party to the present negotiations concerned with making the EDC Treaty more palatable to the French people, and we did not sign the tripartite declaration. Our commitment is to NATO, and any consideration of the extension of the life of that Treaty should be taken up, in the first instance, inside the North Atlantic Council. As far as the extension of the tripartite declaration is concerned, we should, in my opinion, wait to be asked for an expression of our views.

9. As requested by you, a quick check was made and revealed no evidence that the Canadian Government has ever told anyone that Canada would either approve or oppose an extension of the life of the North Atlantic Treaty.

CONTACT BETWEEN NATO AND FRIENDLY COUNTRIES

Reference: Our telegram No. 39 of January 19.†

This is the second subject upon which the Secretary-General has invited informal preliminary discussion by the council. It also may be taken up at the informal meeting later this week (January 21).

2. This is the question of machinery or methods of contact between NATO and countries or groups of countries which might be expected to range themselves alongside us in the event of aggression. In the brief note which Ismay has circulated he draws attention to the fact that there is now no machinery for the co-ordination of plans with these countries. "In other words", the note goes on, "we are trying to consider strategy and foreign policy too in water-tight compartments".

3. We have already encountered this problem particularly with Australia and we have in Ottawa and in Paris done something quite informally to let them know how things have been going with NATO. The ANZUS treaty has, I suppose, done something to allay the apprehensions of Australia and New Zealand. But there are other countries in a somewhat similar position and even the other Commonwealth countries are very far from participating in joint planning with the NATO countries. And then there is the special case of Yugoslavia.

4. One cannot help sympathizing with the position of these countries who will inevitably be involved but can have no part in plans which are bound to affect them. Nevertheless, it is very difficult to see what can be done at this stage, on a NATO basis, even to inform these countries of what is being planned.

5. My disposition therefore is to lie pretty low on this one; certainly not to initiate any proposals. At the same time I feel that we should back up any suggestions which would increase support for the alliance amongst friendly non-NATO countries, particularly in the Commonwealth. My feeling is that we will have to go pretty slowly and cautiously and probably on an ad hoc basis in dealing with this problem.

6. We would appreciate any comments that you may wish to make.

CONTACT BETWEEN NATO AND FRIENDLY COUNTRIES

Following from Under-Secretary, Begins: This is a delicate and complex problem, and I agree with you that we must proceed with caution. We should avoid measures that would tend to commit us to an expansion of the present regional confines of NATO. On the other hand, it would be in the mutual interest that NATO should be informed as far as practicable of what friendly countries are planning, and vice versa.

2. The Minister feels that Australia and New Zealand should be given special consideration in this connection and that we might again discuss with the United States the possibility of providing the necessary contact. It is true that our previous suggestion in this regard was rejected by the State Department (my letter No. D-213 of October 3, 1952).[35] It remains to be seen whether the firm opposition of the outgoing United States Administration to any link between NATO and ANZUS will be maintained by the present Administration. I would hope that this would not prove to be the case and that we might look to some form of association between the two organizations, perhaps even a joint NATO–ANZUS session.

3. I should be grateful for any comments on this suggestion, which I should emphasize is still only at a most preliminary stage. Ends.

CONFIDENTIAL

INFORMAL COUNCIL MEETING ON JANUARY 28 — CONTACT BETWEEN NATO AND FRIENDLY COUNTRIES

Reference: Our telegram No. 40 of January 19, 1953.

Lord Ismay opened the discussion on this subject, suggesting that it might be useful for the Council to decide in this regard whether, for instance if there was to be a Middle East Defence Organization, it would have anything to do with NATO and also, whether NATO should have some contact with ANZUS. He did not expect, of course, that final conclusions could be reached in the course of the meeting. He merely wished to invite the Permanent Representatives and their respective Governments to consider the problem so that a fuller discussion might be held later on in about a month.

2. The United Kingdom Representative said that as his country belonged to a number of regional organizations they had to bear in mind constantly the relationship of NATO plans to the interests of other friendly groups of nations. He wished to assure the Council that United Kingdom planning was developed on a broad basis and not in watertight compartments. In his view, however, it would be impractical to attempt to set up hard and fast liaison arrangements between NATO and regional groups which existed only for planning purposes in some cases and which did not have a central organization as yet.

3. I made the point outlined in paragraph 5 of my telegram under reference. This was a matter of some delicacy and, while the Council should be ready to discuss the problem, there was need to proceed very cautiously.

4. I should appreciate receiving your comments and guidance in this matter which will come up again for discussion later in February or early in March.

DESPATCH 325 Paris, February 5, 1953

Reference: Your telegram No. 74 of January 27, 1953.

The Under-Secretary's telegram under reference is interesting, particularly in relation to the problem of preparing for the Ministers' Meeting of April 23. In the latter connection we share the concern expressed in para. 3 of your telegram No. 75 of January 27.[36] As you will see from our telegram No. 85 of February 3,† the Working Group on the Agenda have so far produced little which is likely to raise the April meeting above the level of that held in December. Indeed, unless the EDC process moves faster than is generally expected, we run the risk of its having less intrinsic importance because the 1952 Annual Review will not be very new or very stimulating.

2. For these reasons, and despite our initial caution, we were attracted by the idea of trying to make progress between now and April toward the solution of this delicate problem. Apart from the importance of the issue itself, the idea of the wider association of NATO with free nations in other parts of the world is one to appeal to public imagination. We recognized, however, that if the matter were to be raised we would have to consider very carefully how this should be done, since the very preliminary reactions at the informal meeting of the Council on January 21 (when the Secretary General's paper came before us) had indicated a good deal of reserve on the part of my colleagues.

3. The arguments in favour of raising the problem seem to us to be, principally and very briefly, somewhat as follows:

(a) We all know that there are a number of friendly countries, notably Australia and New Zealand, who would be involved immediately "on our side" in the event

[36] Ce paragraphe exprimait l'inquiétude que suscitait "l'opinion largement répandue à l'étranger, selon laquelle l'OTAN était en perte de vitesse". Il appuyait aussi la proposition du secrétaire général qui souhaitait que le Conseil "reconnaisse que la question des rapports de l'OTAN avec les États qui, tout en n'étant pas membres de l'Organisation, étaient aussi engagés dans la lutte contre l'impérialisme soviétique", constituait "l'un des facteurs qui pourraient avoir les plus graves conséquences" sur l'avenir de l'OTAN.
This paragraph expressed concern about "the widespread belief abroad that NATO is losing momentum". It also endorsed the Secretary-General's proposal that the Council "consider the relationship of NATO to non-member states which are also involved in the struggle against Soviet imperialism" as "one of the most important" questions bearing on NATO's future.

of war; this gives them a prima facie right to participate (and NATO a prima facie interest in having them participate) in the planning and preparation of our defences.

(b) NATO is having, increasingly, to take account of "global" factors in its planning; the present organization is unsatisfactory in this respect for we are inhibited in the NATO bodies from anything but spasmodic and uncertain contact with other areas of major strategic importance (see our despatch No. 117 of January 13).†

(c) At the present time Australia is almost certainly the most important non-NATO country with which some regular contact is desirable and might be feasible; this contact might be accomplished with least difficulty by some form of NATO–ANZUS association; for this a pretty logical case might be made.

(d) The Commonwealth connection is itself an important NATO asset; the continued lack of association of certain Commonwealth countries with the Organization may tend to lessen the value of this asset.

4. The principal arguments against moving at this stage to broaden the NATO association seem to us, again very briefly, to be these:

(a) It would provide further provocation to the USSR, that is to say the Russians might genuinely take such an extension of our arrangements as confirming their conviction of Western encirclement, or at any rate, they could be counted upon to use this argument in their political warfare.

(b) The effect on friendly "neutral" countries, and particularly on Asian opinion might be bad; this would be especially true of India, which recently has been tending a bit in our direction; they might well be pushed further off by any incursion of NATO into the Pacific. And what would be the views of the other Asian candidates for ANZUS who could not of course be included in any NATO arrangements?

(c) The UK Government are still in a pretty difficult political position internally in relation to ANZUS and, for that reason, might well resist any approach to ANZUS on the part of NATO.

(d) It is not unlikely that France, and perhaps some other NATO Governments, would resent special treatment for ANZUS (which means the Commonwealth), on the ground that other countries might equally claim special treatment.

(e) The practical argument for developing liaison with ANZUS may be applied in the case of individual countries, notably Yugoslavia and Spain; and of course to MEDO, if and when it comes into being.

5. If, on balance, it should be decided that the arguments in favour of establishing contact, let us say with ANZUS to begin with, outweigh those against, then the questions of method and timing become important. As regards the former, one might propose an informal liaison arrangement, presumably through the United States, because of its common membership in the two organizations. Later on, more formal exchanges and some measure of integration might be devised and agreed upon. As to timing, one of the difficulties (if we are thinking in terms of the April Meeting of Ministers) would be the present preoccupations of the US administration and their general unwillingness to commit themselves until their new house is set in order.

6. My own feeling is that, given the basic importance of the issue, we might explore the proposal informally and tentatively. But I should be inclined to make the first approach not to the United States but to the United Kingdom. On the whole, I would not be sanguine about our reception in that quarter and, indeed, I am disposed, reluctantly, to return to my original attitude of caution. In any event, I am afraid that the likelihood of advancing far enough with this matter to have Ministers discuss it profitably in April is not great.

You will recall that in telegram No. 74 of January 27th to CANAC, Paris, we asked for Mr. Heeney's comments on the suggestion that the time might be ripe to discuss again with the United States the question of some form of association between NATO and ANZUS; and that in telegram No. 75 of the same date,† you suggested that the relationship of NATO to other international defence organizations might be one of the more important questions of policy which could be discussed at the next Ministerial meeting of the Council. Copies of these two telegrams are attached for your convenience.

2. Mr. Heeney has now given us his comments in despatch No. 325 of February 5th, copy of which I attach. You will see that he agrees with the desirability, if possible, of adding substance to the agenda of the April meeting and that he finds considerable attraction in your ideas concerning contact between NATO and ANZUS. Having weighed the difficulties, however, he has returned to his initial attitude of caution and concludes that progress in this matter is unlikely to be sufficient to enable Ministers to discuss it profitably in April. The preliminary reactions of other Representatives, when the Secretary General raised the matter at an informal meeting of the Council recently, indicated a good deal of reserve. Moreover, even if it were considered that the advantages of establishing contact with ANZUS now outweighed the disadvantages, the present preoccupations of the United States Administration posed serious problems of method and timing.

3. In view of this, Mr. Heeney suggests that the first approach should perhaps be made to the United Kingdom rather than to the United States. I am inclined to agree, but wonder whether before asking Mr. Robertson to speak to anyone in London, it might not be better to suggest that Mr. Heeney sound out Lord Ismay on whether a tentative approach along these lines in London would be opportune at this time. I should be grateful for your views.[37]

Memorandum from Deputy Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Defence Liaison (1) Division

SECRET [Ottawa], February 19, 1953

Attached is the memorandum on "Contact Between NATO and Friendly Countries" with the Minister's comments suggesting that noncommittal approaches should be made to London and Washington on the subject of contacts between ANZUS and NATO. This raises some difficult problems. The Minister obviously is thinking in terms of establishing some links between NATO planning and planning in other areas in an attempt to fill the vacuum left by the absence of a global planning organization. In the second place, he is trying to find some way by which Canada can be associated, even if indirectly, with the Pacific area. These are pretty broad political objectives and will be difficult to realize in terms of existing international organizations. Moreover, they cannot be entirely divorced from the Minister's interest in our association with the proposed five-power agency for Southeast Asia planning.[38] For my own part, I do not think we shall see the reality of a global planning organization on a tripartite basis (United Kingdom, United States and France). It would not be a reality unless the United States were willing to discuss the extent and disposition of its atomic military resources. This they will not do. Meanwhile, the only real global planning organization would be the United States Chiefs of Staff.

2. The United Kingdom probably realized this state of affairs. That is why they are pressing for admission to ANZUS and trying to find a basis for a continuing five-power military planning organization with a political superstructure for the Southeast Asia area. They have not yet succeeded in either of these latter aims but it is possible that they may do so. Some approach to global planning might be reached in this way. The United Kingdom, France and the United States would thus be members both of the North Atlantic Council and of the five-power political and military grouping (if this comes into existence). It is more likely that progress may be made along these lines than in the direction of a closer association of ANZUS and NATO. For one thing, the present membership of NATO includes so many European countries (e.g. Greece, Turkey, etc.) with no interest in Southeast Asia that one cannot imagine any close links developing between the two organizations. Perhaps the best that can be hoped for in the direction of increasing the knowledge of the North Atlantic Council with regard to global planning and strategy is a system of periodic briefing of the kind which General Bradley has told General Foulkes that he is willing to consider.

3. In the circumstances I doubt whether we shall get anywhere in London or Washington by raising the question of a closer NATO-ANZUS relationship.

4. It may be that we shall be better advised to try to get our foot in the door of the new five-power grouping. As you yourself have pointed out, this grouping is still at a very early stage and it may be nipped in the bud. A modest start could, however, be made by our being represented by an observer at the next five-power military meeting.

5. In addition, I should like to see this whole problem of Canada's association with global planning, our relationship to ANZUS and to any five-power grouping for Southeast Asia examined a good deal more carefully. A first step might be for the Under-Secretary, if he agreed, to call an informal meeting with General Foulkes and General Simonds to discuss the military aspects of the question, perhaps before Mr. Claxton is approached. It would also be valuable to have, in due course, the views of our High Commissioner in London and our Ambassador in Washington. We must move cautiously in this matter to avoid the appearance of entangling ourselves in new commitments. On the other hand, under the new United States Administration, the situation may evolve fairly rapidly and will want watching.

CONTACT BETWEEN NATO AND FRIENDLY COUNTRIES

I attach your memorandum to the Minister of February 13 on the possibility of developing some form of association between NATO and ANZUS. You will recall that the Minister suggested informal and non-committal approaches on this matter might be made to London and Washington. Your instructions subsequently were that, in view of the United Kingdom sensitiveness about ANZUS, London should be approached before we took up matters with Washington even informally.

2. As you know, however, the question of associating Canada in some way with planning in the Pacific area has in the meantime arisen, particularly with reference to the proposed joint South-East Asian military staff agency. It is hoped shortly to obtain the views of the Acting Minister as to whether or not enquiries should be made in London and Washington to ascertain whether they would welcome participation of Canadian observers in the next meeting at which the possible creation of the staff agency will be discussed.

3. I am now inclined to think that it would be inadvisable to raise in London the question of association between NATO and ANZUS until it has been decided whether, and what form of, an approach is to be made with respect to five-power planning in South-East Asia. It is true that the two questions are not themselves directly connected. One concerns the interests of NATO as a whole, while the other concerns Canadian interests only; and they do not deal with exactly the same geographical region. On the other hand some of the same basic problems underlie both questions, particularly in relation to United Kingdom policy toward both questions and the delicacy of the United Kingdom position. It seems pretty clear that the United Kingdom regards the five-power planning body as an alternative (and at the moment more important) means of obtaining the objective it has so far failed to achieve through membership in ANZUS, namely an effective voice in strategic planning in the Pacific area, which the United Kingdom is, for understandable reasons, most anxious to obtain. Whether this planning is done in ANZUS or in the proposed five-power body, it is bound to have two important features in common:

(a) it will be dominated by the threat of expansion by Communist China; and

(b) the United States must take the major share in organizing any effective resistance to this expansion.

4. It also seems clear that the new United States administration recognizes these facts and is treating the proposals for a five-power planning body with great caution for precisely the same reason that the previous administration opposed United Kingdom membership in ANZUS. It has not yet made up its mind on the extent to which it wishes to share responsibility for strategic decisions in the Pacific area.

5. Both NATO interest in ANZUS planning and Canadian interest in five-power planning in South-East Asia touch on these twin problems of United Kingdom desire and United States reluctance to share responsibility in the Pacific area. For this reason United Kingdom views on associating ANZUS with NATO are likely to be affected by the progress made with the proposals for a five-power staff agency in South-East Asia. It may be, for instance, that the United Kingdom would feel that NATO-ANZUS association is in the present circumstances irrelevant, or worse, that it might actually jeopardize efforts to obtain United States agreement to the five-power staff agency. I therefore think that any approach we make in London on the NATO-ANZUS question should at least be consistent with, and take account of, whatever approach we make on the South-East Asian planning question.

6. I would recommend that we defer an approach in London on NATO-ANZUS association until it has been decided whether observer status at the next South-East Asia meeting should be sought. If the Acting Minister approves an approach on the South-East Asia question, our approach in London on NATO-ANZUS association could then be synchronized with it. If you agree, you may wish to explain matters to the Minister.

The attached memorandum[40] has been rendered slightly out of date by the strong likelihood that Mr. Claxton will decide against our applying for observer status at the forthcoming five-power military talks in Honolulu.[41]

2. I quite agree with the argument in the memorandum that while the two questions of a NATO-ANZUS link and five-power planning in South-east Asia are not directly connected, the same basic problems underlie both questions. I am inclined to think that our next step might be to approach the United Kingdom Foreign Office on this whole general question of strategic planning in the Pacific area. Such an approach could be, as the Minister has said in his note, "non-committal in character". It could arise out of the enquiries we have recently been making regarding the five-power talks and while we could discuss with them the question of a NATO-ANZUS relationship, we should not advocate it, the more so as I think it increasingly unlikely that any such development will take place.

3. After this conversation in London and in the light of such information as might be gained there, we might have a similar conversation with the State Department in Washington in the course of which we could discuss the relationship between NATO and ANZUS in the same non-committal way we had done in London. We could also point out that while we were not interested in an observer status in the five-power talks in Honolulu because of their restricted agenda and their strictly military character, we were, of course, interested in the general question of strategic planning in the Pacific area and in the relationship of such planning to NATO. We might add that these questions had been aired in the House of Commons recently

REGIONAL DEFENCE IN ASIA AND GLOBAL DEFENCE PROBLEMS[43]

Under cover of a memorandum of May 1,† Mr. Wilgress sent you an account, received from Canada House, of the conclusions reached by the Five Power meeting of Military Representatives on South East Asia held at Pearl Harbour in April. It had previously been agreed by yourself and Mr. Claxton that we should not seek observer status at this meeting since it was to be concerned with technical military matters in an area where there was no present intention of committing Canadian forces. However, the United Kingdom and United States authorities had been informed that, although we had decided not to seek an invitation to be represented by an observer at this meeting, we were extremely interested in the discussions and hoped to be informed of the results. Our missions in London and Washington indicated at the same time that we might wish later to discuss informally with the Foreign Office and the State Department respectively the wider implications of these South East Asia talks, particularly the prospects of establishing new consultative machinery or political groupings to consider the regional defence of any Pacific or Asian area.

2. In this connection we have still to consider what, if any, action may be desirable with respect to the development of some form of association between NATO and ANZUS. You suggested once before that informal and non-committal approaches on this matter might be made in London and Washington. Before this could be done, however, the question of associating Canada with South East Asia discussions arose and an approach on NATO-ANZUS association was deferred pending clarification of policy on this former question.

3. It may now be timely and appropriate to look again at both the question of NATO-ANZUS association and the question of Canadian interest in regional defence planning in Asia in the general context of global strategy and planning. Next to the security of the NATO area the security of the Pacific area has probably now become the most urgent global defence problem. But whereas there is in NATO an agreed approach to the problem posed by the threat of Soviet aggression in Europe, there is as yet no general agreement on how the problem of defence in the Pacific area should be tackled. Moreover, in the absence of such agreement, it is difficult to deal effectively with the equally important problem of how to coordinate defence measures in the NATO area with whatever defence measures can be taken in the Pacific area.

4. The problem of defence in the Pacific area is complicated by the fact that there is at least a difference of emphasis, if not of kind, in the views of the various Pacific powers on the nature of the threat and how best to meet it. This is exemplified by the different ways in which these powers regard the roles of China and Japan. Communist China presents to the United States, the United Kingdom and France the main threat of expansion in this area, though only the United States has the military means of organizing effective resistance. But whereas the United States places emphasis on the threat to Japan and the Western Pacific, and regards Japan as the chief bulwark against this threat, the United Kingdom and France are more concerned with South East Asia and are less convinced of the reliability of Japan. To Australia and New Zealand, moreover, it is the recurrence of Japanese aggression that has been, at least until recently, the matter of most concern. ANZUS was established to meet this longer-term danger and is, therefore, unlikely to provide a suitable vehicle for wider strategy or planning concerned with Communist expansion. In the eyes of the other non-Communist states in South East Asia, however, both Communist China and Japan are only two of several important external factors of which they must take cautious account. They also regard with some measure of suspicion the policies and influence of the Western Powers, particularly when they take the form of military groupings. In fact, Communism represents to most of these newly independent Asian states a domestic political and economic threat rather than a foreign military threat, and they consider that it can be most effectively met by political and economic measures.

5. Until there is a common policy toward Communist China and Japan there appears to be little possibility of developing an overall strategy in the Pacific area acceptable to all the non-communist powers concerned. Nor has the United States so far shown any enthusiasm for sharing with these other powers real responsibility for the development of its own Pacific strategy. Rather, it has preferred to enter into separate arrangements with individual countries (Japan, the Philippines, Australia and New Zealand) on limited aspects of the overall problem and has reserved to itself the vital matter of the post-war development of Japan. The United Kingdom, on the other hand, is for understandable reasons most anxious to obtain an effective voice in Pacific strategy and planning and has apparently sought to achieve this objective, first through membership in ANZUS and more recently through proposals for a five-power staff agency in South East Asia. These twin problems of United Kingdom desire and United States reluctance to share responsibility in the Pacific area are bound to have an important bearing both on the question of associating NATO with strategy or planning in this area and on the form which Canadian interest in the area might take.

6. In order to put the problem of Pacific defence in the context of global defence, there are two further factors which I think should be considered. First is the fact that the United States alone among the Western Powers enjoys a virtual monopoly in global strategy and planning by reason of its military resources and its stockpile of atomic bombs. No relaxation of this monopoly is possible under the present atomic energy security legislation in the United States. Moreover, even in the absence of this legislative restriction the Administration might well be deterred from sharing with other powers the formulation of global planning, or even the discussion of global strategy, because it might inhibit the freedom of United States decision and action. Without full United States participation discussion of these problems in NATO, or in any other body that might be set up, would of course be purely academic.

7. The second factor that should be borne in mind is the difference in scope of the interests of world powers such as the United States, the United Kingdom and France and those of smaller countries. For example, the governments of the smaller countries which are parties to the North Atlantic Treaty have been able to convince their peoples of the need for sharing the burden of defending their particular region. It would be politically difficult, however, if not impossible, to make these same peoples realize that the problem of defending their own region is not merely a regional but a global problem. For this reason it would be difficult to obtain the agreement of the smaller NATO powers to participation by NATO itself in global planning. Such participation might result in their being asked to make greater defence efforts to provide, either directly or indirectly, for the security of some other region of the world in which they were not directly concerned.

8. On the basis of such considerations, it appears to be in the Canadian interest to attempt to maintain a distinction between global strategy (i.e. military policy) and global planning (i.e. the means of implementing the policy). The Standing Group should take into account global strategy in formulating NATO strategy, but if NATO itself undertook global planning, it might imply extension of our commitments beyond the NATO area. Participation in planning inevitably implies responsibility for carrying out the plans. If Canada or any of the other smaller countries participated in global planning, or if the regional organization to which we belonged participated in global planning, we could not very well refuse to contribute to the defence of another threatened region if so requested.

9. Three general conclusions may be drawn from these considerations:

(a) that only those Western Powers with world-wide interests (i.e. the Standing Group countries) are actually in a position, either politically or militarily, to undertake the commitments involved in global planning;

(b) that the rest of the countries in the free world must needs restrict their defensive planning to a regional basis; but

(c) that global strategy must be considered in each region if the regional planning undertaken is to be realistic.

10. It is clear that NATO must interest itself in global strategy, but equally clear that global planning in areas outside the North Atlantic would be outside the competence of NATO. One possible means of dealing with global planning would be to establish something like a tripartite combined chiefs of staff. If such a body were set up it would undoubtedly be in the Canadian interest to be kept fully informed of all its decisions and conclusions and to participate in its discussions and decisions when they directly affected Canada. As you know, the United Kingdom authorities have already expressed themselves in favour of such a body, but the United States authorities have refused to accept anything of this nature in peacetime.

11. Another concept which need not involve the formal machinery of a global planning body would be a series of regional defence organizations (NATO, MEDO and one for the Pacific area) interlocked by the common membership in each of the United States, the United Kingdom and France. Global strategy could be discussed in each regional organization, with the three Standing Group countries taking the lead, while planning could continue to be carried on on a regional basis, with the three Standing Group countries providing the essential co-ordination.

12. In view of the difficulties outlined earlier, however, it seems most unlikely that either concept could be implemented in the near future. Progress in this direction would depend on: (a) United States willingness to discuss global strategy in NATO and to share at least with the United Kingdom (and if possible also France) its present monopoly in global planning; and (b) creation of effective regional defence organizations in the Pacific area and in the Middle East.

13. On the first point, the furthest the United States is apparently prepared to go at this time (as indicated informally by General Bradley to General Foulkes earlier this year) is to consider the possibility of the Chairman of the United States Joint Chiefs of Staff discussing periodically with the Military Committee and with the North Atlantic Council current global strategy and its implications for the NATO area, provided the approval of the National Security Council is obtained. On the second point it seems to me, as I have argued above, that in the Pacific area, where the requirement for regional and defence planning is perhaps the most urgent outside the NATO area, the chances of early creation of a formal organization for this purpose are rather slim. Much may depend on the way in which the experiment in military cooperation embarked on at Pearl Harbour develops further.

14. If you agree with this reasoning, I would suggest that the best course for us at this time is to keep as closely informed as possible of the development of US and UK policy on this matter, with a view to putting forward at the most appropriate time the views outlined in paras. 8-11 above. As a first step, I think we should try to obtain from the UK Foreign Office an indication of what their present thinking is on the problem of regional planning in the Pacific area and its association with NATO planning. Such an approach could be non-committal in character, designed not to put forward any particular proposals but to stress our interest in these problems and our desire to be kept informed. It would not be unexpected, since we have already intimated in London and Washington that we might wish to discuss informally the wider implications of the five-power talks on South East Asia. I would suggest, however, that this approach should not be limited to this or any other particular aspect of the problem. The question of NATO-ANZUS association could be discussed in this connection, but without emphasis, as it appears to be a decreasingly important aspect.

15. After such a conversation with the Foreign Office, and in the light of such information as we might obtain, we could have a similar non-committal conversation with the State Department in Washington on the same general subject. We could at that time point out that, while we had not sought observer status at the Pearl Harbour talks because of their restricted agenda, we had of course a general interest in the question of defence in the Pacific area and its relation to defence in the NATO area, and a very direct interest in such questions as the redeployment of forces from Korea.

GLOBAL DEFENCE PROBLEMS

You will recall that you sent to Canada House under cover of Despatch No. 918 of June 11† a memorandum dated May 11 which had been prepared in the Department on the subject of regional defence in Asia and its relation to global defence problems. Attached for your convenience is a copy of this memorandum. You asked that a non-committal approach should be made to the Foreign Office to obtain an indication of their present thinking on this matter with the thought that a similar non-committal approach might be made to the State Department in Washington in the light of such information as Canada House was able to obtain.

We have now received a reply from London (their Despatch No. 1979, of September 11, copy of which is attached†) reporting on an informal talk which had been had with the Foreign Office official responsible for co-ordinating with the military authorities defence planning in Southeast Asia. It seems clear from this report that the United Kingdom authorities, because of the known attitude of the United States Administration, were not prepared to raise at this time either the theoretical problem of relating regional planning in the Pacific area to planning under NATO or the practical problem of creating some formal global planning body. The Foreign Office evidently prefers to see a solid basis of cooperation in military planning develop through such media as the Five-Power Staff Agency before raising political questions which might prove awkward. In the meantime, whatever global planning is undertaken is presumably undertaken separately in London and in Washington. In Mr. Robertson's view, the co-ordination of whatever decisions are taken in this field in London and in Washington is about the extent of what we can expect in the way of global planning in the present circumstances. He therefore thinks that it would not be wise to put forward at this time the views that we have formulated on a tentative basis in paragraphs 8-11 of the attached memorandum.

If you agree, however, I think there would be no harm in our asking the Embassy in Washington to have an informal word on this general subject with someone in the State Department.[44]The meeting of the Five-Power Staff Agency in Singapore this month could be used as an excuse.[45]

NATO AND ANZUS

Mr. Pearson said that Canadian participation in NATO and Australian participation in ANZUS have created a field in which our relations are not quite so intimate as in some others. He felt, however, that we could easily have a working relationship here which would be satisfactory to both countries. Both organizations serve the same basic purpose. We have told our NATO representative in Paris to be frank in providing his Australian colleague with full information about NATO developments of interest to Australia.

Mr. Casey said that, at the recent ANZUS meetings, Mr. Dulles made it clear that, while he hopes ultimately to see a broadly based security arrangement in the Pacific, the United States is still opposed to widening of ANZUS membership. If the United Kingdom were admitted, the Netherlands and France, and probably South Korea and the Philippines, would also seek admission. This, in Mr. Dulles' opinion, would made ANZUS much less effective. He had stated at the recent meetings that, if representatives of certain states had been present, he would have found it impossible to speak as frankly as he had about certain problems and about American policy with respect to these problems.

Asked if there were any signs of the five-power military planning group developing into a political association, Mr. Casey said that there are no signs of this at present, nor of any general security arrangement in the Pacific area. On the other hand, the five-power group, ANZUS and ANZAM all have a good deal in common on the planning side. The same military planners work to a considerable extent on all three.

No follow-up action was indicated.

Mr. Pearson asked if co-ordinated planning between NATO and ANZUS had been discussed at the recent ANZUS meetings. Mr. Casey said that this had not been discussed and that the greater part of the meetings had been taken up with a systematic analysis of Asian trouble-spots by the Americans. These meetings and the semi-annual meetings of ANZUS planners at Pearl Harbour, give Australia an invaluable insight into conditions in various parts of the Pacific area, and the Council meetings themselves give a consecutive picture of American thinking on Asian questions which it would be impossible for the Australian Government to obtain otherwise.

Mr. Pearson remarked that it is always helpful to receive confidential information about United States views but that there is sometimes a disturbing discrepancy between these views and subsequent statements of policy in public. Turning to NATO, he said that the relatively large numbers attending NATO meetings make it difficult for the Americans and some others to be as frank in discussing sensitive matters of policy in this forum as they would like to be. A year or so ago some thought had been given to proposing a joint meeting of NATO and ANZUS but it was finally decided not to do this, as such a move might be misunderstood in some quarters.

MINISTERIAL MEETING OF THE COUNCIL — ITEM II:
CONSIDERATION OF THE INTERNATIONAL POLITICAL SITUATION

The discussion of this item was initiated during the first session on Monday morning, December 14, and it lasted throughout the afternoon meeting. Nearly all Foreign Ministers made statements but as many complex questions were dealt with in full session, and no particular attempt was made by the Chairman to suggest an orderly procedure, the outcome of the discussion was not too satisfactory. In this report, we propose to summarize the points made as regards the major issues which were raised in the course of this discussion.

Trends of Soviet Policy

2. Mr. Eden thought that so far no real effort had been made by the Soviet Union to meet the Western Powers and that there had been no change in the basic hostility of the Soviet régime; its tactics had become more flexible, more intelligent. This change could be attributed to internal as well as external factors. No one could assess the full scope of the internal factors; much was hidden by the totalitarian character of the régime itself but a possible interpretation was that the Soviet Government preoccupied by a variety of domestic problems might be more ready than hitherto to restrain its activities on the international scene. In any case, NATO had achieved some success in building a deterrent against war; the danger of aggression by the USSR seemed less imminent. Morale in the West had improved and we were now almost within reach of our goal of not being compelled to negotiate from a position of weakness. In this connection tribute had to be paid to the United States for the aid given to build up European defence.

3. The Turkish Foreign Minister argued that the hopes raised by the prospect of a Four-Power meeting should not blind our judgment on the motives of Soviet leaders. If they had agreed to attend a meeting this was for tactical reasons and there was no indication that their basic attitude was changed or that they were prepared to accept the unification of Germany in freedom. Soviet armament was in fact increasing.

4. Mr. Dulles, in the morning session, made a long statement on Soviet policy. According to the best available estimates, there seemed to be no immediate likelihood of open armed attack by the USSR against the West. It was desirable, however, to bear in mind the causes of such a situation. The Soviet Government were confronted by a series of domestic or semi-domestic problems. There seemed to be a breakdown in their agricultural policy; there were considerable demands for more consumer goods and they could only be met at the expense of capital development. There was evidence of growing discontent in the satellite countries and the problem of relations with China seemed to be a source of preoccupation to Soviet leaders. Under such circumstances, only reckless judgment might induce Soviet leaders to declare war and there was no evidence of any such recklessness.

5. Soviet policy seemed, therefore, at the present state, mainly concerned with internal problems, with the maintenance of the status quo in disputed areas and with sowing dissension in the Western World.

As regards Germany, Soviet leaders had refused any opportunities for negotiation. Their note of November 3 was one of the most abrupt refusals to negotiate which had ever been transmitted by a government. They had, however, taken steps to counteract the adverse effects of their negative attitude and, in effect, reversed their position. This did not suggest so much a change of heart on their part as a concession to world public opinion; it could be expected that through various devices, even if they attended a Four-Power meeting, they would attempt to postpone a settlement.

On Korea, it was equally clear that the USSR had no desire to attend a political conference. They had taken the same attitude as regards the President's proposal on atomic energy; there seemed to be no inclination on their part to discuss specific problems in a constructive fashion. World opinion compelled them to modify, for tactical reasons, their more extreme positions but there was no inner desire to seek solutions. Soviet leaders seemed to hope that they could settle internal problems while promoting disunity in the West and that, in the end, their relative position would be improved when the time came to resume a more active and possibly more aggressive international policy.

6. The Prime Minister of Italy agreed with Mr. Dulles. The prospect of a Four-Power meeting would be more encouraging if there was any indication that the USSR had a sincere desire to co-operate in finding a possible basis for co-existence. The only point which was clear, in his opinion, was that any more conciliatory attitude on the part of the USSR was due chiefly to the firmness and unity of the West.

7. Mr. Van Zeeland had never been of the opinion that the Soviet Union had decided to attack the West but he thought that the lack of balance between the forces of the West and those of the USSR had created risks of war. These risks were to some extent being reduced but the growing Soviet power in the atomic field was creating a different and no less serious danger. There were also risks of explosion in a number of points, Berlin, Korea, as long as the cold war continued. War might break out not as a result of deliberate calculation but by accident. While a number of things had not changed in the Soviet World, its objectives and principles, it was obvious that some changes had occurred, in the hierarchy, and in domestic policy, and Western diplomacy had to take any opportunity, however slight, to attempt to find a way to bring the cold war to an end.

8. The Greek Foreign Minister also welcomed Mr. Dulles' view that the danger of war seemed to be less immediate but he pointed out that subversive Soviet activities were continuing and that NATO countries had no choice but to strengthen their political relations and to reinforce their defensive organization.

9. The general conclusions which seemed to emerge from the discussion were the following:

(a) there has been no basic change in Soviet policy;

(b) while Soviet leaders seem to be preoccupied with internal problems and accept for tactical reasons to attend meetings, there is so far no evidence that they are prepared for negotiated settlements of the major issues or to weaken in their attempts to promote disunity in the West;

(c) there is less danger of an open armed aggression but the West must remain vigilant and continue to make every effort to bring the cold war to an end;

(d) the West must guard against the possibility that later on Soviet leaders may revert to a more aggressive policy having, in the meantime, overcome their more pressing internal difficulties and developed their atomic power.

Future NATO Policy

10. Mr. Eden spoke along expected lines as regards future NATO policy. There was no suggestion that NATO should relax but if an attack was not imminent the member countries had to prepare themselves for a long period of international tension and determine the level of forces which would provide an adequate deterrent but yet could be maintained as long as was necessary. He thought that the following broad lines of policy stemmed from the above assumption:

(a) NATO countries had to keep in being, over a period of years, forces which would provide an effective deterrent to aggression;

(b) the quality of the forces in being should be improved so that they could provide a shield behind which reserves could be mobilized;

(c) the lead in new weapons and scientific defence should be maintained;

(d) provision should be made for a German contribution to the defence of the West.

Mr. Eden suggested that Lord Alexander would give, under Item V of the agenda, detailed indications as to how such broad policies could be put into effect.

11. Mr. Dulles accepted in effect Mr. Eden's suggestions but he made a number of additional points:

(a) NATO already had impressive forces at its disposal which would create serious problems for the aggressor;

(b) fellowship had been developed within the Organization and the habit of working together, as shown by the Annual Review and the International Secretariat was growing;

(c) NATO was more than a military organization and the United States Government favoured the development of the non-military aspects of the Organization — in fact, this was essential if NATO was to endure;

(d) NATO had to establish its military expenditures at a level consistent with social and economic progress; this was in effect and in itself a security measure;

(e) the United States stood ready to do its part in the task ahead; they were increasing their contribution to NATO security by strengthening North American defence in cooperation with Canada; they would increase the effectiveness of NATO forces with new and better weapons; they would continue to make a financial and material contribution to European forces (although it was hoped that this would decrease as European economic strength increased); the President was seeking authority to make additional information available to NATO authorities as regards the effect of new weapons — this would assist NATO planning and, in particular, the preparation of a new statement of requirements.

12. The Turkish Foreign Minister raised the only dissident voice. As Soviet armed strength was increasing he could not see that NATO forces should level off. Soviet leaders were only impressed with two arguments: strength and determination. The Western Powers had been careful not to take any provocative steps and any fears which may be expressed by Soviet leaders as to the NATO build-up were only meant to serve propaganda purposes. In fact, Soviet leaders were neglecting no occasion to increase their political and military power and aggression against the West was continuing. Under the circumstances armed forces had to be developed; priority had to be given to security and if economic difficulties were to arise, they could be solved on a cooperative basis as had been done in the past. The shield of NATO had to be related to the threat and not to economic possibilities. The Turkish Minister drew attention again to the danger involved for NATO countries if they developed economic relations with and therefore increased their dependence upon the Soviet Bloc.

13. The Foreign Ministers of Norway and Denmark stressed the importance from the point of view of a long-range defence policy of developing production and employment in Western Europe. Mr. Pella made the point that democracy had to be concerned not only with security but that it had to demonstrate that socially and economically it was more effective than the Communist system and he expressed the hope that, whenever important questions arose, they would be discussed by the Permanent Representatives.

14. It seemed that agreement on the following points emerged from the Council discussion on future NATO policy:

(a) the United Kingdom assumptions were accepted;

(b) while NATO forces had to be maintained at a sufficiently high level to deter aggression, social and economic stability had to be preserved;

(c) it was important for the long run to develop the economic potential of the member countries and to follow progressive social policies;

(d) consultation on common political problems had to be developed as it tended to increase the cohesion of the Alliance;

(e) in general, non-military cooperation — this was stressed by Mr. Pearson — had to be built up if the Organization was to last longer than the military emergency which had brought it into being.

The European Defence Community

16. Mr. Dulles made a very frank, able and moving statement on this subject. Under the North Atlantic Treaty, member countries had to safeguard Western civilization which was a great creative force. It had emphasized the spiritual nature and freedom of the individual, it had promoted government by consent and guided the evolution of many countries towards self-government. Western civilization had increased productivity and made it possible for more people to live longer and better; it was prepared to share its knowledge with other areas of the world. Yet, this great uplifting force was now challenged by those who reproduced the degradation of the dark ages; this was due to the fact that the nations which had led the West had weakened in strength and prestige and allowed themselves to become divided.

17. The West had immense potential strength but greater unity was necessary. The integration of the European Community was essential to provide a core to the Atlantic Community. Both had to be built together and each contributed to the success of the other. This integration had already found expression in the OEEC, the EPU, the CSC, and the proposed EDC, at EPC. The United States people had followed closely this process. Many felt that they were only interested in the defence aspect of integration. Nothing was further from the truth. The United States were interested in the survival and the prosperity of the European civilization and, in their view, this meant the setting-up of a European Community based on the reconciliation of France and Germany.

18. The United States people had anxiously been awaiting the consummation of the integration process through the setting-up of the EDC. They had demonstrated their concern through membership in NATO, cooperation with the OEEC, economic assistance, the stationing of forces in Europe. They had done much to make Europe a healthy and cooperative area but the essential step had yet to be taken. Some feared that if such a step were taken, the United States might then abandon Europe and reduce its forces. In fact, if the EDC were created it would ensure intimate and enduring cooperation between the forces of the United States, the United Kingdom and those of European countries. If, however, France and Germany were to remain apart it was doubtful whether Europe could be made safe and this would compel an "agonizing" reappraisal of basic United States policies.

19. If Western Europe was to develop unity this had to be soon. Powerful divisive forces were at work and it might never be possible again for integration to occur in freedom. If it could be achieved, the United States would see it as a symbol of Europe's will to achieve the goal to defend the Western heritage. The creation of the EDC was, however, only part of the task. It was also necessary to achieve the enduring unity of the NATO Alliance. The EDC and NATO complemented and reinforced each other.

20. The Foreign Minister of Norway agreed with Dulles as to the historic importance of the EDC in effecting a reconciliation between France and Germany; furthermore, there was no alternative but to secure a German defence contribution which was essential to the defence of Europe.

21. Mr. Pearson agreed with Mr. Dulles on the significance of the EDC as regards further support for European defence; it would be easier to continue mutual aid assistance and to strengthen our association with NATO if Germany joined with us in the defence of the West. Mr. Pearson referred to the danger mentioned by Mr. Dulles of not completing arrangements to bring Germany into our defence system. It was first planned to deal with East-West tensions after the German collapse had left a void in the centre of Europe. Now the void was being filled and the problem was to cope with an East-West and Centre conflict. Under the old 1914 and 1941 formula, the East and the West combined against the Centre. The new method envisaged that the West and the Centre joined in unity in more than narrow military cooperation. The alternative of having the Centre either weak and neutral or armed and strong, as a third force, was not attractive. We were therefore strongly in favour of the EDC for military and political reasons; this was the best way to complete our arrangements for collective security and for collective non-military action.

22. Mr. Pella recognized that the ratification of the EDC was important to ensure a German contribution to the defence of the West and as a step forward towards the integration of Europe which was a fundamental objective of Italian foreign policy. He felt, however, that any attempt to secure ratification now, in Italy, would meet with serious difficulties as long as the problem of the "Eastern frontiers" of his country had not been solved favourably.

23. M. Bidault referred only briefly to the strengthening of the NATO Alliance as the framework for the EDC. He dealt mainly with the difficulties which France had to overcome in connection with this project. He mentioned certain fears that France might lose her special position as a Standing Group Power, the need to settle first the Saar problem, the bitterness resulting from three centuries of wars, the importance of being given assurance of understanding and support on the part of her major partners, and mostly the war in Indo-China. M. Bidault paid homage to the assistance received from the United States and gave assurance that France would not let down the Associated States but he hinted that if the war in Indo-China could be brought to a close and French military units repatriated, the ratification of the EDC might be ensured.

24. The discussion on the EDC brought out one or two new points:

(a) the time for decision has now arrived and unless the EDC is ratified soon, the consequences as regards United States policy and defence assistance for Europe will be very serious;

(b) the EDC and NATO are closely related and the coming into being of the former will ensure closer cooperation and assistance from the American members of the Alliance.

Four-Power Conference

25. The Foreign Ministers of Norway and Denmark expressed the hope that a Four-Power Conference would be held and that it would produce results. They did not have illusions as to the prospects of far-reaching agreements but they thought public opinion had to be persuaded that the West had spared no effort to lessen tension; if the meeting were to fail, it was equally important that responsibility for failure should be placed where it belonged.

26. Mr. Van Zeeland reminded the Big Three that alone they were not the Alliance but that they would represent the hopes of the fourteen countries; he suggested that they should not expect to reach agreement quickly and that they should not try to find final solutions to any problems; they had to attempt to develop concrete proposals and to try to promote discussion on substantive rather than on procedural issues. While we had no intention to attack, it was possible that Soviet fears might be genuine and he urged that an effort be made to develop a generally acceptable system of security.

27. Mr. Pella recalled that a free, unified and democratic Germany was an essential NATO objective. He rejected any idea that Germany might be neutralized. As to Austria, tactical preoccupations on the part of the USSR were mainly responsible for the delay in reaching agreement; every effort should be made to induce the USSR to give signs of good will in regard to a problem where divergencies appeared easier to conciliate. It was hoped that the Conference would also examine the problem of security.

North American Defence

28. In the course of his statement, Mr. Dulles, as we expected, reported that the United States Government were taking steps in consultation with Canada to strengthen the defence of the American Continent as part of the NATO area. It was necessary to provide a degree of protection to essential American war production capacity. By 1956, the USSR would have a formidable air potential and an adequate defence of North America against air attacks was essential to NATO. The temptation would be great if an aggressor could knock out the industrial power of the United States. While it was impossible to prevent serious damage in case of attack, a substantial degree of protection and the capacity to retaliate massively could be ensured. Any measures to achieve these objectives reduced the likelihood of war.

29. Mr. Pearson added that in Canada we had much in mind the new urgency of an old responsibility: American continental defence. We considered continental defence as part of NATO defence and in accepting additional burdens in this regard we were making the same kind of contribution to the common security as if we were sending more units across the Atlantic. While we were prepared to accept a large share of the burden we were not, however, considering a reduction of our commitments in Europe.

MINISTERIAL MEETING OF THE COUNCIL — ITEM II: PRIVATE MINISTERIAL SESSION FOR CONSIDERATION OF THE INTERNATIONAL POLITICAL SITUATION — BERMUDA CONFERENCE; SOVIET INTENTIONS AND TACTICS; THE BERLIN CONFERENCE; ATOMIC DEVELOPMENTS; NORTH AMERICAN DEFENCE

When Mr. Bidault (France), the Chairman, suggested early in the Ministerial Meetings that Ministers should split up and consider political, defence, and financial matters separately in private sessions, the Council was not responsive and continued in full formal session. However, the matter was re-opened towards the end of the agenda at Mr. Pearson's suggestion. This led to a private session on the morning of December 9.[46] It was held in a relatively small room; Ministers of Foreign Affairs sat at the table with various other Ministers and the Permanent Representatives immediately behind them. One additional official attended from each Delegation. The atmosphere was much more warm and friendly than at the formal meetings.

2. Mr. Bidault explained at the outset that the meeting was entirely "off-the-record". He hoped that Ministers would express themselves with freedom and particularly warned that there should be no indication to the Press of anything that was discussed.

[46] La date exacte est le 16 décembre.
The correct date is December 16.

3. Mr. Lange (Norway) was the first to respond. He invited the participants at the Bermuda Conference to give an account of the discussions there, with particular reference to plans for the "Big Four" Conference in Berlin and possible security undertakings to the USSR.

4. With the not unwilling consent of Mr. Dulles and Mr. Eden, Mr. Bidault gave a short but comprehensive sketch of the topics discussed in Bermuda: the reply to the most recent note of the USSR; plans for the Berlin meeting; the position of EDC; far Eastern problems, including China, Korea, and Indo China; the Middle East, including the Suez Canal; the internal problems of the Soviet Union; President Eisenhower's atomic announcement in the UN; and the coming meeting of the North Atlantic Council.

5. Replying to Mr. Lange's particular question about security guarantees, Mr. Bidault reported that he and his colleagues at Bermuda, together with Mr. Adenauer, thought it would be possible to do something; they had not reached entire agreement but had made progress. There were two possible procedures: either a contract in which the USSR participated or a unilateral guarantee from the West if a contract with the USSR could not be obtained. Either procedure might reassure the various people in various countries who asked questions about the attitude of their own governments and their governments' [sic] towards the USSR. The whole matter was now being considered by a group of experts from the three countries and the Germans, since they were at the centre of the problem, were being kept informed.

6. Mr. Eden confirmed that, in the matter of security undertakings, something useful might be achieved, but he warned that this would only be possible if it emerged at Berlin that the Soviets really wished for a relaxation of tension. The form of a security guarantee would not be too difficult if there was a will for it.

7. He was apprehensive about Soviet tactics and considered it most important that members of the North Atlantic Council should be in agreement about what those tactics were. He believed that while the military threat had receded, the diplomatic manoeuvres of the USSR were becoming more skilful and more intelligent. At the moment the Russians were posing as Europeans (although they could readily adopt other poses) and claiming that Europe should be for the Europeans to the exclusion and isolation of the USA. In this regard it was most important to remember that the post war reconstruction of Europe had been built upon the Marshall Plan.

8. The Berlin meeting, he felt, was going to be extremely delicate. On the one hand, no opportunity should be missed to reach agreement with the USSR, and this would require patience and tolerance; on the other hand, the Conference should not be allowed to deteriorate into another "Palais Rose". Mr. Eden added that, returning after his long illness, he was greatly encouraged by the cohesion and growing strength of NATO; but he warned that three or four extremely difficult months lay ahead and that it might be difficult to stand together. "Exasperation with our friends is a very expensive luxury".

9. Mr. Dulles began by warning that, because of Russian obstruction and delays, the proposed Berlin Conference might conceivably never take place. However, assuming that it did take place, it must be remembered that Germany was the primary topic. Contact with the West German Government would have to be very closely maintained and any undertakings relating to the security of the USSR would have to be fully and freely acceptable to that Government. Germany must not have decisions imposed on her nor be treated as a second-class power; discriminatory provisions would invite the rise to power in Germany of persons and parties dedicated to throw them off.

10. He recalled that the UN Charter binds (most) North Atlantic countries and also the USSR to restrictions on the use of force. Nothing should be done at Berlin to undermine the strength of the Charter. Germany is outside the Charter and special provisions would have to be made to meet this situation.

11. Mr. Dulles believed that the USSR was at present unwilling to contemplate unification of Germany or indeed of Korea under free institutions. Any such move would have serious repercussions in the satellite countries.

12. Turning to President Eisenhower's atomic announcement, Mr. Dulles said that immediately the text had been reviewed at Bermuda it had been transmitted to the Russian authorities so that they could have time to prepare their position before the statement was made in the Assembly. He emphasized that this was a very serious proposal and not a propaganda gesture.

13. Speaking about the political situation in his own country, Mr. Dulles drew attention to the vast difference between the attitudes of the American people now and before 1914. The change had been rapid. Nevertheless, Europe "must not take the United States for granted". The present Administration was most anxious to continue its policies, but these policies were based on hopes for the future rather than on historical positions. He very much hoped that his European colleagues would keep the domestic situation in the United States very much in mind.

14. Mr. Eden (United Kingdom), in response to a question by Mr. Pearson, then talked briefly and frankly about the position of the Suez Canal. His statement closely followed the lines of Telegram No. 1996 of December 10 from Canada House to Ottawa and need not be repeated here.†

15. Mr. Dulles (United States) then spoke about atomic matters, in reply to a question by Mr. Van Zeeland (Belgium). As he had said two days earlier, the United States Administration was going to ask Congress to relax the present restrictions on dissemination of atomic information. The present law was passed when the United States had a virtual monopoly on atomic information and wished to prevent leaks to the Soviets. However, the law was now largely out of date; the Soviets had themselves developed atomic power by their own efforts and through espionage. Some of the NATO allies, in particular the United Kingdom and Canada, had also a large body of information. "Hence it would seem more gain than loss if the United States could speak more freely to its allies".

16. In the field of atomic weapons, the United States had now developed a great variety and number applicable to all three fighting services. Atomic power was, these days, almost a "conventional weapon". Indeed it is a cheaper explosive than conventional explosives. There was no sense in making a lot of weapons "if they could not be used"; (presumably he meant "used by the allies of the United States").

17. Mr. Pleven (France), pursuing the question of atomic weapons, asked how far these were interchangeable with ordinary weapons. "The most difficult problem in the coming years is to combine old techniques and old weapons with new techniques and new weapons". Moreover, he suggested that even though atomic weapons existed, a future war might be waged without using them because each nation possessing them might hesitate to use them first.

18. Mr. Dulles said that he was not sufficiently expert to reply about interchangeability. He readily agreed that it would be politically and morally better to allow the enemy to be the first to use atomic weapons. On the other hand he warned that this would involve a very great risk. Moreover, it would be extremely expensive to prepare to fight two different sorts of war with different sorts of weapons; preparations for one sort of war were expensive enough.

19. Mr. Bidault welcomed the United States intention to lift the restrictions on atomic information. Continuation of the present secrecy would be bad both for the efficiency of the alliance and for the morale of the people.

20. Mr. Pearson turned the discussion of atomic weapons toward their possible use by the Soviets against North America. He believed that this possibility was producing a new type of continentalism over there borne of the naturally strong desire for self defence. Continental defences were now being developed by Canada and the United States and these defences should be recognized as a part of the general NATO defences because Europe could not fight very long with the industrial power of North America knocked out.

21. Just as the North American desire for continental defence was a part of NATO, so also should be the European desire as expressed in the EDC. Moreover, the completion of this measure of "Europeanization" within the context of NATO would strengthen the will of North America to cooperate with Europe in common defence.

22. Turning to the question of security guarantees to be discussed at Berlin, Mr. Pearson hoped that the Big Three would recognize the deep concern of the other Atlantic powers as well as themselves. A small North Atlantic power with armed forces under NATO command in Europe would be involved in those guarantees just as much as the big powers themselves. It was therefore most desirable that there should be discussions of the security issue in the North Atlantic Council which had already proved a very useful forum for informal discussions.

23. Lord Ismay confirmed the usefulness of the informal meetings of the Council and described their nature. Mr. Bidault said that the Big Three would certainly keep Mr. Pearson's suggestion in mind. He also welcomed the suggestion, which Mr. Pearson had made earlier, that the final communiqué should make reference to the need for holding together the defence of the two continents by means of the NATO link.

24. Mr. Dulles, continuing the discussion of continental defence, emphasized that a balance had to be struck between, on the one hand, local defence and, on the other, ability to carry out an offensive which might have a strong deterrent influence. He confirmed that there were a number of vital targets in North America which were within easy range of atomic attack. However, if the United States were to try to establish complete defence, it would eat up much of the money needed for the deterrent striking power. This striking power is a common defence for all the countries concerned. So far, he was glad to say, there had been no panic in the United States in regard to local defence.

25. Mr. Bidault, in conclusion, felt that the meeting had proved most useful and hoped it would set a precedent for further frank and intimate discussions amongst Ministers "without armies of advisors holding masses of papers". He thanked Mr. Pearson for taking the initiative which had resulted in this meeting.

REPORT ON THE MINISTERIAL MEETING OF THE NORTH ATLANTIC COUNCIL, DECEMBER 14-16, 1953 HELD AT THE PALAIS DE CHAILLOT, PARIS[47]

I. Introduction

The North Atlantic Council met in Ministerial Session in Paris from December 14 to December 16 inclusive. M. Bidault, the French Foreign Minister, was Chairman. The Session was preceded by meetings of the Military Committee on December 9 and by a joint meeting of the Permanent Representatives and the Military Committee on December 11. A list of the Canadian Delegation is given in Annex A.

2. This Session was in some respects most timely. It will be recalled that when the Ministers last met in April the change in Soviet tactics following Stalin's death had hardly had any impact. In the months since then, however, Soviet moves to appear more reasonable and at the same time to sow dissension among the Western Powers had not been without success. The feeling had therefore developed that it was time for a review of western policy, both with respect to the relations between the Western Powers and the Soviet Bloc and also with respect to the relations among the Western Powers themselves.

3. This was, of course, one of the reasons behind the Three-Power Meeting in Bermuda which, coming as it did but a few days before the Ministerial Meeting of the Council, inevitably had its influence on the deliberations in Paris. In particular the nature and pace of the future NATO defence build-up was discussed at Bermuda and the ideas developed there became subsequently accepted as NATO policy. Lord Ismay's attendance at Bermuda in his capacity as Secretary General provided a further link between that meeting and the Ministerial Meeting of the Council.

4. There was also the factor of the proposed Four-Power Meeting in Berlin. Though the questions to be discussed (if, indeed, the meeting were to take place) would undoubtedly be of primary interest to the Great Powers, the interests of all the NATO countries would inevitably be involved and the Ministerial Meeting of the Council, therefore, provided an excellent opportunity — indeed, an incentive — to ensure that all concerned saw eye-to-eye on matters affecting their common security.

5. Although the timing of this Council Session was, in these respects, opportune, there were also factors which introduced an important element of uncertainty. There was the complexity of the French domestic political scene. The French Government, not too secure at best, was facing tremendous opposition to its declared policy of ratifying the EDC Treaty and was, at the same time, harassed by often untactful remarks from its allies abroad. And the sensitivities of French Ministers were further increased at this time by the French Presidential elections which began the day after the NATO meeting.

6. There was also the uncertainty surrounding United States policies. In spite of all the reassurances of President Eisenhower and Mr. Dulles, the European members of NATO could not help feeling misgivings about the future United States role in western security as a result of the more irresponsible statements and actions of Congress. And the United States Ministers in Paris had to keep in mind the mood of Congress when it reconvenes in January.

7. Against this background it is perhaps not surprising that there was a general feeling at this Session that NATO was approaching a period of challenge and of danger. Because there was a public impression that Soviet intentions were less menacing, there was a danger that it might be assumed that there was no need for further defence preparations. There was also a danger that if the Western Powers confined their attention exclusively to defence preparations they would undermine public confidence in the policy of collective security and would aid Soviet efforts to divide the North Atlantic Alliance. There seemed to be a feeling among the Ministers attending this Session that the need of the times was for strengthening the political cohesion of the NATO countries and for accelerating their social and economic progress. At the same time, there was considerable uncertainty as to how this could be accomplished under present circumstances and as to whether — and how — NATO might be better adapted to these aims.

8. As mentioned earlier, certain ideas were developed by the Three Powers at Bermuda on the concept that should guide future NATO defence planning. This concept became known as the "new look" or the "long haul". It was based largely on United Kingdom proposals, of which we had been informed shortly before this Ministerial Meeting. These were, briefly, that NATO planning should be based henceforth on the assumption that (provided the West maintained its lead in nuclear weapons and in the scientific field) roughly the present aggregate level of forces, plus a German contribution and continued support by United States end-item aid and offshore procurement, would provide an effective deterrent to Soviet attack and would also be within the economic means of member countries. This new policy was along lines which had undoubtedly been forming in the thinking of NATO governments for several months and it was accepted by the Council with surprisingly little discussion of the very important assumptions on which it was based or of the implications which it contained. The policy was reflected in the "force goals" adopted for 1954-55-56 as a conclusion to the 1953 Annual Review, and in the guidance laid down for the 1954 Review.

9. There was, however, one important proposal concerning machinery for studying these implications. It came — somewhat to the consternation of members of the Council, since they had not been previously consulted — from Lord Ismay. He suggested that some sort of "brain trust" be set up in the NATO Secretariat under his direction to undertake a thorough survey, military and economic, of NATO policy and organisation on the basis of the "long haul" concept. The suggestion apparently appealed to the French and some others who seemed to seek in new organizational methods and machinery means of meeting the challenge to NATO which the period ahead presented. It did not, however, command general support and was, therefore, dropped.

10. The influence of some of the factors and ideas outlined above was discernible in M. Bidault's public statement to the opening session of the Ministerial Meeting. He referred to the necessity of "reinforcing" NATO by greater co-ordination and standardisation, by increased "internal discipline" and by closer unity in common agreement. He emphasized that the development of the Atlantic Community would condition the very existence of the European Defence Community, which could not be brought into being outside the Atlantic Alliance. He insisted that, only as the ties that bound the NATO countries were strengthened (and he made it clear that this would involve guarantees concerning the continued stationing of non-European troops on the Continent) could NATO become the solid and lasting framework of the EDC. He intimated that, if national sovereignty were to be given up only for European isolation, many would prefer to turn to other methods. He also emphasized that NATO's policy of collective defence must carry with it positive and resolute initiatives for peace. For this reason, he welcomed the willingness of the Western Powers to talk with the Soviet Government in Berlin and President Eisenhower's recent initiative in submitting to the United Nations proposals for atomic disarmament.

11. The note which Mr. Bidault struck in appealing for greater cohesion in the Atlantic Community was echoed and re-echoed by other Ministers throughout the meeting. Greater unity, closer political understanding, increased co-operation in non-military spheres, were stressed by speaker after speaker. Mr. Dulles, Mr. Eden and Mr. Pearson all emphasized the need to develop these aspects of NATO if the Organisation was to endure. It was all the more regrettable that Mr. Dulles himself unwittingly dealt a blow to transatlantic solidarity by his clumsy reference in a press conference to the fact that Europe would be "committing suicide" if it did not bring the EDC into being promptly.

12. In spite of the uncertainties and some unfortunate impressions that might have been made, it can probably be said that, on the whole, this Ministerial Meeting went well. The Ministers had a thoroughly worthwhile exchange of views in their discussion of the international political situation, particularly in a restricted session which was held on the last day. Ministers of Defence and Finance attended this session together with Permanent Representatives and one adviser for each delegation, but the discussion was limited to foreign affairs. The participants spoke their minds freely and the meeting was considered to have made a worthwhile contribution to the cause of better understanding between the NATO countries. There was also a useful discussion in plenary session on the Annual Review item, in which Mr. Claxton outlined some of the considerations governing the Canadian defence programme.

13. In this connection, it might be said in passing that the NATO Secretariat appears to have gained considerably in stature and prestige during the past year and that, in general, member countries seem prepared now to allow the NATO military and civilian authorities to take important initiatives in putting forward specific recommendations concerning countries' defence plans.

II. Consideration of the International Political Situation

The international political situation was considered at two meetings, first at a full session of the Council at which Item II of the Agenda was discussed and later at a restricted meeting of Foreign Ministers (with other Ministers and Permanent Representatives in attendance) during which there was more intimate discussion of the Bermuda Conference, Soviet intentions and the projected Berlin Conference.

Trends in Soviet Policy

The debate on trends in Soviet policy indicated general agreement that the basic hostility of the Communist regime had not changed. Soviet leaders seemed to be preoccupied currently with internal problems and to an increasing extent had to take account of the growing strength of NATO. However, although they appeared to be prepared, for tactical reasons, to meet with other countries, there was no evidence that they had any intention of negotiating settlements of major issues or of modifying their efforts to promote disunity in the West.

It was conceded that the danger of armed aggression had lessened due to the internal preoccupations of the Soviet Government and to the NATO build-up, but the West had to remain vigilant and guard against the possibility that the Soviet Union might revert to more aggressive policies in the future when it had overcome the more pressing internal problems and developed its atomic power. It was important that NATO countries resist against Soviet attempts to create division and dissension in the Western world and to this end should strengthen their political relations and reinforce their defensive organization. On the other hand the Western powers should remain continually alert to any real opportunities which might arise for bringing the cold war to an end.

Future NATO Policy

The Council's reassessment of Soviet policy implied the necessity for long term or "long haul" preparedness. NATO countries had to keep in being, over a period of years, forces which would provide an effective deterrent to aggression. The quality of these forces should be improved so that they could provide a more effective shield behind which reserves could be mobilized. To meet these objectives provision should be made for a German contribution to the defence of the West and the lead established by the West in atomic armaments should be maintained.

While these principles were generally accepted as the basis of future NATO policy, the Turkish Foreign Minister raised a dissident voice. He pointed out that Soviet armed strength was continually increasing and for this reason could see no reason why NATO forces should level off. He felt that priority should still be given to rearmament; economic problems could be solved by cooperation. This warning voice was lost in the preoccupations of the other countries with the political problems of continuing the Alliance. Mr. Dulles was warmly supported when he emphasized that NATO had to establish its "long haul" military expenditures at a level consistent with social and economic progress. Both he and Mr. Pearson stressed the importance of encouraging non-military cooperation among members of the Alliance to increase its cohesion and to thwart Soviet attempts to induce disunity. M. Pella also emphasized continued consultation on common political problems as one of the best means of achieving these objectives.

The European Defence Community

The debate on the European Defence Community and Mr. Dulles' press statements on this subject gave rise to the strongest press reaction of the meeting. Mr. Dulles emphasized that present United States policies had been based on the assumption that a German contribution was essential to the defence of Western Europe. If EDC were created, it would ensure intimate and enduring cooperation between the forces of the United States, the United Kingdom and European countries, if not, the United States would be compelled to undertake an "agonizing reappraisal" of its basic policies.

The "agonizing reappraisal" warning coupled with Mr. Dulles' statement at a press conference that Europe would be "committing suicide", if it did not bring EDC into being promptly, left little doubt in the minds of many European editors of Mr. Dulles' implication that Western Europe is clearly not defensible in the "long haul" without a German contribution.

M. Bidault's reply in Council raised all the conventional difficulties confronting the French Government in connection with ratification; in his opening statement as Chairman of the Council, he had however anticipated in a somewhat more positive fashion Mr. Dulles' ultimatum when he called for a strengthening of the discipline and cohesion of the Alliance and he referred to possible guarantees and counterweights to an Integrated Europe within the Atlantic Community.

The French press seized on Mr. Dulles' statements and the first reaction was that his intervention had strengthened the EDC opposition. A more mature view however might suggest that Mr. Dulles' statement has been helpful. At least it has brought out clearly the fact that the time for decision has arrived and, unless EDC is ratified soon, the consequences for Europe of the "agonizing reappraisal" of US policy will be very serious indeed.

The Four-Power Meeting

Discussion on the proposed Four-Power Meeting developed at the restricted meeting of Ministers following informatory statements by the "Bermuda" Ministers. Mr. Dulles emphasized that, if the Soviet Government agreed to the Berlin Meeting, Germany would be the primary topic. Close contact would have to be kept with the West German Government and any undertakings would have to be freely acceptable to it. Germany could not have decisions imposed on her, nor could she be treated as a second class power. Mr. Dulles believed that the Soviet Government was at present unwilling to contemplate unification of Germany (or of Korea) under free institutions as any such move would have serious repercussions in the Satellite countries.

North American Defence

Both Mr. Dulles and Mr. Pearson stressed the increasing importance of North American Defence as the Soviet capability for atomic warfare increased. The continental defences now being developed by Canada and the US should be recognized as an important part of the general NATO defences and the Canadian and US contribution in this sector must be considered in the same light as contributions of units to the European sector.

III. Annual Review, 1953 and 1954

The Annual Reviews for both 1953 and 1954 were considered together by the Council. The key note of the discussion was "the new look" or "the long haul", and this key note had been sounded in all the three documents around which discussion revolved: the Annual Review Report for 1953, and the formal Resolutions relating respectively to the 1953 Review and the 1954 Review.

By adopting the two Resolutions, Council formally terminated the period of rapid build-up of forces, initiated nearly two years earlier at the Lisbon meeting, and accepted a new regime. In this new regime, it could be assumed, at least for planning purposes in the 1954 Review (according to the text of the 1954 Resolution), that "defence expenditures on NATO forces will be required at approximately the present level", but that "under presently foreseeable circumstances any substantial increase in the proportion of resources devoted to defence seems unlikely". Within these limits "it is nevertheless desirable, as politico-economic considerations permit, to increase the strength of NATO military forces".

The "long haul" was also reflected in the new "force goals" which were formally accepted by Council under one of the clauses of the 1953 Resolution. These forecast, for the years 1954 to 1956 inclusive, relatively little increase in the numbers of major army units; a relatively greater increase is forecast and urgently required, in the fighter air forces and in escorts and other naval vessels. In 1954, as in 1953, there is to be continued emphasis on the quality of forces, rather than merely on quantity (which was so strongly emphasized at Lisbon), and in 1954 the Annual Review will, for the first time, be concerned not merely with front-line units but also with reserves.

It was agreed that the time had come for a "reassessment of the most effective pattern of military strength over the next few years within the resources which it is anticipated may be made available" (1954 Resolution). This reassessment seems to be needed for three reasons: first, the NATO "patterns of military strength" that have been agreed upon in the past assumed that the build-up of forces would proceed, if not for a longer period, at least to a considerably higher level; second, after the rapid acceleration of defence expenditures during the past two years, it is now necessary to adapt outlays to an appropriate "cruising speed"; and, finally atomic weapons seem likely to emerge in the next few years in considerable quantity and variety. The reassessment is to be undertaken in the first instance by the military, especially General Gruenther, but the Council is to be kept in touch with its development.

Most of the Representatives who spoke on the Annual Review, laid emphasis on one aspect or another of the "long haul": the US, UK, France, Italy, Canada, and the Netherlands. Mr. Claxton, speaking for Canada, pointed out that the very success already achieved in the build-up now narrowed the scope for alteration; there was little elasticity left in national military programmes and in national defence budgets. Like some other speakers, he reviewed certain military recommendations made during the course of the Annual Review, 1953, indicating where progress could and could not be expected. Turning to Canadian mutual aid (to which favourable references were made in the 1953 Resolution) he said that physical production and deliveries in the coming year were planned at about the same level as in past years, but a greater proportion would be in the form of newly produced equipment; NATO aircrew training in Canada was to be extended for three years on the basis of 1200 trainees per annum.

IV. Military Items

Estimate of the Military Risk

The Council took note of the Report of the Estimate of the Military Risk prepared by the Military Committee . . . † The Report indicated that the risk had not substantially changed since the Military Committee reported on the subject the previous April, and that, in the view of the Military Committee:

(a) present force goals could not be considered an end in themselves, but only as a step towards the realization of the forces necessary for the effective security of NATO countries; and

(b) there was an urgent need for a German contribution to Western defence.

Progress Report by the Military Committee

In presenting the Military Progress Report . . . † to Council, Admiral Qvistgaard,[48] (Chairman of the Military Committee) drew attention to the large number of changes that had taken place in the higher Command appointments in the NATO military organization. He paid particular tribute to the work accomplished by General Ridgway, former Supreme Allied Commander in Europe and by Admiral Lemonnier,[49] who had organized the NATO Defence College and had been its Commandant for the past two years.

At the request of the Chairman of the Military Committee, the Supreme Commanders, in turn, made brief statements outlining the main problems with which they were faced.

Statements by Supreme Commanders

Sir John Edelsten (Commander-in-Chief Channel Command) drew attention to the extreme importance of the Channel area in the NATO organization. It formed a vital bottleneck through which many convoys had to pass, and was extremely vulnerable to attack particularly by enemy aircraft. There was a shortage of minesweepers, escorts and maritime aircraft. The deficiency in minesweepers would be felt most severely at the commencement of hostilities. He was particularly concerned by the undefended state of the terminal ports for convoys. To remedy this defect, more radar cover, fighter aircraft and AA guns were required.

Admiral L.D. McCormick (Supreme Allied Commander Atlantic) reported steady progress both in general planning and in infrastructure; a sound organization had been built during the past 18 months, and valuable experience in co-operation gained. Nevertheless, there were two problems whose solution required the co-operation of national authorities: first, the automatic implementation of certain defence measures on the declaration of an alert, such as manning the War Headquarters. Second, the conclusion of certain bilateral agreements which were necessary to provide for the logistic support of SACLANT's forces. He had himself recently submitted his estimate of force requirements for 1956, based solely on military considerations. If these requirements could not be met, he would need to prepare a second plan based upon the forces his Command might realistically expect to have several years hence. Unfortunately, the continuous lack of adequate reserves of raw materials in Europe made the task of keeping open the lines of communication across the Atlantic even more important.

General A. Gruenther (Supreme Allied Commander, Europe) was more optimistic. He considered that progress since 1948, when the Alliance had first been planned, had been "fantastic" in view of the difficulties to be overcome. Turning to the future, he thought there was no magic in such phrases as "new look" or "the long pull". A changeover to long-term planning would not automatically ensure that the forces would be adequate. He and his staff were now planning to defend a 4,000 mile front on the basis of forces likely to be available in 4 years time and taking into consideration the probable effect of new weapons. It would be several months before the survey could be available for submission through the Standing Group to the Council. It was by no means certain that new weapons would reduce requirements substantially. If it were finally determined to keep our forces at a lower level than originally planned, some means would have to be found to increase the number and efficiency of reserve forces. Another problem was the acute shortage of adequate tactical air forces, despite the remarkable improvement in the air position as a whole. There was some doubt as to whether the deterrent effect of the present long-range strategic air force was sufficient to counterbalance the weakness of the tactical air forces and ground forces. In connection with what had been said on the subject of information services, he was convinced that one of the main problems before the Alliance was to convince the people that NATO was an effective means of keeping the peace. His headquarters had received several visits from parliamentarians and would be pleased to receive more. He felt strongly that any funds and time spent on troop information would pay ample dividends.

There were no comments by Ministers on the military items.

V. Non-military Items

Report of the Secretary General

The report of the Secretary General gave rise to an uninspired and stereotyped series of comments. In introducing his report Lord Ismay drew attention to the large action devoted to such matters as civil defence and emergency planning. The Council had paid increasing attention to these two important subjects in recent months. Later Lord Alexander expressed warm approval of the initiative which was being taken by NATO in encouraging member countries to organize their "home fronts".

Manpower

M. Pella and M. Stephanopoulos were the only Ministers to mention the subject of manpower and labour mobility. They both stressed the importance they attached to NATO work in this field and hoped it would continue.

Infrastructure

As the planning and financing of infrastructure is being implemented under the three-year agreement approved last April, it was generally agreed before the Ministerial meeting that the 1954 infrastructure programme should be approved by the Permanent Council at an appropriate time. Accordingly, Infrastructure was not an item for discussion by Ministers. Several Ministers, however, made passing reference to the important contribution the construction of infrastructure facilities was making in the defence build-up.

Relations between NATO and Parliamentarians

When he introduced his report, Lord Ismay commented on the desirability of having members of Parliament attend NATO Exercises which were going on continuously. Later, General Gruenther indicated that he would be very pleased to show his Headquarters to all interested visitors. Mr. Lange laid special emphasis on the desirability of arranging visits of groups of Parliamentarians from different NATO countries to various NATO Headquarters, and M. Pella warmly supported this idea.

Information

Lord Ismay again drew attention to the general ignorance and apathy of the populations of members of the Alliance toward NATO. He assured the Ministers that his Information Division was constantly alive to this problem and was doing its utmost — within budgetary limitations — to enlighten public opinion about the aims and purposes of the North Atlantic Treaty.

Prior to the meeting, the French Delegations had circulated proposals for expanding NATO operations in the field of Information. These proposals implied a substantial increase in the NATO information budget and suggested that the Secretariat should be given authority to coordinate the activities of member countries in this field. The Turkish, Greek, Portuguese and Italian Ministers strongly supported the French proposal. Other delegations could not accept the principle that information methods should be standardized and that there should be overall control by the Secretariat. However, a compromise resolution . . .† was passed which stressed the importance of intensifying measures already taken in the field of information and invited the Secretary General to take a number of practical steps to this end.

VI. Date of Next Meeting

M. Bidault drew attention to the difficulty of deciding on a definite date for the next Ministerial Council because of uncertainty as to when the Military Committee's report on the reassessment of the most effective pattern of military strength would be received. In view of this uncertainty, he proposed that it be left to the Permanent Council to make recommendations at a later stage. M. Bidault's suggestion was agreed by Council.

Mr. Hughes (US) said he thought that the Permanent Council might take into account the desirability of having the next Ministerial Meeting coincide with the Fifth Anniversary of NATO. This would imply that the meeting would take place in April. Mr. Hughes undoubtedly had in mind Mr. Dulles' wish that the NATO Foreign Ministers should meet — perhaps in a capital other than Paris — to review trends in Soviet Policy. He may also have had in mind that such a meeting in April could serve as a target date by which the French Government might take action on EDC — although it would seem premature for this purpose. If a Ministerial meeting is held in April the agenda would probably consist entirely of political items requiring the attendance of Foreign Ministers only.

US LOYALTY CHECK IN ICAO

As indicated in the two memoranda we sent to you yesterday (copies attached†) arrangements are being made for screening procedures to be undertaken by US authorities amongst Americans in the employ of ICAO headquarters in Montreal. We find of great interest the possibility raised in the last paragraph of the attached telegram from the Permanent Representative in New York† of avoiding adverse comment and hostility on the part of the Canadian public by carrying out the fingerprinting and other activities on the premises of the US Consulate in Montreal instead of in ICAO headquarters. If this were done, he feels that ICAO could avoid the unfortunate impressions which were created at United Nations in New York when the FBI moved in with its questionnaires and fingerprinting equipment.

If you consider it advisable I could get in touch with Brigadier C.S. Booth, the Canadian Representative at ICAO and ask him to make the suggestion informally to both the Director-General of ICAO and to the US Representative that the investigation procedures be carried out in this way. He could point out to them that if the investigation was based at the US Consulate it would be less likely to create an unfavourable impression on Canadians than if it were carried out within the confines of the International Organization.

Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

In view of your approval of the Departmental memorandum of February 4 on security clearances in the Secretariat of ICAO, Mr. Ritchie to-day telephoned to Brigadier Booth, the Canadian Representative on the Council of ICAO. He told Brigadier Booth that we were quite concerned about the accounts we had heard to the effect that the Secretary-General of ICAO intended to permit the facilities of ICAO Headquarters to be used for the distribution and collection of security questionnaires issued by the United States authorities. He then outlined our suggestion that some other way could be found of achieving United States security objectives without having ICAO circulate the questionnaires or collect them for return to the United States authorities and that even if the Secretary-General did circulate the questionnaires it should be made plain that he was doing so on behalf of the United States Government. Brigadier Booth telephoned back later in the day to say that he had now had an opportunity to speak to the Secretary-General on this subject. The Secretary-General had in fact handed out the questionnaires to the sixteen American employees in the internationally recruited group of the Secretariat. (These seem to be the numbers involved although there may be Americans among the locally engaged Secretariat.) In doing so, the Secretary-General had explained that he was only acting as a post office for the American authorities. The employees would reply direct to the United States Consulate in Montreal. Fingerprinting would also take place at the United States Consulate. The Secretary-General asked to be informed, as a matter of record, what employees had filled in the questionnaires. This procedure was working quite smoothly. No American employees so far had objected to filling out the questionnaires and there had been no publicity. Should any publicity questions be asked by the press, the Secretary-General would reply in the terms of a short statement which he had drawn up.

2. Brigadier Booth had also spoken to Admiral Smith, the United States Representative, who had prepared a short statement himself on the United States position to be used should necessity arise. The statement stressed that the United States authorities were anxious to ensure the highest integrity of United States employees in the Secretariat. Brigadier Booth said that the situation seemed well in hand and he did not anticipate any unpleasant developments.

3. He added that the possibility might of course arise of some member of the Secretariat refusing to fill in the questionnaire or of the questionnaire resulting in an adverse report on an American member of the Secretariat. The Secretary-General had informed the United States authorities that in either of these events, he would receive a statement of the facts from the United States authorities but that these would be in no way binding upon him to take any action with regard to the employee in question.

4. We are to-day informing the American Embassy in an informal fashion of the interest which we take in this problem in so far as it concerns ICAO.[2]

SEPTIÈME SESSION DE L'ASSEMBLÉE GÉNÉRALE
BRIGHTON, 16 JUIN-6 JUILLET 1953
SEVENTH SESSION OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY
BRIGHTON, JUNE 16—JULY 6, 1953

Memorandum from Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs to Cabinet

CANADIAN DELEGATION TO THE 7TH SESSION OF THE ICAO ASSEMBLY

The 7th Session of the Assembly of the International Civil Aviation Organization will take place this year in Brighton, England, beginning on June 16 and lasting approximately three weeks. This year's session will be the first in three years to deal with the whole range of ICAO's activities. In 1950, the decision was taken to hold "major" assemblies only once every three years. Accordingly the 1951 and 1952 meetings were confined to a review of financial and administrative matters. This year's assembly will assume added significance for Canada as it is to be expected that the old issue of moving the Organization's Headquarters from Montreal to a European or a Latin American site will be raised again. In view of these considerations it would seem desirable that a strong Canadian Delegation be sent to Brighton.

At the last major ICAO Assembly in 1950, Canada sent a delegation of twelve headed by the Minister of Transport. After consideration of the provisional agenda of the Assembly and in consultation with the other departments interested, the

[2] Note marginale:/Marginal note:
This matter seems to have been very sensibly handled in Montreal — a pleasing and possibly a valuable contrast! L.B. P[earson]

Chairman of the Air Transport Board has recommended with the agreement of the Minister of Transport that this year's delegation be made up of five persons with possibly four to five advisers. The Delegation would include representation from the Air Transport Board, the Department of Transport and the Department of External Affairs with advisory representation from the same departments. In addition, a representative of the Department of Finance would attend either as a delegate or as an advisor. It is suggested that the delegation should be headed by a Minister.

The Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs therefore recommends

1) that the Minister of Transport be designated as Chairman of the Canadian Delegation to the 7th Session of the ICAO Assembly;

2) that authority be granted to the Minister of Transport and the Secretary of State for External Affairs in consultation to designate the remainder of the Canadian Delegation along the lines suggested above.

Le chef de la délégation à la septième session de l'Assemblée générale de l'Organisation de l'aviation civile internationale au ministre des Transports

Chief Delegate, Seventh Session of the General Assembly of the International Civil Aviation Organization, to Minister of Transport

Brighton, June 24, 1953

Dear Mr. Chevrier:

The Assembly has reached roughly the half-way mark and this is probably an appropriate time to let you know how things are going. This is the largest Assembly that has ever been held by ICAO with some 51 Member States represented, together with 4 non-member States in the role of observers and several other international organizations also in the role of observers.

Facilities and general atmosphere in Brighton are reasonably good, — in fact the accommodation for conference meetings is excellent. The town itself is not particularly attractive but this has its merits since it reduces the number of diversionary activities. The climate has been bad so far until the last day or two and the hotels are on the whole typical second grade English hotels, adequate but not exciting.

After the usual slow start the various Commissions are now moving ahead fairly steadily. The Economic Commission has decided that work of the Council in its study of charges for airports and air navigation facilities should be expedited with a view to producing a report this year and arising out of this, if necessary, calling a special meeting to try and reach some agreement on an international basis. The question of a multilateral agreement on non-scheduled services has been dealt with and while there was general agreement that the time is not ripe for an overall multilateral agreement, the Commission has directed the Council to study more limited and partial solutions in the hope that some of them may lead to limited progress, — in particular, for example, the request of the Council of Europe for ICAO assistance in exploring the possibility of closer cooperation within Europe.

The Technical Commission has reviewed the general technical field and has not encountered too much difficulty. There was a tendency on the part of the United States to press for excessive reduction in work, particularly as far as regional meetings and assistance are concerned but this was offset by the stronger desire of the smaller nations to profit by the assistance which ICAO offered in this connection. Certain United Kingdom proposals regarding a complete rewording of Annex 8, which is the International Air Worthiness document are to be taken up today.

The Administrative Commission has busied itself primarily with the Budget and with the scale of assessments of Member States, and working groups are busy at both these problems. In both instances the United States is fighting a very vigorous battle for very heavy reductions in budgets and in US contributions.

The Executive Commission has dealt with some of the major administrative issues. The Government of Nationalist China has indicated its intention to again adhere to the Convention and to the Organization and the Executive approved the financial arrangement which would be involved in this event. (No political question as to whether or not the Nationalist Government of China should be allowed to reenter the Organization came up since in effect if it ratifies the Convention it becomes a member automatically); the only policy question involved therefore was the nature of the financial arrangements to be followed in that event. There was no apparent split between the United Kingdom and the United States on this matter. Although the United Kingdom abstained from voting on the matter it did not request that its vote be recorded as an abstention. We supported the vote on the grounds that it was solely a financial problem that was involved and that the arrangements were satisfactory.

The Executive Commission has also taken action in the matter of admitting Japan to the Organization. Informal feelers have been put out from Yugoslavian observers who have turned up for the first time at an Assembly, which may indicate that they may be thinking of joining the club as well.

The Executive Commission has also indicated that it believes the Organization should have an Assembly only every three years instead of annually. This was decided by a substantial majority in an informal vote, but the question of whether or not this can be accomplished, and if so how, is now before a working group. It may involve actual amendment of the Convention, with all the necessary problems arising out of waiting upon governmental ratifications. Here again majority opinion seems to feel that the only method of proceeding would be by amendment of the Convention and that any other method of trying to stretch the Assembly out to a triennial basis would in effect be merely a device which might conform with the letter of the Convention but not its present spirit; and that therefore in fairness to that minority group which favoured annual assemblies the direct course of amendment should be followed.

These are the highlights although a great many other lesser matters have also been dealt with. It would now appear that the Assembly has a reasonable chance of finishing somewhere between July 3rd and 7th which would be about a week ahead of original plans.

The basic attitude of the United States has been quite noticeable and in conformity with the whole tenor of the new administration in Washington, namely a pretty negative approach on almost every problem and very forceful demand for heavy reductions in programmes and costs, virtually regardless of their merit. One interesting thing that I have noted in this Assembly as compared with the last one which I attended some years ago is the fact that there is a far greater independence on the part of the other Member States in so far as US proposals are concerned; and apparently a much greater willingness to oppose or override US proposals.

There has been less than usual in the way of formal entertainment. This has on the whole been helpful and arose out of a decision at the beginning of the Assembly that in place of individual delegations vying with each other in large receptions, all delegations should join in two big parties, the cost of which would be shared, one to be given to the UK government and City of Brighton and the other to the Secretariat. We were doubtful if we had a large enough entertainment allowance to permit us to share on a fair basis, but with the use of diplomatic privileges which the Conference enjoys in the matter of purchases, etc., it would now appear that this method of proceeding, quite apart from its beneficial results in reducing the amount of hospitality on the side, is also a very economical method of dealing with the problem and will probably by no means use up our entertainment allowance. This method of reducing both the number and cost of social diversions is one which I think could well be followed in other international assemblies.

We are, on the whole, making good progress and I hope now to get back some time by the middle of July, — certainly not after the end of the second week.

In the meantime best wishes,

Sincerely yours,

J.R. B[ALDWIN]

P.S. The matter of headquarters location has not arisen and at present shows no sign of coming up at all although there is no certainty that it might not arise unexpectedly. On the whole however I am reasonably optimistic that the issue is now a dead one.

Memorandum by Assistant Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs for Economic Division

[Ottawa], July 31, 1953

Attached are two copies of a paper prepared jointly by Hyndman and Stoner, assessing the ICAO Assembly which met in Brighton. As I have told Stoner in a personal letter, this report is both useful and interesting (two qualities which do not always go together) and will be a good starting point for discussions about future assemblies. An official delegation report is, I understand, being prepared under the direction of John Baldwin. In these circumstances, and because of some of the material in the Stoner-Hyndman report, I think circulation of the latter should be kept within the Department.

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Évaluation de la septième Assemblée de l'Organisation de l'aviation civile internationale

Assessment of the Seventh Assembly of the International Civil Aviation Organization

Two main impressions were derived from the deliberations of the Seventh Session of the General Assembly of ICAO in Brighton. First, there was an air of maturity and realism in the approach to difficult technical and economic problems. It seemed evident that the Organization had grown into an efficient and stable body and that, parallel with this development, the participating nations had evolved a more realistic approach to many of the problems facing ICAO. The character of the discussions during the Assembly, and the despatch with which work was handled, contributed to the second impression of this Assembly, which was that the importance of these sessions has substantially decreased during the years. This is itself a reflection of the increasing importance of the Council, both in the formulation of major policy decisions and in the detailed preparation for these Assemblies. A third impression, of particular interest to Canada, is the fact that the efforts of some countries to move the Headquarters of ICAO from Montreal appear to have been abandoned, at least for the present, since this issue was not brought up at any time during the course of the Seventh Assembly.

2. It is perhaps a little trite to speak about the maturing process of Specialized Agencies of the United Nations. Nevertheless, the International Civil Aviation Organization appears to have grown up. A sound administrative basis and substantial technical progress have contributed largely to this maturity. But the same observation could be applied with only slight reservations to the more controversial economic field.

3. It is in the economic field, and in particular in the search for multilateral exchange of commercial rights, that the Organization has experienced its greatest hopes and perhaps its greatest disillusionment. There have been three phases or stages of development. The first phase was in 1944 at the Chicago Conference and at the subsequent meetings of PICAO[3] in Montreal, when it was both fashionable and forgivable to expect too much to happen too quickly. Many delegations, and in particular the traditional carrier nations such as Scandinavia, the Netherlands and France, considered that the touchstone of all the Organization's economic achievements was the conclusion of a universal multilateral agreement on the exchange of commercial rights. At the time, to these states anything less represented complete failure. Their enthusiasm was shared in varying degrees by almost all the other contracting states, with the exception of the United States, whose position in international air transport was unique.

4. The second phase came in 1947, when a special conference was called in Geneva, prematurely as it later developed, to try to reach agreement on a multilateral agreement. For the first time, perhaps, national attitudes and interests were clearly brought out into the open. The conference failed, and many delegations went away soured and disillusioned about the prospects of achieving greater co-operation in the economic field. Those countries which were not completely disillusioned by the skirmishings of this conference were left perhaps with a sense of over-caution about any future attempts to achieve multilateral agreement.

Provisional International Civil Aviation Organization.

5. Now a new phase, clearly marked by the Seventh Assembly, appears to be beginning. At this last Assembly there was evidence that disillusionment and over-caution were being slowly replaced by more positive sentiments. The United States Delegation was much franker in explaining their own position, and the opposing camp, led by France and the Netherlands, seemed less perturbed and upset by this position than they had been in 1947. Most delegations concerned themselves less with paying lip service to the principle of multilateralism and more with trying to sort out those approaches which might constructively and realistically contribute towards greater economic co-operation in international air transport. The Council's findings were revised in a somewhat more positive way, and the Assembly blessed the suggestion put forward by the Council of Europe that ICAO might convene a regional conference of Western European states. The Assembly also recognized that certain other partial solutions might be of value. The desire of the Canadian Delegation to see greater uniformity reached on the form and interpretation of bilateral clauses was received with considerable favour. It may be expected that these and other approaches will continue to be explored by the Council as long as their study gives any hope of improving the existing pattern of economic co-operation.

6. In point of fact, it has long been evident that the United States, as the strongest civil aviation power, was reasonably satisfied with the developing pattern of bilateralism, within which they could obtain in large part what their carriers desired. It also seemed that opposition to bilateralism could be found in the small states, who could justifiably fear free trade in civil air transport in view of their unfavourable competitive position. It now seems that the medium powers in civil aviation, who were the most vocal in pressing for the conclusion of a multilateral agreement, realize the stern opposition which the latter faces, and it may even be wondered if they themselves would really welcome a complete multilateral agreement at the present time, although of course they continue to profess devotion to this objective. Consequently, the decision of the Assembly to explore these partial solutions probably expresses the general feeling of most of the participating nations.

7. After these comments on the basic aspirations of the Organization, it would be perhaps useful to examine the trends in discussion and voting at the Seventh Assembly. Political lineups have always been less evident in ICAO than in many other agencies of the United Nations. For example, there was no attempt of the "Big Three", the United States, the United Kingdom and France, to combine or impose their will on the smaller states. The United States stood quite alone on some issues, although the United Kingdom, with some reservations, was frequently by its side. The attitude of the United Kingdom showed the impact of the Conservative Government's policy on certain parts of the work as, for example, in their desire to facilitate non-scheduled operations; but generally their position was consistent with that of previous years. France, as the self-styled leader of the free traders, seldom found itself in agreement with the United States on basic issues.

8. There was no attempt at this Assembly, as in some of the earlier ones, to hold special Commonwealth consultations. If the various states of the Commonwealth voted differently on many issues, it betrayed less a division in basic outlook than a varied approach to the different problems under consideration. There was no attempt, as at the 1947 Multilateral Conference, by the United Kingdom to try to rally the Commonwealth around its own position.

9. It would be inaccurate, however, to suggest that voting blocs do not exist in ICAO. The Latin American and Arab states still rigidly adhere to the bloc principle. The Arabs were practically always solid in their voting. Iraq and Egypt, who are represented on the Council, naturally tended to be the spokesmen for this group. The representative from Iraq, in particular, has been a useful and helpful member of the Council since its establishment and is overtly pro-Western. It was amusing on occasion to view his embarrassment with his Western friends when he was forced to vote with the bloc against the United States or Canada.

10. The behaviour of the Latin American states was more complex and perhaps more distressing. There were many signs of increasing rivalry for the leadership of the group. Spain found itself in the rather difficult position of trying to be a soldier in two camps that were sometimes in opposition. Some of the Latin American states resented the suggestion that Spain might speak for them. Argentina, a traditional leader of this bloc, continued to display a parochial and legalistic approach to most of the questions under discussion. Venezuela, perhaps impressed with its recent economic development, made what was at times a ridiculous attempt to steal the limelight from Argentina or from Mexico. A recent Departmental memorandum on Latin American attitudes in the General Assembly of the United Nations expressed the hope that the contributions of this bloc would be increasingly constructive. It is regrettable that there were no indications of this at the Seventh Assembly of ICAO. Most of them conformed to the pattern described in the Departmental memorandum, which pointed out that the Latin American states "are long on the rights of states abroad and short on contributions for international purposes and on practical measures at home". With only a few exceptions these states were unable to produce well-informed delegates for the Assembly. They frequently used their voting power irresponsibly and on one occasion combined with the Arab bloc to carry a vote (concerning suspension of voting power of states in arrears) in which states supplying about 80% of the financial support of the Organization were defeated.[4] (Fortunately, this vote was subsequently reversed by another resolution.)

11. There were other unfortunate tendencies apparent at this Assembly. For example, the United States Delegation displayed an exaggerated sense of economy in its desire to cut the budget. The personal concern of some of the delegates about their own future, combined with the traditional rigidity which United States delega-

[4] La résolution qui a été rejetée proposait que soient privés du droit de vote tous les États qui ne se seraient pas acquittés de leurs engagements financiers avant le 31 décembre 1951 et qui n'auraient pas par la suite pris des mesures pour régler leurs arrérages.
The defeated resolution provided for the suspension of voting powers for all states that had not met their financial obligation by December 31, 1951 and had not subsequently taken steps to settle their arrears.

tions frequently maintain, made it difficult to negotiate sensible or reasonable compromises.

12. In listing the less favourable tendencies, some word of warning should be given about the increased role which individual Council members are playing at the General Assemblies. For example, at the Seventh Assembly Sir Frederick Tyms, the United Kingdom Council member, was elected President of the Assembly, and two other Commissions were chaired by Council members. It is, of course, imperative that the experience of individual Council members should not be wasted. Nevertheless, the presence of many Council members as Chairmen and spokesmen in the various Committees tended to reduce much of the discussion to personal debates. The Council members are, of course, the real professionals of ICAO, but if they play too aggressive a part at Assemblies they are likely to discourage smaller states. Moreover, now that a full Assembly will be held only every three years, it is important that national administrations should review carefully the work of the Council and the Organization in general. This can perhaps be best achieved by bringing senior officials from the various governments to serve as spokesmen at the Assembly. The United States Delegation was perhaps unique in that their Council member remained in the background, largely in an advisory capacity. This, I believe, was also the intention of the Canadian Delegation until the Assembly drafted the Canadian Council member as Chairman of the Administrative Commission. These comments should not be in any way taken as reflecting on the very high ability of many of the Council members. All of them who served as Chairmen did so with distinction and efficiency.

13. The decreasing importance of Assembly sessions is perhaps a direct result of the efficiency and skill of the Council and the Secretariat of ICAO. Most of the work of ICAO concerns complex technical and economic problems, and the Assembly is perhaps too large a forum to effectively engage in detailed discussions. Nevertheless, it would be a retrograde step if the basic importance of these Assemblies were obscured, since these meetings are the only occasions for a great many of the participating states to acquaint themselves with the work of the Organization and to express their views on major policy questions. Another unfavourable element in the present structure of ICAO is the lack of competition amongst contracting states for positions on the Council of ICAO. This year there were only 21 candidates for the 21 seats on the Council. The balloting on these elections revealed that the Latin American and Arab groups had voted solidly for themselves but had abstained from supporting the Anglo-Saxon states, which include most of the major civil aviation powers. This was additional evidence of the discontent which seems to exist amongst the countries of these groups and was probably intended as a reminder to the major civil aviation powers that increasing attention should be given to the views and desires of smaller states.

14. If a final criticism should be made of the Assembly it is that too many states are still badly informed and unaware of the real issues. It was hoped that the rotation of the various states on the Council would help to rectify this, but in fact there has been relatively little change in the composition of the Council over the past eight years. The Council must bear constantly in mind the need to produce documentation and information which can be readily understood and appreciated by the less experienced states which do not serve on the Council, but represent well over half of the total representation at ICAO Assemblies.

15. There were encouraging signs, however, that the technical assistance missions in certain countries were proving useful. There was some evidence also that underdeveloped countries felt that ICAO should develop its own technical assistance fund apart from the general United Nations programme. As the allotments from the latter to ICAO decrease, it may be expected that this pressure will increase.

Rapport sur la septième session de l'Assemblée de l'Organisation de l'aviation civile internationale

Report on Seventh Session of the Assembly of the International Civil Aviation Organization

Attached hereto are the basic reports of the working commissions and committees of this Assembly, namely, the Executive Committee† and the Administrative, Technical† and Economic† Commissions. There is no need to attempt a summary of these documents since they are themselves brief and to the point.

Canada as usual played a fairly important role not only in the contribution of its delegates in individual committees and commissions, but in responsibilities placed upon it in the manner of official duties in the Assembly and its sub-bodies. There are, however, certain general comments relating to the political background of national participation in this particular Assembly which are of basic importance to the future of ICAO and may be of general importance in relation to other international organizations.

The appearance of a Latin-American bloc and a Middle-Eastern Arab bloc at previous Assemblies and the occasions upon which they have worked together had previously been noted as a dangerous tendency. During the Seventh Assembly which unlike the Fifth and Sixth was a major Assembly this association became not only more marked but also showed that it could carry a majority vote in the Assembly on difficult questions even though most of the Western European and Commonwealth nations as well as the United States might be on the other side. This was in part because at the major Assembly a number of the smaller Latin-American or Arab states were represented which had not been present at the intervening so-called minor Assemblies. One example of this is to be found in the work of the Executive Committee on the action with regard to States whose contributions were in arrears.

The results of this development were equally apparent in the result of the voting for the election of the new Council. The number of States running for election to the Council was exactly the same as the number of States to be elected and so there was in effect little competition although it was necessary to ensure election for each State to receive two-thirds of the vote cast. If more than one-third of the States abstained therefore from voting for any particular state that state would have failed of election. Fifty-one States voted in the Assembly for the election to Council and thus the necessary number of votes for election was thirty-four. The results were as follows: Mexico 50, Argentina 49, Italy, Spain & Venezuela 48, Egypt, Lebanon 47, Portugal 45, Brazil 44, Ireland & Norway 43, Belgium & France 42, India, Philippines, UK, & US 41, Netherlands 40, Canada 39, Australia 38, South Africa 36. The abstentions in the case of South Africa may of course be explained in part by its domestic policies but it is noteworthy that there must also have been a substantial number of abstentions in the case of voting for a number of other States such as the US, UK, Canada, the Netherlands, etc.

I believe this matter requires very serious consideration in relation to ICAO since if this development is continued and carried further at the next major Assembly, presumably in 1956, the effectiveness of ICAO may be seriously undermined.

REPORT OF THE CANADIAN DELEGATION ON THE WORK OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMISSION

Reference: Report of the Administrative Commission A7-WP/74-AD/15 (Addenda and Corrigenda).†

Canadian Representatives on the Commission

Mr. A.S. Macdonald, Delegate
Mr. J.E. Hyndman, Adviser

Note: C.S. Booth was elected Chairman of this Commission by the Assembly and presided at all its meetings.

The main items dealt with in the Administrative Commission were:

(1) The budget for 1954 as proposed by the Council;

(2) The apportionment of the expenses of ICAO among Contracting States and the principles upon which assessments were to be based:

(a) for 1954;

(b) in future years.

The other items of the agenda for the Commission were of a routine nature. They did not give rise to much discussion and they do not require comment here.

A brief general debate on the budget for 1954 took place in the Commission at its first and second meetings on Thursday, June 18th during which general statements were heard. Detailed study then shifted to a working group and finally the Commission resumed general debate on the report of the working group on June 26th. Canada was not a member of this working group. Great emphasis was placed by all delegates on the paramount need for economy. It was clear from the outset however, that most States were reasonably satisfied that the work programme and budget of ICAO for 1954 was satisfactory and realistic. The Canadian delegation explained its position, supporting in general the proposed budget.

The United States, supported by Pakistan notably, and the Philippines, argued strongly for large budget cuts to be achieved both by a reduction in the work programme, notably in the number of regional meetings and of meetings of the Legal Committee, and by improved efficiency. It was proposed that ten posts in the Secretariat be abolished.

The United Kingdom supported the United States on a number of occasions, although on balance they were satisfied with the present scale of activities. Several states favoured an extension of the work of ICAO, the under-developed countries in particular. France did not want any increase in the budget, but wanted more emphasis to be placed on the economic aspects of ICAO's work, which presumably would be achieved by re-allocating some funds from other activities. At the final Plenary Meeting the French Delegation proposed a resolution along those lines, leaving it to the Council to exercise its discretion in the allocation of funds and the French proposal was adopted on a vote of 18 for, 3 against with 5 abstentions. The Netherlands strongly opposed any slowing down of ICAO's work.

The total reduction of the budget achieved by the Working Group of $52,940 was approved by the Commission; Canada voting in favour. At the final Plenary Session the United States delegation proposed and were successful in securing a further reduction of $36,666 on a vote of 23 for, 17 against with 7 abstentions. The Canadian delegate opposed this proposal on the ground that no convincing evidence in support of this reduction had been given.

The United Kingdom sponsored a resolution calling for an investigation of the Secretariat of ICAO to determine whether any economies were possible and this was carried after some debate. This resolution in its final form incorporated an amendment proposed by the Delegate of Venezuela directing the Council to pay particular attention to the work of regional offices in this investigation. This amendment was supported solidly by a Latin-Arab block. The Canadian delegation voted in favour of the amended resolution, as in its final form it gave Council considerable discretion in the conduct of this investigation.

Apportionment of expenses among Contracting States —

The working group established to examine the 1954 scale of assessments made few changes in the scale proposed by the Secretary-General. The Commission approved the report of the working group, despite determined United States efforts to maintain their assessment at 27% instead of the 29.7% proposed. The United States draft resolution on that point was decisively defeated. On this occasion, because of the obvious reluctance of others to resist the US position, the Canadian delegation found it necessary to make a strong statement supporting the proposed scale of assessments for 1954 and in particular the US assessment at 29.7%. The Canadian delegate re-affirmed the view that the US contribution should be brought up to 33⅓% as soon as possible. He reminded the delegates that if the United States were to be assessed simply on a "capacity to pay basis" or on the basis of "interest and importance in civil aviation", they would pay about double their present assessment. In effect, as matters stood at present, he pointed out, a number of Contracting States were penalized because of the United States assessment being too low. In the full Commission, notwithstanding the decision of the Budget Working Group not to recommend any transfer from the Working Capital Fund in aid of the Budget, the United States succeeded in getting a resolution passed authorizing the transfer of $200,000 for this purpose. Canada opposed this proposal in view of the apparent probability that it would have to be replaced through additional assessment on States in one, or at the most, two years.

Per Capita Principle —

As it seemed likely that any prolonged debate on this issue and in particular any effort at getting more recognition for the per capita principle then contained in the conclusions of the Council (Document A7-WP/16-AD/5)† would bring out into the open the latent opposition of a considerable majority of States and would result in a decisive defeat of the proponents of this principle, the Canadian delegation expressed its willingness to support the conclusions of the Council and in effect to defer the full application of the per capita principle until the maximum contribution had reached 33⅓%. The United Kingdom delegation, whose representative in Council had been our most bitter critic on this point, spoke at some length on this subject, strongly urging the per capita principle; the reason being, of course, that their own shoe is beginning to pinch. The Australian delegation spoke in a similar vein. France and Mexico placed on record their unequivocal opposition to the per capita principle. The result of the discussion on this issue has been to maintain the status quo for the present.

Interest and Importance in Civil Aviation —

The debate on this question showed general agreement with the conclusions of the Council (Doc. A7-WP/17-AD/6).† In particular the need for simplification of the assessment procedures was discussed by a number of delegates. The French delegation went further and placed on record their view that the Organization should study the possibility of adopting a single criteria for the assessments, namely the capacity to pay in the manner adopted by UNESCO. It seemed to be indicated that they will raise this question again in Council.

Scale of Assessments for 1955 —

As a result of the debate on the per capita principle and on the interest and importance in civil aviation, a draft resolution was prepared on the principles to be applied for the assessments in 1955. This resolution followed without modification the suggestions made by the Council.

In conclusion it can be said that the work of the Administrative Commission reflected a sincere desire for economy on the part of most States. As expected, the United States were the most determined and the most drastic in their suggestions. The failure to effect any serious cuts was an indication that most States were well satisfied with the scale of activities of ICAO and believed the Organization was performing this work efficiently and economically.

There was no reference in the debates to "the high cost of living in Montreal" and it appears that any attempt to build a case for the transfer of the Headquarters from Montreal has, for the present at least, been abandoned.

Le président de la Commission des transports aériens au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Chairman, Air Transport Board, to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

Ottawa, September 8, 1953

Dear Sir:

CANADA — AUSTRALIA AIR AGREEMENT

As you are aware, it was arranged that discussions would take place between representatives of Canada and Australia following the ICAO meetings in Brighton. The discussions were held in London between July 6th and 14th, the Canadian representative being Mr. A.S. Macdonald, Executive Director and Legal Adviser of the Air Transport Board, and the principal Australian representative being Mr. A.B. McFarlane, Director of Air Transport and External Relations of the Australian Department of Civil Aviation. The subject was fully explored but no real progress towards a satisfactory solution was achieved.

The Australians continue to hold the restrictive views previously expressed with regard to the capacity and frequency provisions in the present bilateral agreement with Canada, particularly that a designated airline of either country shall be entitled only to such capacity as will provide for the actual traffic between the terminal points in the two countries and that prior governmental approval is necessary for changes in frequencies. They do not recognize traffic originating or terminating behind the Canadian terminal as legitimate Canadian traffic and put particular emphasis on UK traffic which they claim for their own in this connection. They lay great stress on the necessity to maintain by their own airlines, direct channels of communication between the UK and the USA.

In essence, after reiterating the arguments previously advanced in correspondence, the Canadian view advanced was that the bilateral agreement between Australia and the USA permits operation under the Bermuda formula as to capacity and that we expect to receive from the Australians both in letter and in practice as good treatment as does the United States, particularly when both the United States and ourselves operate between the North American Continent and Australia under approximately similar conditions.

It was recognized in the discussions in London that the present agreement between Canada and Australia is not satisfactory and should be redrafted. It should be remembered that the present form was adopted before either the Bermuda or Geneva formulas on capacity were developed. There are several articles which are difficult to interpret and others which are not now satisfactory to either country.

The present position is that the Australians expect us to send a delegation to Australia as soon as possible to deal with the whole matter. They feel that there is no value in further correspondence and that the only course now is to sit down and attempt to agree on a workable arrangement. Mr. Macdonald feels they do not want to see a complete break in aviation relations with Canada and will make some attempt to reconcile our differences. At the same time, negotiations will not be easy and formal intergovernmental representations on a high level through External Affairs at least before and possibly during negotiations will undoubtedly be necessary to produce a co-operative attitude at the working level in the Australian Ministry of Civil Aviation.

During the discussions the Australians were told that in view of the then approaching Canadian election, it would be extremely difficult to give a firm commitment as to the date at which it would be possible for a Canadian delegation to go to Australia but, in any event, it would not be before November. The Australians expressed their understanding of our position but stated that an early meeting was, in their opinion, desirable and that the next move was up to Canada.

The Australians were assured that there was no intention on our part to delay unduly the conclusion of the discussions. It now appears that having in mind the other commitments of the Board, it may not be possible to send anyone to Australia much before early January 1954.

You will remember that Canadian Pacific Air Lines is operating its increased frequency under an authorization, the period of which expires in September 1953. In response to the Canadian request made during discussions in London the Australians indicated that there would be no difficulty about a further extension until the conclusion of the next discussions but suggested that we make a formal request for such an extension.

I suggest that we should now advise the Australian government that we would like to agree with them on a suitable time and place for discussions and at the same time submit a formal request for an extension of the period during which CPAL may continue their frequency of one flight per week until these discussions have taken place. In this connection, the Australians should be informed that it would be exceedingly difficult for us to send adequate representation to Canberra for discussions much before the end of the year but that this might be possible during January if that time were satisfactory to the Australian officials.

Sincerely yours,

J.R. BALDWIN

[Ottawa], March 2, 1953

AIR AGREEMENT WITH MEXICO

I was visited on February 28th by the new Director-General of Civil Aviation of the Mexican government, General Salinas Carranza, who is prepared to proceed with the negotiation of a bilateral agreement. His suggestion was that Canadian officials should go to Mexico in April for informal and exploratory talks with a view to reaching agreement in principle, particularly on routes and traffic points; and that this meeting should be followed later by further official work to complete the details of the document and a final meeting for signature in Montreal or Ottawa.

While General Salinas was not prepared to go into specific details he appeared anxious to have a bilateral agreement and to see direct air service between Canada and Mexico. I am inclined to feel from his conversation that it may well be possible to get their agreement to an eastern route for TCA although it was not clear whether if we get both an eastern and a western route for Canada, Mexico would also expect an eastern and a western route (which we would be prepared to give), or would prefer to have something in the way of additional concessions on a single eastern route to offset our two routes. This could only be determined in actual negotiation.

One point was stressed which I think may be fundamental to solution of the issue. General Salinas indicated that the Mexicans are extremely anxious to have direct air communication provided at once because of present demand for service. He asked if in this connection we would be prepared to allow KLM[5] to carry traffic between Montreal and Mexico for the period only until either a Canadian or a Mexican airline established service between eastern Canada and Mexico, KLM rights to be cancelled at that time. While I am worried over anything that looks like the "foot in the door" principle, it seems that the Mexicans place great importance on this. There would be no particular objection to letting KLM carry this traffic at present since it would not injure any Canadian aviation interest, so long as we are prepared to insert a firm condition in any such permission cancelling it automatically as soon as a Canadian or Mexican airline starts service; and so long as we are prepared to stick to our guns in this cancellation rather than change our minds at a later date.

[5] Royal Dutch Airlines.

I have also spoken to Gordon McGregor[6] who I believe would agree that there is no particular objection to KLM carrying the traffic at present so long as we are prepared to withdraw this right from KLM when TCA or a Mexican airline starts service and are not prepared to give in to the further pressure that would undoubtedly come from KLM at that time to be allowed to continue.

We might take the line with Mexico that we are prepared to negotiate with them at as early a date as possible and would try to send someone there in April or shortly thereafter; that if we could reach agreement in principle either at that time (or even in advance of that through diplomatic channels) on inclusion in the bilateral agreement of a route for TCA from eastern Canada and can get a written Mexican commitment to this principle, we might state that we would allow KLM to carry traffic on an interim basis only after this agreement in principle is reached; this to be on the understanding that KLM rights would automatically cease on the introduction of Canadian or Mexican service and that they would not be continued regardless of the pressure which may come from the Netherlands government in this regard.

For your direction, please.

BILATERAL AIR AGREEMENT WITH MEXICO[7]

I think that this Department would agree with Mr. Baldwin's general approach as a basis for conducting exploratory talks. The chief comment that I would offer is that we should be pretty cautious in the opening stages about what we are prepared to do for KLM. This may turn out to be one of our best bargaining cards since the Mexicans are apparently anxious to have KLM supply the route as soon as possible and so are the Dutch (the Netherlands Ambassador mentions it to me every now and then). The nature and timing of any permission given to KLM may be a critical element in reaching agreement and we should hold out the carrot without committing ourselves too firmly at the start.

These comments were passed on to Mr. A.S. Macdonald by telephone on May 1. J.E. H[yndman] [A.S. Macdonald était directeur exécutif et conseiller juridique de la Commission des Transports aériens./A.S. Macdonald was Executive Director and Legal Adviser, Air Transport Board.]

One reason for extracting the utmost in the way of counter-concessions is that we can anticipate a lot of unpleasantness in getting KLM to give up the route when a Mexican or Canadian carrier starts operating. No matter how carefully the temporary nature of such an arrangement is spelled out there is bound to be trouble when the time comes to vacate. We ought therefore to satisfy ourselves that we are getting full value for any concession involving KLM, and should make the stipulations about temporary service as binding and as widely recognized as we can. We should aim at making the point in at least three ways:

(1) in an agreement with Mexico;

(2) in an agreement with the Netherlands; and

(3) in public statements in the House of Commons and elsewhere.

TRANSPORT; AIR SERVICE AGREEMENT WITH MEXICO

1. The Prime Minister submitted a recommendation by the Minister of Transport for authorization to sign a bilateral agreement with the government of Mexico on air services.

2. The Cabinet approved the recommendation of the Minister of Transport, concurred in by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and agreed that J.R. Baldwin, Esq., be authorized to sign, on behalf of Canada, a bilateral agreement with Mexico to provide for the establishment of air services between Canada and Mexico, under which direct air connections on a reciprocal basis would be authorized between Vancouver and Mexico City and between points in eastern Canada and Mexico City; an Order-in-Council to be passed accordingly.

DESPATCH E-197 Ottawa, June 11, 1953

AIR AGREEMENT BETWEEN CANADA AND MEXICO

As soon as the Air Agreement between Canada and Mexico becomes effective, we would be grateful if you would send a formal note to the Mexican Government indicating that Canada has designated Trans-Canada Air Lines as the Canadian airline to operate the route from Montreal and Toronto to Mexico City and Canadian Pacific Airlines as the Canadian airline to operate the route from Vancouver to Mexico City. This formal procedure is required under the agreement as a necessary preliminary step before any permit can be granted. It might be possible for you to take this step at the same time as will take place the supplementary Exchange of Notes relating to KLM and the use of Rio de Janeiro by CPA.

2. Once the Exchange of Notes has taken place, please inform Mr. Loaeza, Assistant Director of Civil Aviation in Mexico that TCA will be getting in touch with him in order to determine what steps will have to be taken so that TCA may be granted a permit to operate. TCA's intention is to begin operations by August 1st.

AIR AGREEMENT WITH MEXICO

At this time, when it is felt in certain quarters that negotiations for the conclusion of an air agreement between Canada and Mexico are proceeding too rapidly, it might be desirable to review some of the reasons which make the conclusion of such an agreement highly desirable for Canada.

(a) It is the desire of Canadian airlines to expand to the south as far down as Peru, Brazil and, eventually, Argentina. Due to the geographical position of Mexico, it is indispensable that an air agreement be reached with that country in order that our airlines may find the door open to South America. More than 20 countries, including the USA, have been trying for years to obtain what Canada is about to get with this proposed agreement. Should negotiations fail or should the Mexicans have a change of mind, Canadian airlines might very well find South America closed to them for some years to come.

(b) At the moment there does not exist any Mexican airline capable of flying between Canada and Mexico and, therefore, our airlines would have, at the beginning at least, a monopoly of the traffic.

(c) It should be noted that while TCA will be the designated Canadian carrier on the Eastern route (Montreal-Toronto-Mexico City), the CPAL will be serving the Western group, i.e. Vancouver-Mexico City. CPAL is most anxious and ready to begin flying this route as soon as possible. Furthermore, Mr. McGregor, President of TCA, and Mr. Fred Wood, his Executive Assistant, both stated on June 9 and June 10 that TCA itself would be ready to begin service by August 1. Negotiations had been proceeding on the basis of this information supplied to us and to the Air Transport Board.

(d) TCA would have no reason to fear that KLM might establish itself permanently on the Eastern route should it be permitted to fly temporarily until TCA is itself ready to take over. The Dutch would, of course, be warned that any concession to KLM will be for a very short period. Any Exchange of Notes with the Netherlands Government would clearly indicate a firm cut-off date. Finally, KLM would wish to obtain a temporary permit from the Air Transport Board. This permit would also indicate specifically the termination date of KLM service.

2. At the present time, our attitude is neither to press nor delay the negotiations with Mexico but to let them follow their normal course.

LETTER NO. [SENT UNNUMBERED] Ottawa, September 2, 1953

Excellency,

I have the honour to refer to the Exchange of Notes of June 2, 1948, between Canada and the Netherlands supplementary to the Agreement for Air Services between the two countries signed at Ottawa, June 2, 1948, and to the Agreement between the Government of Canada and the Government of Mexico for air services between and beyond their respective territories, concluded by means of an Exchange of Notes on July 27, 1953.† This latter Agreement, inter alia, provides for the operation by an airline designated by the Government of Canada over a route between Montreal or Toronto, Canada, and Mexico City, Mexico, and for the operation by an airline designated by the Government of Mexico over a route between Mexico City, Mexico, and Montreal, Canada.

During the discussion which preceded the negotiation of this Agreement it was recognized by the Canadian and Mexican representatives that, for technical reasons, it might not be practicable for either a Canadian airline or a Mexican airline immediately to begin operations over the routes referred to in the preceding paragraph. At the same time it was agreed that it was in the interests of the two countries that direct air services between Montreal or Toronto and Mexico City should commence as soon as possible. In these circumstances consideration was given to a proposal made to both Governments that KLM, a Netherlands airline, be allowed to operate between Montreal and Mexico City until such time as either a Canadian or a Mexican airline begins operations over one of the routes referred to above.

I am instructed to inform you that the Canadian Government is prepared to enter into an Agreement with the Netherlands Government under which, as a temporary measure, KLM will be authorized to operate an air service in both directions between Montreal and Mexico City subject to the following conditions:

(a) KLM may put down or take on at Montreal, Canada, traffic in persons, goods and mails coming from or destined for Mexico City, Mexico, and may put down or take on at Mexico City, Mexico, traffic in persons, goods, and mails coming from or destined for Canada.

(b) The operation of the service shall be conducted by KLM in accordance with the laws and regulations of Canada and Mexico ordinarily applicable to international air services.

(c) This temporary authorization for KLM shall expire as soon as either a Canadian or a Mexican airline is to begin operating a service on the specified routes, Montreal or Toronto – Mexico City and Mexico City – Montreal respectively. The exact date for the cessation of the KLM air service will be communicated to the Netherlands Government at least thirty days in advance of the proposed date of commencement of air service by the Canadian or Mexican airline. Advice will be given by the Government of Canada or the Government of Mexico depending on whether the airline service will be operated by a Canadian or Mexican company.

If this proposal is acceptable to the Netherlands Government, I suggest that this note and your reply shall constitute an agreement between our two Governments.

CANADA-MEXICO AIR AGREEMENT

Through an Exchange of Notes which took place on August 27, 1953,[8] Canada and Mexico have concluded a bilateral air agreement under the terms of which Trans-Canada Air Lines will operate service between Montreal/Toronto and Mexico City via Tampa, Florida, USA.

2. The Canada-United States Air Transport Agreement provides for fifth freedom rights[9] at Tampa/St. Petersburg to the Bahamas and/or points in the Caribbean and

The correct date is July 27, 1953.

[9] Les cinq libertés de l'air sont:
1) Le privilège de traverser un territoire sans atterrir;
2) Le privilège d'atterrir pour des raisons non-commerciales;
3) Le privilège de débarquer des passagers, du courrier et des marchandises embarqués sur le territoire de l'État dont l'aéronef possède la nationalité;
4) Le privilège d'embarquer des passagers, du courrier et des marchandises à destination du territoire de l'État dont l'aéronef possède la nationalité;
5) Le privilège d'embarquer des passagers, du courrier et des marchandises à destination du territoire de tout autre État Contractant et le privilège de débarquer des passagers, du courrier et des marchandises en provenance du territoire de tout autre État Contractant.

The Five Freedoms of the Air are:
First Freedom: The freedom to fly across a territory without landing;
Second Freedom: The freedom to land for non-traffic purposes;
Third Freedom: The freedom to put down passengers, mail and cargo taken on in the territory or the State whose nationality the aircraft possesses;
Fourth Freedom: The freedom to take on passengers, mail and cargo destined for the territory of the State whose nationality the aircraft possesses;
Fifth Freedom: The freedom to take on passengers, mail and cargo destined for the territory of another State and the privilege to put down passengers, mail and cargo coming from any such territory.

beyond.[10] It is not likely that the United States authorities would agree that Mexico City falls within the description of this route.[11] However, TCA does not propose to exercise traffic rights between Tampa and Mexico City and it is not anticipated, therefore, that the United States authorities will raise any objection to the proposal.

3. It is, nevertheless, our view that the matter should be cleared before TCA completes its plans for inauguration of the service, and I should be grateful if you would notify the United States authorities of TCA's intention and obtain their concurrence as soon as possible.

4. TCA proposes, at least on an interim basis, to use the same aircraft as are employed on the service to and from Montreal/Toronto and Tampa under the Canada-United States Bilateral for the purpose of operating to and from Mexico City under the Canada-Mexico Agreement. No traffic privileges will be exercised between Tampa and Mexico; insofar as Mexico is concerned the stop at Tampa being for non-traffic purposes under the provisions of the International Air Services Transit Agreement.

5. It might also be useful to advise the United States authorities that TCA does not intend to use Windsor, Ontario, as an intermediate point so long as service is operated via Tampa. It should be pointed out, however, that the establishment of the service Canada – Mexico via Tampa, without exercise of traffic rights at this point, is without prejudice to any future application that may be made for traffic privileges between Tampa and Mexico under the Canada – United States Air Transport Agreement.

6. TCA wishes to commence this service as soon as possible and, for various reasons, I should be grateful if this matter could be expedited.

Reference: Despatch No. E.992 of September 2, 1953.

As you requested in your despatch under reference we referred to the United States authorities the proposed service by Trans-Canada Airlines between Montreal/Toronto and Mexico City via Tampa, Florida. We have been pressing the State Department for a reply to our letter containing this information and we have been informed that the matter has been referred to the Civil Aeronautics Board and has been considered of sufficient importance by the officials of the CAB[12] that they are in the process of consulting the members of the Board. We have been told informally that the Board officials are concerned about TCA's proposal to use the same aircraft as are employed on the service to and from Montreal/Toronto and Tampa under the Canada-United States Bilateral for the purpose of operating to and from Mexico City under the Canada-Mexico Agreement, even though they have been told that the stop at Tampa, insofar as Mexico is concerned, would be for non-traffic purposes under the provisions of the International Air Services Transit Agreement.

2. The State Department is not able to forecast what the answer of the United States authorities will be. We have asked State Department officials to do as much as they can to hasten this answer and we are now told that we may receive a reply by the end of this week or the beginning of next week.

TCA has learned quite unofficially that our request cannot be decided before some basic issue is resolved by the CAB. It has not been possible to obtain further information on this point and it might be that you will be able to obtain elucidation through informal talks.

It would be in order for you to emphasize to the State Department the great importance we attach to obtaining this right and how seriously we would regard a refusal.

Reference: Your teletype EX-1722 of October 15, 1953.

As you requested, we discussed yesterday with E.A. Bolster, Chief of the Aviation Policy Staff, Department of State, our request that Trans-Canada Airlines be allowed to make a non-traffic stop at Tampa, Florida, in its Montreal-Toronto-Mexico City service. We were told that the State Department had not yet received an answer from the Civil Aeronautics Board but that this was expected very soon and that within a few days we would have a reply to our letter to the State Department. We were informed, however, that our enquiry had raised a difficult question of principle and it was virtually certain that the reply would be unfavourable.

2. Mr. Bolster explained that, as a matter of general policy, the United States had insisted on obtaining full traffic rights for United States airlines serving points abroad. For example, the United States authorities had refused Pan American Airlines permission to apply for limited traffic rights between Auckland and Sydney. In order to safeguard their bargaining power, the United States were anxious to ensure that foreign aircraft serving points in the United States be given full freedom rights at those points and therefore they considered it necessary to refuse applications for limited traffic rights. Unless the United States authorities were consistent in implementing this policy, they might find it more difficult to obtain full freedom rights for United States scheduled airlines in foreign countries. A concession of limited traffic rights might prove an embarrassing precedent.

3. The State Department officials stated that the service proposed by TCA would not come within the terms of the United States-Canadian Bilateral Agreement, which specifies service beyond Tampa to points in the Caribbean and beyond; and since the aircraft used by TCA would also carry passengers to Tampa, the request could not be considered as coming within the International Air Services Transit Agreement. We were told that the United States authorities would have no objection to our request if (a) the plane on the once-a-week run from Montreal to Mexico City, stopping at Tampa, carried no passengers for Tampa, or (b) another transit point for the Montreal-Mexico route were suggested. These suggestions would remove TCA's difficulty if the lack of equipment referred to in EX-1722 meant lack of long-range equipment, but would not help if TCA lacked aircraft. Bolster also admitted that the alternative possibilities he had suggested would not be very attractive from the economic point of view.

4. We then asked if it would make any difference to the expected unfavourable reply if we could assure the State Department that the proposed service would be of short duration and if we could give them a definite time when it would be changed to a direct service between Windsor and Monterrey. We made this suggestion because your teletype EX-1722 seemed to be more explicit concerning the temporary nature of the proposed service than the information contained in letter E-992. We were told that if we could give such an assurance, State Department officials would see that this point was given full consideration. State Department officials think that it would be preferable for them to have such information before sending us an official reply to our original enquiry. We would, therefore, be grateful to have from you as soon as possible an indication of how long TCA would wish to operate via Tampa using the same plane as on the Montreal-Toronto-Tampa route.

Reference: Your teletype WA-2383, October 20.

The information that the United States reaction to our request is likely to be unfavourable is most disturbing. Canadian Civil Aviation authorities had assumed in negotiating the Mexico Air Agreement that there would be no difficulty about a non-traffic stop at Tampa, and arrangements have proceeded on this basis. Whatever the technicalities may be, it is considered that the narrow and restrictive interpretation apparently given by the CAB to the definition of "non-traffic stop" is contrary to the spirit and intent of the International Air Transit Agreement. If this interpretation is maintained and TCA had to operate two aircraft to Tampa, it is clear that hardship would result for the Canadian airline.

2. We would like you to re-open this matter with the United States authorities on whatever level you think would be most effective in bringing about a modification of the attitude of the CAB. Leaving the legal position aside, it seems to me that there are two main arguments which you could advance at policy level. In the first place, a refusal by the United States to accord us the privilege requested would be contrary to the practice, which has been followed by the major air-faring nations, such as the United Kingdom, France, and Holland, who have been willing to accord the necessary permission in cases where this made good sense, and without too much regard to the strict interpretations of prevailing Air Agreements. In the second place, it should be pointed out that in relation to United States airlines, Canada has been extremely liberal in interpreting its bilateral agreement, and to the extent possible, has simplified and facilitated the regulations relating thereto. Specifically, it might be pointed out that we have raised no objection to the Pan American Airlines providing services between Seattle and Fairbanks, calling at Whitehorse, by means of one flight only while being authorized by two different ATB[13] licences to operate service between Seattle and Whitehorse and between Whitehorse and Fairbanks. Moreover, we have not objected to Pan American carrying traffic from Seattle to Fairbanks on what are in effect trans-border services. It may be useful for you to know that Baldwin and others consider that, should the request for the Tampa stop be refused on the grounds outlined by you, the Canadian Government should be urged to reconsider its policy concerning United States air carriers in Canada.

3. We hope that the United States civil aviation authorities appreciate the very considerable embarrassment which refusal of our application would involve. TCA have indicated that inability to use Tampa in the way proposed would, in fact, mean that for some considerable time at least, they would not be prepared to operate on the route. This would necessitate a public announcement, possibly at the ministerial level, explaining why it had become necessary to abandon the proposed service between Montreal and Mexico City. You will appreciate the complications which this would involve, not only here, but in Mexico. The fact that there has been such a long delay on the part of CAB in dealing with our application, makes the position even more difficult as administrative arrangements such as advertising, pre-inaugural flight, etc. have all gone forward in the expectation of a favourable reply. Plans have been made to initiate commercial flights on October 31 and tickets have been sold on this basis. TCA is for the moment proceeding with this plan. The length of the delay in dealing with this matter would seem to indicate that the CAB is not itself confident of the reasonableness and rightness of the restrictive position they apparently propose to adopt.

4. Neither of the alternatives outlined in your paragraph 3 is acceptable from the economic point of view. We are anxious that you should press this question with United States authorities on the basis of our original request. We would not wish you to use the argument that employment of the Tampa route would only be of temporary duration. Our view is that the right to use Tampa for a non-traffic stop should be accorded on any basis of equity and practical good sense, and your representations should be in this direction. We would not wish you to get into technical legal arguments about the definition of a non-traffic stop and our rights under the Bilateral Agreement and the Air Service Transit Agreement. However, it might be worth while pointing out that the type of request we have advanced for Tampa would not seem to have been envisaged when the Chicago Convention[14] was negotiated, and that in these circumstances, and bearing in mind the friendly and mutually advantageous relationships which exist between Canada and the United States in the economic field, it would be regrettable if a narrow and restrictive view of the definition of a "non-traffic stop" were maintained by the CAB.

BILATERAL AIR AGREEMENT WITH MEXICO

Reference: Our teletype EX-1782, October 22, 1953.

Further to our teletype under reference and with regard to the question of principle raised by the United States as a reason for refusing our request, it may be pointed out that the United States has not objected on this score in the matter of the operations of certain other foreign airlines into the United States in comparable, if not identical, circumstances. The United States is apparently objecting on grounds of principle to the fact that TCA would be carrying third and fourth freedom traffic between Canada and Tampa under the Canada-United States Bilateral Agreement and third and fourth freedom traffic between [under] Canada-Mexico Bilateral Agreement on the same flight via Tampa; and is suggesting that this is improper unless TCA also exercises fifth freedom rights out of Tampa as well, onward to Mexico.

Attention should be drawn to at least two cases where the United States has not objected to this in instances where it has been the terminal of the service. Air France is operating from Paris to Chicago by way of Montreal. Air France carries traffic between Paris and Montreal and between Paris and Chicago on the same flight but has no traffic rights between Montreal and Chicago. The United States authorities have so far as we know raised no objection whatsoever to the fact that Air France is operating this service in an identical fashion to that proposed by TCA to Mexico. In the same fashion British Overseas Airways has used the same aircraft carrying London-Montreal traffic and London-New York traffic by way of Montreal but without carrying local traffic between Montreal and New York. While in these cases Canada is the intermediate country and the United States the terminal country involved, nevertheless the principle is identical and aircraft used on combined services of the sort proposed by TCA have flown to and from United States points.

In accordance with your instructions, we called this afternoon on Paul Barringer, Director of the Office of Transport and Communications Policy in the State Department. Bolster,[15] Chief of the Aviation Policy Staff, was also present.

2. We began by saying that word that the Civil Aeronautics Board was expected to refuse permission to TCA to make a non-traffic stop at Tampa on its service to Mexico City had caused great concern in Ottawa. The Canadian authorities had been proceeding on the assumption that permission would be readily granted. One reason why they had made this assumption was that other great airfaring nations, including the United Kingdom, France and Holland, granted similar rights to foreign airlines. Another reason was that the United States itself had seemed to countenance such arrangements by permitting foreign airlines to use United States airports as the terminus of services where identical arrangements were in effect; and we mentioned specifically the BOAC[16] service through Montreal to New York and the Air France service through Montreal to Chicago.

3. The Canadian authorities, we went on, had expected that the Civil Aeronautics Board would have regard for the spirit both of the International Air Services Transit Agreement and the Air Transport Agreement between Canada and the United States, and would not interpret either of these agreements in a rigid way. Hitherto they had been applied on both sides of the border with good sense and even with leniency. In particular, the Air Transport Board in Canada had been lenient in allowing Pan-American Airlines to use the same plane on the service between Whitehorse and Fairbanks as was used on the service between Whitehorse and Seattle, although Pan-American could have been forced, according to the letter of the law, to operate these runs as two services instead of as one, as the Civil Aeronautics Board was now threatening to force TCA to do on its run to Mexico City.

4. We also outlined the practical difficulties that would be caused if the Civil Aeronautics Board did not quickly grant to TCA the right to make a non-traffic stop at Tampa, explaining the tickets had already been sold for flights that were scheduled to start on the 31st of October, that the new service had been advertised, and that, if the Civil Aeronautics Board did not grant permission, there would seem no alternative but to postpone indefinitely inauguration of the service. In that case, it would probably be necessary for a ministerial announcement to be issued, both in Canada and in Mexico, giving the reason why the service had had to be abandoned.

5. Barringer and Bolster listened sympathetically to what we had to say, and somewhat to our surprise, were not disposed to quarrel with it, or to question us about the Canadian position. They said that they would communicate our views at once to the Board and ask that they be taken fully into account. They did, however, add that, since we had met with Bolster earlier this week, the reply of the Board had been received and it was adverse. They said that they would get in touch with us as quickly as possible to let us know the effect on the Board of our further representations.

6. For the time being I do not see what further we can do. In reply to a question, Barringer said that he understood our views very clearly and that, in his opinion, they would not be made more effective by being reduced to writing. I do not think it would be appropriate for me or members of my staff to try to get in touch with the Civil Aeronautics Board directly. However, it occurs to me that, since John Baldwin knows the Chairman of the Board, he might feel in a position to speak to him over the telephone and urge that the decision already taken should be reversed. I am afraid that, unless some such action is taken quickly, the Board's decision may become inflexible and it may prove impossible to reverse it in time for the service to Mexico City to be inaugurated on the 31st of October.

TCA SERVICES TO MEXICO

Reference: Your teletype EX-1805 of 26 October, and telephone conversation yesterday and today between Warren[17] and LePan.

We learned this morning from Barringer, Director of the Office of Transportation and Communications Policy in the State Department, that he met with Ryan, Chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Board, yesterday evening to discuss our application for non-traffic rights at Tampa on the service to Mexico City. The Board has not changed its position as a result of the representations we made on October 23, and a letter is now being prepared in the State Department stating that the US authorities have not been able to grant our request. Barringer said that he conveyed this information with great reluctance and regret. He wished that it had been possible to give us a different and more favourable reply. But the Civil Aeronautics Board had insisted that to give us non-traffic rights at Tampa would constitute a departure from the Bermuda principles[18] and would establish a precedent which might rise up to haunt the US in entirely different circumstances.

2. The US authorities, Barringer said, fully understood that refusal of a licence would cause us grave inconvenience and embarrassment. For that reason Ryan and he had considered yesterday the possibility of granting us full fifth freedom rights at Tampa. Ultimately, however, they had felt obliged to rule out this possible solution because of the trouble it would create among US carriers who, as you know, have experienced great difficulty in trying to secure rights in Mexico.

3. We gather that Mr. Chevrier heard on Monday from Ambassador Stuart[19] that another possible solution might be to grant TCA a temporary licence for three months, during which time discussions could be held between the Civil Aeronautics Board and the Air Transport Board concerning route patterns in the US and Canada. From the Canadian desk at the State Department we have learned that this was a State Department proposal representing the most they thought they might be able to get the Civil Aeronautics Board to agree to. Barringer urged this solution on Ryan yesterday but without success.

4. One thing worrying Barringer was that it might be thought in Ottawa that no warning had been given that our application might be refused. It was his understanding that some intimation of this possibility had been conveyed both by the US Embassy in Ottawa and through this mission. So far as this Embassy is concerned, that opinion would seem to be substantiated by a re-reading of our letter No. 1910 of October 6. Apparently there had also been a conversation between TCA's counsel and the general counsel for the Civil Aeronautics Board. In order to ascertain what had been said on that occasion, Barringer had been in touch with Nunnely,[20] general counsel for the CAB. He stated that he had told the counsel for TCA that there would seem to be no legal objections to granting a licence but that a policy issue of some importance was involved on which he could not express an opinion.

5. When seeing Barringer on Friday, we had put to him the question raised in your teletype EX-1805 of October 26, whether or not any useful purpose would be served by Baldwin coming to Washington. Barringer showed a marked disinclination to offer any advice on this point. We repeated the question to him this morning. He replied that, although a visit from Baldwin would always be welcome and although Ryan and he would always be glad to see him, he doubted whether Baldwin's personal intervention could have any affect at this stage on the decision reached by the Civil Aeronautics Board. As you are aware, the Board has been under heavy fire and its peace of mind has not been helped by an article in Monday's issue of the American Aviation Daily which stated:

"Initially, a few months ago, a new Chairman and a few other changes were in prospect, but now the status of the entire agency is in question and a complete shake-up rather than a patchwork alteration is more likely."

6. On the other hand, Barringer hoped that there could shortly be consultations between the US and Canadian authorities to review the whole scope of the Air Transport Agreement between Canada and the US. From the Canadian desk we have learned that the State Department became aware of Baldwin's letter requesting this only ten days ago. They were disturbed by Ryan's reply (which apparently went directly to Baldwin) stating that, in his opinion, such consultations were unnecessary. The State Department are strongly of the opinion that the US authorities should agree to enter into such consultations. Barringer expressed the hope that in the context of comprehensive discussions concerning the Bilateral Air Transport Agreement between the two countries, it might be possible to work out satisfactory arrangements for the proposed TCA service to Mexico. However, this could not be done, he realized, in time for TCA to make use of Tampa for a service to Mexico beginning on October 31. Barringer concluded by expressing again the regret felt here over that fact.

TCA AIR SERVICE TO MEXICO

Repeat Washington No. EX-1842.

Following is text of announcement made to-day by Minister of Transport, Begins: Press Release #457.[21] For Immediate Release October 30/53.

Honourable Lionel Chevrier, Minister of Transport, today announced that because of objections raised by the United States Civil Aeronautics Board, Trans-Canada Air Lines had been compelled to put aside its plans for establishment of an air service between Montreal and Mexico City.

The Minister explained that under an agreement between the Canadian and Mexican governments TCA had been authorized to establish an air service from Canada to Mexico City and had been granted a permit by the Mexican authorities to operate from Montreal by way of Tampa, Florida, to Mexico City carrying traffic between Canada and Mexico. TCA also under an agreement between Canada and the United States is authorized to carry traffic between Montreal and Tampa. TCA plans for operations had been based upon combining these operations in a single service which would carry Canadian traffic as far as Tampa and would then continue onward to Mexico carrying any Canadian traffic bound for Mexico but not carrying any local traffic between Tampa and Mexico. This operational pattern, the Minister stated, was one which was in wide use by international airlines. It was the basis on which, for example, TCA operated through London to Paris and Dusseldorf and Air France operated through Montreal to Chicago.

The Minister stated that the Civil Aeronautics Board in the United States had refused to allow TCA to operate in this fashion, indicating that any TCA flight carrying Canadian traffic to Mexico must be carried in a completely separate aircraft from Canada, rather than combined with TCA's present service to Tampa. Since this would require TCA to use two aircraft where one aircraft would be sufficient to provide the necessary services, the difficulties created for TCA had made it necessary for them to give up their plans for service to Mexico for the present.

The Minister further indicated his regret that the decision on the part of the US authorities had prevented the establishment of an international air service which both the Canadian and Mexican governments felt would be in their mutual interests. Canadian air transport authorities had the position of US carriers operating into Canada under review as a result of the US decision.

I received this afternoon the State Department's official reply, signed by Barringer, to our letter of September 8, Begins: I refer to the note from the Chargé d'Affaires of the Canadian Embassy, dated September 8, 1953,† concerning the desire of Trans-Canada Airlines to extend its services between Montreal, Toronto and Tampa, Florida, beyond to Mexico City without the exercise of traffic rights between Tampa and Mexico City. In a desire to accommodate the Embassy's request, most careful consideration was given this matter. However, because of the serious problems of policy involved the US Government has reluctantly concluded that it cannot accede to your request.

A cardinal principle of United States aviation policy has been neither to seek nor grant authorization for scheduled airline services without the right to embark or disembark, at all points on any given route, international traffic destined for or coming from third countries. United States adherence to this principle has been well established throughout the world, and any departure from this principle would have undesirable effects upon United States aviation relationships in many areas.

There would, of course, be no objection to an operation by Trans-Canada Airlines, unrelated to its commercial services between Montreal/Toronto and Tampa, Florida, with a technical stop at a point in the United States under the Air Transit Agreement.

We have seen in this morning's New York Times and New York Herald Tribune news stories with an Ottawa dateline reporting that the Air Transport Board has ordered Pan-American World Airways to show cause why it should be allowed to continue carrying passengers between Seattle and Fairbanks. We have also seen in today's news summary from Ottawa that Mr. Chevrier said yesterday that our department would "act again in an attempt to obtain removal of the United States block to the proposed service" between Canada and Mexico.

2. We should be grateful to receive at your early convenience information concerning developments within the last few days on this matter and some indication of what further steps we may be asked to take. You will appreciate that we need to be kept informed on a continuing basis in order to deal adequately with press inquiries.

We very much regret that you were not informed in advance of the Minister of Transport's statement that this Department would act again in an attempt to obtain removal of the United States block to the proposed service between Canada and Mexico. We appreciate the need for you to be kept fully informed of all such statements, and also of such developments as the Air Transport Board's decisions to review the licences of Colonial Airlines and Pan American World Airways to fly over certain routes.

2. The fact is, however, that this Department itself has not been made aware in advance of these recent developments, and has only learned of them in the same way as yourselves, namely from press and radio reports. For your own information, we have just learned from the Air Transport Board that the statement attributed in your teletype to Mr. Chevrier was not issued in writing as a press release, but appears to have been made orally in response to a press enquiry.

3. A draft note is being prepared in this Department, and we hope to send the text to you soon for delivery to the State Department. It has yet to be agreed upon by the Air Transport Board, but it can be said at this stage that the note will make two main points:

(a) it will record the Canadian Government's regret over the decision of the United States Government; and

(b) will propose that consultations be held between United States and Canadian Civil Aviation authorities in the near future to review the whole scope of the Bilateral Air Transport Agreement between our two countries.

TCA SERVICE TO MEXICO

Reference: Your WA-2457 of October 28 and WA-2479 of October 30.

Please leave with the State Department a communication in the form of an Aide Mémoire or a Third Person Note, if you consider this consistent and appropriate, making reference to the letter signed by Mr. Paul Barringer which you received on October 30, and stating that the Canadian Government has learned with regret of the objections of the United States Civil Aeronautics Authorities to the proposal by Trans-Canada Air Lines to combine a new Canada-Mexico City service (making an operational stop without the exercise of traffic rights at Tampa, Florida) with its already existing Canada-Tampa service on the understanding that this combination of services would involve no exercise of traffic rights between Tampa and Mexico City. (You will note that this manner of stating our proposal puts it in a more favourable light than that used by Mr. Barringer in his letter of October 30.)

2. Your communication to the State Department should then add that the Canadian Government considers that the above-mentioned proposals of Trans-Canada Air Lines, which were put forward in an effort to provide an economically sound air transport service which both Canada and Mexico consider to be for their mutual advantage, would conform to the spirit of the International Air Transit Agreement, and that the Canadian Government continues to hope that the United States Government will find it possible to permit Trans-Canada Air Lines' proposed method of operation to be put into effect.

3. In view of the present situation, and in an effort to reach mutually satisfactory solutions to various outstanding questions and to any further problems which may arise in the future, it is requested that renewed consideration be given to the proposal made by the Chairman of the Air Transport Board to the Chairman of the United States Civil Aeronautics Board for general consultations between the Civil Aviation Authorities of our two countries. It will be recalled that Section VIII of the Bilateral Air Transport Agreement signed at Ottawa on June 4, 1949 calls for frequent and regular consultations of this nature.

4. Your written communication should not go any further than that. We are, however, under instructions from Cabinet to inform the United States authorities that our Civil Aviation authorities will reconsider privileges (similar to those sought by TCA) which have been granted to United States air carriers. In presenting your communication, therefore, you should also make an oral statement along these lines: In the light of the CAB's recent unfavourable decision, the Air Transport Board are reviewing the authorizations under which United States air carriers are operating in Canada with a view to ascertaining whether privileges have been accorded to those carriers similar to those which the CAB has found it impossible to accord to Trans-Canada Air Lines.

We left this afternoon with Barringer at the State Department a third-person note along the lines you suggested. The text of the note is contained in our immediately following telegram.[22] We also informed him that the Air Transport Board are reviewing the authorizations under which United States carriers are operating in Canada, with a view to ascertaining whether privilege has been accorded to those carriers similar to those which the Civil Aeronautics Board has found it impossible to accord to TCA.

[22] Non trouvé./Not located.

2. Barringer said that he was empowered to say at once that the United States authorities would certainly give renewed consideration to the proposal made by the Chairman of the Air Transport Board for general consultations between the Civil Aviation authorities of the two countries. However he was not exactly clear what kind of consultation was desired by the Canadian authorities. In our note we had referred (in accordance with your instructions) to Section VIII of the Annex to the Air Transport Agreement between Canada and the United States, signed on the 4th of June, 1949. That section records "the intention of both contracting parties that there should be regular and frequent consultations between their respective aeronautical authorities . . ."; and Barringer doubted whether its scope would be broad enough to include consideration of altered route patterns between the two countries. On the other hand, the letter sent by the Chairman of the Air Transport Board to the Chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Board (which, by the way, we have not yet seen) seems to contemplate that the consultation should include possible changes in the route patterns. Any such formal consultation for changes in the bilateral agreement, in accordance with Article 11, would take some time to arrange, since it would have to be preceded by discussions between the Civil Aeronautics Board and United States carriers.

3. In any case, Barringer thought that the most practical next step would be to arrange as quickly as possible informal consultations to consider the points currently at issue, i.e., the Tampa case and the review being conducted by the Air Transport Board of the authorizations under which United States air carriers are operating in Canada. In the course of such informal consultations, consideration could also be given to the possibility of holding at a later date formal consultations in accordance with Article ll of the Air Transport Agreement, and of the manner in which such formal consultations should be arranged. Barringer thought that the informal consultations which he had suggested might take place as early as the middle of December. They should be attended, he suggested, by the Chairmen of the Air Transport Board and of the Civil Aeronautics Board and by representatives of the State Department and of the Department of External Affairs (to be drawn either from Ottawa or from this mission).

4. Barringer's suggestion seems to us to be a sensible one, and we hope that you will be able to accept it. The sooner the Chairman of the Air Transport Board and the Chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Board can sit down together, the better it will be, in our opinion.

We have now received a reply to the note which we left with Barringer on November 12. Following is the text of the United States note, which is dated November 17. Text begins:

The Secretary of State presents his compliments to His Excellency the Ambassador of Canada and has the honor to acknowledge the receipt of his Note No. 827 of November 12, 1953† in which reference is made to the question of Trans-Canada Airlines' proposed route to Mexico City via Tampa, Florida and in which it is requested that consideration be given to the possibility of having informal consultations between the United States and Canadian authorities on various outstanding questions of air transport.

The United States Government would welcome the opportunity to discuss with the Canadian Government matters of mutual concern in the aviation field. In order that these conversations may be held without delay, the United States suggests that they be held in Washington, DC, on or about December 15, 1953 and inquires as to whether this would be convenient to the Canadian Government.

It is envisaged that these conversations would proceed on an informal basis and would be directed to air transport problems of immediate concern to the United States and Canada. Should it develop during the conversations that a need exists for more comprehensive aviation discussions between the two countries, arrangements could be made for subsequent discussions at such a date as to permit the completion of necessary preparations. Text ends.

2. We would be grateful to know in due course whether consultations of the type suggested by the State Department would be agreeable to you and, if so, whether the suggested date of December 15 would be convenient.

UNITED STATES — CANADIAN AIR DISCUSSIONS

Reference: Baldwin-Chevrier telephone conversation of December 14, 1953.

Please pass copy to Mr. Chevrier Minister of Transport.

The following is the text of the statement which will be given by Mr. Chevrier in the House of Commons at 3:00 p.m. tomorrow, Wednesday, December 16. We presume that the Department of External Affairs will be issuing a press release at the same time. Text begins:

Representatives of the Governments of Canada and the United States met on December 14 and 15, 1953, in Washington, DC, to hold informal discussions on matters of current concern in the field of civil aviation. Mr. J.R. Baldwin, Chairman of the Canadian Air Transport Board and Mr. Oswald Ryan, Chairman of the United States Civil Aeronautics Board, were the principal spokesmen for their respective governments.

The main subjects discussed were:

(1) A proposed operation by Trans-Canada Air Lines of an air service linking Eastern Canada with Mexico City via Tampa, Florida, where a technical, non-traffic stop would be made;

(2) Pan American World Airways service between Seattle, White Horse and Fairbanks, as well as the Colonial Airlines operation Washington-Ottawa-Montreal-New York; and

(3) The desirability of consultation within the next few months, for the purpose of considering amendments to the route annex of the United States-Canada Air Transport Agreement.

It was agreed that the Civil Aeronautics Board would issue to Trans-Canada Air Lines a six-months renewable permit for Montreal-Mexico City flights making non-traffic stops at Tampa. In the special circumstances, the CAB also agreed that TCA might, for reasons of economy, utilize the same aircraft and the same schedules for the Montreal-Tampa portion of such flights as are used for the Montreal-Tampa services operated by that carrier under the Air Transport Agreement.

The Canadian representatives had indicated their desire that TCA be permitted to combine its Montreal-Tampa operations under the Air Transport Agreement and Montreal-Mexico City operations with a technical stop at Tampa, under the International Air Services Transit Agreement for a temporary period until aircraft and facilities for non-stop operations between Canada and Mexico become available.

The representatives of the United States made known their desire to co-operate with Canada in helping TCA resolve its operational problem, stating that in the circumstances such co-operation did not imply a departure from the established policy of the United States in the field of international aviation.

The spirit of co-operation was carried into the discussion regarding the operations of United States carriers which have been under review by the Canadian authorities, and it was agreed that Pan American World Airways and Colonial Airlines should be permitted to continue their respective combined services through Canadian points and that the Air Transport Board would vacate the outstanding show-cause orders.

With reference to the present network of air routes between Canada and the United States it was understood that the Canadian Government will, within the next few months, bring forward proposals looking toward a review of the route schedules of the Bilateral Air Agreement. Text ends.

2. The State Department will be issuing at 3:00 p.m. tomorrow a release in identical terms, except for the order in which the governments and chairmen are listed.

KLM SERVICE TO MEXICO

The Netherlands Ambassador called at noon today at my request and I gave him the note dated December 17 conveying the 30-days' notice stipulated in our original Agreement.† I told him that, as I had mentioned in our conversation the previous day, TCA were anxious to make up for lost time and begin their service to Mexico as soon as possible. We had therefore considered various possibilities of working out an arrangement with the Netherlands Government which would allow TCA to start operations on January 2. However, we had concluded that on the whole the most satisfactory course would be to adhere to the terms of the original Agreement. Consequently, the note simply gave 30-days' notice from December 17 which would permit TCA to operate on January 16.

Mr. Lovink said that this was of course completely acceptable though he thought there would have been no difficulty in working out an arrangement whereby TCA could have started operations on January 2.

I thought it wise, in order to avoid any possible misunderstanding, to draw his attention to the fact that the note was dated December 17 and confirmed the notice which I had given to him orally on that date. I explained that this would enable TCA to start on January 16 which was a Saturday, the day on which their weekly flights were scheduled. Mr. Lovink said that he understood the situation fully and offered no objection of any kind.

BILATERAL AIR AGREEMENT WITH PERU

I attach, for your information, a copy of Supreme Resolution No. 29-A dated January 26, 1953, with English translation,† granting to Canadian Pacific Airlines Limited a provisional license to operate from Vancouver to Lima and beyond, via intermediate points in Mexico, Cuba or Jamaica.

2. The provisional license will be in effect only until such time as the formal Bilateral Air Agreement between Canada and Peru is concluded. In the event of any unexpected prolonged delay in signing the agreement, I understand that under present Peruvian regulations a provisional license is valid initially for six months but may be renewed up to a maximum period of two years.

3. You will note in Clause 14 it is stated that for transportation of mail a special contract is required between CPAL and the Directorate General of Posts and Telecommunications. Presumably the Company will negotiate this contract privately.

4. The Legal Representative of CPAL in Peru, Dr. Gaspar Fernandez Concha, has sent a copy of the Supreme Decree to the Company in Vancouver. I am also sending directly to it an English translation.

5. Mr. Peter P. Baronas, the Traffic and Sales Representative of CPAL for South America is now in Lima. He informed us that the Company intends to inaugurate regular flights to Lima in June, consisting initially of one scheduled flight per week. This may later be increased to two flights per week, depending on the volume of traffic. The trial flights will probably take place in April.

DESPATCH E-44 Ottawa, March 20, 1953

BILATERAL AIR AGREEMENT WITH PERU

Reference: Your despatch No. 28 of February 3, 1953.

The Air Transport Board has indicated the following comments with respect to your despatch under reference:

"On the question of the services from western Canada, we note that Peru has included both Ecuador and Panama as well as Cuba and Mexico in their route, but only Mexico and Cuba in the Canadian route. We have no objection to these points being included in the Peruvian route, but in the circumstances, we feel that Panama should also be inserted in the Canadian route with a view to possible future use by CPA since it would be easier to secure this intermediate point now than to seek an amendment at a later date. In addition, we believe that the same wording should be used in both routes. For instance, some doubt might exist as to the effect of the expression "and beyond in both directions"which appears in the Peruvian route and of the term "Mexico City"which is used in the Canadian route only. Such differences in wording should be eliminated in order to avoid possible difficulties of interpretation later. We would, therefore, suggest that the Peruvian proposal concerning the western route be revised as follows:

"Plan I Route to be operated in both directions by the designated airline of the Government of Canada:

"From Vancouver via points in Mexico, Cuba and Panama to Lima and beyond to Rio de Janeiro-Sao Paulo, Brazil and such other points as may be agreed between the two contracting parties.

"Plan II Route to be operated in both directions by the designated airline of the Government of the Republic of Peru:

"From Lima via points in Ecuador, Panama, Cuba and Mexico to Vancouver and points beyond to be agreed by the two contracting parties.

"With respect to the eastern route, the proposal is that the route be merely defined as between Lima and Montreal or Toronto without intermediate points being designated at the present time. While we prefer the use of this general formula where a route is not to be operated for some time, we recognize that intermediate points would be needed and would have to be agreed between the two governments if either country were to designate an airline now. We note that the Peruvians are particularly anxious to secure at this time intermediate points in the United States and since there is still a valid air agreement between Peru and the United States under which Peru has been granted 5th Freedom rights at New York onward to Montreal, we would have no objection if the Peruvians insisted, to have New York named in their route and Tampa, in the Canadian route with such other points in central and south America as may be subsequently agreed between the two contracting parties. On the other hand, we should like some flexibility in the use by TCA of its Canadian point of departure. We should, therefore, inquire from the Peruvian authorities whether they would be prepared to grant the Canadian designated airline the right of selection at any time of its Canadian point of departure by a specific mention of Montreal, Toronto and Windsor or by an area designation such as "a point or points in eastern Canada", but the right to operate to and from only one point (Lima) in Peru, while the Peruvian designated airline would have similar rights of selection in Peru, but only Montreal as the designated point of operation in Canada. If it appears that no progress can be made along those lines, we should then explore the possibility of inserting the following clause in the designation of the Canadian and Peruvian eastern routes:

'Additional traffic stops may be made in the territory of the contracting party which designates an airline at the election of that party provided that such stops be between the specified terminals and in reasonable proximity to the direct route connecting them.'"

2. We will be glad to learn what progress you have been able to make with the Peruvians in regard to the points mentioned above.

DESPATCH 175 Lima, August 8, 1953

BILATERAL AIR AGREEMENT

Reference: Your Despatch No. E-101 of July 24, 1953.†

Upon receipt of your Despatch No. E-44 of March 20, 1953, discussions were held with the Directorate-General of Civil Aviation on the question of route designation and the inclusion of Panama in the Canadian route. As we did not appear to be making much headway with this question orally, on June 26 I sent a formal letter to the Director-General of Civil Aviation outlining the Canadian position. A translation of this letter is enclosed for your information.†

2. Apart from route designation, there are a number of points in the draft agreement which are still under negotiation. In our Despatch No. 283[23] of December 29, 1952, we stated that the comments and amendments contained in your Despatch

No. E-217[24] of December 2, 1952, had been discussed with Dr. Marchena,[25] the Legal Counsellor of the Directorate-General of Civil Aviation, who felt that all of the proposals of the Air Transport Board would be acceptable to Peru with the possible exception of paragraph (a) Article II(2).[26] At the time, however, we made the reservation that the Peruvian acceptance of the other changes should not be considered as final until we had received written confirmation. On January 10 we wrote to the Director-General of Civil Aviation enclosing, in as full a form as possible, the Canadian proposals, in both English and Spanish. At this time we also brought to the attention of the Director-General what we considered to be errors in the translation from English into Spanish of the original Canadian draft. A copy of this letter in Spanish (with English translation) and enclosures are attached for your information.†

3. I regret to inform you that we have not as yet received a formal written reply to the above communication. I have discussed the matter a number of times with Dr. Marchena and have pressed him for an answer. He has replied that before he is able to give us an official answer the matter would have to be considered by the "Permanent Commission of International Conferences and Agreements on Aviation". The former Director of the Legal Department of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs was a member of this Commission but unfortunately he was transferred to the Peruvian Embassy in Mexico. His successor, according to Dr. Marchena, is not familiar with the progress of the negotiations to date so that it is necessary for the Commission to review all of the proposals and counter-proposals before it is in a position to give us a reply. Dr. Marchena has promised, however, that he hopes to have the matter considered in the near future. I have an appointment on Monday with him and shall again stress the importance of obtaining an early reply.

4. When Canadian Pacific Air Lines made their survey flight to South America in early July, I arranged for Mr. McGregor,[27] the Director of Overseas Airlines of Canadian Pacific Air Lines, to have discussions with the Director-General of Civil Aviation and Dr. Marchena. At that time we pointed out that, as the opening of Canadian Pacific Air Lines' service to Lima would necessitate a considerable outlay of funds, we were anxious that they obtain a Permanent Operating Permit under the terms of a formal bilateral agreement. We also pointed out that the inclusion of Panama in the Canadian route designation was increasingly important since, if Canadian Pacific Air Lines introduced jet aircraft on the run, it would be necessary that they stop at Panama for re-fuelling. In order to help cover the costs of such a stop they should like the right to take up and lay down passengers and freight at that point. This argument seemed to carry considerable weight with the Peruvian Civil Aviation authorities who stated that they would attempt to obtain agreement for the inclusion of Panama in the Canadian route.

This concerned the privileges enjoyed by the designated airlines while operating an agreed service on a specified route.

[27] F.M. McGregor.

5. I am somewhat at a loss to explain the Peruvian delay in replying to our proposals. There are a number of reasons which may account for it:—

a) The change in the complement of the Commission on Civil Aviation already referred to;

b) Pressure of work in the Directorate-General of Civil Aviation — it has just completed an extensive revision of the regulations governing the operation of commercial aircraft in Peru;

c) A reluctance to conclude the bilateral agreement until they are able to see the type of service which Canadian Pacific Air Lines can offer when it commences scheduled operations in September;

d) A lack of urgency to conclude the formal agreement as Peru has no international airline which could operate on the reciprocal routes granted to Canada; and,

e) Possible pressure by some of the already-established foreign international air lines operating in Peru.

6. I shall make every attempt to try and settle the points of differences before Brigadier Booth's[28] arrival here in September. I do not expect to encounter any difficulty in arranging for him to have discussions with the Peruvian authorities.

DESPATCH 216 Lima, September 15, 1953

BILATERAL AIR AGREEMENT

Reference: Our despatch No. 175 of August 8, 1953.

I received from the Peruvian Directorate of Civil Aviation yesterday a copy of their latest draft for the conclusion of the bilateral air agreement. This draft is now in the process of being translated. It appears to include all of the proposals submitted in our letter of January 10 and also the schedule of route designations proposed in our letter of June 26. Copies of these two letters were forwarded to you under cover of our above-mentioned despatch.

2. The Peruvian draft incorporates at least two new major Peruvian amendments, affecting the preamble and Article XIV. On the attached sheet these amendments are shown in Spanish, with English translation. I am not sure of our translation of the preamble as a number of legal expressions are used for which we do not know the equivalent legal expressions in English. Consequently you may wish to revise the English text. The two amendments were proposed by the Legal Advisor of the

C.S. Booth, Representative, Council of ICAO.

Ministry of Foreign Affairs who stated that with regard to the preamble, his proposal followed the normal Peruvian and international (?) usage and that the revision of Article XIV was necessary in order to conform with Peruvian constitutional procedures. I should be grateful to receive as soon as possible your comments as to whether the text in Spanish is acceptable and also any suggestions which you may have for modifying our translations into English so as to use the appropriate legal terms.

3. A further point has arisen with respect to route designation. Some time ago I was informed by Mr. Campbell, the local representative of CPAL, that it intended to refuel its aircraft at Talara in northern Peru on the southward flight from Mexico City. In view of this, it would also like the right of transporting passengers and freight from Mexico to Talara and on the northern flight from Talara north. This is important from the traffic point of view as there are almost two hundred Canadians in Talara. I mentioned the matter informally to Dr. Marchena, the Legal Counsellor of the Directorate of Civil Aviation, yesterday. He said that he did not think Peru would have any objections to the inclusion of Talara in the Canadian route designation, as such an inclusion would not, under the terms of subsection 3 of Article II, give the Canadian airline the privilege of carrying passengers, goods and mails from one point in Peru to another.

4. If you think that Talara should be included in the Canadian route designation, the simplest way to do this, I believe, and the one which would be most acceptable to the Peruvians, would be to change Plan I as follows: "From Vancouver via points in Mexico, Cuba and Panama to Lima and/or Talara and beyond to Rio de Janeiro — Sao Paulo, Brazil and such other points as may be agreed between the two contracting parties".

5. Undoubtedly you will wish to check with CPAL before giving a decision on this matter. I asked Mr. Campbell to provide me with definite information as to the importance which CPAL attached to the inclusion of Talara. In reply to a telephone call, he received the following cable this morning: "Would like have Lima and Talara but would not be in position to serve Talara traffic-wise for some time. If any objection to this accept Lima only. (signed) Clark". The use of the phrase "and/or" would appear to give CPAL considerable leeway with regard to providing a regular service to Talara.

6. In the event you think that Talara should be included in the proposed route for CPAL, the question then arises as to whether it should not also be included in the proposed Canadian route from eastern Canada to Peru. I suggest that such a modification, if required, be shown in the following terms in Plan III: "The designated Canadian airline shall have the right of selection, at any time, in its Canadian point of departure, of a point or points in eastern Canada, including Montreal, Toronto and Windsor, but shall have the right to operate to and from only Lima and/or Talara in Peru".

7. Brigadier Booth expects to arrive here on the evening of the 19th and will depart on the 23rd. I should be grateful, therefore, to receive your comments concerning the above as soon as possible, by telegram.

DESPATCH 224 Lima, September 28, 1953

BILATERAL AIR AGREEMENT

Reference: Our Despatch No. 216 of September 15, 1953.

Brigadier Booth arrived in Lima in the evening of September 19 and departed in the morning of September 23. Arrangements were made for him to call on the Foreign Minister and the Acting Minister of Aviation. He also, in company with the Second Secretary, discussed the terms of the proposed air agreement with the Director-General of Civil Aviation, his Legal Adviser and the Legal Adviser of the Department of Foreign Affairs.

2. We enclose a copy in English of a text for the proposed agreement which has been accepted by the Peruvian authorities.† It incorporates a number of changes introduced by General Booth as well as some modifications suggested by the Directorate-General of Civil Aviation.

3. The preamble has been changed slightly from the text submitted with our despatch under reference and Article XIV, concerning ratification, has also been altered. General Booth suggested a new form for Article II(2)(c) which has been agreed to by Peru and which we hope you will find acceptable.

4. The route schedule, which is attached to the main text, has also been modified. Sections I and II are in effect the same as those suggested by the Air Transport Board and are acceptable to Peru. New Sections III and IV have been drafted however and before they are presented officially to the Peruvian authorities we should be grateful to receive your comments.

5. In Sections I and III outlining the Canadian route you will note that we have placed in brackets the phrase "and/or Talara". If it is decided that the inclusion of Talara is desirable we do not expect to encounter any serious difficulty for the inclusion.

6. We should be grateful to receive as soon as possible your observations concerning both the text and the schedule of routes. Before the agreement can be ratified it must be approved by the Peruvian Congress and should be presented to it before the end of October.

7. You will also have to complete the preamble so as to include, in proper form, the name and rank of the person appointed by Canada to conclude the agreement.

8. If possible, in view of the time element, we should appreciate receiving your comments by telegram.

Representative to Bilateral Air Agreement Negotiations to Chairman, Air Transport Board

CONFIDENTIAL [Ottawa], October 2, 1953

Dear Mr. Baldwin:

RE: AIR SERVICES AGREEMENT BETWEEN CANADA AND PERU

I understand that Mr. J.A. Dougan, chargé d'affaires at the Canadian Embassy in Lima will have forwarded to External copies of the text of the Agreement which was settled during my visit to Lima, together with a brief report thereon. As I have an additional copy of the text I enclose it herewith.†

I believe the few minor modifications in the text are self-explanatory and that if there are any questions in regard to them these could best be answered by direct discussion.

As you are aware certain questions raised by Mr. Dougan had been answered only in general terms and it remained to find appropriate language for incorporation in the Agreement. In addition, the inquiry regarding the inclusion of Talara had not been answered, and for this reason the text of the schedule is subject to some slight revision.

Negotiations in Lima were on a very different basis from that in Rio. First, apart from the fact that the Peruvians had not at this time any particular axe of their own to grind, Mr. Dougan was on excellent terms with practically all of the officials concerned. No round table conference was arranged and we had to call first on the aviation officials including the Director General of Civil Aviation and his Legal Advisers and then on the Legal Adviser and Representative of the Department of Foreign Affairs. However, while each, and particularly the latter had certain points which they wished to make, there was very little difficulty in reaching agreement.

Following these discussions we were given very clearly to understand that as soon as the question of the inclusion or otherwise of Talara had been decided by us, the Peruvians were prepared to sign an Agreement in the form which had been agreed.

Following the discussions with the departmental officials, Mr. Dougan and I, accompanied by General Washburn,[29] Director General of Civil Aviation, called on the Acting Minister of Aviation, and later Mr. Dougan and I called on the Minister of Foreign Affairs. Both these gentlemen, and particularly the latter, were very cordial in their reception and their expressions of goodwill towards Canada.

While of course he did not participate directly in any discussions, Mr. C.J. Tippett, Regional Director of ICAO for South America whose office is in Lima, was extremely helpful in view of his personal contacts with members of the Government and senior officials in Lima. Incidentally, on 24th September, at the annual Peruvian "Air Day" celebrations Mr. Tippett was decorated with one of the highest Peruvian orders in recognition of his services to International Aviation and particularly for his assistance to Peru in connection with the adoption and implementation of ICAO standards, procedures, etc.

While Mr. Dougan had got this matter into very good shape, I believe my visit served a very useful purpose for several reasons. First, the Peruvians were gratified that a senior Canadian official had called on them to discuss this matter; second, not being a lawyer Mr. Dougan had considerable difficulty discussing some of the matters raised in general terms in messages from Ottawa with the Peruvians and thirdly, the fact that I was there only for a limited time had the effect of overcoming the usual Latin tendency to procrastinate so long as there is not an immediate necessity for reaching a decision.

I also enclose list of the officials with whom I discussed the Agreement and other persons whom I met in Lima.†

Yours very truly,
C.S. BOOTH

AIR AGREEMENT

Reference: Your despatch No. 224, September 28, 1953.

Text of Agreement acceptable. However, we should be grateful for following improvements if it could be done without delaying signing of Agreement:

1. Preamble

The Government of Canada and the Government of Peru (hereinafter called the Contracting Parties), having ratified the Convention on International Civil Aviation opened for signature at Chicago on December 7, 1944 and desiring to conclude an Agreement for the purpose of establishing air services between and beyond Peruvian and Canadian territories, have appointed for this purpose as their plenipotentiaries:

The Government of Peru, Doctor Ricardo Rivera Schreiber, Minister of State in charge of Foreign Affairs; and The Government of Canada, J. Emile Vaillancourt, Ambassador of Canada in Peru;

Who, having communicated to each other their full powers, have agreed on the following Articles:

2. We agree to addition of Talara provided it is clearly understood that there be no obligation to serve that point immediately or on any or all flights. Therefore, we suggest that a sub-paragraph (d) be added to paragraph 2 of Article II as follows:

"At the option of the designated airline or airlines, intermediate points on any of the specified routes may be omitted on any or all flights."

3. In Article XIII the words "registered by the Governments of Canada and of Peru" should be replaced by the words "registered by either the Government of Canada or the Government of Peru." The obligation to register with ICAO is discharged as soon as one of the contracting parties has registered the agreement.

4. Following wording is suggested for Art. XIV (1 and 2):

"The present Agreement shall be ratified in conformity with the Constitutional requirements of each Contracting Party, and shall come into force on the date following the exchange of the instruments of ratification, which shall take place in Lima as soon as possible.

Pending the definitive coming into force of this Agreement, its provisions shall be applied provisionally by the two Governments as from the date on which this Agreement is signed. The Government of either country, however, may, prior to the exchange of ratifications, terminate the provisional application of the Agreement by giving three months' notice to the other Government."

Full powers being prepared and will follow by next bag.

2. When your amendments were discussed with the Director General of Civil Aviation, we were given the assurance that the inclusion of Talara in the route designation would not imply any obligation to serve that point immediately or on any or all future flights.

CIVIL AVIATION DISCUSSIONS WITH THE UNITED KINGDOM

United Kingdom authorities have proposed and the Air Transport Board have agreed that D.I.B. Muir of the Ministry of Civil Aviation will come to Ottawa on February 26 for informal discussions on outstanding civil aviation questions. Baldwin has asked that Irwin[31] attend for External Affairs and, if you agree, I will try to arrange this.[32]

We rather welcome the United Kingdom proposal because, as you know, we have not been very happy about the way our civil aviation relations with the United Kingdom have developed during the past two or three years. In our view, United Kingdom goodwill must continue to be of considerable value to us in pursuing our international aviation objectives, but this view has not received much recognition in the attitudes taken by TCA and the Air Transport Board on certain questions which have arisen with the United Kingdom. The proposal for informal discussions suggests that the United Kingdom authorities are interested in putting relations on a better footing. On our side, Irwin talked to Baldwin this week and found him in a very reasonable frame of mind. He will probably try to meet the United Kingdom half way if TCA do not put up too much opposition.

CIVIL AVIATION DISCUSSIONS WITH THE UNITED KINGDOM

At the suggestion of the United Kingdom authorities arrangements have been made for D.I.B. Muir of the Ministry of Civil Aviation to visit Ottawa for informal discussions with the Air Transport Board on Canada-United Kingdom civil aviation relations, the discussions to begin on February 26.

2. Earnscliffe has said that the principal matters which Muir will wish to discuss are (a) the carriage by TCA of "Cabotage" traffic between the British West Indies and London via Montreal and (b) carriage of immigrants by air from the United Kingdom to Canada. They have also said that he would no doubt like to exchange views on the route schedules of the Canada-United Kingdom Air Services Agreement — in other words, he will broach the subject of amending and extending the Agreement to provide some further rights for BOAC.

3. The two principal matters mentioned above have been bones of contention between the United Kingdom and ourselves for more than two years and have adversely affected our normally good relations on civil aviation. Detailed accounts of both questions have been given in previous memoranda. External Affairs' views on them can be summarized as follows:

(a) British West Indies Cabotage

Legal Division examined this question in March 1951 and decided that the United Kingdom has solid legal grounds for claiming traffic between the United Kingdom and the British West Indies to be cabotage traffic. Further, it is clear that the Canada-United Kingdom Air Services Agreement of 1949 gives a Canadian carrier no rights to this traffic. On the other hand the Air Transport Board have felt, and we have agreed, that the extension of the principle of cabotage to points so far apart as London and the British West Indies is unfair and that we could make a good claim on grounds of equity for the right to carry this traffic through Montreal.

United Kingdom authorities in the British West Indies have used exchange controls to prevent the British West Indies-United Kingdom traffic from moving to London via Montreal. We have objected to this practice on the grounds that it was an improper use of exchange controls. However, the United Kingdom authorities

O.K. R.M. M[acdonnell] would no doubt have other means of enforcing their ruling. It is possible that if TCA persisted in carrying this traffic without United Kingdom approval the Company would become liable to prosecution in United Kingdom or British West Indies courts.

In September 1951 and January 1952 there were discussions with the United Kingdom on this subject but on our side these were confined to obtaining removal of the exchange control restrictions. It is hard to see now what the United Kingdom have in mind in proposing to revive this question. It may be that they are hoping to clear the air with a little friendly discussion, while leaving matters as they are. If, on the other hand, they come forward with proposals which would give TCA rights to the disputed traffic, these should be given fair consideration, though there is no reason why we should not weigh very carefully the value of this traffic to TCA against the value to BOAC of any concessions demanded in return.

(b) Carriage of Immigrants by BOAC

TCA's arrangement with the Immigration Branch — which ended in April 1952 — permitted TCA to offer air passages at very reduced rates to persons immigrating to Canada from the United Kingdom. In each case, the difference between the normal and reduced fare was made up to TCA by the Immigration Branch. A large number of passengers (4,000 or more) was carried under this scheme during a period of less than 18 months. The United Kingdom authorities regarded this arrangement as "fare cutting" and as a means of circumventing IATA[34] agreements on fares. They claimed that, even had they wished to, they were prevented from establishing a similar scheme for BOAC by statutory provisions governing the payment of subsidies to BOAC. They also held the TCA arrangement to be contrary to the terms of Article 5 of the Canada-United Kingdom Air Services Agreement which calls for "fair and equal opportunity" for the designated carriers of both parties. UK proposals that BOAC be allowed to establish for immigrants a fare about the same as that which TCA was collecting from its immigrant passengers were repeatedly rejected by us on the grounds that the proposed fares were lower than established IATA fares.

The above brief summary does not mention various legalistic and other aspects of the question which have been fairly fully covered in previous memoranda. The main fact emerging is that for a period of almost eighteen months TCA were able to offer passages to an important segment of United Kingdom-Canada air traffic at a considerably reduced rate and that BOAC were not permitted to compete on equal terms. As with the cabotage question the history of this affair has been unfortunate for our civil aviation relations with the United Kingdom, but in this case the main responsibility is ours. It would have been more in keeping with the spirit of our bilateral agreement and of our previous relations (intergovernmental relations that is, — not TCA-BOAC relations) if in the first place there had been consultation with the United Kingdom before the Immigration-TCA scheme was implemented and, secondly, if later on we had shown more willingness to find some means by which BOAC could compete on equal terms for the immigrant traffic.

[34] International Air Transport Association.

We have said that we could not agree to any proposition involving the carriage of immigrants by BOAC on a fill-up basis at lower than established fares unless IATA's approval is obtained. In the absence of any new arguments on proposals from the UK we could hardly abandon that position. We can only wait to see what Muir has to say, keeping in mind that there is perhaps some onus on us to see the UK satisfied on this subject.

4. It might be premature to develop views concerning modification of the Canada-United Kingdom Air Services Agreement until we know what the United Kingdom authorities will propose. However, the Chairman of the Air Transport Board thinks that they may raise the question of traffic rights for BOAC at Toronto from London, and of Third and Fourth Freedom[35] rights at Edmonton and possibly Vancouver on a route from London to the Orient via Canada. On this basis some preliminary observations can be made.

(a) In the present circumstances it can be agreed that as a general rule, and where the economic interests of the country do not otherwise dictate, traffic rights at points in Canada should be used to obtain similar rights required by Canadian carriers in other countries; that is, they should not be granted except in return for concessions of reasonably equivalent value. For instance, as far as transatlantic carriage is concerned, the Toronto area is now reasonably well served through quick connections with Montreal. There would be no very strong reasons why we should grant to BOAC traffic rights between London and Toronto unless we were thereby able to obtain required and equally valuable traffic rights in return.

(b) However, if there is a clear economic advantage to the country or a part of the country in a certain international route being operated and if a Canadian carrier is not prepared to provide services it might become desirable to permit a foreign carrier to operate the route, always provided that protection is assured for the right of a Canadian carrier to enter the route when it is prepared to do so. For instance, it is clear that a service could be flown from Western Canada — say Edmonton — over the Arctic to London with fewer stops and a considerable saving of distance compared to present services through Montreal. Based only on Western Canadian-United Kingdom traffic such a service might not be profitable immediately but it would have economic advantages for Western Canada which are likely to be important to the future development of that area. In such circumstances the immediate interest or lack of interest of Canadian carriers in the route need not be a decisive consideration. In the first place, if BOAC were prepared to fly via the Arctic to Edmonton on the basis of Third or Fourth Freedom traffic rights, and particularly if it can be shown that such a service would not draw off significant amounts of traffic from present Canadian services, good reasons would exist for permitting BOAC to develop this route. Secondly, if such services were delayed and Western Canada deprived of the advantage of faster and cheaper connections with the United Kingdom simply to ensure that Western Canadian traffic remains the monopoly of a Canadian carrier and continues to be funnelled through Eastern Canada, strong objections could and probably would be raised in the West.

For a definition of the Five Freedoms of the Air, see Document 563, note 9.

5. It would appear to us that the United Kingdom must remain one of the most important countries on the map — second only perhaps to the United States — as far as our international civil aviation relations are concerned. The United Kingdom not only controls strategically located traffic and transit points in various parts of the world (Hong Kong, Singapore, Fiji, etc.) but her homeland is for Eastern Canada the gateway to Western Europe, the Middle East and points as far away as Bombay. Canadian services to these latter points could be operated most logically as extensions of the Montreal-London service as some services to Western Europe are now. With her position as a trading nation and depending so heavily on the expansion of a diversified export trade into wide-spread markets, Canada cannot delay too long in creating the extensive network of international air services which are becoming an important adjunct to the normal machinery for promotion of international trade. When Canadian international air carriers are ready to take further big steps forward in the international field, we are likely to find ourselves going once more to the United Kingdom for concessions. It is this probability which obliges External Affairs to take a particular interest in the forthcoming discussions. While we see no need whatsoever to give away useful concessions for no return, it will be very much in our long-term interest to restore and maintain with the United Kingdom authorities the best of relations and the rather special sort of amicability which the Commonwealth connection makes possible.

Note de la Direction économique

CANADA-UK CIVIL AVIATION DISCUSSIONS

The discussions began on Thursday, February 26, continued through Friday and ended with a session on Monday afternoon. The UK spokesman was D.I.R. Muir of the Ministry of Civil Aviation, supported by Brancker of BOAC and Kenneth East of the United Kingdom High Commissioner's Office. Smith Macdonald[36] handled the discussions for the Air Transport Board. Irwin and Hyndman were present for External Affairs and Gordon Wood (Vice-President of TCA) attended most of the sessions.

2. Thursday morning and afternoon were given over to hearing the UK proposals. These are listed under six items below. Briefly, they aimed first at clearing away two or three outstanding questions between the two countries and secondly at initiating a new round of negotiations over traffic rights and routes.

[36] A.S. Macdonald, directeur exécutif et conseiller juridique, Commission des transports aériens. A.S. Macdonald, Executive Director and Legal Adviser, Air Transport Board.

1. British West Indies Cabotage Traffic

The UK has reached agreement with the US, the Scandinavian countries, the Netherlands and the French on the subject of cabotage traffic. The UK position that traffic between the UK and colonial territories is cabotage has been generally accepted. Muir said that UK authorities would like to have Canadian concurrence on the principle that this traffic is reserved to UK carriers. For their part, the UK authorities would be willing to see TCA carry traffic from the British West Indies to London via Montreal so long as full fares for the BWI-Montreal and Montreal-London sectors of the service were charged. They would also be glad to make arrangements whereby TCA could carry at "direct trip" fares, any BWI-London traffic which BOAC could not handle. As an alternative to all this, Muir offered the possibility of an exchange of cabotage rights, that is an exchange of rights to London-BWI traffic for traffic rights to Canadian points.

2. Carriage of Immigrants from the UK

Muir did not revive the question of carriage of immigrants on a fill up basis by BOAC and gave the impression that his authorities had decided to drop this question. He asked whether we would be willing to permit occasional charter flights for immigrants, and also whether we would agree to certain charter operators now carrying military personnel to Canada, filling up empty seats with immigrants.

3. Designation of Airwork Ltd. for Transatlantic Cargo Services

Muir said that his Government had decided as a matter of policy to permit participation by private companies in international civil air services. As a step in this direction, his authorities wished to exercise their rights under the Canada-UK Bilateral Air Agreement to designate a second airline for services between London and Montreal. The company would be Airwork Ltd. and would provide air cargo services only.

4. Onward flights privileges at London and Montreal

The UK proposal on this subject was embodied in a draft Exchange of Notes. Briefly, the UK agreed that in addition to the rights granted under the Air Agreement of 1949, TCA could combine its Paris and London services or its London and Dusseldorf so that London bound passengers could be disembarked in London and the aircraft could then proceed on to Paris or Dusseldorf with the remainder of its load. Similarly BOAC could combine its Montreal and New York services.

5. Amendment on Route 2 of Section II (UK routes) of the 1949 Air Agreement

The amendments to routes under the Air Agreement were obviously the most important points which the UK authorities desired to discuss. The UK proposed the following amendments to route 2 of Section II. The route 2 presently reads as follows:

Points of Departure. (Any one or more of the following).	Intermediate Points. (Any one or more of the following, if desired).	Destination in Canadian Territory. (Any one or more of the following if desired).	Points beyond. Any one or more of the folowing, if desired).
2. London Prestwick	Shannon Iceland Azores	Gander Montreal

Amendment proposed: ADD: or Toronto

This would permit BOAC to have some flights going to Montreal and others to Toronto. They would not be authorized to serve both points on the same flights.

6. Amendment to Route 5 of Section II (UK routes)

Route 5 presently reads:

5. London Prestwick	Keflavik Goose	Either Churchill or The Pas, to be agreed between the Government of the United Kingdom and Canada	Alaska Aleutians Points in Japan Shanghai Hong Kong
Amendment proposed: ADD: DELETE:	 Shannon Goose	Delete: Present Wording ADD: Gander Montreal or Toronto Vancouver or Edmonton	ADD: Okinawa

In this proposal Montreal and Toronto were meant to be alternate points and similarly Edmonton and Vancouver. In other words BOAC planes on the way to Tokyo might land at Gander then at Montreal and then at Edmonton. They could not land at Montreal and Toronto both on the same trip nor at Vancouver and Edmonton both.

3. The proposals listed as five and six in the preceding paragraph represented the main objectives of the UK in these discussions. They indicate a new approach to the question of exchange of traffic rights. With some Comet aircraft satisfactorily in service and more coming, BOAC is confident that it has the advantage in competition. Consequently, the company is anxious to obtain more traffic rights to open up more routes for competition, and in return is willing to accept more competition on routes serving points in the UK. In brief, the UK now feels that its advantage lies in a more liberal attitude to the whole question of route exchanges.

4. As a starting point for negotiations Muir chose to put forward the view that the route exchanges incorporated in the 1949 Bilateral Air Agreement had in the course of time become heavily weighed in favour of Canada. He pointed out that TCA now has access to a long list of traffic generating points in the UK territory (London, Prestwick and points in the Caribbean) while except for Gander which is of no traffic significance BOAC has access to only one point in Canada that is Montreal. It became clear, however, that this position was a starting point only. It was the hope of the UK that Canada would come up with certain demands for traffic rights in the UK. Muir had let us know informally that his authorities would be willing to consider the granting of traffic rights to TCA between London and any points in Western Europe except Paris. It must be remembered in considering the UK proposal for amendment to route 5 that the granting of full traffic rights at the points they requested would permit BOAC to carry a share of the Trans-Canada traffic (in competition with TCA) that is passengers proceeding to Western Canada destinations from the United Kingdom or vice versa and to carry Eastern and Western Canadian traffic to the Orient and vice versa (in direct competition with CPAL).

5. Before the end of the Friday morning session, the UK case had been presented and it became time for some statements to be made in reply but Smith Macdonald at this point lacked authority to say anything specific on the various points raised. There followed some hours of inconclusive discussions on Friday afternoon. During the week end Macdonald had a chance to see the Chairman of the Air Transport Board, Baldwin, who had been occupied with other business all the previous week. On Monday afternoon he gave the Canadian reply which summarized briefly, ran as follows:

(1) Though we would not be willing to formally accept the UK principles on Caribbean traffic, we would be glad to take up their offer to let TCA carry this traffic charging the sum of sector fares. Letters would be exchanged to that effect.

(2) The Canadian authorities would deal with applications for the charter carriage of immigrants in the light of whatever circumstances prevailed at the time of the application. In other words, there would be no objection in principle to this type of carriage. We would probably agree to the UK request for fill up privileges for charter carriers of military traffic.

(3) The Air Transport Board would be glad to facilitate the licensing of Airwork Ltd. for cargo services but Macdonald warned Muir that if both Airwork and BOAC were providing cargo services, difficulties might develop out of the capacity provisions of the Bilateral Air Agreement.

(4) Macdonald agreed that letters should be exchanged stipulating the points to which BOAC and TCA might extend their Canada-UK services without exercise of traffic rights. In the case of TCA these points would be Paris and Dusseldorf, while for BOAC they would be New York and Boston.

(5) Concerning the UK request for new rights on their routes 2 and 5, Macdonald warned that there was little chance that these could be met for the present. Part of the difficulty lay in the fact that neither Toronto, Edmonton or Vancouver are equipped to handle additional international services. The main difficulty was that at present, we have no really important demands to make on the UK while the routes they had proposed would offer a strong threat to TCA and CPAL revenues. We are therefore simply not in a position to make a deal with the UK at the present time.

6. Underlying the Air Transport Board's reluctance to engage in further route trading is TCA's lack of confidence in its own competitive ability arising out of its employment of obsolete aircraft and its shortage of even this kind of equipment. TCA's plans for replacing its North Star aircraft were slow in maturing. As they now stand there will be Vickers Viscounts for the domestic routes in 1954 and 1955, but the only equipment lined up for the international routes are Super-Constellations which will be in service only a year or two before they will meet the competition of BOAC Comet 3's or Comet 4's. TCA is therefore most anxious to protect its domestic monopoly, and consequently to prevent BOAC from carrying international traffic into or out of points inland from Montreal. The company is also markedly unwilling to take on new routes where it will have to compete with superior aircraft. Therefore, the prospect of traffic rights from London onward has little appeal.

7. The Canadian position will no doubt have been somewhat disappointing to the UK visitors but they must have had some knowledge of Canadian considerations and can hardly have been surprised. They obviously regarded these discussions merely as the opening round of a series. They made it quite clear that they would exercise their rights under the Bilateral Air Agreement to demand further discussions, and in his final words on this subject Muir hinted that they might eventually resort to cancellation of the Air Agreement if they did not obtain justice.

8. For our part it is satisfying to see three old problems — Carriage of Immigrants, BWI Cabotage, and Transit Rights — brought to settlement. The solutions given to those problems are as satisfactory as we could have hoped, and they will clear the air for future discussions. As regards the UK proposals for route amendments, the discussions which we regarded as preliminary in fact accomplished their purpose of enabling both parties to obtain a thorough understanding of each others views and problems.

MEETING OF COMMONWEALTH PRIME MINISTERS

The first meeting took place as scheduled yesterday. Pickersgill and I accompanied the Prime Minister. Copy of the official minutes (subject, however, to correction by Prime Ministers if necessary) has gone forward to you by bag today. Following is a summary of the main points made during the discussion. . . .

7. Mr. St. Laurent said that "when he had originally heard about the Bermuda meeting[1] he had hoped it would lead to a subsequent meeting with the Soviet Union. The announcement of the Bermuda meeting itself had already had a very good effect in showing the world that there was no serious difference of view between the three allied powers concerned; and it was certainly necessary to hold such a conference with the President of the United States before any approach was made to the Soviet Government, since it would be necessary to persuade the President that a four power meeting was worthwhile. It was also desirable, whatever the disadvantages might be, to include the French in the Bermuda meeting, since it was right that one of the continental powers should be represented. Care should be taken to avoid the impression that the Bermuda meeting was an attempt to concert action against the Soviet Government; but, if the Russians wished to provide themselves with an excuse for causing a breakdown in a subsequent four power meeting or to refuse to take part in one, they would not find it difficult to invent some other pretext."

Mr. St. Laurent agreed with Mr. Selwyn Lloyd that it would not be practicable to achieve a unified Korea immediately after a truce. If as a result of a truce, both North and South Korea could be included in rehabilitation schemes, then this would be the best way of leading to a unified Korea.

Towards the close of the discussion, Mr. St. Laurent said that he felt that the root of the problem was to persuade the Egyptian Government that for reasons that none could escape the matters under dispute were matters of international concern. He hoped that Mr. Nehru and Mr. Mohammed Ali would try to convince General Naguib[3] of the truth of this and would impress upon him that there was no question of the United Kingdom wishing to impair in any way the sovereignty of Egypt.

6. In conclusion, Sir Winston Churchill said that he would be most grateful if Mr. Nehru and Mr. Mohammed Ali would do their best, without offering to act in any way as mediators, to convince General Naguib of the soundness and firmness of the present United Kingdom proposals.

7. The next meeting will take place on Monday morning. It will be concerned with completing outstanding business and approving a final communiqué.

TELEGRAM PRESS NO. 1 London, June 10, 1953

MEETING OF COMMONWEALTH PRIME MINISTERS

Following for your records is text of final communiqué as approved at final session of Prime Ministers' meeting and published in this morning's press. Text begins:

The final plenary session of the meeting of Commonwealth Prime Ministers was held this afternoon. The Prime Ministers have met at a time of general rejoicing. The presence at the Coronation of representatives of all parts of the Commonwealth has illustrated the unity and the variety of the Commonwealth Association of which Her Majesty is the head. The discussions which the Prime Ministers have held have once more demonstrated the concord which exists between all the governments and peoples of the Commonwealth despite their varying interests and circumstances in their approach to the major problems of the world today.

This sense of concord has been strengthened by the discussions of the past week. These have enabled the Prime Ministers to undertake comprehensive and realistic review of the international situation and there has been a personal exchange of views which will help all the Commonwealth Governments to continue their conduct of foreign relations with renewed understanding of the policies and interests of their partners in the Commonwealth.

The Prime Ministers found it specially valuable to have this opportunity for personal discussions so shortly before the proposed meeting at Bermuda between the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom, the President of the United States and the

Mohammed Naguib, Prime Minister and Minister of War of Egypt.

Prime Minister of France. They reviewed the state of relations with the Soviet Union and agreed that no opportunity should be lost of composing, or at least easing, the differences which at present divide the world. But they recognized that the democracies must maintain their strength and exercise unceasing vigilance to preserve their rights and liberties.

The Prime Ministers reviewed recent developments in Western Europe. The Commonwealth countries associated with or interested in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization expressed the hope that the European Defence Community would be established at the earliest possible date.

The Prime Ministers followed with close interest the concluding phases of the armistice negotiations in Korea. They noted with gratification that long and patient labours have now led to the conclusion of an agreement on prisoners of war and thus made way for the early signature of the armistice agreement. They exchanged views on the steps which have to be considered after the end of hostilities in Korea for the promotion of stability and progress throughout the Far East and South East Asia.

The current problems of the Middle East were also discussed. The Prime Ministers recognized the international importance of the Suez Canal and of the effective maintenance of the military installations in the Canal Zone. They agreed that it is in the common interest that the outstanding issues in the Middle East should be settled on the basis of ensuring the peace and security of the Middle East countries consistently with the sovereignty of each and promoting their social and economic development.

The Prime Ministers reviewed developments in the economic field following the Commonwealth Economic Conference of December 1952. They agreed that the Commonwealth countries should adhere firmly to the long term objectives and lines of policy then laid down. In the meantime it was essential to take advantage of the improved outlook for the sterling area by continuing to strengthen the economy of each of the countries concerned. Particular attention was given to the need for stimulating economic development, for expanding exports and consistently, with the maintenance of adequate reserves, for removing progressively restrictions on trade over as wide an area as possible and especially within the Commonwealth and the sterling area.

Throughout this Coronation period the Prime Ministers have taken advantage of many opportunities for informal talks on matters of particular interest to two or more countries and on general subjects which have not been discussed in the plenary sessions. Although those sessions are now over some of the Prime Ministers will be remaining in London for a further period during which these exchanges will be continued. Text ends.

VISITE DU PREMIER MINISTRE
PRIME MINISTER'S TOUR

596. DEA/11563-5-40

Le haut-commissaire en Inde au premier ministre

High Commissioner in India to Prime Minister

New Delhi, August 24, 1953

Dear Mr. St. Laurent,

Dr. Rhadakrishnan[4] gave a lunch on Saturday, August 22, at the President's house for the Heads of Mission of the countries he visited this summer. The Prime Minister was present.

Immediately after lunch, the Prime Minister came up to me and said, "I want you to write immediately to Mr. St. Laurent to remind him that at the meetings in London he said that if he got through the elections all right, he hoped to visit India this year."

Mr. Nehru said that, of course, November, December, January and February were the best months to visit India. I said that I understood the House would be meeting in Ottawa the middle of November and it might be that, if you could visit India this winter, you would find that January was the best month. Mr. Nehru said that January would be excellent as far as he was concerned since the House would not be in session here.

I do hope that you will be able to accept Mr. Nehru's renewed invitation. He is, as you know, most anxious that you should pay a visit to India as soon as possible. Mr. Nehru wants you to stay in India as long as you possibly can.

Mr. Nehru said that he was very happy to hear of your victory in the election. He had wanted to telegraph or write you but he did not know whether it was entirely appropriate for a Prime Minister of one part of the Commonwealth to congratulate the Prime Minister of another part on an electoral victory.

This led us into a discussion of general election campaigns in Canada and India and as a result Mr. Nehru sent me the enclosed map showing the tours which he made in the last general election campaign here.† He asked me to send it to you. You will see that he covered almost 26,000 miles, that he made 305 speeches in 46 days, and spoke to about 30 million people.

Mr. Nehru looked ten or fifteen years younger on Saturday than he did three or four weeks ago. He was in a very gay mood when we saw him at lunch and later in the afternoon at the opening of a fair. He has, I think, been weighed down by the burden of having to make up his mind on what concessions he should offer Mr.

Mohammed Ali on Kashmir. It was obvious on Saturday that there had been an immense lightening of his spirit as a result of his talks with Mr. Mohammed Ali.

Mr. Mohammed Ali, as you know, is also expecting you to visit his country. He spoke to Ruth about this at one of the official dinners here last week.

I do hope that you will find it possible to accept Mr. Nehru's invitation and that Madame St. Laurent will accompany you to India. Ruth and I would consider it such a great pleasure to have you stay with us and to help to show you something of this fascinating country.

May I add my congratulations on your victory in the elections. You must feel immensely heartened by this remarkable demonstration of public confidence in you and in your administration.

Ruth joins me in sending the very best of good wishes to Madame St. Laurent and yourself.

Yours sincerely,

Ottawa, September 10, 1953

My dear Escott [Reid]:

I thank you for your kind letter of August 24th.

My thinking about a trip to the East had been along the following lines. Parliament would meet in November and we would hope to get through with the Address before Christmas. It would reconvene early after the turn of the year and we would get our legislature introduced and advanced to the Committee stages probably by the first or second week in February and then I could get away for some time without my absence seriously interfering with the progress of the session.

I had thought of going by way of Paris and Rome, where I would have to make short stops, then visiting New Delhi, Karachi, Colombo, Tokyo and returning by way of Australia and New Zealand. Mike [L.B. Pearson] thinks it might be preferable to set out westward and have made my eastern trip before going to European capitals.

My wife would not accompany me but I think one of my daughters would and perhaps also my son, Jean-Paul. I am to see the High Commissioners as soon as possible and, when my plans become more definite, I will communicate with you again.

I am sorry to hear that you had been somewhat indisposed and I hope you will by this time have fully recovered.

Kindest regards to Mrs. Reid and your daughter, as well as to yourself.

Sincerely,

LOUIS S. ST-LAURENT

I am very happy to learn that we may expect you in India early next year. I need not tell you how welcome you will be here. I hope that Madame St.Laurent will also come with you. We shall be glad to have as our guests your son and daughter also.

Your coming here will not only give us the pleasure of meeting a friend for whom we have respect and affection, but it will also give us an opportunity to express our goodwill to Canada with whom it has been our good fortune to co-operate in so many matters. It has made me happy to see this increasing co-operation in wider affairs between Canada and India.

As soon as possible and after knowing your dates in India and the period of your stay, we shall draw up your programme in consultation with your High Commissioner here.

All good wishes.

My dear High Commissioner:

I thank you for delivering to me this afternoon the message from your Prime Minister, concerning my forthcoming visit to India early next year. I should appreciate it if you would send to Mr. Nehru the following communication:

"I wish to thank you for your most recent message conveyed to me by your High Commissioner, concerning my proposed visit to India next year. I do appreciate your expression of goodwill and I need hardly add that I am looking forwarding to my trip with great pleasure.

It is good of you to have as your guests, as well, my son and daughter. I am afraid, however, that my wife will be unable to accompany us because her health is such that her doctors will not allow her to fly. She is sorry that she will be unable to be your guest and see something of India.

With kind regards. Louis S. St-Laurent".

Yours sincerely,

PRIME MINISTER'S TRIP AROUND THE WORLD

I had a word with the Prime Minister concerning his plans for the trip at the beginning of next year, and, while he said that what follows was just his preliminary thinking, I think you can assume that if everything can be worked in satisfactorily in the time indicated, his ports of call will be:

Bonn
Paris
Rome
Cairo (just a stop en route)
New Delhi
Karachi
Colombo
Malaya
Australia
New Zealand
Tokyo

Mr. St-Laurent indicated that while in India he should probably go to Bombay or Calcutta but this of course would be left up to what Mr. Nehru suggests. The Pakistanis, I understand, would like him to have a look at the work Canada is contributing through the Colombo Plan. When in Germany, the Prime Minister assumes the Minister of National Defence would like him to see our troops and airmen. While[5] Malaya is on the list, Mr. St-Laurent said that this would depend upon conditions in the country at that time. The Prime Minister also mentioned Korea but that, too, would depend on the situation that prevails at the time.

The Prime Minister proposes to be away for a total of five weeks. He does not yet know the precise date of departure so plans should be worked out on a D-Day basis at the moment. I assume he will leave late in January or early in February. He indicated to the press the other day that he would not like to get away until all the

Note du sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures pour le premier ministre

I have now had an opportunity to bring Mr. Pearson up to date on the progress made in organizing your world tour. Mr. Pearson is in full agreement with your suggestion to visit Europe first and then go straight from Rome to New Delhi. The only remark he has asked me to pass on to you in this connection is that he thinks that it would be misunderstood if you did not visit London — even if only for an overnight visit. If you agree with this your first stop could be in London before reaching the Continent.

2. You may be aware that the RCAF are also against a westward trip as the aircraft would be fighting the prevailing westerly winds thus adding 25% to the flying time. In addition the Prime Minister of New Zealand has asked us to bear in mind the Royal Tour to New Zealand as a factor in the timing of your visit there.

3. At present the European tour would include visits to Paris, Bonn, and the Brigade, and Rome. No invitations have yet been sought for that part of the trip. I have been approached, however, by the representatives of Israel and Spain who have enquired whether an invitation would be welcome. I took this up with Mr. Pearson who is of the opinion that no further invitations should be accepted and that you might wish to limit your trip to Europe to the original countries you had in mind with the inclusion of the United Kingdom. It would, in any event, be very difficult to add to the present schedule unless you are prepared to spend more time on this tour than the five weeks which are now available.

4. As far as the Far Eastern section of the tour is concerned, invitations have already been received from India, Pakistan, Australia and New Zealand. Mr. Mayhew reports, after informal enquiries, that the Japanese Government would undoubtedly extend an invitation in the light of the warm welcome given Prince Akihito by Canada. Mr. Mayhew also recommends that, for climatic reasons, March would be better than February for a visit to Japan. The only country from which we have not heard yet is Ceylon; we hope to obtain some information within the next few days.

W. Ross Martin, Office of Prime Minister.

5. The RCAF have suggested two itineraries for your consideration:

Rockcliffe
* Gander
Paris
Rome
* Baghdad
New Delhi
Karachi
Colombo

(1) * Bangkok
* Manila or Hong Kong
Tokyo
* Guam
* Port Moresby
Canberra
Wellington
* Fiji
* Canton
* Honolulu
* Travis
Rockcliffe

OR

(2) * Singapore
* Darwin
Canberra
Wellington
* Guadalcanal
* Guam
Tokyo
* Wake
* Honolulu
* Travis
Rockcliffe

The first itinerary would consume 118 hours; the second 123 hours. To these totals must be added at least 15 hours for refuelling and maintenance at stops indicated by asterisks, exclusive of other fuelling and maintenance operations which will be done at regular ports of call, and, possibly, three overnight stops on the longer hauls.

You will note that approximately seven days out of thirty-five would be consumed in flying time, refuelling and maintenance, and overnight stops. The RCAF is working on a detailed schedule which we hope to obtain in the near future. Were you to limit your trip to five weeks this would leave twenty-eight days to visit ten countries if London is included and also spend some time with the Brigades in Germany and Korea, making an average of a little over two days in each place. This means an extremely tight schedule and possibly an uncomfortable trip. The addition of a further week might have to be considered. You may wish to defer the decision on this point until we obtain the detailed schedule from the RCAF.

6. I should be glad to obtain some guidance on the following points:

(a) whether you agree to spend some time in London;

(b) whether you agree that all further invitations including those from Israel and Spain be discouraged;

(c) whether we can now go ahead and sound out the French, German and Italian governments;

(d) whether we can inform our Missions of the general tentative timing of the trip; i.e. departure from Ottawa early in February, staying in New Delhi either the last week in February or the first week in March and thence to Pakistan, Ceylon, Korea, if advisable, Tokyo and Australia and New Zealand.

Note pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum for Secretary of State for External Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL Ottawa, September 23, 1953

THE PRIME MINISTER'S WORLD TOUR

Plans for the Prime Minister's trip are proceeding apace and I understand that Mr. Léger hopes to have ready for submission to you, upon your return on the 25th, a tentative itinerary and schedule which has been based on indications of the Prime Minister's thinking in this matter and your comments from New York.

2. In the meantime, the latest news, of which you may already be aware, from the Prime Minister's office, is that Mr. St-Laurent is willing to extend his trip from five to six weeks away from Ottawa, of which one week, the longest stay, will be spent in India. This should leave between three and four weeks for the remaining visits, as it appears that under the most optimistic calculations at least ten days will be consumed in flying time, refuelling and overnight stops. The Prime Minister, whose immediate party will include his son and daughter, his Principal Private Secretary and a social stenographer, does not wish to fly at night. Mrs. St-Laurent will join him on the Continent for the European ports of call.

3. The itinerary, as it stands at present, includes the following stops in sequence:[7]

Departure —

Rockcliffe (probably first week of February, 1954)
Goose Bay (overnight stop)
Paris
Bonn (including the 27th Brigade and possibly the Air Division)
Rome
Baghdad (or other appropriate stop for refuelling and sleep)
New Delhi
Karachi
Colombo
Korea (25th Brigade)
Tokyo
Canberra
Wellington

603. DEA/11563-5-40

Note du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures pour le premier ministre

Since my last memorandum of September 18 on the subject of the world tour which you are envisaging some further progress has been made and the position at present is as follows:

2. The trip can be made comfortably in the six weeks you are prepared to spend. The European section of the tour would only take eleven days (for three countries). A departure from Ottawa on February 10 (Wednesday) would bring you to New Delhi on February 23 (Tuesday).

3. Thenceforth, you could spend approximately one week in India, four days each in Pakistan and Ceylon (including a Sunday), one and one half days with the Brigade in Korea, three days in Tokyo, and two and one half each in Canberra and Wellington, arriving back in Ottawa on March 26.

4. The European tour would include visits to Paris, Bonn and the Brigade (possibly RCAF establishments in France and Germany), and Rome, with approximately three days in each country. The invitation from Italy has been accepted. The invitation which was sought from France has been most cordially extended. The German Foreign Office has immediately responded to our inquiry and we can expect word from Chancellor Adenauer the moment he returns from his holiday in the Black Forest. Should the RCAF plane not be able to land in the neighbourhood of the Canadian Brigade in Germany, an RCAF Dakota could fly you north from Bonn and back if you agree. Suggestions from the local Ambassadors for invitations from Spain and Israel have been declined.

5. The only new development as far as the Asian section of the tour is concerned is the insistent invitation of Indonesia. The Indonesian Cabinet attach great political importance to this and would be satisfied if you could spend at least a night in Djakarta. The RCAF sees no technical objection to a stop-over there. Such a stop would not involve your going very far out of your way on the trip from Colombo to Korea, and by stopping over in Indonesia you would avoid a two-hour refuelling stop in Bangkok. It would also permit of an overnight stop in Singapore, if you wished, at the cost of adding one day to the journey (see map attached†). If the present itinerary is found satisfactory New Delhi will be your first port of call in Asia. We are asking Mr. Escott Reid to find out what are the cities that Mr. Nehru would like to show you in India. Our High Commissioner in Ceylon has shown great enthusiasm at the news that you might visit there and he is informing the local authorities immediately whose interest is not in doubt. In Korea, only a visit to the Brigade is contemplated.

6. The RCAF have suggested the following itinerary for your consideration:

Rockcliffe
* Gander
Paris
Bonn
Rome
* Habbaniyah
New Delhi
Karachi
Colombo

(1) OR	(2) OR	(3) OR	(4) OR	(5)
* Bangkok	* Bangkok	* Singapore	* Singapore	Djakarta
Manila	* Hong Kong	Manila	* Hong Kong	Manila
Seoul	Seoul	Seoul	Seoul	Seoul

Tokyo
* Guam
* Townsville
Canberra
Wellington
* Fiji
* Canton Island
* Honolulu
* San Francisco
Rockcliffe

You will note that there is suggested an overnight stop in Habbaniyah, which is strictly an RAF base located approximately 30 miles west of Baghdad. The alternative would be a back-breaking 16-hour journey and a very late arrival New Delhi time. You could stay in Habbaniyah overnight without the political susceptibility of the Middle East countries being affected. Stops indicated by asterisks would be for refuelling, maintenance operations or overnight crew rests.

The RCAF strongly recommend a Manila stop as against one at Hong Kong. They will have to give at least an overnight rest to the crew in either place but they much prefer to take you to Manila because the weather is most uncertain in the Hong Kong area in March, and the trip might be delayed thereby. It is likely that you could not escape an official reception if you stopped overnight in Manila.

7. I should be glad to obtain some guidance on the following points:

(a) Accepting or declining the Indonesian invitation?

(b) Overnight at Habbaniyah?

(c) The overnight stop in Manila (as against Hong Kong) at the cost of probably being submitted to some form of official entertainment there?

(d) A short visit to Singapore?

(e) The probable date of your departure in February?

Note du sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures pour le premier ministre

[Ottawa], October 16, 1953

WORLD TOUR

Following a meeting held in the Department at which Mr. Ross Martin of your office was present and gave certain indications of your wishes, we had the RCAF prepare the attached draft schedule for your journey.† It will be noted that this schedule is at variance with the previous one on the following points:

(1) The inclusion of London;

(2) The suggested stop at Bahrain instead of Habbanyiah between Rome and the Far East. Bahrain was suggested by Mr. Menzies of the Far Eastern Division, who stopped there with Mr. Pearson a few years ago and highly recommended the local amenities. It is a joint Anglo-US base; it certainly would be less frugal than Habbanyia and would bring you closer to your next stop, Karachi;

(3) Your stop at Karachi comes before that at New Delhi;

(4) Djakarta is included between Colombo and Manila. The Indonesians have expressed keen interest in having you visit there, if only overnight. The effect of your visit can not but be most beneficial and since a fuelling stop must be made in that general area, it would seem to be more appropriate for you to stop at Djakarta if you think you can spare the time, than to just put in two hours for strictly fuelling purposes at Bangkok.

(5) Singapore is enroute to Djakarta. It would also be possible to stop there overnight or even just for fuelling, during which time I am certain Mr. Malcolm MacDonald[8] could join you for a chat at the airport.

2. The RCAF on the basis of indicated hours of arrival (local time) have worked back to the hours at which flights should start.

3. We received yesterday from our High Commissioner in Colombo copy of a letter written to him on October 1 by Mr. Senanayake, the Prime Minister of Ceylon who has since resigned, warmly welcoming the news of your proposed visit and suggesting that you be the guest of the Government. There is no doubt that his successor, Sir John Kotalawala, will, when he is acquainted with your intentions, be just as warm in his welcome.

4. It would be possible to study an inversion of the tour to put the visit to Australia and New Zealand ahead of that to Korea and Tokyo where the tour would for practical purposes be concluded. I understand that the total flying time would not be changed; such an approach might, however, make the stops more conveniently spaced. It would, however, require that the journey be started at least a week later than February 4, as it would bring you to the capital of Australia at almost the same time as Her Majesty the Queen would be visiting there.

[8] Commissaire général pour le Royaume-Uni dans l'Asie du Sud-Est.
Commissioner-General for United Kingdom in South-East Asia.

5. You will note that unless the journey between San Francisco and Rockcliffe is broken, arrival at a reasonable hour in Ottawa requires a very early start indeed from San Francisco.

6. A new map of the proposed journey is attached.†

Memorandum by Office of Prime Minister

MEMORANDUM FOR: THOSE CONCERNED WITH ARRANGEMENTS FOR PRIME MINISTER'S TOUR AROUND THE WORLD

Mr. St-Laurent has informed me that generally speaking he would prefer to spend as much time as feasible talking to personalities in the countries which he will visit. His personal wish is for as little "fuss and feathers" as possible. He would like, for instance, not to address Parliaments or to receive honorary degrees or be put on display throughout all his waking hours. On the other hand, the last thing he wants is the creation of any impression that he thinks the receipt of an honorary degree from a Far Eastern University might be beneath him. If functions of this kind are considered advisable, the Prime Minister has no objection to having them included in his itinerary but he would like them kept to a minimum.

Previous experience has indicated that, so far as possible, Mr. St-Laurent should be given a full eight hours' sleep each night and that his day should not start much before 10:00 a.m. at the earliest. It is also desirable to have a period in each day of two hours to rest and to do some homework, preferably before dinner in the evening. Dinners beginning at 7:30 p.m. are not unwelcome either. We should aim at getting the Prime Minister back to his lodgings by 11:00 o'clock in the evening.

PRIME MINISTER'S TOUR

The Prime Minister will visit the Commonwealth countries of Asia — Pakistan, India, and Ceylon — early this year. Following his visit to these countries where he will spend just over two weeks, the Prime Minister will travel to the Far East through South East Asia, visiting Indonesia briefly and stopping overnight in Manila en route to Korea. While in Korea he will spend some time with the Canadian Forces. Before returning to Canada, the Prime Minister will pay a visit to Japan.

On the way to Pakistan, India and Ceylon, the Prime Minister will spend a short time in Europe, stopping briefly in London and visiting Paris, Bonn and Rome. While in Germany he will visit Canadian Forces stationed in Europe under the NATO arrangements for collective security. The whole trip is expected to take just under six weeks and will start early in February.

Throughout the trip, the Prime Minister will have an opportunity to talk with leaders of governments and other important personalities in the countries he will visit. In this way he will be able to gain direct knowledge of the problems and aspirations of many peoples who are geographically remote from Canada but who are playing an increasingly important part in world affairs. Also, the Prime Minister will repay visits to Canada made by Mr. Nehru of India in 1949, the late Prime Minister of Pakistan, Mr. Linquat Ali Khan, in 1950, the Prime Ministers of France and Italy, and Chancellor Adenauer of Germany. His visit to Japan follows the recent visit of Crown Prince Akihito of Japan, who visited Canada in 1953.

When first planned, the Prime Minister's trip would have taken him to Australia and New Zealand following his visit to Japan and this has been mentioned in the press. The Queen would still be in Australia when the Prime Minister planned to be there, though not in the same part of the country. Nevertheless, this would entail inconvenience for the officials making arrangements in Australia. Also, because the time available for the visits to Australia and New Zealand was very short, it would have been difficult to do justice to either country. Consequently, we have proposed, and the governments of Australia and New Zealand have agreed, to a postponement of the Prime Minister's visits to these countries. It is expected that this will be mentioned in an announcement about the Tour to be made early in the New Year.[9]

7. Mr. Ritchie. Mr. Cavell,[10] accompanied by Mr. Hume Wright of the Department of Finance, will be leaving next week for his annual visit to Asia to consult with local government officials on possible projects for Canadian Colombo Plan aid and to examine these projects on the spot. Our missions in Ceylon, India and Pakistan have been requested to do everything they can in the way of advance preparation so that the Cavell trip will have maximum results in lining up suitable projects for inclusion in the 1953-54 programme and for a basis of future operations. Mr. Reid will accompany the party for at least part of the Indian tour and he has been asked to assign an officer of his staff where he cannot go. Mr. Kirkwood has also been asked to release an officer from his mission to accompany the party in both East and West Pakistan, and Mr. Thurrott[11] will join Mr. Cavell and Mr. Wright for the visit in Ceylon.

The $25 million Canadian contribution voted by Parliament for 1951-52 has been completely earmarked for projects which are either completed or under way. The 1952-53 programme, for which Parliament also voted $25 million, has not yet been worked out in full. India has already received $5 million worth of wheat during the current year and certain projects, for which direct capital assistance is required, are nearing the point of final agreement. The total cost of all these projects would just about use up the funds available for India. The Ceylon programme also is just about complete, with a $1 million fisheries project already under way and a $1 million rural electrification project almost certain to be undertaken. Unfortunately, very little progress has been made with the Pakistan programme due to the fact that all the projects submitted by Pakistan, with one exception, have proved upon investigation to be impractical or inadequately prepared, or for some other reason unsuitable for Canadian assistance at least during the current year. The one exception, a hydro-electric plant, is very highly recommended but it may have to be deferred pending the completion of a survey of the whole development plan of Pakistan, to be undertaken by an International Bank Mission.

PERSONAL New Delhi, March 27, 1953

My dear John [Deutsch]:

An old friend of mine has been here in Delhi: Bernstein of the Monetary Fund. He came out as the Head of the International Monetary Fund Mission. Hume [Wright] and I have had talks with him here, and I enclose the press report giving some of his conclusions which you might find interesting.[12] He is very pleased — in general — with what he has found here, and thinks the Indians are doing a good job taking all their difficulties into consideration.

Each time I come here I am more and more seized with a sense of the great urgency of the cause upon which we have embarked. Unfortunately, time is not on our side. The two countries which are vital are China and India, and I believe that the cause of human freedom in Asia — and perhaps eventually elsewhere — will be won or lost in the race which must now obviously take place to decide the pattern upon which the whole of Asia will eventually industrialize. It is only too obvious that this industrialization is going to affect us in the most profound way and be a determining factor in shaping the lives of our children.

More and more it seems to me that we absolutely cannot allow the Indian Five Year Plan to fail — if we do, (we meaning the Western World) there will be chaos here in India which might lead anywhere, but will almost certainly end the present democratic experiment. If, on the other hand, the Five Year Plan can be got through with a reasonable amount of its objective having been realized, then there is real hope that the democratic way can be established for most of Asia. Bernstein, and others to whom I have talked, do not think that much more money will be required than is now visualized, but we might well all have to rethink our plans for participation to put the Five Year Plan over the top.

I am personally appalled at the almost complete lack of any evidence that what we are trying to do is winning us any friends, and I believe that the winning of the very real friendship of these people is vital. I was told in the South that they would welcome aid from us (and God knows they need it, particularly in Madras now in its sixth year of drought) but they hated getting all tangled up in the red tape of the Central Government. In any case, the Central Government makes them pay counter-part funds to the full extent of every nut and bolt, and so they were much happier to get a grant from the Central Government, or to use their own Provincial Funds and buy where they liked, and above all, have complete control over deliveries, co-ordination, etc., etc., which enabled them really to get something done. You will remember the Central Government had almost to beat West Bengal into taking $3 million from us for Mayurakshi electrical equipment. It is the same story in every State: Canadian aid is just a bothersome, restricting, and very expensive business to them. It is no wonder that Canada makes no friends from her aid programme. I am not sure yet what the answer is, but hope to come up with some suggestions when I get back.

Just at the present moment I am still in Delhi whilst Escott [Reid] and Hume have gone on to Calcutta to see the progress made at Mayurakshi, and I am to catch up with them in a few days and talk to the Mayurakshi people in Calcutta. . . .

Hume is doing a grand job of thorough investigation. He has a note-book which has become the most precious possession of the expedition — if he loses it we might as well not come back!

I am going to take the liberty of sending a copy of this letter to Ed Ritchie to save me the trouble of writing practically the same things to him, and perhaps you will be good enough to let him see Bernstein's remarks to the press.

Canada, my friend, is a damn good Country!

With kindest regards, John,

Yours sincerely,

DESPATCH 481 New Delhi, May 4, 1953

RESTRICTED

COLOMBO PLAN: CANADIAN CAPITAL AID TO INDIA, 1952-54:
VISIT OF MR. CAVELL AND MR. WRIGHT

I propose in this and my immediately following despatch to report on Mr. Cavell and Mr. Wright's two visits to New Delhi between March 20 and April 17. The present despatch is intended primarily to comprise, in general terms, an assessment of our capital aid programme to India in the light of the discussions which Mr. Cavell and Mr. Wright have had with Indian officials and representatives of the United Kingdom, United States, Australia, the United Nations and the Specialized Agencies. In my immediately following despatch I shall summarize, insofar as is possible at this stage, the present prospects of lining up a firm Canadian programme of capital assistance to absorb that portion of the 1952-53 and 1953-54 Colombo Plan appropriations which might be allocated to India.

2. During their two visits Mr. Cavell and Mr. Wright sought, above all, to impart some sort of new momentum to our Colombo aid effort in India. As you are well aware, and as, I am certain, the Indian authorities were equally aware, the initial momentum had slackened considerably, and there was, in fact, a danger that at one point or another we might be faced with a situation where the Indians declared themselves unable to propose further development projects which could be financed with our aid. This situation is by no means hypothetical for there have been hints to that effect in several quarters here. It may well be that the Indians hope, by alluding at sufficiently frequent intervals to their probable inability to accept further aid from us, to induce a shift of emphasis in our aid programme from capital equipment to commodity assistance. On the other hand, it cannot, of course, be denied that the conditions which have circumscribed our aid in the past have caused genuine difficulties to those in charge of implementing the public sector development projects envisaged in the Five-Year Plan. What was required, therefore, was a frank exchange of views and a mutual appreciation of the difficulties experienced on both sides. It was with this objective in mind that Mr. Cavell and Mr. Wright embarked upon their series of discussions with officials of the Ministry of Finance and the Planning Commission.

3. The resulting discussions were, I think, eminently successful. While we, on our part, continued to apply some pressure upon the Indians to come forward with suitable projects, the officials of the Ministry of Finance did not spare any effort in helping us to draw up a tentative programme of capital projects to be financed from the funds available to India under our Colombo Plan vote. I am reasonably confident that we succeeded in dispelling whatever doubts continued to linger in their minds in regard to the motives underlying Canadian aid in India. On their part, the Indians put forward what I believe can be regarded as cogent reasons for the difficulties they had been experiencing and would continue to experience in accepting our aid in the form in which it was being offered. Once the atmosphere had been cleared in this way, the discussions were focused more directly on concrete projects which might qualify for Canadian capital assistance during the remaining period of the Five-Year Plan.

4. We explained at the outset that the Canadian Government, in contributing aid to the Indian economic development programme, would expect the initiative for proposing suitable projects to rest with the Indian Government. Any project put forward should be one that has been included in the Five-Year Plan as a priority project directly related to basic economic development and designed, wherever possible, to stimulate further development. Needless to say, a project in order to qualify for Canadian aid should be of such a nature as to carry the support of public opinion in both Canada and India.

5. The officials of the Ministry of Finance, with whom most of the relevant discussions were held, said that they had no quarrel with these basic considerations which they shared. On their part, they pointed out that the Five Year Plan represented the basic instrument of the Government of India's economic policy and that, although it is limited in scope, the Government was certain that it could be achieved. In its simplest terms the Five-Year Plan was intended to restore pre-war living standards and to provide momentum for subsequent development. Its emphasis lay primarily on agriculture and transportation. Responsibility for industrial development had, in its main phases, had to be assigned to the private sector for the time being.

6. Insofar as the "public sector" was concerned, the bulk of the outlay was internal. (The public sector is that part of the Five-Year Plan which is financed by the Government.) Only about 20% of the total expenditure envisaged in the Five-Year Plan could be regarded as external expenditure and of this a substantial portion had already been incurred. Consequently the gap of between Rs.200 and 300 crores which existed in the public sector and which the Government of India was hoping might be filled by foreign aid was probably more in the nature of a gap in internal resources than a foreign exchange gap.

7. It appeared to us that, even on the assumption that the Indian argument was economically valid, there should be no undue difficulty in finding enough projects to absorb $13,000,000 (Canadian) annually over the next three years if, in fact, the total foreign expenditure component anticipated under the Five-Year Plan was of the order of Rs.400 crores or roughly $840,000,000. In order to press our point, which the Indians were prepared to accept in principle, we suggested that it might be useful to go over with them the Planning Commission's volume entitled: "Development Schemes in the First Five Year Plan" to see what projects involving substantial external expenditure might be suitable for Canadian participation.

8. Our analysis of the Planning Commission's volume disclosed, I think, some of the more obvious reasons for the difficulties we have had in inducing the Indians to propose projects for our consideration. Many of the public sector projects were started before the Five-Year Plan came into operation; these projects have now either been completed or are nearing completion. For many projects, the entire external expenditure has been incurred; alternatively, orders for the required foreign equipment have ben placed. For a few projects, the external expenditure component involved was so slight that the Indians thought, and we agreed, that Canadian participation in these projects would lead to a fragmentation of our capital aid programme. Moreover, since the Five-Year Plan was initially drawn up, facilities have been established in India for the manufacture of a good deal of equipment which was previously imported from foreign sources of supply. This applies, for example, to pump sets of which adequate supplies are available locally and which, accordingly, the Government of India is not prepared to import under a foreign aid programme.

9. It became clear to us, therefore, that the field for Canadian participation in development projects by the provision of equipment manufactured in Canada was, in fact, more limited than we had been inclined to think. Apart from the real and practical difficulties which I have outlined in the preceding paragraph, the Indians have, of course, frequently referred to the generally high prices of Canadian equipment compared with world prices which, of course, reduce the real value to India of Canadian aid. The higher Canadian prices would also tend to push up the budgets for the projects involved unless agreement could be reached, as would now appear to be likely, that the counterpart funds to be generated in these particular cases would be based on world prices, not on the cost to Canada of the equipment.

10. While, in the light of the favourable foodgrain prospects for the current year, the Indian authorities did not renew their pressure for assistance in the form of wheat, at least during 1953-54, they did make a case for commodity assistance in general to fill in the gaps in our capital aid programme. They argued that the advantage of this form of assistance was that it generated immediate counterpart funds which could be applied to cover local expenditures in connection with a project already in receipt of Canadian capital assistance, or local expenditures in connection with other projects which Canada might decide to assist. Mr. Cavell and Mr. Wright thought that some measure of commodity assistance, provided it were conjoined with a substantial capital equipment programme, might be feasible and agreed to submit a proposal along these lines to the Canadian authorities on their return to Ottawa. At the same time, of course, it was understood on both sides that commodity assistance, if agreed to in principle, should interfere as little as possible with normal trade channels. We also pointed out that the Canadian authorities would have to consider carefully the possible political and economic results of the Canadian Government taking action which would result in displacing normal suppliers to the Indian market in third countries, more especially those in the Sterling Area or the European Payments Union.

11. Another suggestion which the Indians put forward to meet the difficulties they were experiencing in finding enough projects to absorb our aid was that the Canadian Government might consider using Colombo Plan funds to defray freight and insurance charges. To the extent that India was still largely dependent on foreign shipping and insurance facilities, foreign exchange would, in any case, be required to cover these charges. Mr. Cavell and Mr. Wright reiterated the Canadian position on this question and suggested that, inasmuch as there was probably enough Sterling shipping available, the Indian Government was unlikely to be hard pressed to find the necessary exchange. (Mr. Cavell learned from his discussions with United Kingdom and United States representatives in New Delhi that India was, in fact, currently accumulating Sterling and that, consequently, the RS.290 crores ($638 million) of releases from her Sterling balances on which India had counted in the financing of its Five-Year Plan might well represent no more than a paper claim on Sterling production.) It was agreed that the proposed Exchange of Notes on this question would be deferred until Mr. Cavell had had an opportunity of discussing it further with the appropriate authorities in Ottawa.

PERSONAL Karachi, May 8, 1953

My dear Ed [Ritchie],

I have been very remiss in not writing to you much earlier, but this has been a real hard trip and Hume [Wright] and I have had hardly any time to ourselves. I think we have had one Sunday off since we started.

The great difficulty has been to keep our negotiations on a practical basis. The situation I unearthed in Ceylon was deplorable but we finally left that country with something that looks like maturing into a program. The situation in India is extremely difficult. I will not go into details, but my private opinion is that they are being largely led astray by grandiose schemes put up to them by various so-called UN and other experts, and the idea of implementing these schemes is, at least to some extent, what lies behind their request for free dollars. However, after a real hard battle, we left India with what looks like a practical program of projects, and at least I think we will have enough to enable us to spend our money. We found ourselves in some conflict, at first at least, with the views of the Mission in Delhi, and a difficult situation developed there on account of the practical approach Hume and I tried to maintain. However, more about that when I see you.

Here in Pakistan they are in a sad mess. For many reasons, which we are slowly thrashing out, a very bad food shortage has developed. I have discussed this with the Finance Minister, and yesterday Ken Kirkwood and I had a private luncheon with the Prime Minister, at which we discussed it further. They are going to ask, through the Pak[istan] High Commissioner in Ottawa, for more wheat, but have been given no indication or encouragement whatsoever by me that such a request is likely to be successful. Meanwhile the five million dollars worth they are getting, which is shortly arriving, will help them quite a bit. The three-man American Investigating Committee is due to arrive today or tomorrow.

In spite, however, of their preoccupation with wheat, Hume and I have seen numerous projects and thoroughly investigated them. We are now working against time to get the request for these sanctioned and I feel reasonably sure that we shall leave here next Wednesday, the night of the 13th, with projects which will take up our allotment for Pakistan, but in view of their present over-all situation it has not been easy to keep the discussions down to really practical solutions. What they badly need is an over-all economic board which will take some of the load off the Finance Minister, who is one of the very few who really knows what the score is. Unfortunately he had a bad heart attack recently, and should not be doing anything like the amount of work which now piles on him. There is some suggestion, which I have encouraged as much as I could, that the Ford Foundation take over the financing and the finding of a board of World Economic Experts to come in here and really get to grips with the over-all situation and make some suggestions. If we are asked for a Canadian or two to serve on such a board, I think we should give it very sympathetic consideration. I believe this country can be pulled around by care and the enforcement of a really well thought out economic policy. But the trouble is that the few real efficient officials and Ministers are harassed to death and have no time to sit back and discover facts and work out policies, with the result that one gets the impression that all we are doing is punching pillows.

I believe some alarming reports have been circulated that I am ill, etc., etc. Nothing could be further from the truth. Actually in a very hard and exacting trip I have only had two upsets. One was food poisoning in Madras State from which I recuperated for a few days in Delhi, and the other was really the result of an accident on the Khyber Pass when an Afghan truck struck our car, damaged one side of it badly, and almost tipped us off the road down the mountain side. This broke my asthma pump and spilled all my supply of liquid, with the result that I was defenceless and asthma caught up with me. However, I had a spare pump here and some more liquid, and now all is well again. However, I am looking forward to being back and both Hume and I are very, very tired.

Now in conclusion, just a word about the Consultative Committee. So far as I can gather, nothing very serious is likely to come up, and I would much prefer not to turn around again and come out once more. I am going to have an enormous amount of work to implement a new program for this year, to get it into shape and put it up to you all, and also my own shop will need some strengthening and reorganization, and in view of what we are doing and what we still have to do, it seems to me this is more important work than returning to Delhi for the Consultative Committee Meeting, which would practically wash out the rest of the year, and if some one else can be found to take over I should be very glad.

When I wrote to John Deutsch I sent you a copy of the letter. Now I will turn it around and send John a copy of this one. It will be a great pleasure to see you all again and to be back in Canada. Please remember me to your wife and all my friends around the East Block. Incidentally, we are leaving here on Wednesday for Rome, where we have some consolidation work to do with the FAO people there.

There now seems no doubt that we shall catch our boat out of Southampton on May 28th.

Kindest personal regards

Yours sincerely,
NIK [CAVELL]

P.S. for John Deutsch.

Dear John,

It was one of my very few brainwaves to ask you for Hume [Wright]. He has been invaluable in ferreting out all kinds of information, and I think as a result, we are going to be able to put forward a report which will be of some real assistance. At least I hope so.

Yours sincerely,

RÉUNION DU COMITÉ CONSULTATIF NEW DELHI, 28 SEPTEMBRE-18 OCTOBRE 1953 MEETING OF CONSULTATIVE COMMITTEE NEW DELHI, SEPTEMBER 28-OCTOBER 18, 1953

611. PCO

Note du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures pour le Cabinet

COLOMBO PLAN — FOURTH CANADIAN CONTRIBUTION

In each of the years 1951/52 and 1952/53, Parliament appropriated $25 million for expenditure to assist the economic development of the countries of South and South-East Asia through the Colombo Plan. For the current year, Parliament appropriated a further $25.4 million for a Fund for economic and technical assistance to Colombo Plan countries. The Colombo Plan is scheduled to run for six years from mid-1951 to mid-1957.

Of funds carried over from 1952/53 and those appropriated in the current year for economic assistance, Cabinet has already approved a programme of aid for Ceylon and the extension of the existing serial resources survey for Pakistan. In addition, last May Cabinet approved the temporary financing from Colombo Plan funds of a $5 million gift of wheat for Pakistan "on the understanding that the Government would recommend to Parliament at the next session that the amount be made up by funds then to be appropriated for the purpose". A memorandum proposing a programme for India is before Cabinet. A memorandum on additional Canadian participation in the previously approved hydro-electric project at Warsak in Pakistan is also before Cabinet, and it is expected that other projects for assistance to Pakistan will be recommended for approval when various technical reports from Canadian consulting engineers have been received and considered. Most, if not all, of the funds presently available for economic assistance to Colombo Plan countries will probably be committed before the end of the fiscal year.

I am satisfied that the need to assist in the economic development of the countries of South and South-East Asia is as urgent as ever. A good start has been made, but much remains to be done. There is evidence that the countries of the Area are playing their full part, within the limit of the resources they consider can be made available for development. The other contributing countries of the Colombo Plan are continuing their assistance.

The United Kingdom is making its contribution mainly in the form of releases from the accumulated sterling balances of the countries of the Area plus grants to its colonial territories, to an estimated total of £253 million for the six-year period. Australia is contributing the equivalent of about $75 million over the six years, and New Zealand has so far pledged £1 million for each of the first three years of the program. The United States is making a substantial financial contribution, and from mid-1950 to mid-1953 had made available approximately $500 million for the different Colombo Plan countries of South and South-East Asia, by way of grants and loans, including the $190 million loan to India for wheat. United States foreign aid appropriations for the current fiscal year ending June 31st,[sic]1954 include about $160 million for economic and technical assistance to Colombo Plan countries in the Area and the Philippines. Account should also be taken of the recent gift of up to 1,000,000 tons of wheat to Pakistan and of the $62 million Export/Import Bank loan to Indonesia.

The annual meeting of the Consultative Committee of the Colombo Plan is to take place in New Delhi from September 28th. The position of the Canadian delegation to this meeting would be considerably strengthened if it were in a position to announce that the Government of Canada intends to continue its contribution to the development of the countries of the Area in the coming fiscal year. In this connection, it will be recalled that on February 12th, 1951, the Cabinet agreed that the Canadian delegate at the Consultative Committee be authorized to state that the Canadian Government was willing to provide $25 million for the Colombo Plan in the fiscal year 1951/52, and that, following on decisions taken by Cabinet on February 5th, 1952, the press release issued by the Prime Minister's Office on February 20th announcing the composition of the Canadian delegation to the 1952 meeting of the Consultative Committee included the information that the Government had decided to recommend to Parliament a contribution for 1952/53 of $25 million for economic assistance and $400 million for technical co-operation under the Colombo Plan.

Recommendation:

It is recommended that authority be granted for the Canadian delegation to the Consultative Committee Meeting to state that the Government of Canada proposes to ask Parliament for a further appropriation of funds for economic and technical assistance under the Colombo Plan in 1954/55 in an amount comparable with funds appropriated in previous years, on the understanding that projects suitable for Canadian assistance will be forthcoming from the countries of the Area. The Minister of Finance has been consulted and would have no objection if it was felt desirable to make this further commitment.[13]

(c) Meeting of Consultative Committee — With the approval of Cabinet, the Canadian Delegation to the meeting of the Consultative Committee of the Colombo Plan, to be held in New Delhi in October will be as follows:

Chairman:
Mr. James Sinclair, Minister of Fisheries

Alternate:
Mr. Escott Reid

Advisors:
Mr. J.J. Deutsch, Department of Finance
A.E. Ritchie, Department of External Affairs.

The delegation will also include one officer from each of our Missions in Karachi, Colombo, and New Delhi. Mr. A.E. Ritchie will lead the official delegation to the preliminary meeting of officials opening on September 28.

The Canadian Delegation to the Consultative Committee has been authorized to invite the Committee to hold its 1954 meetings in Canada, if it is felt that such an invitation would be welcomed by the participating countries, and would contribute to the continued success of the Colombo Plan. The Delegation has also been authorized to state that the Canadian Government proposes to ask Parliament for a further appropriation of funds for economic and technical assistance under the Colombo Plan for 1954-1955 in an amount comparable to that appropriated in previous years. This action would be taken on the understanding that projects suitable for Canadian assistance would be forthcoming from the countries in the area.

LETTER NO. 1074 New Delhi, October 18, 1953

CONFIDENTIAL

MEETINGS OF OFFICIALS BETWEEN SEPTEMBER 28 AND OCTOBER 8

Enclosed is a confidential memorandum on the meetings of officials held in New Delhi between September 28 and October 8. A separate analysis of the conference at the Ministerial level will be prepared. Mr. Thurrott is reporting on the Council for Technical Co-operation proceedings (October 9 and 10).†

2. For your information we also enclose the following documents which will, of course, be superseded by the final report to be made available in the near future:

(1) No. C.C.I.(53)-4 — Review of Officials' Meetings†

(2) No. C.C.I.(53)-5 — Draft report as finalized by the officials.†

CONFIDENTIAL [New Delhi], October 17, 1953

COLOMBO PLAN CONSULTATIVE COMMITTEE MEETINGS OF OFFICIALS, NEW DELHI — SEPTEMBER 28 TO OCTOBER 8

The variety and extent of Canadian capital assistance to India, Pakistan and Ceylon, and the support which our country has given to the Council for Technical Co-operation, made the active participation of the Canadian Delegation at the conference of officials an obvious necessity. Mr. Ritchie was appointed Chairman of the Drafting Committee, Mr. Thurrott was named to the Publicity Committee, Mr. Goldschlag was a member of the Working Group on the Indian Country Chapter and Mr. Hadwen[14] was Secretary to the Delegation. This report will be concerned with the conclusions reached by the officials' meetings and more significantly with some of the influences producing these decisions, leaving detailed examination of the individual Country Chapters to the missions concerned.

The meetings began in an atmosphere of complete unanimity and general goodwill. The unanimity did not last much beyond the opening day but the general friendliness of the conference atmosphere throughout its proceedings was striking. In his opening-day statement, the United Kingdom delegate referred to the meetings as those of "a jolly good club" while the US representative described the gathering as that of "an international community of like-minded people." The discussions which followed were frank and realistic. One of the interesting features of the statements by delegates from the receiving countries was their self-criticism (many of these comments were, however, removed from the draft report presented to the Ministers). This tendency was particularly noticeable in the cases of Ceylon, Indonesia and Pakistan. Even the Indian Delegation was prepared to admit that important modifications in their country's economic plans must be made in the light of recent developments in the balance of payments position. This willingness to be objective can be explained partly as the desire of governments to justify in an international forum policies which are unpopular in a domestic political context.

In spite of the fact that the Colombo Plan technical assistance programme has been operating for three years and the capital assistance programme for two, it is clear from the information made available at New Delhi that only a modest beginning has been made under the auspices of the Colombo Plan in contributing to the solution of the economic difficulties of South and South-East Asia. Most of the projects being assisted by Colombo Plan aid are, of course, long-term development schemes frequently requiring many years for their completion. What is more, it is at present very difficult to assess the value of programmes in the technical education and social welfare fields and it may never be possible to reach any definite conclusions concerning their effectiveness. The slowness with which obvious results are being achieved was, however, a cause of concern, particularly to the Australian and New Zealand Delegations. The New Zealand delegate stated that the general public in his country would be interested in some explanation of why the economic aid programmes had been so slow in developing. He was prepared to admit that some of this feeling in New Zealand was due to a lack of understanding of the long-range objectives of the Plan and the means available for its implementation, but pressed his point vigorously. The New Zealand draft paragraph on this point was unacceptable to the meeting because it was considered impossible to reach general conclusions in the causes for delay, especially as this would involve discussions of the forms in which aid was offered and required — a point in which no agreement was possible. (The Canadian Delegation was told of considerable political opposition to the Colombo Plan in New Zealand. Furthermore, both the New Zealand and Australian programmes have run into major difficulties and disappointments.)

There is little in the report prepared by the officials on the more embarrassing reasons for delays in implementing the development programmes. It was however, generally accepted that the main limitations on the economic progress of South and South-East Asia are produced by lack of experienced administrators, both in the governmental and in the private sectors, capable of executing expanding development programmes. The Indian Delegation also referred to the problems which their country faced in carrying out large scale projects in the Indian states, emphasizing the constitutional limits to the authority of the centre. In some of the other countries of the Colombo Plan area internal disorders have produced similar difficulties, i.e. in Viet-Nam, Malaya, Burma and Indonesia. The burden of defence expenditure in India and Pakistan was another matter which delegates were naturally reluctant to mention. These were some of the issues which the officials' report skirted rather than precipitate what could have been an acrimonious and politically embarrassing discussion.

An encouraging feature of the discussions was the recognition that technical and capital assistance must be increasingly combined both for agricultural and for industrial projects. The Canadian Delegation emphasized on a number of occasions the value to the Colombo Plan countries of co-operation with the United Nations' specialized agencies and with the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development. The statement of its representative showed that the International Bank is making an increasingly important contribution to the economic welfare of this region. This is being done not only through the loans which the Bank is able to make, and which have recently been diversified with the release of French and United Kingdom funds, but also through the important technical assistance contribution which the Bank missions make in surveying the economy of individual countries as a preliminary to loan negotiations. ECAFE also came in for favourable comment and its role in supporting research on problems common throughout the area was emphasized. It was generally recognized that only through ECAFE is there at present any effective method of making the experience of individual countries in South and South-East Asia available to others in the same area.

Almost all the Country Chapters emphasized the problems created by the fall in raw material prices after the cessation of Korean War stock piling. However, this development has not had a uniform effect throughout the area. The economic consequences have been much more serious in Pakistan and Ceylon than in Burma or in the United Kingdom Territories. The Indian economy, by reason of its more diversified nature, has not suffered the same proportionate shocks on this account as have the economies of other South and South-East Asian countries. The over-all conclusion of the Country Chapters, however, is that, largely because of the collapse of the raw materials market, assistance in increasing amounts is required under the Colombo Plan during 1953-54 and probably in succeeding years. Changes in the export trade pattern of the Asian countries have produced major internal economic problems. Therefore, the Colombo Plan countries of South and South-East Asia now require foreign aid, for internal as well as external financial commitments necessary to carry out and expand their development programmes.

The major issue of the official conference, which is not considered at length in the conclusions, concerned the difficulty of matching the aid which individual countries could offer with the aid which receiving countries wished to obtain. It became clear as this discussion proceeded that not all the donor countries are able to modify the terms on which their aid is available as desired. The relationship might be compared to that of a boy with four uncles. One uncle was prepared to give his nephew a $10 bill to be spent wherever and on whatever the boy thought fit. This was naturally the most popular uncle. Another uncle was prepared to give the boy whatever he did not have, e.g. an electric train if a bicycle were available from other sources. The third uncle was in the chocolate manufacturing business and, having some of his products to spare, was prepared to give them to his nephew but could not make other gifts available. The fourth uncle was one who had been wealthy in the past but had now fallen on evil days and could only allow his nephew to withdraw a certain amount from an educational fund previously established. Transposed into economic terms, this uncle-nephew relationship was a matter of spirited discussion in some form or other in almost every meeting of the officials. The most direct contribution to the debate was made by the Indian Delegation. . . .

In general, the Canadian programme emerged well from this discussion. When the occasion arose, the Canadian Delegation pointed out that the goods and services provided by Canada originate as a general rule in our own country. This encouraged support for the Colombo Plan amongst the general public. On occasion, however, funds have been spent outside Canada. It was also emphasized that Canada can make available a considerable range of the goods and services required and that under present conditions the foreign exchange requirements of the Colombo Plan countries for development purposes were well in excess of the aid likely to be available. Accordingly, the Canadian delegates did not think that the terms on which Canadian aid was offered had so far operated to prevent it from being used. On the suggestion that the prices of the goods offered by some countries were exceptionally high, the Canadian Delegation reminded the meeting that our economy is of an open competitive nature and that the size of the Canadian contributions takes account of the domestic price level. What is more, Canadian equipment is manufactured either to US or to UK specifications which should make it familiar to engineers in the Colombo Plan area. Problems of delay in providing spare parts did not generally arise in connection with the type of major development equipment which Canada was able to supply and could be dealt with as easily from Canada as from elsewhere. When the Indian Delegation suggested that the provision of plants and equipment for development projects might not be of great assistance in carrying out the Five Year Plan because orders for most of this machinery had already been placed, the Canadian Delegation was able to point out that Canadian aid had been made available in a variety of forms, e.g. wheat and industrial raw materials for India, and flour for Ceylon, in addition to equipment and services. In the final analysis the subject was bypassed on the grounds stated by the US Delegation that questions of this kind are matters of bilateral negotiation and that general principles applicable to all donor and receiving countries could not be, and should not be, laid down by a body such as the Consultative Committee.

Indonesia

The Indonesian Delegation on several occasions made statements which indicated that their country still had doubts concerning the political advisability of accepting foreign economic aid. In his opening remarks, the Indonesian delegate emphasized that the principle underlying economic aid must be "respect for each other's independence." The Indonesian Delegation also circulated a memorandum on counterpart funds which contained references to the "resentment which we should like to avoid at all costs, arising from the administration of counterpart funds." Unresolved difficulties over the use of US counterpart funds formed the basis for this particular document. In another context the Indonesian Delegation expressed the hope that references to the necessity of controlling the world prices of raw materials be included in the report. This suggestion was talked out on the familiar basis that the problem was of a global and not an area nature which must be settled on a commodity basis at other international gatherings rather than at the Colombo Plan Consultative Committee meetings.

Burma

The Burmese Delegation in their original draft claimed that "there have not been external sources of finance such as grants or loans" whereas, in fact, TCA had made substantial funds available to that country. This contradiction was avoided only with great difficulty as the Burmese Delegation seemed to be under instructions to assert their economic independence. The Burmese Delegation at one point also suggested that "economic aid should be in accordance with the national aspirations of the people." One of its members advised us that their attitude regarding foreign economic assistance had been to some extent determined by their experience with TCA and that the decision to ask TCA to withdraw from Burma was, in turn, based on the problem of the KMT troops on the Chinese-Burma border. However, the Burmese Delegation hoped that any difficult problems would be "smoothly squared out" before the conference concluded and did not appear to be antagonistic to foreign economic aid on general principles. The Burmese Country Chapter indicated that Burma did not need external capital assistance at present but would welcome technical aid in any form.

Viet-Nam, Laos, Cambodia

The participation of the delegations from Viet-Nam, Laos and Cambodia was made difficult because most of their representatives did not speak English and the translation facilities were most inadequate. For this reason these three delegations came to regard the Canadian Delegation as their interpreter and guide and on numerous occasions emphasized the value which they attached to Canadian offers of technical assistance. It is understood that further requests for technical assistance, for teaching equipment and "for public works and fish canning equipment" will be made by these countries to Canada. It is interesting to speculate on the extent to which Canada's bilingual composition will make our contribution to the economic progress of South and South-East Asia more valuable and extensive. The difficulties which this tendency might create between the French and the Canadian Governments should be further explored since the three states concerned appear to regard the Colombo Plan as a means of escaping from complete economic dependence on France. The Associated States are still undecided as to the channel through which they will apply to Canada for this assistance. They may approach us through their mission in Washington or perhaps more likely through the Bureau at Colombo. Needless to say the Canadian Delegation neither encouraged nor discouraged the tentative approaches of these small bewildered delegations.

United Kingdom Territories

The position of the representatives from the United Kingdom territories at the meetings was also of considerable interest. Apparently United Kingdom offers of technical assistance to the Bureau of Technical Co-operation at Colombo are circulated to these territories for information only. As a consequence the UK territories are keenly interested in the possibility of sending trainees to Canada. (Malaya's interest has, of course, been stimulated by the recent successful negotiations with Canada through the Bureau for Technical Co-operation.) However, on the capital assistance side, it is unlikely that Canada will ever be involved in these areas. In the first place, Borneo, Sarawak and Singapore do not now require any capital assistance, at least according to the Country Chapters they submitted. Malaya is a different case but even here there would not appear to be any grounds for Canadian participation in development projects. For example, in the Malayan Country Chapter it is stated that, particularly as a result of the emergency conditions in the country, "further financial help will be necessary" but, the report goes on, "the United Kingdom has undertaken to give help of this nature and there are no grounds for thinking that the rate of development in any of the territories will not be maintained for lack of funds."

India-Pakistan Relations

There were no serious points of difference between the Indian and Pakistan Delegations. The Indian Delegation in their drafts tended to deprecate the use of deficit financing as a means of carrying out development programmes while the Pakistan Delegation[15] emphasized that the import of industrial raw materials under the Colombo Plan distorted existing trade and distribution channels and affected import duty revenue, but did not press the point in the face of Indian support for the principle of raw material aid.

The Pakistan and Indian Delegations joined, however, in welcoming statements which would be useful in meeting the arguments of those in their countries who felt that less expenditure should be made on capital development schemes and more on social welfare measures. At the early meetings of the Colombo Plan, the delegations tended to avoid implying any approval of private capital enterprise. At this meeting the officials seemed willing to include references to the need for encouraging private capital investment, both foreign and domestic.

US

US aid to South and South-East Asia, its delegation emphasized, is on a "missing component" basis but this "missing component" need not necessarily be in the form of goods originating in the United States because contracts are let only after insisted that in many cases deficit financing was both necessary and desirable. The Pakistan Delegation calling for world-wide tenders. In US eyes, the generation of local finance is not considered as an end in itself and the US authorities follow the principle that they should give assistance in meeting that part of the economic development expenditure on particular projects for which the country concerned could not find sufficient foreign exchange. The US Delegation also noted the limitations on the size of US aid, indicating that the public debt structure was a factor which must be taken into account. (The US Delegation was responsible for inflicting "concretize" and "comingle" on a long suffering meeting.) While the US representatives played a prominent role in the conference proceedings, they appeared frequently to be on the defensive and reacted sometimes unnecessarily to any even implied criticism of US aid programmes. In private, the US Delegation suggested that in their view the main purpose of the Consultative Committee meeting was to stimulate publicity and that while the exchange of views at the meetings was helpful, no significant modifications of US economic aid policy would result.

UK

The UK delegation played a less active role in these meetings than on previous occasions when the Colombo Plan has been discussed. Its participation was to some extent inhibited by the United Kingdom's inability to make capital assistance grants to the area. One point which the UK Delegation emphasized, however, was that the United Kingdom was now in a position to produce capital goods for export more easily and more quickly than in the past. Attention was also drawn to the creation of the Commonwealth Development Finance Company which is designed to assist the countries of South and South-East Asia in finding sources of short-term capital loans. The UK Delegation made as much as possible of the release of £60 million to the World Bank for loans to development projects in the Commonwealth. These loans are offered on the condition that they make a substantial contribution to the balance of payments' position of the sterling bloc and that local currency funds are being provided by the receiving countries for similar projects. The UK Delegation also made a statement to the effect that UK capital aid could now be made available to countries other than those of the Commonwealth in the Colombo Plan area on terms equal to those which apply to the Bank loans. This announcement fell rather flat and was specifically welcomed only by the Associated States a day later in a totally inappropriate context.

Nepal

Mention should be made briefly of the unusual problem presented by the participation of Nepal. The Nepalese Delegation attended these meetings with two purposes in mind. The first was to record their appreciation of aid already received from India. The second, by implication, was to obtain possible economic assistance from some other source than India so that their country might not be completely dependent on its closest neighbour. The Nepalese Delegation seemed to have the possibility of Canadian aid very much in their minds but were not of course given any encouragement by the Canadian Delegation.

Observers

There were two problems concerning observers at the Consultative Committee meetings which were informally discussed by delegations but never directly considered by either the officials or the Ministers. The first concerned Japan. During the officials' meetings it was learned that the Indian Delegation had been informally approached concerning observer status for Japan. The reaction to this proposal amongst the delegates took three forms. Some of the Asian delegations, Indonesian in particular, were concerned that if Japan were admitted this would create a precedent which might make the admission of other countries likely. The possibility that France and the Netherlands might subsequently be considered for membership apparently influenced the Asian members. Both the Australian and New Zealand Delegations appeared to be very much opposed to the idea of Japan's membership and indicated that they might formally oppose the motion if it were put to the meeting. The third general reaction was that of the United Kingdom (and also generally speaking of Canada) that if the Asian countries wished Japan to become a member the request could not be refused.[16] In general, however, it was considered undesirable for the officials to take notice of the problem at that late date and the matter was held over and, in the final analysis, never raised at all.

Early in the meeting of the officials, the Canadian Delegation did some informal sounding to discover the reaction to the possibility of admitting a representative of the United Nations Technical Assistance Board. In general, most delegates took a most reserved position, indicating first of all that the subject was being raised far too late and, secondly, that there did not appear to be the same urgency for observer status for UNTAB now that a liaison officer had been attached to the Council for Technical Co-operation at Colombo. In spite of the fact that Sir Alexander MacFarquhar, the UNTAB representative, was in New Delhi throughout the meetings and brought considerable pressure to bear for his admission as an observer the question was never discussed by the officials or even subsequently by the Ministers.

Information Unit

One major recommendation of the meeting of officials concerned the establishment of an information unit to be attached to the Bureau at Colombo. A draft paper for submission to the Ministers was prepared, largely under the guidance of the United Kingdom Delegation which took a very active part in the consideration of this item once it had been raised by the Indian authorities. The draft envisages the establishment of an information section under the Director of the Bureau. The Canadian Delegation stated, during the discussion, that it would not object to the decision reached by the majority but drew attention to some of the difficulties which might arise in carrying out the idea as originally suggested and in co-ordinating the work of the new unit with the existing national and international information services. The United States Delegation was, in general, opposed to the proposal, although prepared to accept whatever the majority agreed. In the opinion of the US Delegation, national programmes of information and publicity for aid to this area would be more effective than anything the proposed unit could produce because material could be tailored to realities of each country's domestic situation. As the US delegate said, segments of the US general public have only recently become aware of the economic problems of South and South-East Asia and might not appreciate information material prepared in this area. We understand that the US fear was that the Colombo Plan information programmes would conflict with the information programmes of the US aid agencies. In any case, the US delegate pointed out, his country (which is not a full member of the Council for Technical Co-operation) would go ahead with its own programme regardless of whether the proposed Colombo Plan organization was established.

It is interesting to note that although Japan is widely considered in this area to be a ward of the United States, the United States Delegation did not appear to have been instructed to support Japan's admission as an observer.

Technical Assistance

The report of the Council for Technical Assistance was very briefly considered by the meeting of officials. It was thought that this report would be discussed in detail by the Council for Technical Co-operation which met following the officials' meetings and that very little could usefully be said. The new Director of the Bureau, Mr. Curtin remarked that four aspects of the report merited special attention. In the first place, there had been an all round increase in the activities of the Bureau, both in numbers of countries participating and in the number of trainee and expert cases completed. There had also been an increase in the amount of technical training equipment supplied by the donor countries. Thirdly, technical and capital assistance programmes were becoming more co-ordinated and, fourthly, there was a much better machinery now for co-operation with the United Nations' agencies.

Conclusions

One of the most encouraging features of the report is the increasing extent to which countries in the area are giving assistance to each other. The Contributions Chapter this year includes brief descriptions of aid offered by the countries of South and South-East Asia to one another. There are sections in this chapter for Ceylon, India, Malaya and Pakistan. The individual Country Chapters also contain repeated references to the increased efforts which the so-called receiving governments are continuing to make in improving domestic economic conditions independently of the foreign aid programmes. As the Colombo Plan develops, it is also becoming clear that its purely Commonwealth character is decreasing, as indeed was envisaged in the early days of the Plan. The important part now played by the United States in providing aid to the area, and the membership of an increasing number of non-Commonwealth members, has had a very natural effect. However, the sense of urgency and the unity of purpose which characterized earlier meetings was not in the least affected at the Delhi meeting of officials by the change in emphasis.

It is clear that Canada will be under pressure from the governments of the area to increase the amount of aid now being made available and to include more countries as beneficiaries. The pressure for increasing amounts of aid can be expected to come particularly from the countries already receiving capital assistance, e.g. India, Pakistan and Ceylon. One of the aims of the Indian Delegation at these meetings was to prove that, in spite of a favourable balance of payments position, their country's domestic unemployment problem necessitates additional external assistance. In the cases of Pakistan and Ceylon, balance of payments difficulties may also be used as an argument for increased external financial assistance in addition to the claim by these two countries that they require help in meeting internal financial obligations. Indonesia, the Associated States, and perhaps Nepal, will probably request capital aid from Canada.

Delegation to the Colombo Plan Consultative Committee to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

LETTER NO. 842 New Delhi, November 27, 1953

CONFIDENTIAL

MINISTERIAL MEETINGS OF THE CONSULTATIVE COMMITTEE OF THE COLOMBO PLAN

Under cover of its letter of October 18, 1953, the delegation forwarded a report on the meetings of officials held in New Delhi between September 28 and October 8.

2. Unfortunately it was not possible to prepare a report on the Ministerial Meetings immediately after the conference concluded. The contents of the enclosed document were, however, discussed with almost all the members of the delegation and the draft itself was approved by Mr. Sinclair during his visit to East Bengal on November 20.

3. Two further reports will be submitted concerning the Consultative Committee meetings.† The first will be a commentary and analysis of the administrative arrangements for the meeting and the second will be a brief note on the composition and character of the delegations which attended.

Rapport des réunions ministérielles tenues à New Delhi du 13 au 18 octobre 1953

Report of Ministerial Meetings Held in New Delhi October 13-18, 1953

CONFIDENTIAL [New Delhi, n.d.]

The Ministerial meetings were opened by Mr. Nehru in a speech which had a considerable effect on the proceedings which followed it. He appealed for an imaginative approach to the problems of the undeveloped countries of South and South-East Asia, suggesting that both donor and receiving countries should approach any difficulties in a flexible attitude. Mr. Nehru emphasized the emotional under-currents which made increased economic development an immediate necessity. The countries of South-East Asia had only recently obtained their political freedom after many years of domination from Europe and were now endeavouring to accomplish in a few short years the strides in industrial and social development which the Western countries had taken over many years.

2. He drew attention to the necessity of applying economic aid in a practical manner suggesting that to a starving man the next meal is the important matter, not some bigger and graver problems. Mr. Nehru also referred to the necessity for the countries of South and South-East Asia to work towards self-reliance and self-discipline in preparing for economic improvements.

3. Of particular interest was Mr. Nehru's repudiation of direct population control measures. He said "talk that our main ill is this tremendous population and that we cannot economically survive or improve our lot unless we put a stop to the growth of population is not justified." (Indian Express October 14)

4. Another significant statement made by Mr. Nehru was that so far as India was concerned, the emphasis on social justice resulted in a tendency towards public ownership in a mixed economy. However, he said, "we are approaching this problem practically and not dogmatically always taking into account that we have to go ahead and we have to render social justice." Mr. Nehru's speech made a very deep impression on the delegates who were incidentally particularly grateful for the fact that he arrived 25 minutes early and spent the time chatting with the foreign representatives.

5. Mr. Casey replied to Mr. Nehru, suggesting that the meetings about to begin could be described as those of the Executive Committee of the Colombo Plan. He also felt that it would be well to remember that the external aid provided to the countries of South and South-East Asia was marginal to the resources which the countries themselves must devote to the task. Mr. Casey remarked on the value of the exchange of views at meetings such as these and concluded by reviving the use of the word "Australasia." Australia, he said, "is close to and has an inevitable and close association with the continent of Asia in which you live."

6. Mr. Mohammed Ali (Finance Minister) who also replied to Mr. Nehru, emphasized the necessity of speed in carrying out economic development projects. He referred to the urgency created by the recent attainment of political freedom by the countries of this area, but felt that economically there were equally good reasons for haste. "Unless the national income in the various countries of Asia could be raised rapidly, there was a danger that any perceptible rise in the standard of living would be swallowed up by the growth of population." Mr. Mohammed Ali also considered that new ways of thought and action and of co-operation amongst themselves must be stimulated by the peoples of South and South-East Asia, and concluded by emphasizing that only through international co-operation could the aims of the Colombo Plan be achieved.

7. The first working session was held that same day and Shri Chintaman Deshmukh, the Indian Minister of Finance was elected Chairman. His election was followed by prepared speeches by each of the delegation leaders. Attached as Annex I is Mr. Sinclair's statement on this occasion.

8. Most of the Ministerial statements were general and formal. It was interesting to note, however, that Mr. Waugh, the Assistant Secretary of State for Economic Affairs in the United States Government, was the only one to refer to communist aggression in Asia, and the necessity of strengthening "the physical, moral and organizational power of the Free World everywhere."

9. At the next meeting on October 14, the leaders of the delegations made general observations on the reports which had been prepared by officials. It is not necessary to consider each of the countries' contributions, and the observations which follow are restricted to those which were more significant.

10. Mr. Mohammed Ali stressed the effects of the fall in raw material prices on the economies of the countries in the area, and suggested that the Colombo Plan was entering on a crucial stage. Many commitments were now being made for long-term development projects from which the countries concerned could not withdraw. He suggested that economic aid should be offered for longer periods than at present and in the form most readily acceptable to the receiving countries. This statement was greeted with surprise that it should be made by a finance minister and a number of delegations pointed out that under a Parliamentary system monies voted for the Colombo Plan were appropriated in yearly amounts and that it was not possible to make long-term commitments. Mr. Sinclair's contribution to this debate is attached as Annex II.†

11. Mr. Casey proposed that the meeting consider ways in which the fluctuations of raw material prices could be ironed out. He thought that the Colombo Plan Consultative Committee should make recommendations in this connection. His suggestion was opposed by most delegations on the grounds that the Colombo Plan was not a suitable body for the task which must in any case be conducted on a commodity and world-wide basis not possible at Colombo Plan meetings.

12. When the meeting settled down to the consideration of the report paragraph by paragraph some changes were made in the opening chapters and in the concluding chapter. One of the amendments which Canada took a part in arranging resulted in additional emphasis being given to the desirability of attracting private investment to new industries in the recipient countries. A sub-committee consisting of representatives from the United States, Canadian, United Kingdom, Indian and Pakistan delegations together with the IBRD and ECAFE observers, redrafted two paragraphs on this point, which were finally accepted by the general body.

13. One general difference in approach between the officials' meeting and the Ministerial meeting emerged on the problem of reconciling the conflicting claims of expenditure on social welfare and expenditure on capital projects. At the officials' meeting there had been a tendency to insert provisions which would justify the inability of governments in the area to make large-scale expenditure on social uplift schemes when development resources are limited. At the Ministerial meeting, as perhaps one might have expected, there was a greater emphasis on the need for social welfare expenditure (particularly from the Indonesian and the Indian delegations). There were other evidences of difference between the outlook of delegations at the officials' and at the Ministerial meetings. For example the United Kingdom delegation which had been very active in the preparation of the report came out at the Ministerial meetings with criticism of the report's form, largely, we understand, at the instance of Sir Leslie Rowan.

14. The debate on the Country Chapters which was not productive, was featured by a most entertaining speech by the leader of the Burmese delegation in which he concluded by saying: "If therefore my colleagues are now satisfied with the Report as it stands, as I hope they are, I will ask them to congratulate — not me or my delegation — but themselves."

15. Mr. Waugh, the United States delegate, made a noteworthy contribution at one point when he stated that the new Administration was anxious first of all to put its own house in order, balance its budget and make sure of the economic stability of the United States as a basic contribution to world economic stability before embarking on any large scale plans for more foreign aid than was now being offered by the USA.

16. There was some difference in the views which some delegations took of the purpose of the Consultative Committee meetings. Mr. Casey, for example, seemed to feel, as did some of the representatives from the undeveloped countries, that the Consultative Committee could reach important decisions which could affect economic aid programmes throughout the area. Other countries, particularly the United States, seemed to consider that the meeting provided at most an opportunity for exchange of views and that the bilateral nature of the economic aid programme should be emphasized.

17. The Ministers adopted without much comment the proposal to establish an Information Unit at Colombo, and briefly and inconclusively considered the technical assistance programme, agreeing that the report of the Council for Technical Co-operation "could not be altered by the Consultative Committee except when the Council desires to do so."

18. At the conclusion of the meetings the invitation extended on behalf of the Government of Canada to hold the next meeting of the Consultative Committee in Ottawa was accepted.

19. It was generally considered by most delegates that the Ministerial meetings had accomplished the purposes for which they had been called. It was however recognized that these purposes are fairly limited in scope and that the principal value of the meetings, as Mr. Casey had remarked on the opening day, is the exchange of information and views between individuals and delegations.

ANNEXE I
ANNEX I

Rapport de la deuxième réunion du Comité consultatif du Plan de Colombo
Report of Second Meeting of Colombo Plan Consultative Committee

CONFIDENTIAL [New Delhi, October 14, 1953]

MR. JAMES SINCLAIR'S SPEECH

Mr. James Sinclair referring to the interesting remarks made by Mr. Mohammed Ali, stated that while it was undoubtedly desirable for long range planning to know the total amount of money which will be available, it was not possible for any country with a Parliamentary system of Government to make available funds for more than one year. In his remarks he mentioned that the procedure of annual allotments had led to waste in few cases, as the amount had to be spent within the year. The Canadian Parliament had, therefore, approved of the proposal to carry-forward the unspent balances out of the annual allotment earmarked for Colombo Plan projects. He considered that the idea of setting up a co-ordinating committee was a good one, but such a committee could not give any directions and could help only in eliminating overlappings. Referring to the question of procurement mentioned in Mr. Mohammed Ali's statement, Mr. James Sinclair stated that it was the natural desire on the part of the country providing assistance to supply goods of its own manufacture. Continuing, he stated that in Canada it is considered that in the projects, which Canada is helping, goods manufactured in Canada should be used. He, however, mentioned that it was realized that the primary test should be the extent to which the goods would help economic development. It was fully realized that for some goods Canada might be a high price area. Therefore their approach to this problem had not been rigid. He cited examples of certain components being supplied from another country when the basic part of the equipment was supplied from Canada. He agreed with the remarks of Mr. Mohammed Ali, regarding the frustration created when technical assistance was provided in excess of the amount which could be absorbed usefully.

ECONOMIC MATTERS

11. Colombo Plan — Programme for Ceylon

Economic Division: During the past week, discussions have taken place between representatives of the Departments concerned and Mr. R. Coomaraswamy, a senior Ceylon Government official on various new projects which the Ceylon Government is proposing for Canadian capital assistance. As a result of these discussions, the Ceylon request has been reduced from about $3.5 million to approximately $2.6 million through the elimination of certain projects, including the provision of a flour mill and the scaling down of certain others. The revised programme being submitted by Ceylon is made up as follows:—

	Canadian Dollars (approx.)
Further fisheries development	450,000.
Rural road construction	450,000.
Provision of Polytechnic Institute	500,000.
2 diesel locomotives	425,000.
Airport lighting	250,000.
Pumping sets and well-boring machines (scaled down from 250 to 25 sets)	185,000.
15 agricultural machinery maintenance workshops	225,000.
Pest control (adjusted to pilot programme by reducing from 40 to 20 units)	180,000.
	2,665,000.

Of the above request, expenditure of $1,785[,000] is being favourably recommended for consideration by Ministers. The projects making up the recommended programme are:— rural road construction, provision of a Polytechnic Institute, 2 diesel locomotives, pumping sets and the 15 agricultural maintenance workshops. In addition to the above, it has been recommended that Cabinet approve in principle the extension of aid to Ceylon for further fisheries development and for pest control in an amount to be determined later when further investigation about the feasibility and desirability of these 2 projects has been undertaken.

The proposal to provide a lighting system for Ceylon's main international airport is not being favourably recommended. Assistance for rural road construction and the building and equipment of a Polytechnic Institute is required in the form of local funds and it is proposed that Canada should supply commodities which, when sold in Ceylon, would generate the necessary amount of counterpart (rupee) funds. In this connection, the Ceylon authorities have asked that Canada supply flour and this request is being put to Ministers for their consideration.

If Ministers are prepared to consider favourably the programme as recommended the amount involved would not be out of line with the amount of assistance offered last year and would permit of [sic] reasonable programme for India and Pakistan from the balance of Colombo Plan funds available. The Ceylon authorities have emphasized the urgency of their need for Canadian assistance in the light of the serious deterioration which has taken place in their internal and external financial position.

COLOMBO PLAN; 1952-53 PROGRAMME FOR CEYLON

3. The Secretary of State for External Affairs, referring to discussion at the meeting of July 6th, 1952, said a report had now been received from Mr. H.R. Soublière of the Canadian Hosier Engineering Company, who had been sent to Ceylon to inspect, on behalf of the Canadian government, the rural electrification project for the Gal Oya area. Mr. Soublière had recommended the project insofar as the southern portion of the area was concerned.

An explanatory memorandum was circulated.

4. The Cabinet noted the report by the Secretary of State for External Affairs on the 1952-53 Colombo Plan programme for Ceylon and, —

(a) approved provision of transmission lines, sub-stations and related equipment in the southern part of the Gal Oya development area in Ceylon, together with the supervisory services of a Canadian engineering firm, up to a maximum cost of $600,000; and,

(b) agreed that the government of Ceylon be informed that, at a later stage, when the need for power in the northern part of the Gal Oya area had been established, consideration would be given to the supply of additional electrical transmission equipment for this area.

COLOMBO PLAN; PROGRAMME FOR CEYLON, GAL OYA PROJECT

11. The Minister of National Health and Welfare, as Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs, said approval had been given, in August of this year, for the provision of transmission lines, sub-stations and related equipment for the southern part of the Gal Oya development area, together with the supervisory services of a Canadian engineering firm, up to a maximum of $600,000. It had also been agreed that the government of Ceylon would be informed that consideration would be given to the supply of additional transmission equipment for the project at a later stage, when the need for power in the northern part of the area had been established.

Subsequently, Canadian authorities had been informed that the government of Ceylon had unexpectedly received delivery of transmission equipment which had been ordered in the United Kingdom some time before an approach had been made to the Canadian government under the Colombo Plan. The long delay had led the Ceylon government to believe that no equipment would be delivered from the UK and it had felt justified in seeking aid from Canada. When the equipment actually arrived, Ceylon authorities saw no alternative but to make effective use of it as originally intended in the first part of the Gal Oya transmission scheme. Since this was part of the project originally approved for Canadian aid, the Ceylon government now sought Canadian assistance in the erection of the northern sections of the scheme.

The new request had been examined by the Canadian inspection engineer. Approximately 20 miles of additional lines, a regulator and small sub-station would be required to carry out the new proposal. Agreement had been reached at the official level in Canada and at the governmental level in Ceylon to use Canadian assistance to carry out the project. There was no suggestion that lines be carried to provide lighting for settlers, which was the principal objection to the earlier request for lines to supply power. The new proposal would cost approximately $760,000, an increase of about $160,000 over the amount already sanctioned. It would, however, remain within the Canadian allotment of $2 million to Ceylon under the Colombo Plan.

It was recommended that the new project be approved.

An explanatory memorandum had been circulated.

(Memorandum, Secretary of State for External Affairs, Dec. 9, 1953 — Cab. Doc. 326-53)†

12. The Cabinet agreed that authority be given to provide transmission lines, substations and related equipment, together with the supervisory services of a Canadian engineering firm up to a maximum cost of $760,000, for assistance, under the Colombo Plan, in the Gal Oya project, Ceylon, in lieu of that part of the project which had already been approved.

BOMBAY STATE TRANSPORT

Reference: Our letter No. 85 of January 22, 1953.†

You will recall that in my letter under reference I informed you that we would shortly be sending forward our views on the lessons which might be learned from our experience with the Bombay State Transport Corporation and which might be applied in any future examination of projects qualifying for our aid under the Colombo Plan.

2. We have now received from Mr. Rankin, who was closely associated with the protracted and tedious negotiations with the Corporation, the attached memorandum dated February 10. I think you will agree that Mr. Rankin[17] has done a very able job. We concur with his recommendations. All are important but it seems to us that Nos. 1 and 12 are perhaps the most important: No. 1 because, if it is followed it will mean that the mere fact that we do not deal with local state organizations will keep us free of the political and administrative entanglements which such relations involve; No. 12 because it seems to us that it is extremely important that we should be able to assure the Canadian tax-payer that the equipment which is bought with his dollars is being adequately protected.

3. We are sending a copy of Mr. Rankin's report to Mr. Cavell in Colombo.

Memorandum from Commercial Secretary in Bombay to Office of High Commissioner in India

CONFIDENTIAL [Bombay], February 10, 1953

COLOMBO PLAN

It was agreed during my visit to New Delhi that it would be useful at this juncture to record our experiences in connection with the application of Colombo Plan assistance to projects in India as a useful guide in any further negotiations.

My association with Colombo Plan has been primarily with the Bombay State Road Transport Corporation. I have reviewed my file covering the numerous complications that have arisen in the last 18 months and as a result have the following comments to make:

1. When State Government agencies are recipients of Colombo Plan assistance from Canada, arrangements with the Government of India should be made at the outset, designating clearly the State Officials responsible for the discussion of details. As our dealings are with the Government of India, the appropriate line of communication can break down and confusion arise when State Government officials come into the picture.

Example: P.V.R. Rao, Finance Secretary, Government of Bombay and Major General G.D. Young, General Manager, Bombay State Road Transport Corporation, made arrangements to proceed to Canada to finalize the aid for the Bombay State Road Transport Corporation without first being accredited by the Government of India to act on its behalf. Similarly, discussions took place with these and other State Government officials of which the Central Government had not been apprised simultaneously. Note also the present proposed visit to Canada of Mr. Bhaunik of the Electricity Division of the Government of West Bengal in connection with hydro-electric equipment for Mayurakshi.

2. We should avoid granting assistance by provision of equipment from Canada where an indigenous industry exists or facilities are even partially available locally.

Example: Negotiations were well advanced with the Bombay State Road Transport Corporation before we realized that Premier Automobiles, Bombay, intended resisting the provision of vehicles from Canada, other than from their principals, to the extent of exerting influential political pressure. The announcement of the Indian Tariff Commission inquiry into the automotive industry of this country at about the same time was also an unfortunate coincidence.

3. We should avoid a project because of highly regarded personnel in the management whose association may be suddenly terminated.

Example: The existence of Major-General G.D. Young, General Manager, and Commander Arthur van Rhee, Director and Manager of the Central Workshop and Assembly Depot, had considerable influence on our recommendation of the Bombay State Road Transport Corporation as a project worthy of Colombo Plan assistance. At the same time as the arrival of the vehicles from Canada, General Young and Commander van Rhee received notice of the termination of their contracts.

4. We should avoid projects where our aid may be used upon receipt in ways other than originally intended.

Example: It was considered that the principles of the Colombo Plan were being met in the case of the Bombay State Road Transport Corporation in providing vehicles that would improve the inadequate transport facilities existing in this State. Since the arrival of the first shipment of vehicles, however, the new Chairman of the Bombay State Road Transport Corporation, in order to avoid the threatened strike of private operators, has now decided to use the trucks primarily on Government of Bombay haulage jobs within the city of Bombay.[19]

5. We should avoid the provision of assistance to projects which will not be complete projects as a result of such aid — risks exist when the balance, on which the merits of the project as a whole may depend, may be abandoned or delayed for one reason or another.

Example: The 835 trucks now being delivered to the Bombay State Road Transport Corporation would only nationalize about 15% of the State freight road transport. The new Chairman of the Corporation has abandoned or postponed the nationalization of freight traffic as he now considers it unlikely that additional vehicles will be forthcoming in the foreseeable future.

6. We should avoid projects which are partially nationalized and where policy indicates the whole will become nationalized to the cost or detriment of private industry.

Example: When the Bombay State Road Transport Corporation was first formed and took over the passenger services in the State, private bus operators were compensated. It was assumed that similar procedure would be followed in the case of nationalization of freight transport, but it has now been announced that freight transport nationalization, when it takes place will be done without compensation to private operators. The Private Operators' Association have already made reference to Canada's part in depriving them of their livelihood.

7. We should attempt to avoid projects where exactly similar projects exist in other States.

Example: Several other states in the Indian Union with nationalized transport corporations have questioned why Bombay State has received aid in preference to themselves.

8. We should avoid projects where lack of proper maintenance of Canadian equipment may reflect on Canadian industry to the detriment of our private trade potential.

Example: The new Chairman of the Bombay State Transport Corporation has scrapped the maintenance schedule of the transport fleet which the former General

this is news!

Manager has taken two years to build up. The quick deterioration of Canadian vehicles now entering the fleet which may result from inadequate maintenance programmes will not be a very good advertisement for the Canadian automotive industry, to say nothing of the wastage of our aid.

9. We should avoid, or qualify preliminary discussions with a single Canadian supplier when other Canadian suppliers of the same equipment also exist and where eventually tenders are likely to be called.

Example: From the outset, the Ford Motor Co. of India negotiated with the Bombay State Road Transport Corporation long before the project was approved, to the point where it was assumed that Ford would be the suppliers. Eventually, it became necessary to call tenders from the three largest Canadian automotive concerns and, although Ford were the successful tenderers, there might have been some difficulties with the Company if the results of the tenders had been different.

10. We should avoid projects where doubt exists that Canadian equipment will be utilized within a reasonable time after delivery.

Example: Recently, the new Chairman of the Bombay State Road Transport Corporation had in mind withholding acceptance of the Canadian vehicles for some months until the nationalization issue had been solved. I think it is highly desirable that aid should not be stored, both because of the uneconomic features of such equipment not being put to use and because of the rapid deterioration of equipment in this part of the world when left unattended.

11. We should avoid projects which in part rely on other equipment not available in Canada or clarify in advance if offshore purchases will or will not be considered.

Example: The Bombay State Road Transport Corporation insisted on diesel engines for the Canadian vehicles and such engines are not produced in Canada. Many weeks' delay resulted on the insistence of the Bombay State Road Transport Corporation for diesel engines before it was decided to use Canadian funds to purchase Perkins diesels from the United Kingdom.

12. We should insist on detailed contracts covering all aspects of our assistance, including the following:

(i) a schedule of deliveries acceptable both to the Canadian manufacturer and the Indian recipients,

(ii) a clause covering the utilization of such equipment in accordance with the principles of the Colombo Plan, including assurance that there will be no delay in putting the equipment to use after it has been received,

(iii) the contract should state specifically the equipment being provided and which Government is responsible for ancillary equipment,

(iv) the contract should clearly specify the Government responsible for freight, assembly charges, customs duties, packing, clearance etc,

(v) a clause should be included providing for guarantees by the responsible government that the equipment will be properly maintained and serviced,

(vi) a draft copy of the contract should be submitted to the High Commissioner for suggestions based on local knowledge of peculiar conditions which may exist.

Example: The terms of the contract for the provision of vehicles to the Bombay State Road Transport Corporation are not known but all of the above points have arisen in one form or another long after the project was approved.

13. It is also suggested that the Government of India should be persuaded to give a list of suggested projects early in each fiscal year, in order that we can investigate and report detailed background information which will simplify the selection of the appropriate project or projects on which our funds should be spent.

14. A greater flow of information from Ottawa and speedier replies would be of assistance to all of us in India. During our first year of Colombo Plan, our activities have been on a purely ad hoc basis. A speedy and efficient system of co-ordination and co-operation between the two departments involved in Ottawa and the two offices in India through the proper channels of communication would seem to be indicated.

(a) that authorization be given for the expenditure of $2.2 million for the provision of 40 locomotive boilers to India under the Colombo Plan; the Indian government to establish a counterpart fund of a size that would be appropriate in the light of arrangements for financing the Indian railways, and other relevant considerations;

(b) that the hydro-electric project at Warsak, Pakistan, be approved in principle as a suitable project for Canadian Colombo Plan aid, and $3.4 million be allocated out of the 1952-53 vote for provision of electrical equipment for it; the Pakistan government to be informed that additional allotments would be made in subsequent years, within the limits of amounts available to Pakistan out of funds appropriated by Parliament for the Colombo Plan; possible arrangements for a counterpart fund to be made, dependent on considerations as outlined; and,

(c) that authorization be given for the expenditure of Colombo Plan funds, up to $170,000, to provide Beaver aircraft and related equipment to Pakistan to be used in the locust control programme.

Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Economic Division

COLOMBO PLAN ASSISTANCE TO INDIA

Mr. Saksena, the High Commissioner for India, called on me yesterday to take up a number of matters. When he had disposed of these he introduced the topic of the Colombo Plan and said he wanted to have a frank talk with me on this subject. He said he felt that our attitude was a too restrictive one. He felt that we should permit more freely the use of Colombo Plan funds for the purchase of wheat to be shipped to India. Their experience had been that the prices of industrial equipment available in Canada for Indian requirements were often double the prices at which similar equipment could be obtained from European sources of supply. When the equipment was supplied to the local undertakings and they were charged up by the Indian Government with the cost price, they complained that this upset the whole basis of their calculations. As a result very often the government of India was forced to subsidize by agreeing to charge the local undertaking with the cost at which they could have acquired the equipment in some European country.

This means that the extent to which India can benefit from the Colombo Plan is limited so long as the assistance must take the form of Canadian capital equipment. On the other hand, if wheat is supplied to India under the Colombo Plan this saves the government of India exchange, which they can use for the purchase of industrial equipment in Europe. The counterpart funds created by the sale of the wheat in India can be used for approved projects so that the whole economic development of India is furthered much more than would be the case if Canadian industrial equipment was supplied at a cost greater than that at which the industrial equipment can be obtained in Europe.

I explained to Mr. Saksena our reluctance to supply without return any of the basic products, the export of which supports the whole Canadian economy. I explained to him the danger of creating a precedent and told him that, if we once commenced supplying wheat to India freely under the Colombo Plan, it would be difficult to resist requests for the supply of wheat free to other countries. Once this was done we would also not be able to resist similar demands from other sections of Canada which were experiencing difficulties in the disposal of their surplus products abroad.

Mr. Saksena was not convinced by the arguments I put forward since he thought that the Colombo Plan could be made a special case without creating any precedent leading to claims from other countries or from the domestic producers of other products.

I told Mr. Saksena that I would report his views but I was not too hopeful of any relaxation in our present policy, except in the case of dire necessity when good reasons could be advanced for the supply of wheat to India under the Colombo Plan.

COLOMBO PLAN; PROGRAMMES FOR INDIA AND PAKISTAN; CONSULTATIVE COMMITTEE MEETINGS; FOURTH CANADIAN CONTRIBUTION

52. The Secretary of State for External Affairs, submitted proposals related to the programmes of India and Pakistan under the Colombo Plan, meetings of the Consultative Committee and the fourth Canadian contribution to the plan.

Explanatory notes had been circulated.

(Minister's memoranda, Sept. 4 and 8, 1953 — Cab. Docs. 190,† 191,† 192† and 195-53)

53. The Cabinet agreed, in connection with the Colombo Plan:

(a) that the Umtru Hydro-Electric project in India, be approved in principle at an estimated cost of $1.2 million for generating and distribution equipment and $2.1 million in local cost, the latter to be met from counterpart funds generated through the sale of industrial raw materials; final approval to be deferred pending receipt of a report on a full technical investigation of the project by Canadian consulting engineers;

(b) that from 60 to 65 steam locomotives be supplied to the Indian government, if required, within a total cost of $11 million, and that copper bars and aluminum wire rods be made available in an amount of $5 million; it being understood that proceeds of the sale of locomotives, copper bars and aluminum rods within India would be used to set up counterpart funds to be expended on approved projects under the Plan;

(c) that $3.5 million from Colombo Plan funds appropriated for 1953-54 be set aside for the Warsak Hydro-Electric project in northwestern Pakistan to cover the estimated cost of the provision of consulting engineering services and light construction equipment for the project; it being understood that, in principle and subject to future appropriation of required funds by Parliament, total Canadian participation in the Warsak project would be as follows:

(i) provision of electrical generating and related equipment at an estimated maximum cost of $14 million over the period of construction;

(ii) provision of Canadian consulting engineering services for the re-design and supervision of the construction of the project, at a maximum cost of $3 million;

(iii) provision of reasonable amounts of Canadian light construction equipment; and

(iv) the allocation of the rupee equivalent of the $10 million gift of wheat to Pakistan to help meet the local costs of the project.

(d) that the Canadian delegation to the meeting of the Consultative Committee, to be held in New Delhi during October, be headed by the Minister of Fisheries and include officials of the Departments of Finance and External Affairs, as recommended by the Secretary of State for External Affairs;

(e) that the Canadian delegation to the October meetings of the Consultative Committee be authorized to invite the Committee to hold its 1954 meetings in Canada, if it was felt that such an invitation would be welcomed by participating countries and would contribute to the continued success of the Colombo Plan; and

(f) that the Canadian delegation to the October meetings of the Consultative Committee be authorized to state that the Canadian government proposed to ask Parliament for a further appropriation of funds, for economic and technical assistance to the Colombo Plan in 1954-55, in an amount comparable to that appropriated in previous years, on the understanding that projects suitable for Canadian assistance would be forthcoming from the countries in the area.

COLOMBO PLAN; ADDITIONAL LOCOMOTIVE BOILERS FOR INDIA

30. The Prime Minister said that, on March 24th, 1953, the Cabinet agreed to supply 40 locomotive boilers to India at an estimated cost of $2.2 million. Subsequent negotiations with the Canadian supplier indicated that the boilers could be provided for $2,080,000. It had now been ascertained that the cost would only be $1,389,800. In the circumstances, the Indian government had requested 10 additional boilers. The total cost, including additional charges, would still be less than the $2,080,000 set aside for this project. It was recommended that the request be approved.

An explanatory memorandum was circulated.

(Memorandum, Secretary of State for External Affairs, Nov. 17, 1953 — Cab. Doc. 301-53)†

31. The Cabinet agreed that authority be given to provide 10 additional locomotive boilers to India under the provisions of the Colombo Plan; the cost to be financed from the amount of $2,080,000 already set aside for this project.

COLOMBO PLAN; STEAM LOCOMOTIVES FOR INDIA

12. The Secretary of State for External Affairs, referring to discussion at the meeting of September 9th, 1953, said the programme of assistance for India had included between 60 and 65 steam locomotives valued at about $11 million. Owing to cost of retooling, the unit price for these locomotives manufactured in Canada would be somewhat higher than elsewhere. The Indian authorities, on being so advised, had proposed that the order be increased to 120 locomotives, which could be supplied at an estimated unit cost of $168,745, or about $5,000 less than with the smaller order. If this request were approved, the additional cost of the larger number would be met from funds to be made available for Colombo Plan purposes in the next fiscal year. The provision of steam locomotives for India would make a significant contribution to the Indian transport system and would provide rupee counterpart funds which would be useful on other agreed development projects.

An explanatory memorandum was circulated.

13. The Cabinet agreed,

(a) that 120 WP-type steam locomotives, with five per cent spare boilers be provided to India as Canadian aid under the Colombo Plan, at an estimated cost of $21 million; and,

(b) that the cost of this assistance, over and above the $11 million already approved by Cabinet, be financed from funds for Colombo Plan purposes which parliament was being asked to approve for 1954-55.

LETTER NO. 358 Karachi, May 29, 1953

COLOMBO PLAN: CANADA'S ASSISTANCE TO PAKISTAN 1951-52

The occasion of the visit of Messrs Cavell and Wright has prompted us to prepare a short review of the progress in implementing the Canadian capital assistance to Pakistan under the Colombo Plan in 1951-52.

[20] Le document 620./Document 620.

2. The programme for 1951-52, as you will recall, was made up as follows:

Cement Plant (Thal)	$5.0 million
Railway Sleepers	2.8
Thal Livestock Development Research Farm	.2
Aerial Photographic Survey	2.0
	$10.0 million

Cement Plant

3. I am pleased to report that plans for implementing the Canadian decision to provide a cement plant for the Thal have made substantial progress in recent weeks. Messrs Englander, Isbister and Temple of COPL arrived as scheduled on May 5, and after consultations with ourselves and the Pakistan Industrial Development Corporation in Karachi, left for Daudkhel. They have lately returned to Karachi and report reasonably satisfactory progress in preparing the way for the erection of the plant itself. There will be some difficulties over the question of accommodation at the site of the cement plant, but I am confident that these can be ironed out in consultation with the Pakistan Industrial Development Corporation which has so far proved to be an exceedingly cooperative and efficient organization.

Railway Sleepers

4. We have never been sure when to expect the railway sleepers. We understand from your recent letters that the sleepers will be shipped from Canada this summer. Any further details you can provide, particularly concerning the first shipment, would be very much appreciated as we hope to arrange suitable publicity when they are unloaded at Karachi.

Thal Farm

5. The Thal farm project (see my letter No. 303 of May 9th†), after a very delayed and shaky start finally seems to be making substantial progress. As you know Mr. Neil A. MacFarlane and his wife are already in Lahore and we hope to hear from him in the near future giving details of the arrangements being made for the reception of the Canadian agricultural machinery. We were very much impressed by Mr. MacFarlane, and his wife, as were the officials of FAO and the Ministry of Economic Affairs to whom he was introduced. We feel that he will make a very definite contribution not only to the development of the Thal Livestock Development and Research Farm, but also to the agricultural machinery problems of the Thal as a whole. As perhaps you also know, Mr. Nick O'Nians, a Canadian Massey Harris tractor salesman and his wife have been living either in Lahore or Quidabad for over a year, and we feel that a young couple like the MacFarlanes should be able to make a success of their stay in the Punjab.

Photographic Survey

6. Undoubtedly the photographic survey has been the most successful element in Canada's capital assistance programme for Pakistan up to the present time. Mr. Henderson and his group have made a very favourable impression in Quetta and in Karachi and the work which they have been able to do up to the present is winning friends not only for their company but for the Canadian Colombo Plan as a whole. On April 25th Messrs Cavell, Wright and Hadwen were flown to Quetta by the Photographic Survey Corporation in company with Mr. W.H. Godfrey. They had an opportunity of looking over the workshop which the company has set up in Quetta, and were impressed by the efficiency and despatch with which the operations are being conducted.

7. 80% of the preliminary flying and photography on the project has been done and 65% of the photography has been verified including the flying of any necessary gaps in the preliminary photography. It is expected that all the flying on the present contract will be finished by October at the latest, although the chief pilot believes that if the weather is kind most of the flying would be done by the end of July. Mr. Henderson is already making preliminary arrangements for the arrival of the geologists who will begin the ground survey once the mapping has been completed in Toronto.

8. One obvious general comment on the 1951-52 programme is that it appears to take nearly two years before the results of capital projects we have undertaken begin to show. This is a fact which it would be well to bear in mind in committing expenditures for large scale, long term projects, especially as the end of the Colombo Plan period approaches.

COLOMBO PLAN: CANADA'S CAPITAL ASSISTANCE TO PAKISTAN, 1952-53

The programme for 1952-53 was made up as follows:

Wheat	$5.0 million
Warsak Hydro Electric	3.4
3 Beaver Aircraft	.17
Cement Plant (Thal, to complete original allocation 1951-52)	.5
	$9.07 million

2. A review of the 1952-53 capital assistance programme for Pakistan under the Colombo Plan can only be very tentative so early in 1953. As you will recall, the programme was not finally settled until just before the end of the fiscal year 1952-53.

Wheat

3. The most important element in this programme was the grant of $5. million of Canadian wheat which was confirmed in your telegram No. 32 of February 20, 1953. We have been informed by the Ministry of Food and Agriculture that the first shipments of this wheat should begin to arrive in Karachi very shortly. As soon as definite dates for the arrival of the ships are available we propose to make arrangements for publicizing the Canadian contribution to meet Pakistan's wheat crisis.

4. We have discussed on several occasions with the Pakistan authorities the question of how the counterpart funds arising from the sale of this wheat will be used. These counterpart funds will be used on development schemes as agreed by the Governments of Pakistan and Canada. On May 26 we received from Mr. M. Ayub, Joint Secretary in the Ministry of Finance, a letter advising us that a formal communication on the subject of the use of these counterpart funds would be sent to us in the near future through the Ministry of Economic Affairs. It is our understanding that a part of these counterpart funds may be used to meet the internal costs of the Warsak hydro-electric project.

Warsak

5. The decision of the Canadian Government to provide $3.4 million out of the 1952-53 vote for the Warsak project was greeted in Karachi and in the Frontier with much enthusiasm. When Mr. Cavell and Mr. Wright visited the Frontier they were accorded a very hearty welcome for this reason alone. During their visit to Peshawar from April 28 – May 1st Mr. Cavell, Mr. Wright, and Mr. Hadwen, after meetings with the NWFP[21] engineers, were driven up to the Warsak site where a further conference was held with the engineers directly in charge. I enclose some general information about the Warsak scheme which may be of interest to you in obtaining an over-all picture of the scheme.† At these meetings a number of problems emerged which we subsequently discussed with Mr. Nazir Ahmed, Secretary of the Central Ministry of Industries and others in Lahore and Karachi. For example, the Central Government in Karachi has not yet decided who will be responsible for administration and execution of the project. It is likely, however, that the Central Engineering Authority will assume over-all responsibility using the NWFP Engineering Department as its agent. The question of whether a Canadian firm of consulting engineers would be accepted to guide the project is not yet decided, although Mr. Cavell indicated that it might be possible to arrange these services under the technical assistance programme.

6. A second problem is that of obtaining sufficient internal finances to begin the project. As a matter of fact when we first discussed Canadian assistance for Warsak with the Central Engineering Authority we were asked to consider the internal costs as well. You will of course be familiar with the distribution between internal and external costs from the H.G. Acres report. We also discussed with the engineering authorities in the NWFP and in Karachi the possibility of working out a technical assistance programme for training Pakistanis in the various aspects of the Warsak development. Perhaps most important of all we were given a list of equipment which would be required from Canada according to present plans for the first year of the Warsak scheme. Unfortunately there was at the time only one copy of this list available, and it was given informally to Mr. Cavell in anticipation of a firm request from the Ministry of Economic Affairs (not yet received). More detailed information on the requirements of the project during the first year are available in the Acres report and no doubt the Acres engineers in conjunction with the Pakistan engineers will have little difficulty in finalizing a suitable list of equipment. To some extent this list will depend on who receives the contract for the construction work because there would be little point in bringing out construction equipment from Canada if it were available in Pakistan. The sooner a Canadian engineer comes to Pakistan to work out these details with the Pakistan authorities the better.[22]

7. Another feature of the Warsak project is the fact that in providing the original funds to begin work at the dam site the Canadian Government has undertaken the responsibility of considering further or continuing assistance for Warsak by giving Colombo Plan aid in succeeding years. It is almost certain that work on the project will not be completed by 1957 which is the date on which the Colombo Plan is at present slated to end. The decision to assist Warsak out of Colombo Plan in the coming years will undoubtedly limit our capacity to participate in other large scale projects, for example the Mianwali hydro-electric scheme.

Aircraft

8. I am afraid there is little comment to be made now on the decision to ship three Beaver aircraft for assistance to Pakistan in anti-locust operations. These aircraft, we understand, will be shipped in June. We will advise you of plans for their use as soon as these have been finalized by the Pakistan authorities.

Cement Plant

9. No comment is required on the additional $500,000 provided for the cement plant in the 1952-53 vote.

UNITED STATES ECONOMIC AID TO PAKISTAN

A United States economic aid agreement with Pakistan covering the next six months to July, 1954, for $22 million was signed yesterday in Karachi. As usual, and in contrast to the quiet manner in which approximately $10,400,000 of Canadian Colombo Plan funds is annually voted for aid to Pakistan, the signature of this United States agreement was given maximum press publicity here. This showmanship parallels that accompanying the gift of 700,000 tons of American wheat to Pakistan, after our 110,000 tons of Canadian wheat had been already shipped to Pakistan with little fanfare.

2. Although public fanfare is not a forte of Canada, as it is in the United States, I think that the Canadian authorities concerned might give consideration to the political and Commonwealth value of greater publicity and even more demonstrativeness in Canadian assistance to or co-operation with Pakistan. At this end, we have taken every opportunity within our limited means of staff and money, to get publicity for local Canadian undertakings; but we have no public relations officer and few facilities. There seems to be very little publicity of the American type organized in Canada itself. Shipments of Canadian Colombo Plan equipment have been arriving here without our being informed by Ottawa; and in some cases we learn of their arrival only through our contacts in the local Ministries or through the local Colombo Plan experts themselves.

3. I am aware of the Departmental views, which I fully share, that in our information work we should not expatiate on our Canadian superabundance, our patronage or even our charitable generosity. These may have a psychological reaction in this sensitive country. At the same time, Canada is so highly esteemed here, and Canadian gifts or assistance are so free from any motives other than sympathetic interest and fellow-feeling toward Pakistan as a member of the Commonwealth family, that any gesture of friendship, if reasonably presented, is appreciated; and suitable publicity need not be too subdued. "Timeo Danaos ut donae ferentes" has never applied to Canadian aid.

CONFIDENTIAL [Ottawa], February 13, 1953

WHEAT FOR PAKISTAN

You will be aware of the reports which we have received recently from our own High Commissioner and from the United Kingdom High Commissioner in Pakistan concerning the serious food prospect which that country is again facing this year. I understand that Sir Zafrullah Khan has also brought this situation to the attention of the United States Government and that the United States authorities also take a very serious view of the prospect.

2. I am attaching a copy of a telegram which arrived yesterday from our High Commissioner in Karachi reporting an urgent request from the Pakistan authorities that Canada should provide the balance of the tentative allocation of Colombo Plan funds to Pakistan† (approximately $9,000,000) in the form of wheat. I am also attaching an informal record of a conversation which Mr. Ritchie of the Economic Division had yesterday afternoon with the Pakistan High Commissioner.† We shall no doubt be receiving formal representations to the same effect from the Pakistan High Commissioner here during the course of the day.

3. You will recall that Cabinet decided on September 13, 1952, after a careful consideration of alternative possibilities, that Pakistan should be permitted to devote $5,000,000 of its portion of our Colombo Plan funds to the purchase of wheat "during the fiscal year 1952-53". In view of the fact that considerable time has elapsed since this offer was made, I would suggest that Cabinet be asked, if necessary, to confirm that this offer is still open. I would hope that you would have an opportunity to discuss this matter with the Prime Minister before your departure.[24]

4. The desire of the Pakistan Government to finance its necessary wheat purchases without encroaching on Colombo Plan funds is evident from the fact that it has spent some $17,000,000 from its own limited resources during the past six weeks or so in procurement of wheat from Canada. This evidence of the effort which Pakistan has made to meet its own needs, combined with the seriousness of the food prospect, would seem to warrant at least this measure of assistance.

5. On political grounds it would seem most desirable to do what we can.[25] The present Government is not strong. It is subject to internal political pressures, notably from the mullahs and their followers and as a result of provincial jealousies and some communist agitation. The Karachi riots and continued inaction regarding the Constitution are symptoms of popular dissatisfaction. Nevertheless, it is by far the best government in sight from our point of view. Another government would probably look with disfavour on the Commonwealth; and, if a change took place as the result of a military coup, the future shape of Pakistan would be difficult to predict.

6. I would not think it wise that we should agree at this stage to permit the whole of our Colombo Plan contribution to Pakistan in respect to 1952-53 to take the form of wheat. In the first place, this would run the risk of criticism from India to which we were prepared to allocate only $5,000,000 for wheat last year although she had requested a much more substantial amount. Secondly, to use the whole of our 1952-53 contribution for wheat would prevent us from contributing towards worthwhile longer term development projects on which we are now working. Thirdly, while $5,000,000 would by no means cover Pakistan wheat needs, it would seem to be a sufficient amount to encourage other countries which may be in a position to help. Last year the United States made a grant of $15,000,000 for this purpose and it might be prepared to go further this time if there is this evidence of our readiness to assist Pakistan. If assistance from other sources turns out to be inadequate to meet the situation, it might then be necessary to consider further the possibility of using additional Colombo Plan funds for wheat purchases.

7. As indicated in the message from Karachi, if this wheat is supplied to Pakistan, counterpart funds will be established for financing the local currency part of future capital development projects.

WHEAT FOR PAKISTAN

28. The Secretary of State for External Affairs, referring to discussion at the meeting of September 13th, 1952, said the Pakistan government had at that time decided against financing imports of wheat through the use of $5 million from Colombo Plan funds. The food situation in Pakistan had continued to be severe and an urgent request had now been received from the Pakistan authorities that the total amount of money available out of the Colombo Plan Vote for 1952-53, approximately $9 million, be allocated for the purchase of wheat. It seemed unwise to release the entire amount of funds for that purpose, but it was recommended that the offer of $5 million be repeated.

An explanatory memorandum had been circulated.

29. The Cabinet approved the recommendation of the Secretary of State for External Affairs and agreed that the offer to Pakistan be confirmed to permit the use of $5 million of Colombo Plan funds for the purchase of wheat, on condition that a counterpart fund be established by the Pakistan government, in the rupee equivalent of the Canadian dollar expenditure, to be used for local costs of economic development projects to be approved by the Canadian government; an Order-in-Council to be passed accordingly.

PAKISTAN FOOD SHORTAGE

You will recall that when you were in New York in late February, Mr. Amjad Ali[26] called on you to discuss the serious food difficulties in Pakistan and to inquire concerning the possibility of Canadian assistance. His approach to you was made at the special request of his Prime Minister. You explained to Mr. Amjad Ali that consideration was then being given in Ottawa to the allocation of a certain amount of Colombo Plan funds for the provision of wheat to Pakistan. It was, in fact, agreed that $5 million should be used for this purpose and shipments of wheat will take place within the next month.

2. We have been receiving a good deal of information over the past few months about the current food situation in Pakistan, mainly from our mission in Karachi, and all these reports confirm that a very serious shortage is in prospect in the coming months. It appears that the absolute minimum which Pakistan will have to import is 1.5 million tons of wheat at an approximate value of $150 million. They hope to obtain the bulk of their needs from the United States under a long-term loan. We understand, but we have not yet received confirmation, that the Pakistan Government has already made a formal request to the United States Government for a loan of $100 million to buy a million tons of wheat. We understand further that the US Administration is preparing a recommendation to Congress for a substantial wheat loan though for considerably less than the $100 million asked for by the Pakistan Government. In addition to supplies which Pakistan hopes to obtain from the United States, their plans are based on the assumption that some Colombo Plan aid from Canada will be devoted to wheat and that a barter deal of rice for wheat, presumably with Japan, would yield 150,000 tons. Finally, according to our latest information from Karachi, they expect to be forced to purchase $30 million worth of wheat with their own very scarce foreign exchange. (These plans will, of course, have to be revised in the light of the final US decision.)

3. The gravity of the situation in Pakistan has been emphasized by Lord Boyd-Orr[27] in the special report which he recently completed for the Pakistan Government. The food shortage has been caused by a variety of circumstances principally an abnormally-low rainfall but also by population increase, the growing of cash crops for export (jute and cotton) instead of food, smuggling and hoarding and the [26] Syed Amjad Ali, ambassadeur du Pakistan aux États-Unis.

Syed Amjad Ali, Ambassador of Pakistan in United States.

[27] Président/Chairman, Grow More Food Emergency Committee of Pakistan.

use of common canal and river waters by India. In his specific recommendations for increased food production to be applied immediately, Lord Boyd-Orr includes

(a) diversion of cotton acreage to grains,

(b) irrigation measures of an immediate kind,

(c) importation and use of fertilizers,

(d) measures for control of plant diseases, and

(e) building up of reserve stocks to prevent soaring prices.

He believes that by these prompt measures the crisis could be removed in a year and Pakistan's position as a food surplus country restored in three years. He apparently recognized that his recommendations were unlikely to be put into action without some special impetus and he, therefore, urged the establishment of an emergency organization with an over-riding authority to co-ordinate all connected departments of Government and Cabinet. The former Pakistan Government accepted this last recommendation and, in fact, established a "Grow More Food Emergency Committee" and secured the services of Lord Boyd-Orr to act as Chairman. Certain of the other emergency measures recommended in the report have already been adopted by the Government of the Punjab, the most important food-producing State.

4. There can, I believe, be no doubt whatsoever of the extreme gravity of the food situation facing Pakistan in the next few months. The crisis can be measured in part by the very exceptional action of the Pakistan Government in setting up this Emergency Food Committee with extraordinary powers and appointing Lord Boyd-Orr to chair it.

5. From a political point of view shortage of grain is perhaps the greatest immediate menace to stability in Pakistan. According to Lord Boyd-Orr, the shortage combined with a rise in prices threatens uncontrolled inflation "with resulting economic collapse and social and political unrest". The apparent inability of the Nazimuddin government to cope effectively with the economic crisis was one of the reasons given by the Governor-General for its dismissal. There is no doubt that the new Government's prospects depend in large part on its handling of the economic crisis, and especially on its success in dealing with the food problem. Furthermore, we understand that the United States may be looking to Pakistan to get maximum assistance from Commonwealth and Muslim countries before deciding what aid to give. Not only from the point of view of promoting political stability in Pakistan under its new Government but also from the point of view of maintaining Pakistan's Commonwealth relations in healthy balance with its relations with the United States, it would seem desirable for the Canadian Government to do all possible to assist Pakistan with wheat. It may also be relevant that the new Government, while looking firmly toward the West in the present crisis, is prepared to get wheat wherever it can. It will be recalled that the USSR supplied Pakistan with substantial quantities of wheat on a barter basis when a shortage developed last year.

6. We shall certainly be approached in the very near future with a formal request from the Government of Pakistan for assistance in the present food difficulties. We have already been told by the High Commissioner in Karachi that during a visit on April 24, accompanied by Mr. Cavell and Mr. Hume Wright, to the Finance Minister, Mohammed Ali said that an urgent request would shortly be made of the Canadian Government for the use of the full amount of Canadian Colombo Plan funds available for Pakistan in 1953-54 for the purchase of wheat.

7. We would strongly recommend that in this unusual and very grave emergency Canada should lend a hand to Pakistan to assist them in obtaining essential foodstuffs. Although in certain circumstances a good case can be made for providing wheat on a counterpart fund basis under the Colombo Plan, and we would not wish the door closed for such arrangements, in this particular emergency situation in Pakistan reliance on Colombo Plan funds alone would raise serious difficulties. The food requirements are so great that, if we were to start with the Colombo Plan funds, it would be hard for us to justify giving less than the whole of our Colombo Plan contribution in the form of wheat. If, however, all of our Colombo Plan funds for Pakistan were to be allocated for wheat purchases there would be nothing left for providing capital equipment for projects aimed at improving the long-term position. Some worthwhile projects in this field (for example, the Warsak hydro-electric and irrigation scheme for which we have pledged continuing support subject to future Parliamentary votes), would have to be sacrificed with obvious unfortunate effects on the national development plan. Moreover, the diversion of the full amount of Pakistan's share of Colombo Plan aid to the provision of wheat would make it extremely difficult to refuse a similar request from India and in that event Canada's Colombo Plan programme would, in effect, have become entirely a wheat-supply programme. This would certainly constitute an unfortunate departure from the broad and imaginative approach to the basic problem of economic development which inspired the Colombo Plan.

8. In the circumstances outlined above we would recommend that in anticipation of an early request from the Pakistan Government, the emergency food situation in Pakistan be put to Cabinet for discussion and that the following alternatives be considered:

(a) That Parliament be asked next week to approve a special Vote to provide for a grant of $5 million for the purchase of Canadian wheat for Pakistan. If such a grant were approved, consideration might later be given to the desirability of supplementing this assistance by allocating a portion of Colombo Plan funds for wheat purchases. This would only be done if a good case is made by Pakistan for additional supplies and if requirements for capital equipment for worthwhile development projects do not absorb the Colombo Plan funds available.

Or

(b) That Parliament be asked to approve a special Vote of, say, $10-$15 million for the purpose of extending a long-term loan to Pakistan for the purchase of wheat.

9. I attach a letter addressed to you from the Premier of Saskatchewan in which Mr. Douglas inquires concerning the Canadian Government's intentions in regard to assistance to Pakistan and indicates the interest of the Government of Saskatchewan in making a contribution.† Mr. Douglas's letter has already been acknowledged by your office. A substantive reply will, of course, depend upon what action the Cabinet decides to take.

WHEAT FOR PAKISTAN

1. The Secretary of State for External Affairs said he had been advised that Pakistan would submit, within the next few days, an urgent request for an amount equivalent to its full share of Colombo Plan funds in the current year (about $9 or $10 million) to be used for the purchase of wheat to meet the serious food shortage. The government of Pakistan had already asked the United States government for a long term loan of $100 million to buy 1 million tons of wheat. Australia and New Zealand were expected to give assistance, probably under their Colombo Plan programmes. Pakistan expected to purchase $30 million worth of wheat, probably in large part from Canada, but it would still have a deficit of 300,000 to 800,000 tons. For humanitarian reasons and to promote political stability in Pakistan it was desirable for Canada to provide assistance.

If Colombo Plan funds were used for wheat purchases, some projects involving capital equipment would probably have to be sacrificed. In the circumstances, it was recommended that Parliament be asked to approve a special vote of $5 million to grant wheat to Pakistan.

The Premier of Saskatchewan had written indicating the desire of the government of Saskatchewan to contribute, either jointly with the Federal government or independently, to the wheat requirements of Pakistan and India.

An explanatory memorandum had been circulated.

(Minister's memorandum, May 2, 1953 — Cab. Doc. 118-53)†

2. In the course of discussion it was suggested:

(a) It would be desirable to try to provide some wheat in the present circumstances but with the session of Parliament so close to an end, it would be best to avoid the introduction of a special appropriation if that could be done. The preferable course would be to have $5 million of Colombo Plan funds used for the purchase of wheat for Pakistan, on the understanding that Parliament would be asked, at the next session, to make up the amount.

(b) While it would be suitable to use Colombo Plan funds originally, it would be preferable not to have the amount left permanently as a charge against the Colombo Plan operation. In the economic circumstances of Pakistan, it would be preferable to have the assistance by gift rather than loan.

(c) It was possible that even a temporary charge against the Colombo Plan appropriation might delay development projects. If such would be the result, it would be desirable to have a special appropriation.

3. The Cabinet agreed:

(a) that, if it would not seriously hamper development projects under the Colombo Plan in the current year, $5 million of the appropriation for Pakistan be allocated for the purchase of wheat, on the understanding that the government would recommend to Parliament, at its next session, that the amount be made up by funds then to be appropriated for the purpose; and,

(b) that, if a temporary diversion of funds from the Colombo Plan vote for wheat for Pakistan would seriously hamper development projects, a special appropriation of $5 million be inserted in the further Supplementary Estimates for consideration at the present session of Parliament to make a gift of wheat to Pakistan.

DESPATCH 393 Karachi, June 4, 1953

COLOMBO PLAN WHEAT FOR PAKISTAN

The first consignment of Canadian wheat given under the Colombo Plan for 1952-53 arrived in Karachi on June 1st, per "S.S. Grenehurst"; the cargo consisted of 8,750 long tons of Manitoba No. 2 in good clean condition, in bulk. It was sacked in the hold, unloaded by seven electric cranes alongside, and loaded into boxcars. I understand that it would then be placed in government godowns pending rapid distribution to the respective centres. I presume that the sale at the final distribution centres will create rupee counterpart funds to be set aside in a special account.

2. On June 3rd, Mr. Bissonnet [28] and I met the ship at the dock, accompanied by Mr. S.A. Hasnie, Secretary, and Mr. Ijaz Ahmad, Joint Secretary of the Food and Agriculture Ministry, and other officials of the Ministry, and witnessed the unloading operations.

3. I made a few remarks, the gist of which is given in the attached note.† Mr. Hasnie, in the name of the Government of Pakistan, expressed profound gratitude and appreciation for this generosity and promptitude in meeting a part of the food requirements of Pakistan. In private conversation, both Secretaries said that, after many announcements from Canada, Australia, and other Commonwealth countries, this was the first Colombo Plan wheat gift actually to arrive in Pakistan; and the promptitude was greatly appreciated. As Mr. Hasnie remarked, "he gives twice who gives quickly." This consignment was only the forerunner of the total 55,000 tons; and he was deeply grateful that under the 1953-54 programme a further 55,000 tons was to be given and shipped beginning this month. In the back of his mind I sensed his concern over the long delay over the United States wheat grant, which is still only in the discussion stage in Washington. I mentioned the fact that in addition to the Canadian Cabinet's prompt response, Mr. Ikramullah seems to have been extremely energetic in getting the procurement on its way.

4. I enclose photographs taken at the ship, and a rather inadequate press report, prepared by the Ministry;† we had prepared a somewhat fuller press report, but the Ministry got theirs in first, without clearing it with our office.

[London], December 30, 1952

Dear [D.C.] Abbott,

I have sent you a separate message about the payment of the interest on the Canadian and American Lines of Credit. It may be useful if I now put on record the other points which we discussed shortly on the 12th December.

Canadian Government's claims arising out of the 1914-18 War

During our talk on the 12th December I mentioned an old claim which your Custodian of Enemy Property has recently revived against ours for an indemnity under an agreement dating to 1923 and relating to securities owned by our enemies in the 1914-18 War. This is a complicated matter and one which it has not so far been possible to settle in discussion among officials.

There is also a question which your people raised with us last August about a certain payment made by Canada under the clearing arrangements established for reparation purposes after the 1914-18 War. This again is a very old issue and Mr. Churchill, then Chancellor of the Exchequer, wrote to Mr. Larkin about it in February 1926.

It does seem rather embarrassing for both of us to have these old issues outstanding between us and I should be very grateful if you would look into them and say whether you feel it necessary for your Government to press the two claims.

Pension liabilities under the Commonwealth Air Training Scheme and the Canadian Option Scheme

I enclose separate notes on these two points.† Our dollar commitments under both these Schemes are heavy, and it would afford us considerable relief if you could see your way to waive the reimbursement of pension payments — and the outstanding liability for medical treatment — under the Commonwealth Air Training Plan, and take over the supplementation in the case of other ranks who have exercised the option.

Interest-free Loan

I think you are well aware of our anxiety to regain full control of our dollar investments in Canada. Not only is the volume of securities which are subject to restriction quite out of proportion to the outstanding amount of the Loan; but the restriction prevents UK holders from adjusting their holdings to the best advantage. They are prevented from switching their securities into the more rapidly developing Canadian interests and the restriction must operate generally as a positive ban to new UK investment in Canada.

In order to free the existing securities we are, as I told you, ready to agree to amortise the outstanding balance of the Loan out of our current dollar income at about the same annual rate as the present rate of repayment. I very much hope that the Canadian Government will be able to agree to some plan on this basis and I should be grateful if you would let me know as soon as you conveniently can what you would consider to be a suitable arrangement.

Purchases of Cheese and Salmon

I am glad to let you know that I have felt able to authorize the Minister of Food to spend up to $1½ millions on buying cheese.

As regards canned salmon, I gather that the question will not arise in a practical form until April or May. In the meantime, I will, of course, bear in mind what you said on this.

Ottawa, January 8, 1953

Dear [R.A.] Butler,

Thanks for your letter of December 30th concerning the matters we discussed in your office on December 12th.

I am glad that you have felt able to authorize the Minister of Food to spend up to $1½ millions on buying cheese in Canada. The appropriate procedure to complete the transaction would be for the representatives of the Ministry of Food to negotiate the purchase directly with the representatives of the producers, namely the Ontario Cheese Marketing Board.

Regarding canned salmon, I am informed that considerable stocks are available for immediate sale. The main canning season normally begins in June, but it is now estimated that there will be a carry-over at that time of about the same quantity as in the previous year. In these circumstances, it would be helpful if you could find it possible to authorize the Ministry of Food to negotiate for a purchase with the producers before too long.

I have reviewed again our two claims arising out of the 1914-18 war. I would be prepared, in view of the considerations you have raised, to recommend to my colleagues that the Canadian Government not press the claim arising out of a payment made by Canada, amounting to $1,789,982.50, under certain clearing arrangements established after the war. I would be prepared also to recommend that the Canadian Government not press its claim, amounting to $677,722.50, in respect of the Indemnity Agreement of 1923, if the United Kingdom Government would reimburse the Canadian Government for the cost of litigation amounting to $104,197.57 which it incurred in connection with this Agreement. The indemnity provided for in this Agreement included the costs of Canadian litigation if undertaken with the concurrence of the United Kingdom Government. Our records show that litigation was undertaken at the expressed desire of the United Kingdom authorities.

I have not had an opportunity to consider adequately the proposals you have made respecting the 1942 interest-free loan and certain United Kingdom military pension liabilities in Canada. I will write you again as soon as I have had a chance to go into these matters more fully.

Yours sincerely,

D.C. ABBOTT

UNITED KINGDOM — CANADA CONTINUING COMMITTEE ON TRADE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS

23. Mr. A.E. Ritchie. The United Kingdom — Canada Continuing Committee will meet in Ottawa on April 15th, 16th, and 17th, under the Chairmanship of Lieut/Gen. Sir Archibald Nye, the UK High Commissioner. The Committee will review the general economic situation and consider matters of mutual concern in the economic, trade and financial fields. As has been customary in the past, no specific negotiations will be undertaken. A brief communiqué will be issued before the opening meeting, listing the members of the Committee. The text will be designed to forestall any expectation of specific developments as a result of the meeting. In addition to the High Commissioner, the United Kingdom Delegation will consist of:

Sir Frank Lee — Board of Trade
Sir Leslie Rowan, Mr. Martin Flett — UK Treasury
Sir Eric Bowyer — Ministry of Materials
Sir Henry Hancock of the Ministry of Food may also be attending.

The Canadian members of the Committee are:

Mr. L.D. Wilgress
Mr. J.G. Taggart
Mr. W. Bull
Mr. J. Deutsch

Other Canadian officials will attend the Committee meeting for the discussion of special subjects.

THE COMMONWEALTH

UK — CANADA CONTINUING COMMITTEE ON TRADE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS

21. Mr. A.E. Ritchie. One of the occasional meetings of this Committee started on Wednesday, April 15, and concluded on April 17. Useful discussions took place regarding the prospects for the "collective approach" to currency convertibility and freer trade and regarding a variety of economic questions involving the two Governments. As on past occasions, no definite conclusions were reached but the views expressed will be taken into account by both Governments.

UNITED KINGDOM INTEREST-FREE LOAN; BASIS OF SETTLEMENT

23. The Minister of Finance mentioned that, under the terms of the 1942 interest-free loan to the United Kingdom, the outstanding amount was to be reduced by sales to non-residents of Canadian securities held by United Kingdom owners. Some offsets had subsequently been agreed to. The interest-free provision, originally limited to the duration of the war, had been extended by Parliament to December 31st, 1953. The United Kingdom was anxious to find a means of allowing investors to switch Canadian securities and had informally outlined a basis of settlement of the balance now outstanding. On March 31st, 1953, this balance was approximately $196 million as compared with the original amount of $700 million.

The plan was that the United Kingdom government pay $46 million outright — possibly by June 1st. The balance of $150 million would be paid by quarterly instalments of $7.5 million beginning March 1st, 1954 and ending December 1st, 1958. The annual rate of payment of $30 million would be slightly more than the present rate. Altogether, the arrangement appeared to be a desirable one. It would probably be necessary to get the approval of Parliament for the extension beyond December 31st, 1953, but it would not be necessary to seek authority to permit switching of securities since the limitation was based on an administrative arrangement.

It was recommended that approval be given in principle to the plan, on the understanding that when it was finally proposed and agreed to, a press release would be issued. A draft release was submitted.†

24. In the course of discussion it was suggested that the press release should include reference to Parliamentary approval of the extension of the loan.

25. The Cabinet noted with approval the report of the Minister of Finance concerning a possible basis of settlement by the United Kingdom of the outstanding balance of the 1942 interest-free loan, and agreed that, if a formal proposal for such an arrangement were made by the United Kingdom, it be approved and a press release issued in accordance with the draft submitted, but with modification to make it clear that the plan would be subject to Parliamentary approval of the extension beyond December 31st, 1953, of the interest-free arrangement on outstanding amounts of the loan.

1942 LOAN TO THE UNITED KINGDOM; ARRANGEMENT FOR REPAYMENT

5. The Minister of Finance, referring to discussion at the meeting of May 13th, 1953, said the United Kingdom had now made definite proposals, along the lines expected, for repayment of the outstanding balance of the 1942 loan. It was recommended that an agreement be made accordingly.

6. The Cabinet approved the recommendation of the Minister of Finance and agreed that he be authorized to execute an agreement between the government of Canada and the government of the United Kingdom respecting the repayment of the outstanding balance of the loan to the United Kingdom under the War Appropriation (United Kingdom Financing) Act 1942, to provide, in substance, that the outstanding balance of the loan be reduced to $150 million as of the date of the agreement; that the remainder be repaid by quarterly instalments of $7.5 million beginning March 1st, 1954, and ending December 1st, 1958; and that the loan be free of interest until the final redemption on December 1st, 1958; the agreement to be submitted to Parliament at the first opportunity; an Order-in-Council to be passed accordingly.

Following for Rt. Hon. C.D. Howe from W.F. Bull, Begins: Coon, of Ontario Cheese Producers Marketing Board reported that Sir Andrew Jones[29] is recommending to London that they purchase 22.5 million pounds of cheese, of which 15 million pounds would be delivered by December 31, 1953, and the balance of 7½ million pounds in May 1954. Coon asked for 28 cents a pound and Jones claimed that he could not pay more than 25½ cents in view of the lower price of New Zealand cheese.

2. It is obvious that Sir Andrew will not raise his offer above 25½ cents without instructions from London. It would be desirable to approach the Ministry of Food before they take a firm stand on the price. Accordingly the Cheese Producers would appreciate it if you or Mr. Robertson could attempt to raise this offer to 28 cents per pound f.a.s.,[30] Montreal. Ends.

CHEESE NEGOTIATIONS

Reference: Your telegram No. 1463 of September 15.

Following for W.F. Bull from Robertson, Begins: After discussing your message with Mr. Howe yesterday I arranged to see Sir Henry Hancock this morning. He held out no hope of the United Kingdom increasing their offer for cheese. In fact, he appeared to be surprised that Sir Andrew Jones had offered 25 and one half cents per pound, since he had not been authorized to offer more than 25 cents. I think there is little doubt that the Ministry will confirm the extra half cent offered [29] Chef de la Food Mission du Royaume-Uni.

Head, Food Mission of United Kingdom.
[30] freight alongside ship

by Jones, but I see no prospect of them going much or any higher. Hancock said that while they would like to buy Canadian cheese and had secured Treasury authority for its purchase, they were not under pressure to get it because they could maintain the ration without it. In these circumstances the price they were offering for Canadian cheese, which when landed in London would cost them a little more than New Zealand cheese, seemed to them a fair one which he couldn't advise his government to increase.

2. Domestic cheese production has been increasing in this country in the last year or two, so that despite some reduction in New Zealand and Australian shipments the stock position is not unsatisfactory, particularly since the retail price of cheese has been increased from 1/4d to 2/4d per pound in the course of the last eighteen months, with some slight consequential curtailment of domestic consumption.

3. I asked Hancock whether his Ministry had given any thought to the possibility of releasing mature Cheddar cheese for sale off the ration in the free market in competition with the fancy European cheeses, at whatever premium over the rationed price its quality could command. He said they had looked into this possibility but had concluded that so long as cheese was rationed it would be administratively impossible to legalize the sale of any Cheddar in the free market. They were permitting the sale of some old Cheshire cheese, but with Cheddar the possibilities of fraudulent substitution of rationed for off-ration cheese would be so great that the whole scheme might break down. He did not think cheese and butter could come off the ration until they were in a position to deration margarine and cooking fats. This they cannot do until the country's general international economic position permits them to lay out dollars for oils and fats. I gather that the principal obstacle to moving in this direction is a foreseen requirement of very substantial imports of American lard.

4. I do not know how far below the present domestic support price the government would think it worthwhile going in order to sell off the present cheese surplus. It seems to me that if we are going to stay in the cheese export business, we shall have to keep our costs and prices competitive. In a free market we could probably command a better premium over New Zealand than the Ministry of Food is prepared to offer under present conditions. The fact that we are not, even under these conditions, very far out of line on cheese prices, and the prospect that after decontrol there should normally be a market in this country for at least ten or fifteen thousand tons of Canadian cheese, tend in my mind to strengthen the case for completing this deal even at a loss of five cents a pound against the present support price. Reference: Your 1591 of September 17.

Following from W.F. Bull, Begins: We are disappointed with the Ministry of Food's reaction to our proposal that they raise their offering price on cheese to 28 cents per pound f.a.s. Montreal. We understand the Ministry is paying more for New Zealand cheese and Danish dairy products this year than they paid in the past. The Ministry purchased cheese in Canada earlier this year at 28½ cents per pound f.a.s. Montreal, and it does not seem reasonable that they should expect to pay less for Canadian cheese at this time.

2. Gordon Taggart[31] has talked with Mr. Gardiner by telephone and Mr. Gardiner feels strongly that we should not sell the 5 million pounds of cheese held by the Agricultural Prices Support Board for less than 30 cents per pound. Ontario Cheese Producers Marketing Board still anxious to sell cheese for delivery this fall and they will undoubtedly ask for financial help in closing the gap between what the British are offering and 29 cents, which is approximately the cost of the cheese they are now holding.

3. National Dairy Council have also been in touch with us and are most anxious to see this sale completed to the United Kingdom, in view of the long-term effect on both the domestic and export markets for Canadian cheese.

4. In view of the British stock position and the difficulty in supplying even 15 million pounds of Canadian cheese at this time, would you please ascertain if the Ministry would be interested in a somewhat lower quantity, say, 10 million pounds, for shipment October-November this year and the balance of the order to be delivered in May-June, 1954. This would enable the Ontario Cheese Producers Marketing Board to participate in any increase in Canadian domestic prices resulting from this export movement.

5. Mr. Gardiner is due back in Ottawa on Wednesday, October 30. Ends.

Reference: Your telegram No. 1500 of September 24.

Following for W.F. Bull from Robertson, Begins: I am afraid my talk with Hancock this afternoon was no more productive than that reported in my telegram No. 1591 of September 17. He insisted that the Ministry was not a keen buyer. It would like some Canadian cheese, though it did not need it to maintain the ration. It was prepared to pay 25½ cents per lb. which on their calculations amounted to 200 shillings per hundredweight f.a.s. Montreal, or about 212 shillings landed in London. They were paying 182/6d f.a.s. New Zealand, which meant a landed cost here of about 200 shillings. At a retail price of 2/2d per lb. (not 2/4d as I wrongly reported in my previous telegram), the New Zealand cheese can just be sold without subsidy. Canadian cheese at the price they are willing to pay needs some subsidy to be sold at the ration price. Hence their very great reluctance to consider paying more than 25½ cents.

2. The Ministry's offer to buy would be firm at their price for 10 million pounds for October-November shipment. They would be definitely not interested in making any firm commitments now for May and June 1954 deliveries, because they hope that by that time the process of decontrol will have taken them out of business. Ends.

CHEESE; SALE TO THE UNITED KINGDOM

27. The Minister of Trade and Commerce reported that the United Kingdom had allocated $2 million for the purchase of Canadian cheese. After discussion, and in the light of supplies, the offer to purchase was adjusted to 10 million pounds. Negotiations with the trade in Canada had been carried out and had reached an impasse. The trade wanted a price of 28½ cents per pound. The United Kingdom would go no higher than 25½ cents. Efforts had been made by him and by the High Commissioner in London to get the offer up, but without success. If the UK could not secure supplies in Canada, it would purchase in Europe.

The Agricultural Prices Support Board had in storage about 5 million pounds of 1952 cheese which had cost about 30½ cents with carrying charges. If no sale were made to the United Kingdom, the Board would be obliged to buy another 10 million pounds from the Ontario Cheese Producers Association at the end of October at 30 cents. With the prospect of no other market for the available stocks it seemed desirable to accept the United Kingdom offer. It would mean a loss to the government of something over $450,000.

28. In the course of discussion it was pointed out that it would be valuable to have a certain quantity of Canadian cheese on the UK market with the prospect that, if the United Kingdom dropped its rationing programme, it would be more readily possible to go into the open market there.

29. The Cabinet noted the report of the Minister of Trade and Commerce on negotiations for the sale of cheese to the United Kingdom, and deferred decision pending discussions between the Minister and the Minister of Agriculture.

CHEESE; SALE TO THE UNITED KINGDOM

27. The Minister of Agriculture, referring to discussion at the meeting of September 29th, 1953, said the estimated cheddar cheese production for 1953 would be approximately 72 million pounds, an increase of 8 percent over 1952 but lower than in any other year of Canada's history. The government now had on hand 5 million pounds of 1952 cheese purchased from the Ontario Cheese Producers Association. The amount of First Grade 1953 cheese in the hands of the Association, which it appeared likely would be sold to the government on November 1st, amounted to 8 million pounds, making a total of government holdings on November 1st of 13 million pounds.

An explanatory memorandum was circulated.

(Minister's memorandum, Oct. 7, 1953 — Cab. Doc. 237-53)†

28. In the course of discussion it was argued on the one hand, that the offer from the United Kingdom was 25 cents per pound and cheese was now selling at 28¼ cents in Montreal and 29 cents in Toronto. The price had gradually edged up over the last few months. If the UK offer were not taken up, stocks now held by the Agricultural Prices Support Board, plus what would be sold to the government on November 1st, could be disposed of without too great a loss.

On the other hand, it was argued that if the accumulated stocks as of November 1st were sold on the market in Canada, it was unlikely that a sale price near the support price could be obtained, and government holdings would remain high unless they were sold at a considerable loss. It appeared desirable to have 10 million pounds removed from the domestic market by a sale to the United Kingdom at 25 cents per pound, thus reducing the loss to the government and maintaining the domestic price.

29. The Cabinet agreed:

(a) that efforts be made to sell as much cheese as possible both on the domestic market and externally in the next few weeks; and,

(b) that the matter be kept under review and, as the United Kingdom offer was open until November 1st, the question be reconsidered at a later meeting.

TRANS-ATLANTIC TELEPHONE CABLE; DISCUSSIONS CONCERNING ARRANGEMENTS

18. The Minister of Trade and Commerce, as Acting Minister of Transport, referring to discussion at the meeting of March 9th, 1953, submitted a report concerning discussions with representatives of the United Kingdom General Post Office and the American Telephone and Telegraph Company about the construction of a trans-Atlantic telephone cable.

Copies of the memorandum were circulated.

Among other things, it had been agreed with the United Kingdom representatives that Canadian ownership of a share of the cable would be desirable; that Canada and the United Kingdom should have the right to exclusive use of up to five telephone circuits between Canada and the United Kingdom; and that all trans-oceanic telephone calls originating in Canada be handled by the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation. Talks with the American Telephone and Telegraph Company showed insistence on their part on having their Canadian subsidiary, the Eastern Telephone and Telegraph Company, install, own, maintain and operate, the repeaters and terminal stations in Newfoundland and Nova Scotia and the land cable to the Canada-United States border. Canadian acceptance of the conditions laid down by the Company would permit its subsidiary to operate and maintain facilities on Canadian territory which would have the effect of taking over from the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation the control of Canadian trans-Atlantic telecommunications. Alternatives were to permit construction on the terms indicated, or, to face the possible consequences of refusing the terms in order that external telecommunication services might remain under the control of the COTC. There were sufficient advantages in construction of a cable via Newfoundland that it appeared desirable to take a strong stand.

19. In the course of discussion it was argued on the one hand that, as long as adequate facilities were made available for Canadian purposes, there was no sufficient advantage in partial Canadian ownership to justify the expenditure that would be involved or the risk of having facilities established over the Azores route.

It was argued on the other hand:

(a) that it would not be desirable to have the control of the facilities in Canada and of Canadian external telecommunications services vested in a subsidiary of a United States company; and,

(b) that, in the event negotiations broke down and the United States company seriously proposed construction of a cable via the Azores, Canada could then review its position.

20. The Cabinet noted the report concerning discussions with representatives of the United Kingdom General Post Office and of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company concerning the construction of a trans-Atlantic telephone cable, and agreed that, in pending negotiations with the Company, Canadian representatives maintain the position that Canada must exercise control over telecommunication facilities crossing Canadian territory, both for the protection of Canadian carriers and in the interests of the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation, on the understanding that, if negotiations broke down, the position might be subject to review after the return of ministers from the Coronation.

He would, in discussion with them, take the position that had been approved.

51. The Cabinet noted the report of the Minister of Transport concerning a meeting he would hold with officials of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company concerning the proposed Transatlantic Telephone Cable and agreed that, in such discussions the position by the Minister be as approved by the Cabinet at the meeting of May 13th.

TRANS-ATLANTIC TELEPHONE CABLE

27. The Minister of Transport, referring to discussion at the meeting of May 19, 1953 said negotiations with the United States and the United Kingdom for three-way participation in a cable from the United States to the United Kingdom via Canada had reached a stalemate. The American Telephone and Telegraph Company insisted on having their Canadian subsidiary, the Eastern Telephone and Telegraph Company, control the Canadian part of the connection and also insisted on at least 50 percent American ownership in the cable itself. There were two possibilities: to participate in the project on those terms or to refuse to participate and to see if the United Kingdom were interested in constructing a cable independently of the United States. The cost to Canada of the first alternative would be between $3 million and $4 million, and of the second about $15 million. It was recommended that an approach be made to the United Kingdom government to see if they would join with Canada in constructing a trans-Atlantic cable. If so, landing and transmitting rights might be granted to the American Telephone and Telegraph Company for the UK-US cable, subject to the condition that six telephone and six telegraph circuits be leased to Canada for Canada-UK messages, until such time as the Canada-UK cable was in operation. If the United Kingdom was not agreeable to the Canadian proposal, the views of the Commonwealth Telecommunications Board might be sought as to the desirability of an American company maintaining and operating a portion of the Commonwealth telecommunications network.

An explanatory memorandum has been circulated.

28. In the course of discussion it was suggested on the one hand, that the political and security considerations against the American Telephone and Telegraph proposal were not substantial and that the matter should be regarded primarily from a commercial viewpoint. If so, it would not appear necessary to adhere too strongly to the position that there were Canadian rights that had to be safe-guarded. It was suggested, on the other hand, that the political and security considerations were real and that it would be undesirable for Canada to be in a position where telephone and telegraph facilities were under the direct control of a US corporation. Having regard for the differences of view, it might be best to ascertain whether the United Kingdom would be willing to participate in a UK-Canada cable before taking any further decision as to the course that might be followed consequent upon the British reply.

29. The Cabinet noted the report of the Minister of Transport concerning negotiations for the construction of a trans-Atlantic telephone cable and agreed:

(a) that an enquiry be made through the office of the Canadian High Commissioner in London to ascertain whether the United Kingdom would be willing to join with Canada in constructing by a given date, possibly within five years, and operating a trans-Atlantic telephone cable; and,

(b) that the committee considering the cable question submit a report on the commercial and political considerations involved in the question.

TRANS-ATLANTIC TELEPHONE CABLE

23. The Minister of Transport, referring to discussion at the meeting of September 9th, 1953, said telegrams had now been received from the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Canadian High Commissioner in London, following a meeting with the Secretary of State for Commonwealth Relations and the Postmaster General of the United Kingdom.

The United Kingdom were not willing to participate in a joint UK-Canada scheme and preferred the tripartite US-UK-Canada arrangement. It was suggested that the Postmaster General and certain British officials come to Ottawa to discuss the latter proposal further. It was now for decision whether the government should agree to the tripartite plan or consider some other alternative.

24. In the course of discussion, it was pointed out that, under the tripartite arrangement, Canada would have the use of from six to nine of the thirty-six circuits contemplated, while its share of the capital cost of the cable would amount to 9 percent of the total outlay.

It was also mentioned that the New Brunswick Telephone Company and the Maritime Telephone and Telegraph Company had considerable experience in transmission services which might be useful for any proposed trans-Atlantic cable.

25. The Cabinet noted the report of the Minister of Transport on negotiations for the construction of a trans-Atlantic telephone cable, and agreed:

(a) that the United Kingdom Postmaster General and British officials concerned be invited to come to Canada to continue discussions; and,

(b) that, prior to the renewal of negotiations, the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation secure, particularly from certain companies in the Maritime Provinces, all information with regard to cable and wireless operations that might be relevant to consideration of the various proposals.

TRANS-ATLANTIC TELEPHONE CABLE

17. The Minister of Transport, referring to discussion at the meeting of September 24th, 1953, reported that, following discussions with British officials, a draft agreement had now been prepared between the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation, the United Kingdom, and the American Telephone and Telegraph Company on the construction and operation of a trans-Atlantic telephone cable.

The draft provided for exclusive Canadian-United Kingdom use of six telephone and six telegraph circuits. COTC felt that Canadian interests would be adequately protected. The arrangements precluded the American Telephone and Telegraph Company from operating a micro-wave relay system except for transmission purposes from cable-head in Canada. There was no undertaking as to security and it would be necessary to employ a certain number of technical personnel on the system to meet, as far as possible, Canadian security requirements.

18. In the course of discussion it emerged that:

(a) The American Telephone and Telegraph Company had a charter, granted by the Secretary of State in 1927, for certain transmission purposes, but that further expansion of a micro-wave relay system other than that required for cable purposes would need a specific permit and it would, therefore, not be possible for the Company to enter directly into television and radio transmission.

(b) In order to ensure full security for messages, cypher telegrams would have to continue to be used.

(c) The COTC felt that, in the not too distant future, another cable would be required to meet increased demands for services.

19. The Cabinet agreed in principle to the signing of an agreement along the lines indicated by the Canadian Overseas Telecommunications Corporation with the Untied Kingdom and the American Telephone and Telegraph Company on construction of a trans-Atlantic telephone cable, but deferred final authorization of signature pending the formal submission of the draft agreement and consideration whether an Order-in-Council was necessary.

Le premier ministre au président des États-Unis

Prime Minister to President of the United States

Ottawa, January 20, 1953

Dear Mr. President:

Upon your assumption of the high office and heavy responsibilities of the Presidency of the United States of America, I wish to extend to you my heartiest congratulations together with my most sincere wishes for your success in the great task which lies before you.

My colleagues in the Government of Canada and I — indeed the Canadian people as a whole — remember with great pleasure and satisfaction our associations with you. Many thousands of my countrymen served in the Armed Forces of Canada with pride and, may I say, with affectionate devotion, under your inspired leadership as Supreme Commander of the Allied Expeditionary Force in Western Europe during the Second World War and, more recently, as Supreme Commander in Europe of the North Atlantic Treaty Forces.

Canadians have confidence that your guidance of the affairs of the United States, which has assumed the important role of leader of the free world, will be such as to promote international peace and security. The Government of Canada looks forward to working in continued close and friendly co-operation with the Government of the United States.

I hope I may before long have the pleasure of calling upon you in Washington and I can assure you of a most cordial welcome by the Government and people of Canada if you find it possible to maintain the happy tradition established by your predecessors in office by visiting Ottawa.

I would like also to extend to Mrs. Eisenhower and yourself all best wishes from my wife and myself for your health, success and happiness in 1953 and in the years to come.

L.S. ST-LAURENT

Chargé d'Affaires, Embassy of United States to Prime Minister

Ottawa, January 27, 1953

My dear Prime Minister,

The President has instructed me to acknowledge on his behalf your letter of January 20 extending your congratulations on his assumption of the Presidency.

I am to say that the President particularly appreciates your references to his past associations with yourself, your colleagues in the Government of Canada and the many Canadians who participated with such distinction in the struggle for Europe. The President looks forward with confidence to a continuation of the close and friendly relationships between Canada and the United States, which he feels can only deepen and broaden through the years.

The President also thanks you and Mrs. St. Laurent for your kind wishes and cordially reciprocates your hope that an early occasion may be found for the exchange of visits which you suggest.

Sincerely yours,

DON C. BLISS

Note sur la conversation entre le secrétaire d'État des États-Unis et le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum of Conversation between Secretary of State of United States and Secretary of State for External Affairs

TOP SECRET Washington, February 15, 1953

1. Mr. Pearson met with Mr. Dulles informally at the home of the Canadian Ambassador on Sunday, the 15th February, 1953. This was Mr. Pearson's first meeting with the new Secretary of State since he took office. Those present for the United States Government were:

Mr. John Foster Dulles,
Secretary of State;
Mr. H. Freeman Matthews,
Deputy Under-Secretary of State;

and
Mr. John D. Hickerson,
Assistant Secretary for United Nations Affairs.

Those present for the Canadian Government were:

Mr. L.B. Pearson,
Secretary of State for External Affairs;
Mr. H. Hume Wrong,
Canadian Ambassador in Washington;
Mr. D.V. LePan,
Canadian Embassy, Washington.

General: Foreign Policy of the New Administration

2. Mr. Dulles said that, if there was a change differentiating the foreign policy of the new Administration in Washington from that of the previous Administration — and there was, though not possibly in major policy matters — it was to be found in this: that the Eisenhower Administration was determined not to leave the initiative in the cold war to the Soviet Union. To do so would give Stalin a great and gratuitous advantage since he could pick the time and place for new moves and since he would be left undisturbed in consolidating gains already made by the Soviet Union. It was President Eisenhower's policy to create situations which would worry the Kremlin by creating threats to Soviet influence at various points in the world.

3. The Eisenhower Administration was anxious to maintain and to improve consultation with the allies of the United States, and particularly with the United Kingdom, Canada and France. But consultation would be more useful and intimate if it were kept informal. It would be impossible for the United States Government to commit itself formally to consult with its allies before taking action in every situation, since such a commitment would give each of the allies a veto. If every move in this new policy which the United States might have to make had to be preceded by formal consultation leading to agreement, the United States and the Western alliance would have no other alternative but to react to moves as they were made by the Soviet Union. Indeed, it would probably be only in a moment of extreme crisis or danger that full agreement could ever be reached formally among all the allies on the necessity of a course of action which by then would have become self-evident.

4. Mr. Dulles recognized that the kind of policy he had described would, on occasions create difficulties both for the United States Administration and for friendly governments. He, for his part, did not wish to tell Congress that he was under an obligation to consult formally with the chief allies of the United States before embarking on any new move; and he might be pilloried on that score even though he fully intended to take the allies of the United States as fully as possible into his confidence. Similarly, political leaders in other countries would at times be unable to say that they had been formally consulted, even though, in fact, they had been informally told well in advance. United States action to deneutralize Formosa had already raised this problem in an acute form. Mr. Churchill and Mr. Eden had known what was proposed weeks before it was announced; but the Foreign Secretary had been unable fully to reveal this fact because, for one thing, the new Administration had not been in office when the information had been given. The proper way around the difficulty, Mr. Dulles suggested, was to increase the amount of informal consultation. This had been one of the purposes of his recent visit to Europe; and he thought that political leaders there had been grateful for the way in which he had tried to let them know how he saw world problems. In the same way, he hoped to keep leaders of the Canadian Government fully informed on an informal basis of the views and policies of the United States Government. Mr. Pearson suggested that it might be difficult to create uneasiness in the Soviet Union without at the same time creating uneasiness among the allies of the United States; and then, to allay the anxiety so created, it might be necessary for statements to be made which would also have the effect of removing uneasiness in the Soviet Union. Mr. Dulles agreed that it would be difficult for a coalition of democracies to conduct such a war of nerves as President Eisenhower's policy would require. Almost certainly the difficulty would be increased by the activities of the press, which in all countries had a vested interest in putting about alarming stories that could only have the result of sowing distrust between the United States and its allies. Nevertheless, he hoped that the United States Government could rely on faith among its allies in its peaceful purposes and in its desire to seek them by sober and unprovocative means. It would be of great help if political leaders in other countries could try to increase this fund of confidence even on occasions when it might not be possible for them to explain fully United States plans and intentions.

The Far East

5. Remarking that the world picture seemed at present very forbidding, Mr. Dulles said that he thought Indo-China was probably to be regarded as the most critical point in the world today. It was easy and natural for the United States to think of Korea as more important, since American military forces were so heavily committed there. But there was little doubt that the line in Korea could be held; and, even if the worst came to the worst (which now seemed almost inconceivable), and Korea had to be evacuated, the consequences would not be catastrophic, though politically deplorable. In that event, Japan would have to be turned into an armed camp. But the repercussions would not spread much further than that. If Indo-China, on the other hand, were lost, the strategic consequences would be incalculable. Moreover, the drain on France caused by the war in Indo-China was perhaps the chief reason why the French were holding back from ratifying the EDC Treaty. It was therefore of the greatest importance that Indo-China should be held, and, further, that the war there should be brought to an end. Nor would it be a satisfactory solution merely to make arrangements so that the military power of the United States would be available to stem a Chinese thrust in Indo-China, since that would further weaken the strength of the alliance in the West. A large Chinese Communist army had for quite some time been poised in the south available for an attack on Indo-China. What was required was a situation which would deter the Chinese Communists from throwing their forces into the war in Indo-China, and, if possible, lead to the movement of some of those forces from North China and perhaps even from Korea as protection against a threat to their security from Formosa. That was the thinking which lay behind President Eisenhower's decision to order the Seventh Fleet no longer to prevent attacks from Formosa on the mainland of China. The essential purpose of the order was to put the United States in a legal position where, if need be, it could encourage threats or feints against China as a means of preventing a Chinese incursion into Indo-China.

6. Mr. Dulles said that one of his problems in explaining and defending the recent decision over Formosa was to keep senators and congressmen in leash. At a meeting on the 12th of February of the Senate Sub-Committee on the Far East, he had laboured to convince senators that the Administration had no plans for any sensational military action. He thought that in large measure he had succeeded. But when he had commented on alarmist statements made by some of the senators, he had met with the rejoinder that they thought their statements would contribute to the psychological warfare he was waging. In his own view, his task would be lighter if he were allowed to conduct United States foreign policy without too much assistance from congressional leaders!

7. Mr. Pearson suggested that a similar problem was created by the statements made by Generals and Admirals. For example Admiral Radford[1] seemed to have created the impression that the United States Government was in favour of a naval blockade of China. Mr. Dulles said that from conversations he had had with Admiral Radford he thought that his views had been misinterpreted. Admiral Radford was of the opinion that a naval blockade was feasible; but, so far as Mr. Dulles knew, he had limited his comments to that. He was sure Admiral Radford thought that the question whether or not a blockade would be advisable, in view of the political complications it would entail, was for others to decide. However, Mr. Dulles agreed that probably some senators and congressmen had jumped to the conclusion that Admiral Radford was advocating a blockade — or even indicating that the Administration was in favour of it — when he merely stated that in his opinion it was feasible. Similarly, the answers which General Van Fleet[2] had given on the 10th February to questions put to him by the Associated Press should not be taken to mean that a new United Nations offensive in Korea was contemplated. As a military commander, he had hardly any alternative, when he was asked whether a general offensive could be successful at this time, but to express confidence in his troops by replying, "certainly". Commenting on General Van Fleet's statement, Mr. Pearson said that he was rather disturbed by the way a legend seemed to be growing up that the United Nations Command in Korea had been prevented from annihilating the enemy in 1951 by the cease-fire negotiations. As far as he was aware, these negotiations had never inhibited the United Nations Command from any operations which were considered to be militarily desirable. Mr. Dulles agreed with this view. He said that he personally was inclined to think that it had been a mistake not to pursue the enemy further in the Spring in 1951. But this decision had been taken not because of any action in the United Nations but purely as the result of military calculations in the Pentagon. There may have been differences of opinion between the military authorities in Korea and the military authorities in Washington; but the decision to consolidate the United Nations line where it now stands was the result of a military appreciation of the advantages and disadvantages of a further advance. To push further north would have shortened the Communist's lines of communication which were open to air attack; would have brought the United Nations forces within the range of enemy jet fighters based in Manchuria; and would have forfeited the advantages of the high ground along which the United Nations line now runs.

Resolution on Secret Agreements

8. Mr. Dulles volunteered that, in addition to the recent action to deneutralize Formosa, the Administration would be making a further move within the next few days which might cause some trouble for political leaders in allied countries. He was now engaged in drafting, along with a number of Republicans in Congress, the resolution forecast by President Eisenhower in his State of the Union message, when he said that he would recommend that Congress repudiate secret understandings which had permitted the enslavement of free peoples. In using those words, President Eisenhower had been speaking colloquially. The resolution on which Mr. Dulles was now working would be drafted in more exact terms. It would refer, not to secret agreements, since, in fact, most of the agreements which President Eisenhower had in mind became known very shortly after they had been negotiated. Instead, the resolution would probably refer to private agreements in order to distinguish them from treaties or agreements which had been submitted to the Senate. Nor would the agreements, as such, be denounced. The draft resolution would merely denounce distortions and misinterpretations of such agreements, particularly of the agreements made at Yalta. The resolution would not affect United States policy towards Soviet claims to Sakhalin and the Kuriles, as this had been made clear in the Japanese Peace Treaty. Care would also be taken not to disturb the legal basis for the position of the three Western powers in Berlin. So far as the Oder-Neisse boundary of Germany was concerned, the United States had for a long time taken the public position that the eastern boundary of Germany could be finally fixed only by a German Peace Treaty. It was Mr. Dulles' hope that such a careful and limited resolution as he was preparing would be adequate to satisfy congressional opinion on this matter. He stated frankly that in any case some such resolution had become virtually a political necessity.

Germany

9. On Germany, Mr. Dulles said that the situation there seemed to him very disturbing. The Soviet authorities were pushing ahead with the collectivization of the Eastern Zone and were reducing it more and more to the status of a satellite on the usual pattern. One result of the increased pace of this process was the large flow of refugees from the Eastern Zone now crossing into Western Berlin. Although it was impossible to be sure how properly to interpret this development, it could not help but create anxiety, since the Soviets would behave in precisely this way if they were planning a military attack on Western Germany.

EDC Treaty

10. When he was questioned by Mr. Pearson on the judgment he had formed during his trip to Europe of the chances of the EDC Treaty being ratified, Mr. Dulles said that he thought the odds were about 60 to 40 in favour of ratification. In Paris he had told M. Mayer that he had some doubts about the political tactics the French Premier was following in order to secure support for the Treaty and eventual ratification. Already M. Mayer had tried to appease the various bodies of opposition to the Treaty by drawing up elaborate protocols which might remove their objections. In Mr. Dulles' opinion, the danger of this course was that in three or four months' time, when the Treaty was being debated in the National Assembly, those opposed to it might bring forward new objections, attempts might have to be made to satisfy these objections, and these attempts would delay ratification still further. In London he had told Mr. Eden that the close association which the United Kingdom intended to form with the European Army and the European Defence Community seemed to go far towards meeting France's legitimate wishes on this subject, in so far as any government in the United Kingdom could meet them. He recommended, however, that Mr. Eden should be on the look-out for an occasion in a few months' time to draw together all the various links which the United Kingdom was prepared to establish with the European Defence Force and Community and present them in a single and dramatic form to France, wrapped up with a great deal of red ribbon.

NATO

11. On Mr. Pearson's initiative there was some discussion of whether the North Atlantic Treaty powers could assist in obtaining ratification of the EDC Treaty by extending the life of the North Atlantic Treaty from twenty to fifty years. In the Treaty signed between the United Kingdom and the EDC countries on the 27th May, 1952, the United Kingdom had undertaken to grant to the European Defence Community a more automatic security guarantee than that extended in the new protocol to the North Atlantic Treaty. Already the United Kingdom was coming under some pressure from France to alter this guarantee so that it would run for the full duration of the EDC Treaty, i.e. for fifty years. Obviously this request confronted the United Kingdom with considerable difficulty. Perhaps it might be easier for all the North Atlantic countries to extend the duration of the North Atlantic Treaty. Mr. Dulles said that he thought this idea was worth considering. One disadvantage, however, was that an amendment to the North Atlantic Treaty would be required and this would have to be ratified by the parliaments of all the signatories. Possibly, Mr. Pearson suggested, an amendment might be avoided by attaching to the Treaty a protocol in which all the signatories would express their intention of not denouncing the Treaty, under Article XIII, for fifty years. Mr. Dulles was of the opinion, however, that even such a protocol would require Senate ratification.

12. Earlier in the conversation, when Mr. Dulles had been expressing his desire for close informal consultation with the allies of the United States, Mr. Pearson remarked that he had always hoped that this could also be effected in the North Atlantic Council. For obvious [sic] during the past few months, the Council had been in the doldrums. In fact, he was inclined to think that its recent activities had been, if anything, less important than those of the Council Deputies. Mr. Pearson hoped that Mr. Dulles would give consideration to the possibility of strengthening the role of the North Atlantic Council by making it one of the chief instruments for consultation between the United States and its principal allies.

General Assembly of the United Nations

13. Mr. Dulles said that he would like to pay a visit to the Assembly of the United Nations after it reconvened on the 24th February; but he did not wish his presence to give rise to a long vituperative debate. Mr. Pearson replied that, now it was known that Mr. Vishinsky was returning, a good deal of vituperation was inevitable, he was afraid. There were two possible interpretations of Mr. Vishinsky's decision to return. Either he was coming back to launch a new propaganda attack on the United States, in which he would direct most of his fire against the decision to deneutralize Formosa, and against co-operation between the Secretary-General and the United States Government in screening United States citizens on the secretariat. Alternatively, he might be coming to New York to put out feelers towards a peaceful solution of the war in Korea. However, in the light of recent Soviet moves throughout the world, it was very difficult to entertain the latter possibility.

14. Mr. Dulles confirmed that the United States would not be putting forward any new proposals on Korea in the General Assembly. They would be content to stand on the Indian Resolution.

15. In general, he hoped that, on this and other issues, the discussion in the General Assembly could be comparatively brief and routine. The new Administration had not yet had time to take firm positions on all the questions which might come before the United Nations and for this reason he hoped that the latter half of the present session could be run off expeditiously and in a minor key.

16. It was suggested by Mr. Hickerson that in order to give Mr. Vishinsky as limited scope as possible for making effective propaganda, it might be possible to open the resumed sessions of the Assembly without a plenary meeting and possibly even without a meeting of the General Committee. Mr. Pearson thought this might be difficult since new items might be proposed for the agenda and, if added, these would have to be assigned to committee. Nevertheless, he would see what he could do to avoid a plenary meeting or even a meeting of the General Committee at the outset of the resumed session. Mr. Dulles said that he very much hoped this could be arranged. In any event, Mr. Pearson said that, if an opening plenary meeting became necessary, he would try to rule out of order any attempt that might be made by Mr. Vishinsky to deliver a propaganda tirade. On the other hand, it must be recognized, he added, that there would be plenty of opportunities for Mr. Vishinsky in Committee to lay down the kind of barrage that he no doubt was meditating.

17. Some consideration was given to the possibility of having a discussion of the personnel policies of the Secretary-General in Plenary without the General Assembly passing any resolution on the subject. Mr. Pearson said that he would favour such a procedure. But it had rarely, if ever, been possible in the Assembly to dispense with a resolution; and he was doubtful whether it could be managed in this case. Mr. Hickerson agreed, but thought that such a procedure was at least worth trying.

18. Touching on the resignation of Mr. Lie, Mr. Pearson said that he hoped that action to appoint a new Secretary-General could be taken before the present session of the Assembly came to an end. Mr. Hickerson said he agreed that this was highly desirable.

United Kingdom Proposals for a Collective Approach to Convertibility

19. Mr. Pearson said that he thought the United Kingdom Government had shown very considerable imagination and courage in putting forward these proposals, which would require unpopular domestic measures in the United Kingdom as well as in other countries, if they were to be successful. One encouraging conclusion which had been reached by the Canadian Delegation to the Commonwealth Economic Conference was that the United Kingdom authorities were now convinced of the weakening and damaging effects of long-continued import restrictions. Mr. Dulles revealed that a memorandum outlining the United Kingdom proposals had been given to him on Friday, the 13th February, by Sir Roger Makins. He had not yet had an opportunity to study the memorandum, but it seemed both full and clear. Mr. Pearson gave Mr. Dulles an assurance that, if the proposals commended themselves to the United States Government, and if it were decided in Washington to support them, the Canadian Government would also be willing to do its part in making them a success.

St. Lawrence Seaway

20. There was now widespread expectation throughout Canada, Mr. Pearson explained, that the building of the Seaway would go forward without delay. An election was likely to be held in Canada some time this year. It would be disappointing if by that time all the clearances necessary from the United States Government had not been secured. At the present time the Federal Power Commission was considering an application from the State of New York to co-operate with the Ontario Hydro-Electric Commission in building the installations necessary for the power development. As soon as the Federal Power Commission had handed down a ruling favourable to the application from the State of New York, the Canadian Government would be glad to consult with the United States Government on means whereby the Seaway could become a joint undertaking between Canada and the United States, provided that these consultations did not involve further delays. The important thing at the moment, however, was to secure a favourable ruling from the Federal Power Commission. Mr. Dulles said that he was not fully acquainted with this subject, but he asked Mr. Hickerson to take note of the representations Mr. Pearson had made.

Visit of Mr. St. Laurent to Washington

21. When Mr. St. Laurent visited Washington, Mr. Pearson said, he would no doubt want to discuss foreign economic and commercial policy with President Eisenhower. It was also possible that he would want to consider with the President the possibility of making a new agreement on principles of defence co-operation between the United States and Canada. Within the last few weeks a request had been received from the United States Government for permission to build three experimental early-warning radar stations in the Canadian far north. If they proved successful, the United States Government hoped that an extensive chain of radar stations could be constructed across the continent at the same latitude. The Canadian Government had received this initial request sympathetically. But it was felt that the time had perhaps come to examine again in a comprehensive way all the problems of joint Canadian-United States defence of North America, especially Arctic problems. A statement of principle on this subject had been drawn up in 1946,[3] but circumstances had changed so materially that it should be reviewed, possibly enlarged, and brought up to date.

Publicity

22. Before leaving Mr. Dulles said that he would have no objection if Mr. Pearson said on returning to Ottawa that, while he had been in Washington, he had seen the new Secretary of State and had had an informal discussion with him at the home of the Canadian Ambassador.

INTERNATIONAL ECONOMIC PROBLEMS

In recent years preservation of the peace has depended upon the close political co-operation of the countries of the western world under the leadership of the United States. This leadership has been strengthened by the statements of United States aims in President Eisenhower's Inaugural and State of the Union messages. More recently, the President's comprehensive statement on the settlement of outstanding issues between the countries of the western world and the Soviet Union has given new hope to those who work for a real and enduring peace.

With the United States assuming both the moral and material responsibilities of leadership, actions have been taken which contribute to political co-operation and common defence. Through self help and assistance from the United States and Canada, the physical reconstruction of war-torn economies has been largely accomplished. Through the United Nations, armed aggression has been resisted. Through NATO the nations of the Atlantic Community have provided effective machinery of co-operation and are building a strong shield against aggression. Through the development of common institutions, such as those for the coal and steel industries and for defence, the countries of Western Europe are achieving increasing unity and strength. These accomplishments express the determination of the free peoples to maintain their security. In these efforts Canada has taken its part.

The question we must ask ourselves is — do these great accomplishments respecting our political unity and security rest on an adequate foundation? There is increasing evidence that they are being endangered by the crucial inadequacy of policies affecting international economic relations. The co-operation and unity of purpose of countries of the free world in the political and defence fields have not been matched by the establishment of sound economic relations among them. This situation is even more disturbing in the light of recent developments in Soviet policies and tactics. The Canadian Government has been increasingly concerned over the continuing weakness and precarious nature of the international economic structure upon which our political and military co-operation is built.

Economically the free world remains divided within itself into dollar and non-dollar groups. The trade between these groups is limited by barriers and restrictions more complex than anything we have had in the past. Over a large part of the world discriminatory restrictions are the rule rather than the exception. The currencies of one group are not convertible into the currencies of the other. The international flow of private capital between them is at a minimum. Travel between the free countries is restricted by exchange controls. The consequences of this situation are becoming increasingly dangerous. The free world is failing to use its economic resources efficiently at a time when heavy burdens must be borne for the common defence. Efforts to achieve further increases in production and improved standards of living in many countries are frustrated by lack of markets and the inability to purchase sufficient raw materials and foodstuffs. During the past year economic output in Western Europe has failed to expand.

The economic and financial policies associated with the existing systems of trade restriction and currency inconvertibility do not contain the elements of a solution. Unless a joint effort is made to change the direction of affairs it is unlikely that the countries pursuing these policies will ever find their way back to freer trade and currency convertibility. On the contrary, the evidence indicates that the prolonged use of the existing policies aggravates the underlying difficulties because they provide the wrong economic incentives and lead to an inefficient use of resources. The continued weakness of many economies is manifest in the repeated financial and trade crises which have occurred in recent years. For some time the fabric of international economic relations has been held together through the provision of special assistance, improvised measures and other expedients. It would appear that the value of expedients is being rapidly exhausted.

The unsatisfactory condition of international economic relations, the dangers and weaknesses resulting therefrom, are matters which are now in the forefront of our common problems. They are a challenge to the vitality and endurance of our free societies. Concerted and determined efforts to build a stronger economic framework cannot be long postponed without grave risks to our common security and prosperity.

A further reason for early action is that constructive developments are already taking shape overseas. Many of the countries in the non-dollar area have themselves re-examined the bases of their economic policies. They have become convinced that a change in direction is necessary in the interests of both their own welfare and the unity of the free world. At the recent Commonwealth Economic Conference, in which the Canadian Government participated, the economic problems of the free world were examined from a wide and constructive viewpoint. The Canadian Government was impressed by the desire and determination of the sterling members of the Commonwealth to work toward the progressive achievement of an expanding, more prosperous and more united economy throughout the free world. These discussions have resulted in certain concrete proposals which have been discussed with representatives of the United States Government. If these initiatives are met with a ready and co-operative response in the United States, these countries will be encouraged to move in the direction of freer trade. If the response is not encouraging, it is likely that other voices will be heard. The Canadian Government strongly hopes that the close attention which the Government of the United States has undertaken to give to these proposals, and to possible alternative courses of action designed to achieve the same ends, will lead to early and positive results.

It is clear that any effective effort to remove the existing divisions and barriers between the economies of the free world, through the re-establishment of multilateral systems of trade and currencies, will entail many adjustments in both debtor and creditor countries. These aims, and the adjustments which they involve, can only be accomplished through a collective effort in which the debtors and creditors assume the roles and responsibilities which are appropriate to their circumstances. In such a collective effort not only the participation but the whole-hearted co-operation of the United States is indispensable.

Even if the United States were not the political and military centre of the free world the nature of United States commercial policy in its widest aspects would have a decisive role in the development of the collective effort which is required. This follows inescapably from the size and strength of the United States economy and from its predominant position as the principal creditor in world payments. The debtor countries also have important adjustments to make in their economic and financial policies. These adjustments, however, cannot, without adequate and appropriate action by the United States, bring about the improvement in economic relations which is necessary for maintenance of our common prosperity and defensive strength.

The adjustments in United States commercial policy which would appear to be desirable, have been widely discussed both inside and outside the United States. Many proposals have been advanced, some of which are extreme. We understand fully that extreme changes are not practical; nor, in our view are they necessary. What seems to us to be required is a significant purposeful and timely advance in the removal of barriers and uncertainties so as to provide reasonable opportunities for mutually advantageous trade with other countries to widen and expand. The adjustments which are needed in the present circumstances are very largely a logical extension and a fulfilment of measures which the United States itself has pursued and advocated for many years. The further progress which is sought is in harmony with both the general national interest and the international political realities of today.

There have been in recent months a number of careful studies in the United States pointing to the specific steps which might be taken to reduce barriers to trade. Without going over all this ground in detail, we have thought it useful to indicate some of the directions in which adjustments in present United States trade policies would be particularly helpful.

Perhaps the most important single step from a practical point of view would be the development of an effective programme for the gradual reduction of excessive tariff barriers. The United States, Canada and other countries have, since the end of the war, made significant progress to reduce their tariff levels on a large list of goods. This process, however, has not gone far enough. Despite the many reductions already made, experience has shown that there remain wide categories in the United States tariff where the rates are formidable or insurmountable. Having regard to the strong creditor position of the United States an improvement in this situation is all the more necessary.

Another feature of present United States tariff policy which has proven particularly troublesome is the uncertainty that flows from the numerous escape clauses which surround the existing laws. There is a widespread feeling among traders that successful efforts to sell in the difficult United States market will be countered by increases in tariff rates whenever there are signs of real competition. Greater certainty in tariff treatment would encourage other countries to undertake the necessary efforts and expense to build up their markets in the United States. The deterrents resulting from continuous uncertainties in tariff treatment constitute a serious barrier to the expansion of trade.

A further series of trade obstacles, often more restrictive than the tariff itself, are the highly complex and outmoded customs procedures and administrative barriers associated with the formalities of importation. The position in the United States regarding this matter has been the subject of numerous complaints by Canadian exporters, as well as by exporters of many other countries. Customs valuation procedures render it extremely difficult for manufactured goods to make their way into the United States market from abroad. The early passage of a Customs Simplification Bill would introduce reforms which are long overdue in the field of customs valuation. It would fulfil commitments entered into by representatives of the United States almost six years ago, and make a timely and valuable contribution to our common objectives of expanding world trade. It is encouraging to note that the President has recommended early action on this matter.

Much attention has been directed to the restrictive effects of the "Buy America" Act. Because of the requirements of this legislation outside suppliers are often denied access to an important segment of the American market, even though they have proved themselves to be fully competitive. The relaxation of the provisions of this Act would be of material assistance in promoting mutually advantageous trade with friendly countries, and at the same time make possible substantial savings in public expenditures.

High restrictive and protectionist policies in the field of shipping continue to hamper the efforts of overseas countries to expand their dollar earnings. Effective economic co-operation would seem to require that countries be encouraged to expand their efforts in fields where they are particularly efficient. Shipping is clearly a field where we in North America are not as competitive as many of our overseas trading partners. In the interests of our common strength and prosperity, the liberalization of shipping policies, consistent with the maintenance of vital security interests, would constitute a valuable step in achieving better allocation of the resources of the free world.

The Canadian authorities appreciate that the formulation of long-term foreign economic policy in the United States in respect of these and other matters is a considerable task encompassing many difficult issues and calling for the most careful study. We in Canada have been encouraged by the recent steps taken to initiate comprehensive studies of all the issues involved. We are hopeful that these studies will lead to constructive results. In this connection the Canadian Government wishes to emphasize the importance it attaches to moving forward as expeditiously as possible. In its view there is at this time a real opportunity for a decisive move towards freer trade and currency arrangements. Overseas countries are showing a genuine desire to break out of the restrictive ring that surrounds them and divides the free world. At the same time there is evidence that the balance of opinion in deficit countries in favour of more liberal policies is precarious and can easily be upset by excessive delays or fear that the United States is unwilling to co-operate in a common effort to improve trading relations. For this reason we believe that it is of the greatest importance that the United States administration should give, as soon as possible, clear evidence that it would be willing to play its full part in a collective approach to strengthen the economic foundations of the western alliance.

In recent months another danger has appeared more plainly. The recent moves of the Soviet Union indicate clearly that it intends to exploit to the full any weaknesses and divisions in the economic structure of the free world. A situation in which our world remains economically divided and where expansion in output is frustrated by lack of access to markets and inability to purchase raw materials and foodstuffs, provides the Soviet Union with the maximum opportunity to hold out the lure of alternatives. The ultimate aim of the Soviet Union is, of course, to weaken our political unity and our defensive strength. It is significant that recently in Geneva and elsewhere the Communist countries have followed up their political moves with a trade offensive whereby they dangle attractive-looking promises of trade in precisely those goods which our overseas allies are having difficulty in selling in the United States market.

The Canadian Government understands that it is the desire of the United States administration to continue present trade policies pending the outcome of the comprehensive studies which are now in progress. In this connection we have noted the President's request to Congress that as an interim measure the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act be extended for a period of one year. Numerous developments in the meantime, however, raise the fear that the commercial policy of the United States is in serious danger of being altered in a fundamental way before the process of formulating a new foreign economic policy has been completed. The Canadian authorities are gravely concerned lest the adoption of some of the restrictive proposals now under consideration have the effect of seriously prejudicing future policy.

In connection with the proposal to extend the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act for one year, it is understood that Congressional Hearings are now taking place on a Bill which, if adopted, would lead immediately to a grave deterioration in trading relationships between the United States and its partners in the free world. This Bill, and others, contain provisions to impose restrictions on the import of petroleum and to increase the tariff rates on lead and zinc. New and wider escape clauses and peril point provisions are also introduced. In the field of agriculture it is understood that proposals are now under consideration which would have the effect of applying sweeping new policies of import controls on a number of important agricultural products of interest to many countries in addition to the import controls now in effect. Many, if not all, of these restrictive proposals are directly contrary to the undertakings of the United States under present trade agreements.

While these proposals have not been implemented thus far, they constitute serious danger signals. If these proposals are allowed to develop, they would destroy the opportunities for progress which now exist. They would cause a serious deterioration in present economic relations with grave consequences for all the countries of the free world. Such a development would be looked upon as an abandonment of United States leadership in the vital sphere of economic relations. It would lead to a multiplication and further extension of trade and currency restrictions which cannot fail to have a serious impact on the welfare and security of the free world.

It is necessary in this connection to refer more specifically to the implications for the future of Canada-United States relations of the restrictive proposals now under consideration in Congress. The Governments of Canada and the United States are associated at present in a wide variety of cooperative enterprises designed to contribute, not only to the strength of North America, but also to the strength and prosperity of the entire peace-loving world. This co-operation has been especially close and effective in matters of trade and finance. Both countries have fostered the development of mutually profitable trade and for some decades now have attempted to solve their trade problems, not by restrictive measures, but by the progressive reduction of barriers to trade. Under these policies our mutual trade has risen to unprecedented heights so that today the commerce which crosses our common border is greater than the trade between any other two countries. Each country is by far the other's best customer. Along with this trade there has developed a close and extensive relationship over the whole field of economic, financial and industrial endeavour.

If the restrictive proposals such as those now under discussion in the United States were adopted, it would lead unavoidably to a reversal of many years of solid progress in the development of mutually advantageous economic relations. Such a reversal would have a serious and direct impact upon large and important industries in both countries. It would lead to an inefficient and wasteful use of resources and weaken the basis of our economic and defensive strength.

One example illustrative of a possible trend will suffice to indicate the dangers inherent in the restrictive proposals now being advocated. In the past few years Canada, as part of an effort to improve our combined strength, undertook to expand the output of base metals, including lead and zinc. Proposals now before Congress provide for higher duties on lead and zinc which would be increased further if the prices of these commodities decline. This would have the effect of making Canada a marginal supplier, so that the full brunt of any price adjustments would fall on Canadian producers. When the United States is again short of lead and zinc, it might be very difficult to persuade Canadian producers again to take the risk of serving as marginal suppliers to the United States. Other proposals to increase restrictions against Canadian goods, including petroleum, oats and other agricultural products, would have similarly damaging effects and in this way weaken the fabric of both the United States and the Canadian economies.

For years now Canada has consistently sought to follow liberal policies in its trade relations. Canada has resisted getting entangled in regional trade and currency arrangements of the kind that are bulwarked by discrimination against the United States, because we are convinced that sound economic relations cannot be built on discrimination and regionalism. The Canadian Government is firmly convinced that it is desirable to continue these trade policies in the interests of both our countries. Its ability to do so is dependent upon the conviction that the United States will follow a similar course. If, however, fresh restrictive measures were imposed in the United States against Canada's basic exports, it would be increasingly difficult for Canada to maintain these liberal, multilateral trade policies and to continue to resist pressure for restrictions and discrimination against the United States.

The world has in the past experienced the consequences of failure to maintain satisfactory international economic relations. We have seen during the 'thirties a spreading paralysis of our economic life and the deterioration in our political relationships which have accompanied a breakdown in world trade. Experience of that period has shown that no single country, no matter how powerful, can be safe and prosperous in isolation. Political cooperation is not possible without economic cooperation. If this has been so in the past how much more so is it today when we are confronted with a shrewd and powerful adversary determined to reduce our strength — eager to exploit every weakness.

It is because we are convinced that more liberal international economic policies are essential to the success of our joint efforts for resisting this threat, for achieving peace and building the sound prosperity of the free world, that we have felt compelled to put forward these views and to point to the real dangers inherent in the present situation. We are confident that the United States Government, aware of the seriousness of these matters, will take advantage of the opportunity which now exists to provide the leadership necessary to move forward towards more satisfactory economic relations. We in Canada have consistently supported all measures leading to maximum cooperation between us. Like the United States, we have made substantial aid available to help our allies regain their economic health and to build up their defences. Canada can be counted upon to play its full part in partnership with the other free nations in the collective efforts necessary to establish better economic relations. These we regard as basic to the maintenance of peace, and the solidarity, security and prosperity of the free world.

Compte rendu des conversations entre le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures et le Département d'État des États-Unis

Report of Talks between Secretary of State for External Affairs and Department of State of United States

SECRET [Washington], May 8, 1953

THE VISIT OF THE PRIME MINISTER OF CANADA TO WASHINGTON, MAY 7 TO MAY 9[4]

Mr. Pearson saw the Deputy Under-Secretary of State, Mr. H. Freeman Matthews, and the Assistant and Deputy Assistant Secretaries for European Affairs, Messrs. Livingston Merchant and James Bonbright, at the State Department, to discuss some of the major current Canadian pre-occupations in the field of foreign affairs of mutual concern to Canada and the United States. The talks dealt with the situation in Indo-China and Korea, United States commercial policy, the St. Lawrence canal and power projects, Continental defence, and NATO.

2. On Indo-China, Mr. Pearson referred to an appreciation of the situation in Indo-China given by the President to the Prime Minister at the meeting at the White House earlier in the day, when the President thought that the chances of the French succeeding in maintaining their position in Indo-China were poor, unless a dramatic move was made to obtain the support of the native population. Mr. Matthews said that the State Department certainly agree with that view, but added that the immediate situation could be improved substantially if the French could show at least some military success. He was able to throw little light on the immediate military situation in Laos, which according to press reports, had improved on account of withdrawals by the Communist forces, apparently for the purpose of shortening lines of communication in view of the impending Monsoon weather.

3. Mr. Pearson then referred to comments made by Mr. Dulles earlier in the day to the effect that in his judgment the threat to South-East Asia was more important in terms of the global struggle with Soviet imperialism than the fight in Korea but that the two were sectors of the same front. Mr. Pearson said that it would be difficult, he thought, for the Canadian public to accept such an assimilation politically, unless there was some United Nations verdict which transformed what still seemed, to some extent at least, to be a struggle against French colonial control into an international security issue. Mr. Pearson observed that the French seemed strongly opposed to submitting the Indo-Chinese question to the United Nations. Mr. Pearson mentioned that Mr. Dulles had thrown out the idea that perhaps the United Nations Peace Observation Commission machinery might be used in Thailand to reassure the Thai Government by giving evidence of United Nations interest in the security of this country against attack by Communist forces in Indo-China.[5] Mr. Pearson said that he would like to examine this idea further.

Korea

4. Mr. Pearson said that the news about the new proposals made from the Communist side for resolving the prisoners of war issue in the armistice negotiations seemed encouraging, though there were still some aspects of the negotiations which seemed to him to leave room for doubt as to an early armistice. On a first reading of the new proposals, it seemed that the Communists had made an important concession by withdrawing their insistence that the prisoners of war who reject repatriation, should be physically moved to a neutral country, but instead they now proposed that they be allowed to remain in Korea under the control and supervision of the representatives of five neutral governments. Mr. Matthews said that this move was encouraging, though he saw some difficulties in the proposal. He thought that the United States would find it difficult to accept the idea of having Polish or Czech forces sent to Korea to police the unrepatriable prisoners; on the other hand, the Communists might agree to having the custodial forces provided entirely by one or other of the neutral states, say India. Mr. Pearson said that a possible alternative solution might be the demilitarization of the camps leaving the existing United Nations forces there for guarding, but placing them under neutral supervision. Another difficulty mentioned by Mr. Matthews was the apparent insistence on the Communist side that the ultimate disposition of the unrepatriable prisoners of war should be left to the political conference which is to consider a political settlement for Korea. This was the real remaining stumbling block.

5. Mr. Pearson said it was important that every effort should be made to try to attain an agreement on an armistice. Once such an Agreement is in effect, he thought that the problem of the unrepatriable prisoners might become less difficult as some of the prisoners who now refused repatriation, might decide to go home voluntarily. Mr. Matthews agreed that the main difficulty would be the hard core of

Under the "Uniting for Peace Resolution" adopted by the General Assembly in November, 1950, the procedures for establishing the Peace Observation Commission are as follows:
"Upon the invitation or with the consent of the State into whose territory the Commission would go, the General Assembly, or the Interim Committee when the Assembly is not in session, may utilize the Commission if the Security Council is not exercising the functions assigned to it by the Charter with respect to the matter in question. Decisions to utilize the Commission shall be made on the affirmative vote of two-thirds of the members present and voting. The Security Council may also utilize the Commission in accordance with its authority under the Charter."

approximately 14,000 Chinese Communist prisoners; the UNC would gladly release the North Koreans.

6. Mr. Pearson said that it seemed to him that the United Nations Command should take pains to convince world opinion of the sincerity of its desire to reach an armistice agreement. The current Communist tactics in the negotiations at Panmunjom could be explained either by a genuine desire to have an armistice in Korea or to put the United States in a position of appearing to be responsible for the negotiations breaking down by making concessions on the assumption that it was safe to do so because the Americans were unalterably opposed to any armistice. Now that the differences on the prisoners of war issue between the two sides seemed to be so narrow, the public in Canada would certainly expect to see every possibility explored of reaching agreement. There had been considerable concern in Canada at some of the tactics used by General Harrison in the current negotiations, although perhaps it could be argued that they may have been justified by the recent results. Mr. Pearson said they were disturbed and surprised to hear from Mr. Dulles during the morning meeting that the United States Government had been on the point of breaking off the negotiations at Panmunjom; he was unaware that the Canadian Government had been warned of this intention. Mr. Matthews said that perhaps there had been a misunderstanding about what Mr. Dulles had said. Actually General Harrison's instructions required him to refer back to Washington before taking any action to break off armistice negotiations; he was only at liberty to ask for a recess of the talks for two or three days. This was what Mr. Dulles had in mind. Mr. Pearson said that he was glad to have this explanation which was reassuring. Mr. Matthews went on to stress that despite impressions which may have been given by certain public statements in the United States, such as those of General Van Fleet, all senior responsible officials of the Administration, both military and civil, were earnestly desirous to obtain an armistice. All the three alternatives to an armistice were definitely disagreeable:

(a) evacuation of Korea;

(b) continuation of the stalemate; or

(c) increased military pressure.

7. The discussion on the Korean armistice negotiations concluded with Mr. Pearson emphasizing that it was the assumption of the Canadian Government that all countries which had contributed forces to the United Nations command in Korea would be consulted in the event that the United States contemplated breaking off armistice negotiations. Mr. Matthews appreciated this desire and assured Mr. Pearson that it was the earnest desire of the United States Government to try to reach agreement on an armistice in Korea.

8. Mr. Pearson asked whether the State Department had made any plans for a post-armistice political conference. He said that as President of the United Nations General Assembly, it was especially important that he should have the views of the United States Government on the timing, terms of reference and composition of the conference which, under the terms of the armistice, would have to be called to consider a political settlement in Korea. Mr. Matthews said that there had been no decisions on this matter since the new Administration had taken office; nor had the question yet been explored with the Secretary of State himself. Mr. Matthews said that it was his understanding that the terms of reference for the conference would include those Far Eastern questions which were "directly" related to Korea. He did not elaborate on the effect of this limitation. As to the composition of the conference, various possibilities were briefly discussed, including the establishment by the General Assembly of a negotiating committee representative of United Nations members which had contributed forces to Korea, so-called "neutral" members of the United Nations as well as the Communist belligerents. It was Mr. Matthews' understanding that the USSR would be invited to be represented at this conference, whatever may be decided about the other members. Mr. Pearson emphasized the importance of making plans for such a conference in advance, as it would be necessary for the United Nations General Assembly to be in a position to take some action on the matter, at least within three or four weeks after the conclusion of a military armistice.

9. There was also a discussion of the attitude of President Syngman Rhee towards an armistice in Korea. Mr. Pearson asked whether the State Department expects trouble from the Republic of Korea over the acceptance of an armistice. Mr. Matthews said that from both private and public statements, it was evident that the Republic of Korea was going to oppose agreement on a military armistice unless the unification of Korea is provided for before the fighting stops; perhaps some of this opposition represented a bargaining position. The United States authorities were in constant communication with President Rhee and his government and would do their best to forestall a crisis. The difficulty was that there was no political leader available in the Republic of Korea who might replace Syngman Rhee.

United States Commercial Policy

10. Mr. Pearson drew the State Department's attention to the public concern in Canada over some aspects of United States commercial policy in his talks with Messrs. Matthews, Livingston Merchant and Bonbright. He explained that this was going to be discussed by the Prime Minister with the President, but he would like to emphasize its current and potential effect upon the relations between Canada and the United States. He referred to the resolution, unanimously approved by the House of Commons on May 6, as reflecting public concern in Canada about the restrictions already imposed by the United States on the importation of Canadian agricultural products in violation of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. Mr. Pearson also spoke of the potential danger to the relations between the two countries generally, if further protectionist policies develop in the United States. The quotas imposed on the import of dairy products were already a source of public concern in Canada. If now that restrictions might be increased on the import of oats as well as upon certain base metals such as lead and zinc there would be real trouble. Only two years ago Canada had been urged to expand its production of lead and zinc as a contribution to the rearmament programme. A higher tariff on lead and zinc, therefore, would not only impair trade relations, but leave a bitter feeling in Canada.

11. The Canadian Government, Mr. Pearson said, also approached the problem in terms of its broader international implications. The effort now being made by the British Government to reduce restrictive barriers to trade, would if given encouragement and support by the United States, open the way to a more general movement towards a reduction of trade barriers. It was the hope of the Canadian Government that the initiative of the United Kingdom Government would have the sympathetic support of the United States Government. If, on the other hand, the United Kingdom Government found an unsympathetic attitude in Washington to their efforts to liberalize trade, they might well be obliged to return to more restrictive trade practices and Canada would find itself at a serious disadvantage in trade, both in the United States and the United Kingdom markets. Present trends in United States commercial policy were not encouraging. For instance, in order to maintain the domestic price support programme in agricultural products, the tendency seemed to be to impose further restrictions on the import of agricultural produce from abroad. There was also the considerable apprehension about the effect of crippling amendments to the renewal of the reciprocal trade bill.

12. Mr. Livingston Merchant said that in his opinion the reciprocal trade bill would be extended for one year without serious change through amendment, as the President had asked. He also said that it was natural that the new Administration should wish to review in detail the commercial policy based upon the Reciprocal Trade Agreement Act, even though this was admittedly rooted in a position which had been given bipartisan support in the past.

13. Mr. Pearson concluded by saying that he hoped that he would hear something more reassuring before the Prime Minister left Washington. The Canadian Government had been encouraged by the evidence of change in British trade policies, reflected not only in the talks which had taken place when Mr. Butler had visited Ottawa and Washington, but also in the recent British budget. It was most important in the Canadian view that the United States should now help to work towards a broader international programme for the removal of trade barriers. Mr. Pearson feared that if the current trends towards restrictive trade practices by the United States resulted in action, opinion in Canada would tend to lay a large, and perhaps not altogether deserved, measure of blame upon the United States. He could not agree that time could wait upon events. He feared that the situation might deteriorate within the next six months if the situation were allowed to drift. Action by the United States Government might involve not only further bilateral discussions with Canada, but also consultations with the British and other Governments concerned. In the meantime, the Prime Minister would leave a memorandum with the President setting out Canadian Government views on this subject.

St. Lawrence Canal and Power Project

14. Mr. Pearson also stressed the important impact upon Canada-United States relations of the St. Lawrence project. He hoped that it would be possible to remove the remaining obstacles to proceeding with the development of power by the Province of Ontario as soon as possible. Mr. Pearson said that he had understood from the President's remarks at luncheon that a favourable decision was expected shortly from the Federal Power Commission on the application from New York Power Authority for a license. He hoped that this decision would not be challenged in the courts and that prolonged litigation would not further postpone work on the development of power.

15. Mr. Pearson explained that, as in the case of United States commercial policy, long delay over the St. Lawrence project through United States inaction might be injected into the election campaign in a way which might adversely affect the relations between the two countries. He hoped that the remaining obstacles to the development of power in particular would be removed before the elections, for the Canadian public was becoming increasingly impatient at the delays and frustrations which appear to them to be caused by the United States Congress or administrative bodies.

Continental Defence

16. In his talks with Mr. Matthews, as well as with Mr. Livingston Merchant, Mr. Pearson took the occasion to explain certain Canadian pre-occupations about United States requests for facilities in Canada for continental defence. He pointed out that in order to meet North Atlantic Treaty commitments, the Canadian Government had moved virtually all its modern jet fighter aircraft to Western Europe, and that only reserve squadrons would be available for home defence until the new CF-100 become available in quantities and new squadrons are manned with them at the end of this year. In view of the temporary shortage of Canadian fighters available for home defence in Canada, Mr. Pearson wanted the United States authorities to realize that requests from the United States Government to station further squadrons of the United States Air Force in Canada might create political difficulties.

17. Mr. Pearson also mentioned the problem of the installation of radar stations. While the experimental radar stations which were planned for the Far North should not present much difficulty, Mr. Pearson said that he would like the United States authorities to bear in mind that United States manned facilities and installations, located near centres of heavy population in Canada, do present political difficulties. Mr. Pearson expressed the hope that United States officials would bear these Canadian pre-occupations in mind in connection with defence projects such as the joint study which has been set up to look into "Project Counterchange".

NATO

18. There was a brief discussion with Mr. Livingston Merchant, the Assistant Secretary for European Affairs, on the recent Ministerial NATO Council meeting in Paris. Mr. Merchant agreed with Mr. Pearson that the recent meetings had been successful, largely owing to the improved preparatory work done under the direction of the Permanent Representatives with the help of the NATO Secretariat. The State Department officials said that they were pleased with the accomplishments of the meeting, especially because of the unanimity reached in the discussion of recent trends in Soviet policy. They were rather concerned about the bad publicity for the meeting in the press of the United States. Mr. Pearson said that he was not so worried about the extent of publicity, so long as it was not too unfavourable to NATO. It could not be expected that successive Ministerial meetings should produce dramatic news. Turning to the future, Mr. Livingston Merchant said that he foresaw that the next annual review would be very important, as it would have to take into account the new approach which had been discussed at the last Ministerial meeting of levelling out the build-up of military strength and dropping the concept of the "critical year". Mr. Merchant asserted that this new approach would not mean any substantial reduction in terms of fighting strength either in armed forces or equipment, insofar as the United States defence contribution was concerned.

RECORD OF DISCUSSIONS BETWEEN THE PRIME MINISTER AND PRESIDENT EISENHOWER

I enclose three copies of the record which I have made of the two meetings held in the President's office at the White House on May 7th and May 8th. It had been decided in advance that it was unnecessary to produce agreed minutes of these talks. Mr. Livingston Merchant has also made a record for use by the United States authorities, and we have compared our versions to see that there were no important discrepancies. The enclosure incorporates some points which were included in Mr. Merchant's draft but not in my original draft, and Mr. Merchant is including certain points from my draft in his record. There are, I think no differences of substance between the two records.

2. I had hoped to be able to forward a copy of the record made by the State Department. Mr. Merchant tells me, however, that before he could hand me a copy it would be necessary for him to secure approval of his record by the President and the other participants on the US side. I am therefore not giving him, for the present at any rate, a copy of the enclosure.

Compte rendu de la première rencontre entre le premier ministre et le président des États-Unis

Report of First Meeting Between Prime Minister and President of United States

SECRET Washington, May 7, 1953

There were present the President, the Prime Minister, the Secretary of State, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Canadian Ambassador, Mr. Frank Nash, Assistant Secretary of Defense, and Mr. Livingston Merchant, Assistant Secretary of State.

After some preliminary talk, The Prime Minister said that Canadians had gladly accepted the military leadership of the President in war and as Supreme Commander of the NATO forces in Europe, and were now looking to his political leadership of the free world. The President remarked that he personally was dedicated to the success of NATO; if he did not believe in its great importance, he would not have left "the best job in the United States" to become Supreme Commander of the NATO forces. The partners in the North Atlantic Treaty were the stronghold of the free world. It was necessary to maintain outposts at various points in the Eurasian land mass which, if attacked, would be sufficiently powerful to hang on until relief could arrive.

The Prime Minister agreed with the President and brought up the new Communist proposals in the Korean armistice negotiations. Mr. Dulles remarked that these proposals were close to the terms of the Indian Resolution adopted by the General Assembly, except that they specifically included India as a member of the group of five "neutrals" (Sweden, Switzerland, Poland, and Czechoslovakia) instead of leaving the fifth member to be named by the other four. He also mentioned that no time limit was set for the ultimate release of prisoners refusing to be repatriated; if agreement was not reached, the disposition of those not repatriated was to be referred to the political conference. Mr. Pearson expressed concern about the prospects of any political conference and Mr. Dulles agreed that this raised very difficult problems. Mr. Dulles went on to say that the United States would not stand for lengthy haggling and that a few days before they had been on the point of breaking off the armistice negotiations. Later it was learnt at the State Department that what had then been considered was only to recess the negotiations for a few days and not to break them off completely.

With reference to Korea, The President mentioned the frequent impatience shown in the United States for quick solutions of difficult problems and said he supposed that the same sentiment might be found in Canada. The Prime Minister said that he thought that in Canada there was not much impatience for "getting it over with" by some drastic course of action. The President agreed that patience was required; he was prepared to resist pressures by supporters of drastic solutions. He added that no member of the Administration supported any attempt to take drastic military action.

Turning to Indo-China, The President said that in his judgment the attack on Laos was a far greater danger than Korea. Mr. Dulles said that he had just had two discussions with the Ambassador of Thailand, who was advocating a study under the authority of the Security Council. He considered that the security of Thailand itself was of extreme importance to the free world. Mr. Pearson enquired whether the attack on Laos and the consequent threat to Thailand did not provide a very good opportunity for the despatch to the area of a Peace Observation Group under the Assembly's resolution "uniting for peace". Mr. Dulles said that it seemed to him that there was an admirable case for this action and that careful consideration was being given to it in Washington.

Mr. Pearson then referred to the desire of the French Government to link the situation in Indo-China with the question of the observance of an armistice in Korea. He remarked that while there might be a military case for associating the two areas, politically the problems were completely separate, Korea being a United Nations operation and the situation in Indo-China not having been discussed in the United Nations and having some aspects of a colonial war.

The President said that what was required in Indo-China was a firm and unequivocal declaration by the French Government of their intention to further the independence of the Indo-Chinese States. This was necessary to get the Viet-Namese on the side of the free world and to end the prevalent suspicions that the fighting in Indo-China was a colonial adventure. Without support of the indigenous peoples, the French could not succeed. The French should, by announcing the required political concessions, make a virtue of necessity. Mr. Dulles referred to the reluctance of the French Government to take the attack on Laos to the United Nations. He mentioned the arguments which he had put forward in favour of this general course when in Paris the previous week. The President added that there seemed to him to be a certain similarity between the British attitude in the Iranian dispute and the French feelings towards Indo-China: neither government expected to recover their lost ground, but the British were sticking to their position in Iran because they believed that this was necessary to protect the sanctity of contracts elsewhere, and the French in Indo-China were opposed to granting further political concessions there because they were thinking of the effect in their other colonial territories.

Turning to the question of Soviet intentions, The President favoured the exploration of the sincerity of recent Soviet moves to the last corner. He himself had no thought that these moves amounted to a permanent change in Soviet aims. The Prime Minister wondered how important as a motivation was the desire among the Soviet people for an easier life. The President recalled a talk which he had had with Stalin in 1945 in which Stalin had spoken very freely of the extremely low standard of living in Russia and the long hours of work and had declared that he believed it necessary to improve the standard. The Prime Minister remarked that the jail delivery recently announced in Moscow could not be regarded as part of a "peace offensive" from an international point of view; it appeared to indicate a genuine internal need. Mr. Dulles thought that after the death of Stalin there was a demand all round for a relaxation of tension. From the free world point of view, it was easier for the allies to be united in actual fighting than in reaching agreement among themselves in political conferences, such as that which would take place after the armistice in Korea.

There was a brief discussion on Egypt. The President said that he had been quite ready to take part in the negotiations between the British and the Egyptians, but that the United States would not take part, of course, unless they were invited, and no invitation had been received. In the meantime, the talks in Cairo were suspended until Mr. Dulles arrived there in the following week. Mr. Dulles went on to say that the immediate cause of the suspension was the question of the technicians which were needed to maintain the base. The President added that two or three days before, the new Egyptian Ambassador had told him that there would be no difficulty over the presence in the base of the large number of technicians required to look after the stores and installations there. He thought, however, that the nub of the difficulty might be the nationality of the technicians because of the Egyptian desire to have as few British there as possible.

Mr. Pearson then introduced the question of the air defence of North America and in particular of the proposed new chain of radar stations in the Far North running from Alaska to Thule. The President said that he had seen no detailed plan of this project. He believed that the United States should provide its fair share. Anything done should be on the basis of partnership, and the United States would, of course, show full respect for Canadian sovereignty. He assumed that the military staffs of the two countries were in contact. Mr. Nash remarked that it had just been agreed to set up a joint military survey group to review the whole matter. Approval had been given for three experimental stations to be constructed this summer. The Prime Minister said that some months ago there was pressure from the United States for Canadian approval of the project. There was some evidence in Canada of a strong feeling that expansion of such installations in the Far North was primarily in the interests of the United States. In Canada, the experts thought that this new chain was not nearly as useful as alternative courses which might be taken, in particular the building up of forces as a deterrent to Soviet aggression. Mr. Nash observed that while a number of the scientists concerned with this project were enthusiastic, their enthusiasm was by no means fully shared by all the military authorities. He thought that the wise course was to have the three experimental stations built and their efficiency tested. He added that the enthusiasts would like to see a programme adopted for improving the air defences which might cost as much as $20 billions. The President observed that if a programme of this size were completed, it would certainly be obsolete immediately because of the speed of scientific developments. Mr. Pearson said that quite apart from any question of military need for installations in the Far North constructed by the US or jointly, the political question arose in Canada of why Canada should not construct, maintain and operate all such installations in Canadian territory instead of permitting the United States squadrons and technicians into Canada while Canadian squadrons and technicians were moving to Europe. The Prime Minister added that a point that was troubling the advisers to the Canadian Government was what use could be made of a warning of approaching aircraft reported by a Far Northern chain of radar stations if it was not possible to take action of the right sort on the receipt of such a warning. The President appeared to agree that this was a central question. Mr. Nash remarked that it was chiefly the Civil Defence authorities in the United States who continued to consider that the construction of the whole trans-Arctic chain was very important.

The meeting then adjourned for photographs and luncheon.

Compte rendu de la deuxième rencontre entre le premier ministre et le président des États-Unis

Report of Second Meeting Between Prime Minister and President of United States

SECRET Washington, May 11, 1953

There were present the President, the Prime Minister, the Secretaries of State, Treasury, and Defence, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Canadian Ambassador, Mr. J.W. Pickersgill, Secretary of the Canadian Cabinet, and Mr. Livingston Merchant, Assistant Secretary of State.

The President began the discussion by saying that the Cabinet had that morning approved a report by a sub-committee endorsing on certain conditions the participation of the United States Government in the St. Lawrence Waterway. Mr. Sherman Adams proceeded to read a statement for immediate release to the press embodying this report. The President added that the Attorney General considered that the opponents to the development of power by the State of New York in conjunction with the Province of Ontario would have, if they took the issue to the courts on legal grounds, a very poor case. As to method of participation in the Waterway, if Congress approved, the agency would be a public corporation with authority to issue bonds, the amortization of the costs to be completed within fifty years. On the suggestion of The Prime Minister and Mr. Pearson, the statement for the press was slightly amended in order to make it clear that the participation in the Waterway which was contemplated was only in the International Section of the St. Lawrence River. Mr. Adams then left the meeting to issue the statement.

The Prime Minister then raised some economic questions currently causing anxiety in Canada, and this led into a discussion of international economic policy, to which the rest of the meeting was devoted.

The Prime Minister referred to the restrictions on the importation of dairy products which had been imposed by Section 104 of the Defense Production Act, expiring on June 30th, and to the demand in Congress for the renewal of these restrictions. He said that the restrictions were in conflict with the obligations undertaken by the United States under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and for this reason they caused particular concern. On the previous day in the Canadian House of Commons an Opposition member had moved a resolution urging "further vigorous efforts" by the Government to bring about the removal of these restrictions. After slight amendment the resolution was adopted unanimously.[6] The President outlined the domestic situation with respect to dairy products and in particular the difficulties which the government was facing in connection with over-production of butter. He criticized the foolish support policy (he called it "the fool straightjacket") which was now compelling the government to buy and store very large quantities of butter and to dispose of what they could through non-commercial channels at heavy losses. The Prime Minister then referred to Canadian complaints that the long-established export trade in dairy cattle was being seriously restricted through the extreme severity with which border officials were applying the regulations. Mr. Dulles remarked that in his experience there was a frequent tendency of border officials to assert their authority unduly by exercising their powers of exclusion to the utmost. The Prime Minister observed that it had taken a long time in Canada to change the attitude of immigration officers; during the period of restrictive immigration policies they had been inclined to search for reasons for keeping people out, and this continued for some time after the adoption by the government of a much freer immigration policy.

Mr. Pearson remarked that the actions mentioned by the Prime Minister about dairy products and dairy cows were giving rise to widespread fears that the United States was entering a period of restricting trade, and that such fears had a serious effect on the general strength of the free world. Mr. Dulles said that the Administration was hoping to prevent the passage of the Simpson Bill by the Congress; the aim was to secure a straightforward renewal of the present Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act for one year.

The Prime Minister then referred to the threatened increase in US duties on lead and zinc, and mentioned that a member of the Canadian Parliament had urged that, if this action was taken, Canada should retaliate by imposing export duties on nickel and asbestos needed for United States consumption. After the Korean War, Canadian production of lead and zinc had been considerably expanded at the urgent request of the United States authorities. The proposal in Congress would put Canadian producers in the position of marginal suppliers and would make it very difficult to expand production rapidly in the event of war; the mines ought to be in a position to operate profitably in peacetime without new restriction on their access to the US market. The President said that the Prime Minister was talking economic sense, but the impulses of nationalism and the arguments based on the view that the needs of defence required domestic sources of supply were difficulties in the way of acceptance of the Prime Minister's views. Mr. Dulles referred to the feverish production and acquisition of raw materials which had taken place after the outbreak of the Korean war in the belief that a world war might be imminent; this had resulted in the building up of too large stocks, which were overhanging the market, especially of lead, and had given rise to a great deal of speculation.[7]

Mr. Wilson then observed that both the countries would be better off if they moved closer and closer towards free trade between them. If free trade were established, he said that the General Motors Corporation would fully continue production in their Canadian plants, although their capacity might be used for the production of parts to a greater degree than at present. He expressed the belief that complete free trade with Canada would be in the mutual interest. The President remarked that on almost every occasion on which he met with the Cabinet, discussion of the need for freer trade came up, together with the methods of coping with pressure groups demanding protection of particular interests.

The Prime Minister then mentioned that other current commercial difficulties with Canada were occurring in the agricultural field; an embargo on the import of Canadian oats had, he understood, been demanded. The President said he had never heard of this. The Prime Minister remarked that such matters should, in his judgment, be handled quietly if possible and should not become the subject of debate in Congress. Mr. Pearson advanced a suggestion that consideration might be given to the establishment of a joint economic board. The reference of difficult issues for study and report to joint boards was a well-established practice. The International Joint Commission had been operating successfully for over forty years and the Permanent Joint Board on Defence for over a dozen years. Since the end of the war, both governments had been working towards freer trade, but, as the discussion had shown, there were outstanding demands which might bring about new restrictions in trade. Such a board should, like the PJBD, be advisory. Either government might refer to it for study and recommendation [of] specific problems, such as that relating to Canadian oats which the Prime Minister had mentioned. It ought not to deal with tariff rates. The President remarked that the suggestion of an economic board sounded good to him and that he thought it ought to be given careful consideration. Mr. Wilson expressed his agreement. With regard to current difficulties about the importation of Canadian agricultural products, the Prime Minister observed that he had been surprised recently to learn that Canadian imports of agricultural products from the United States were greater in value than Canadian exports of agricultural products to the United States. The President suggested that Mr. Dulles should be responsible for seeing that the idea of a joint economic board was further examined in Washington. Perhaps Mr. Pearson might be similarly responsible in Ottawa.

The discussion reverted to Mr. Wilson's earlier endorsement of free trade between Canada and the United States. It was pointed out that the existence of most-favoured-nation undertakings would prevent an exclusive tariff arrangement between Canada and the United States of this sort unless it amounted to a complete customs union or free-trade area. Mr. Wilson enquired with a smile whether it would not be possible to treat Canada as a "super-favoured-nation", and the President wondered whether a special tariff relationship could not be established and asked who would be hurt by a customs union. Mr. Wilson remarked that such an accomplishment would set a practical example of what the United States was preaching in Europe. The President agreed and said he would be for free trade between the two countries if further study showed that it was feasible. It would be necessary to consider the effect on immigration, and to identify the areas of difficulty.

The President mentioned the studies of foreign economic policy which were being initiated under Mr. Lewis Douglas and the proposal submitted to Congress for the establishment of a Legislative-Executive Commission to develop recommendations within the next few months on the appropriate foreign economic policy of the United States. Time was required for public education before the pressures of special groups for protection could be diminished in force. The Prime Minister, referring to the suggestion of a special tariff relationship with Canada, said that it was important to avoid doing anything which would keep others out. The problem, in his judgment, had to be viewed in the light of the needs of the whole free world, which should be constantly kept in mind. Mr. Humphrey agreed with the Prime Minister. He enquired about the effect on Commonwealth relationships. The Prime Minister answered that he was thinking of the free world as a whole, and did not consider that inter-Commonwealth relationships were much involved.

Mr. Pearson then referred to the hopes which had been expressed at the Commonwealth Economic Conference last November. He believed that the United Kingdom Government had then made a big decision that as early a return as possible to multilateral trade and convertible currencies should be their aim. Time was now running out, and he had a real fear of backsliding unless possibilities of earning more dollars were opened to the sterling area. Mr. Dulles and Mr. Humphrey answered that, in their judgment, the United Kingdom was not yet strong enough in its economy to achieve convertibility and abandon its import controls. Mr. Pearson replied that, in any event, it was very important to continue progress towards freer trade; any retreat from the objective would be dangerous to the whole free world. At this point The Prime Minister said that a memorandum had been prepared in Canada expressing Canadian views on international economic problems, which he would like to leave with the President[8] together with the text of the resolution approved on the day before by the Canadian House of Commons. The President accepted the memorandum and resolution and suggested that a detailed discussion of each point in it should take place later.

Mr. Dulles then had to leave the meeting for another appointment.

Continuing discussion on the needs for freeing international trade, The Prime Minister mentioned the trade offers which were being or might be made by the Kremlin and their tempting quality to countries unable to find adequate outlets for their exports and sources outside the dollar area for their essential imports. He expressed fears that unless other markets and sources of supply could be developed, the resistance of some countries to the Communist bloc would be weakened and their contribution to the defence of the free world reduced. The President said that these countries must certainly make a living. His aim in defence was to keep the forces in being as small as would permit them to do the essential job of training young men as they became of age for military service and of providing sufficient power to resist the initial attack in the event of war. If this were achieved, each country would have a large trained reserve which could promptly be called to service in case of need. The policy in which he believed was designed to meet two needs: the averting of sudden disaster and the ability to expand rapidly in wartime. Although this was very difficult of attainment, he thought that it could be done. The Prime Minister agreed that it was essential to have in being forces capable of rapid expansion.

Mr. Wilson again emphasized in this connection the great importance to the free world of the elimination of trade barriers. The President expressed full agreement. The problem of converting to this view some elements in Congress was formidable, but he intended to make progress as fast as possible. He hoped before long that public opinion in the United States would realize the obligations of the country as a creditor nation. In his Cabinet he could assure the Prime Minister that there were no economic isolationists. The Prime Minister expressed the earnest hope that in the meantime there would be no retrograde steps, as these would have an effect in Canada and in other countries altogether out of proportion to their economic importance. The meeting ended with the President asserting his intention of showing the people of the United States that their best interest lay in freer and better international trade.

A draft joint communiqué was then approved by the President and the Prime Minister for immediate issue.[9]

Note de la Direction de l'Amérique

Memorandum by American Division

CONFIDENTIAL [Ottawa], May 19, 1953

On May 13, John Morgan of the US Embassy came to see me to ascertain what we felt of the PM's visit after Mr. Pearson's return.

2. I thought that the main object of the visit had been attained, namely, the Prime Minister had come to know the President in a more personal and informal manner. They had discussed quite freely the main problems confronting the world and our two countries. It was a very successful meeting from that standpoint.

3. As to the results of such a visit, we had not expected any and were, as a consequence, not disappointed. In the international field, the President's assurances concerning his desire for an armistice in Korea were most welcome. Officials wondered, however, whether the President's views were being correctly translated in the directives which were being sent to the negotiators. In the economic field, we saw some shoals ahead which might damage Canadian-US and, say, dollar-sterling relations: we wondered whether the President — in balancing domestic against international requirements — would be in a position to shift the rudder in time to avoid the shoals. On the St. Lawrence project, the US Cabinet did not seem to have a thorough grasp of the Canadian views.

4. In brief, while the visit was very successful from the Prime Minister's viewpoint, officials did not think that the impression derived from the party's visit was one which should give rise to uncontrolled exuberance.

Note du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures pour le premier ministre

MATTERS FOR DISCUSSION WITH PRESIDENT EISENHOWER

The President has been having rather a rough time at home in recent weeks, and especially in the results of a number of "off year" elections. It may be that he is apprehensive that he will be the recipient of a number of troublesome requests or complaints when he is in Ottawa. It seems to me that it would be wise throughout the talks with him to show an appreciative understanding of the domestic political difficulties by which he is surrounded, and also of what he has so far managed to accomplish in dealing with matters of interest to Canada.

2. On the St. Lawrence project, he has acted with speed in completing the final stages of executive action to license the New York Power Authority as the United States entity, and he has also authorized the Attorney General to do what he can to secure an early hearing of the action brought by various interests to prevent the start of construction.

3. On questions of trade, his public statements on the need for greater freedom have been on the whole welcome from our point of view, and he has been exerting an influence with fair success to hold the line against protectionist pressures until the review of United States foreign economic policy which has been undertaken by the Randall Commission[10] has been completed. It might be well to remind him of the careful statement of the policy of the Canadian Government which you handed to him last May, at the meeting in the White House.

4. There are, of course, a number of commodities on which early action to our disadvantage is being demanded by lobbies in the United States. There is only one commodity which in my judgment ought to be mentioned to the President — oats. We have heard that the Tariff Commission has recommended the imposition of a quota of 23 million bushels on the importation of Canadian oats. We have received, confidentially, from a source in the State Department the information that the State Department is recommending to the President that he reject this finding of the [10] Il s'agissait d'une commission nommée par le président Eisenhower pour étudier la politique économique des États-Unis à l'étranger.

This was a commission appointed by President Eisenhower to study US foreign economic policies.

Commission, which apparently was made by a majority of four to three members. As he will have to decide the matter within a few days, a reminder of our interest would be timely.

5. There are several issues concerning defence which you might wish to discuss with him:

(a) Northern continental defences

I think he might be told that the Canadian Government is alive to the need for strengthening Northern anti-aircraft defences and that this has been shown by the rapidity with which agreement has just been reached on the construction of an early warning system, roughly along the line of the 55th parallel. Something might be said also about the desirability of manning such installations as far as possible with Canadians.

(b) North Atlantic Treaty

The President, I am sure, will agree that NATO is as important as ever to the defence of the free world and that the recognition of increased risk of attack on North America should not be interpreted as indicating the possibility in any way of an early withdrawal of North American forces from Europe.

(c) Atomic co-operation

You might welcome the readiness of the United States to increase the exchange of information with Canada and the United Kingdom under the modus vivendi of 1948.[11] Admiral Strauss (pronounced "Straws"), Chairman of the United States Atomic Energy Commission, this week informed the Canadian and British Ambassadors that it had been agreed by the National Security Council that information on weapons effects could be given to both Governments. This should be of great value, both in training of Canadian forces and in connection with civil defence. Admiral Strauss has also stated publicly that further information can be conveyed on reactors for power purposes. In addition he told Mr. Heeney that the President had authorized him to propose amendments to the McMahon Act permitting the relaxation of some of its provisions by giving further information to friendly governments.

(d) Permanent Joint Board

We have heard that the United States Government intends to strengthen its representation on their Section of the Board, and in particular that Governor Dewey may be asked to assume its Chairmanship. I think that this might be brought up by the President, although I doubt the necessity of discussing it unless he first mentions it.

The Representative of the United States of America to the United Nations (Mr. Lodge)
The Assistant to the President (Mr. Adams)
The Ambassador of the United States of America (Mr. Stuart)
The Canadian Ambassador to the United States of America (Mr. Heeney)

1. The Prime Minister welcomed the President of the United States and his advisers. He expressed his appreciation that the President had found time to visit Canada and to have this informal talk about common problems. He and his colleagues would be glad to hear any comments Mr. Eisenhower might wish to make on the general problems faced by both Canada and the United States.

Relations with the Soviet Union

2. The President of the United States thought the most disturbing aspect of the present international situation was the implacable purpose of Russian leaders to dominate the peoples of the world. However, when those leaders spoke in their most truculent and arrogant tones, he felt Russia was not, at that particular time, ready to attack the free world. This seemed an indication of weakness as Soviet tactics should be designed to allay our fears. Obstructive, acrimonious and threatening attitudes only stimulated the free world to look to its defences. On balance, in the light of the great power possessed by the free world, he did not believe the Soviet authorities would provoke a war but they would endeavour by every means possible, to weaken us in such places as Korea, Indo-China, Iran and the Middle East. It was not too difficult to deal with a military threat. Divisions could be raised and the free world geared to war production. The real problem was to counter the gradual subversion of democratic ideas and the fomenting of trouble in under-developed parts of the world and in those nations which were weak and might be attracted by the promises of Communism. The cold war was disagreeable and we should never overlook its seriousness. However, he had every confidence in free men and felt that these disruptive tactics of Soviet leaders could be countered successfully.

Build-up of strength in Europe

3. Mr. St-Laurent asked the President if he felt satisfactory progress was being made in building up the strength necessary to deter aggression in Europe.

4. Mr. Eisenhower thought the goals set by planners were sometimes too high and if they were not reached, as frequently happened, this led to disappointment. Europe could not be any stronger that its economy, and what had to be done was to help the Europeans in every way to earn their own living and for the continent to obtain a viable economy. The free world could not establish a "Roman Wall" in the centre of Europe. North Americans would come to be hated in the process and the underlying difficulties standing in the way of a healthy economy would not be solved. The United States and its allies, however, had given a pledge to assist in defending free Europe from aggression and this had generated some confidence amongst the inhabitants. In turn, this would help in establishing sound economic health. If success, or even partial success, crowned the efforts of those associated with the European Defence Community and the Steel Community, and there was a measure of real convertibility, the North Atlantic Treaty plans would be more easily achieved. It was a slow process, but he was encouraged by the progress which thus far had been made in building up the deterrent strength in Europe under NATO. There was some disappointment over conditions in Italy in that Premier de Gasperi had not secured a majority in his "Legislative Assembly" and the management of affairs had devolved upon other individuals. However, there had been a marked advance in several other countries, for instance, Greece and Turkey.

Trieste

5. Mr. Eisenhower said he was not seriously worried over certain reactions to the decision taken by the United States and the United Kingdom to hand over the administration of Zone "A" at Trieste to Italian authorities. Neither the Yugoslavs nor Italians dared say that they were satisfied with the proposed arrangements, but he felt that the United Kingdom and the United States were justified in attempting to break the stalemate they had faced for seven years. The whole problem was really an emotional one to both parties, neither of whom gave much evidence of good sense and logic in discussing it. It was important to strengthen the southern flank of the European alliance and it was difficult to do so in the absence of a settlement of the Trieste dispute.

Korea

6. Mr. St-Laurent asked the President for an expression of his views on the Korean situation.

7. Mr. Eisenhower said that, while President Syngman Rhee could be extremely difficult at times, we should remember that he was the head of a country that had been invaded and that the condition of the people in South Korea was pitiful. Mr. Rhee had, for many years, been an outcast fighting for a unified Korea and, while it was easy for western authorities to decide what he should accept in the current negotiations, we should not be too unsympathetic in our outlook. There was no doubt, however, that this aspect of the Korean problem could be very harmful unless carefully handled.

If Communist Chinese troops were withdrawn from North Korea, the possibility of China being recognized by the United States would be increased. The feeling in the United States, at the moment, was almost unanimously against recognizing China so long as that country maintained troops in Korea. From President Wilson's time, recognition in the minds of American citizens had implied approval and that was an attitude which the American government must always keep in mind. There had recently been some evidence that Russian authorities were striving, more than ever, to keep the Chinese within their sphere of influence. Anything which the West could do to weaken these bonds would be an advantage to the free world.

It should be remembered that Moscow, like the free world governments, also had some very difficult problems. Under its control were vast numbers of peoples, including satellite nations, with varying degrees of education and culture. The free world should obviously be watchful of every Soviet move, but it should not be paralysed with fright.

Canadian-United States problems

8. Mr. St-Laurent mentioned that Canada and the United States were co-operating in dealing with a great number of other than domestic problems. He did not doubt that, in most cases, satisfactory solutions would be found. Members of the services in both countries were studying matters in relation to continental defence and, in this connection, the Permanent Joint Board on Defence provided a useful organ for solving difficulties.

9. Mr. Eisenhower thought good progress was being made in achieving solutions to these problems. He hoped that advantage would be taken of other than normal diplomatic channels in various discussions which were constantly being held. The Joint Boards which had been established would be useful in this connection. As far as possible, he would like to be in a position to give advance notice to Canadian authorities of his intentions with respect to matters which affected more than US domestic interests.

10. Mr. St-Laurent felt that Canada had no complaint in this connection. He thought that the American Ambassador's recent speech at the Canadian Club in regard to trade was a useful one and pointed up the domestic problems on both sides of the border. So far as possible, we should deal with those domestic problems in a manner which would not hurt either of our peoples.

11. Mr. Eisenhower thought it essential that the importance of problems that arose from day to day should not be exaggerated. The important thing was to maintain free democratic governments on the North American continent. By the manner in which we handled our own domestic affairs we could set an example to other nations. If we succeeded in making democratic government stronger on this continent and maintaining our free institutions, what he considered smaller problems in the rest of the world could be solved. The struggle in the world today was between free men and dictatorships. Soviet Communism, according to the principles of Lenin, held that democracy had the seeds of destruction within itself. Free democratic peoples did not agree with this thesis. We should so manage our affairs that our society would not be destroyed from within. On the other hand, we should not attempt, forcibly, to impose our brand of democracy on others. Countries less well developed than the United States and Canada should remain free to grow and develop in their own way. By following this policy, North America would strengthen its bonds of friendship with other peoples throughout the world.

Other questions

12. Mr. Eisenhower thought conditions in other nations of the world were improving. In the Indian sub-continent, however, there were still difficulties over Kashmir and water resources. On the other hand, agricultural production in Turkey had increased to the point where that nation was now exporting wheat. Dollar balances in many nations were better than they had been previously. On the whole, United States official opinion inclined to the view that the free world was stronger than it was two years ago. The technical assistance programmes were having some useful effects.

In response to other questions raised, he said:

(a) that US farm prices' support programmes had created difficulties;

(b) that he would like to examine the report of the joint study group on continental defence;

(c) that, insofar as the price of gold was concerned, he felt that the wisest course, at the moment, was to make haste very slowly since it was difficult, if not impossible, to predict what effects an adjustment in price levels might have; and,

(d) that, in the matter of the proposed Trans-Canada Air Lines service from Montreal to Mexico City, via Tampa, the US Civil Aeronautics Board was probably fearful of establishing a precedent which might be embarrassing in future dealings with air carriers from other countries.

Note du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures pour le premier ministre

PERSONAL AND CONFIDENTIAL [Ottawa], November 16, 1953

I thought that President Eisenhower's visit went off extremely well and I am sure that the net result will be most beneficial in strengthening and deepening the good relations between the two countries, and their governments. There do not seem to have been any sour notes; even the security arrangements appear to have been satisfactory to all concerned! He and Mrs. Eisenhower obviously enjoyed their visit and were very responsive to the warmth of the official and popular greeting which they received.

Of course, the President did not say anything, at least in public, that was new or of immediate importance, but I thought that his statements were admirable, both in form and in content.

There has already been some disposition to interpret the President's references in Parliament to trade relations as throwing, if not cold, at least lukewarm water on the possibility of an early lowering of customs barriers. It is true that the President's remarks on this subject did emphasize that, especially in the United States, it took time to translate desirable economic principles into practice. Possibly, however, it is just as well that this was made clear, because, otherwise, more might have been read into the President's statement by Canadians than congressional control over these matters would warrant.[12]

I had quite a long talk with the President on the train coming from the border, and while I found him as warm-hearted and friendly as ever, I got the impression that he was showing signs of the strain of office (not surprising) and had not quite the zest and resilience of a year or so ago. In fact, he admitted this, and indicated that his job, combining as it did, ceremonial, political and administrative functions of government, was a backbreaking and, at times, almost a heartbreaking one. He said how lucky we were under a monarchal form of government, with the right kind of division of function. He also indicated that he would not stand for a second term. Indeed he went even further in a talk with my wife Saturday night, when he said that not only would he not run again, but that Henry Cabot Lodge was his favourite candidate to succeed him! He seemed very candid about this, and implied that one of the reasons he took Mr. Lodge along to Ottawa was to assist in the process of building him up as the next President. The President did not say anything to me personally which would confirm this, though he did, on the train, state without qualification that if Foster Dulles had to drop out, how fortunate he, the President, was, to have Cabot Lodge to succeed him. This is interesting and important, and does not, I think reflect the best political judgment on the part of the President. Mr. Lodge is a friendly, cultivated and intelligent person, and an experienced politician, but somehow I can't see him as the leader, either in the White House or in the State Department. Mr. Eisenhower, however, seemed to think that his only handicap was his birth and his breeding!

While mentioning Mr. Lodge as a possible successor to Mr. Dulles, if the latter should ever have to retire, the President added that in his opinion Dulles was exceptionally equipped for his present post in every respect but one — his inability to make a good personal impression on people at first meeting or discussion. I agreed with this but added that Mr. Dulles' handicap in this regard was usually overcome when people got to know him better. I thought that it would be just as well to let Mr. Eisenhower know that my opinion of Mr. Dulles as a Secretary of State had gone up in the last few months. Also I know that the British have been very much impressed by his conduct of affairs since last summer, and are contrasting him favourably, not only with Lodge in New York, but even with Dean Acheson![13] At least, that is the official Foreign Office view at the moment, and there is some basis for it.

At the unofficial meeting with the Cabinet on Saturday, we did not embark on any controversial discussions with the President. My wife, however, turned out to be an angel who did not fear to tread where Cabinet Ministers were loath to go, because she tells me that she had a very interesting talk with Mr. Eisenhower Saturday night about such inflammable matters as Senator McCarthy, the press, and even President Truman and Harry Dexter White![14]

As to the first, Mr. Eisenhower replied that the foreign press made far too much of Senator McCarthy, and seemed to think that in that regard the American press were less to blame. This is, I think, a doubtful conclusion. The President also confirmed what he had told Mr. Wrong some months ago, that he never read the newspapers because they merely confused, exalted or irritated you. He relied on a daily digest of press opinion prepared for him by his staff. This seems to me to be a very dubious expedient as the sole source of information about public opinion at home and abroad. While the President apparently has a low opinion of the press in general, he takes a specially dark view, according to Mrs. Pearson, of the columnists who, with the exception of one on the New York Herald Tribune, he considers to be either bores or menaces.

I also had a few words Saturday with both Lodge and Sherman Adams, and they were both very enthusiastic about the visit, and high in their praise of the arrangements made. They found that the atmosphere at Rideau Hall combined dignity and

DEFENCE; MODIFICATION OF CANADA-US AGREEMENT ON AIRCRAFT INTERCEPTION

21. The Minister of National Defence reported that, at a meeting to be held on April 13th, the Permanent Joint Board on Defence would consider a suggestion put forward by the United States to amend the existing Canada-US agreement on the interception of unidentified aircraft flying over Canadian and US territory. This agreement was contained in PJBD recommendation 51/4 which had been approved by the Cabinet Defence Committee on May 30th, 1951.

Sub-paragraphs (a) and (b) of PJBD recommendation 51/4 presently read as follows:

(a) Investigations by US military aircraft over Canadian territory would only occur in the case of an aircraft headed for the Canada-United States border from the Canadian side whose flight plan had not been transmitted to the US authorities; or which was off course, and then only in the event that the actions of the aircraft gave rise to a reasonable interpretation of intention to cross the international boundary; the activities of Canadian military aircraft over US territory would be similarly restricted.

(b) Close investigation with all due precaution, or interrogation, would be performed solely on unidentified multi-engine aircraft for the purpose of obtaining electronic or visual identification. No attempt would be made to order an intercepted aircraft to land, nor to open fire except when the intercepted aircraft was over the national territory of the air force performing the interception.

The US Section of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence had suggested, with the concurrence of the three US services and the State Department, that these subparagraphs should be modified as follows:

(a) Investigations of unidentified aircraft by US military aircraft over Canadian territory would only occur when it was not possible for a Canadian military aircraft to carry out the investigation; the activities of Canadian military aircraft over US territory would be similarly restricted. For the purpose of this agreement, an unidentified aircraft was an aircraft which entered or flew within an Air Defence Identification Zone in apparent violation of rules and regulations for operations in such zones, or when pattern of behaviour was sufficiently suspicious to justify a belief that it had hostile intentions.

(b) Close investigation with all due precaution, or interrogation, would be performed solely on unidentified multi-engine aircraft for the purpose of obtaining electronic or visual identification. The Rules of Engagement of the country over which the interception takes place would apply, with the proviso that the engagement of an aircraft was to be carried out only on orders issued by the Air Defence Commander of the country over which the interception takes place, or an officer who had been delegated the requisite powers.

The Chairman of the Canadian Section of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence had requested some indication as to the stand the Canadian government would wish him to take on this question.

22. The Cabinet deferred decision on a US proposal that current Canada-United States arrangements concerning aircraft interception be modified, pending further consideration of the proposal by the Permanent Joint Board on Defence and submission of a report as to the details of the suggested change.

DEFENCE; MODIFICATION OF CANADA-US AGREEMENT ON AIRCRAFT INTERCEPTION

21. The Minister of National Defence, referring to discussion at the meeting of April 2nd, pointed out that, because of the manner in which the Canada-US integrated air defence scheme had been set up and because of the limitation in Canadian manpower and aircraft, it was not possible at the present time for Canadian military authorities to undertake, themselves, the task of intercepting enemy aircraft along the Canada-US border in western Ontario and the three prairie provinces. As a result, US military authorities felt that the restrictions contained in the current agreement relating to interception of enemy aircraft on the Canada-US border as set forth in the Permanent Joint Board on Defence Recommendation 51/4, which had been approved by the Cabinet Defence Committee in May 1951, were such as to make it virtually impossible to provide effective air defence for certain large US industrial centres, such as Detroit, which were located on or near the border in the mid-west.

The most important change in the modification to Recommendation 51/4, as recommended by US military authorities, would enable the Canadian Air Defence Commander located at St. Hubert, PQ, to delegate his powers to US commanders responsible for the defence of that area bordering on western Ontario and the three prairie provinces.

The suggested modification was without doubt desirable from a purely military point of view. It was for consideration whether the proposal was politically and otherwise acceptable.

An explanatory memorandum was circulated.

(Memorandum, National Defence, April 9, 1953 — Cab. Doc. 100-53)†

22. In the course of discussion, it was pointed out:

(a) that the RCAF had nine fighter squadrons located at various points in eastern Canada and British Columbia but none in western Ontario or the three prairie provinces;

(b) that the United States had 20 fighter squadrons (F-84's), many of which were located within reach of the Canadian boundary, in that portion of the United States lying south of western Ontario and the three prairie provinces;

(c) that, although radar information as to the movements of hostile aircraft was passed on immediately to the Canadian Air Defence Commander at St. Hubert, PQ, and the US Air Defence Commander at Denver, Colorado, the Canadian commander did not have at his disposal the aircraft required to intercept hostile aircraft in the area under discussion;

(d) that indiscriminate delegation to US military personnel of the powers of the Canadian Air Defence Commander might possibly lead to regrettable incidents involving Canadian aircraft;

(e) that the large expenditures involved and the lack of manpower and equipment made it impractical to consider, at this time, providing adequate Canadian air defences in western Ontario and the three prairie provinces; and,

(f) that, in the circumstances, it would be difficult to refuse to have existing aircraft interception arrangements modified to enable US aircraft to intercept hostile aircraft over Canadian territory under certain specified conditions.

23. The Cabinet agreed that the Chairman of the Canadian Section of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence be informed by the Minister of National Defence of the points raised in the discussion of the proposed modification of existing Canada-US arrangements respecting aircraft interception (PJBD Recommendation 51/4) and be advised that, while the Canadian government wished to meet the American points substantially, every precaution should be taken to safeguard Canadian interests.

PRINCIPLES GOVERNING THE INTERCEPTION OF UNIDENTIFIED AIRCRAFT IN PEACE TIME

1. The attached document which was discussed at a meeting of the Cabinet on 9th April, 1953, has now been processed through the Permanent Joint Board on Defence after having been agreed upon by the military authorities of the United States and Canada. It is also included in the Journal of Discussions and Decisions of September 1953 Meeting of the Board, as PJBD Recommendation 53/1.

2. I feel that the interests of Canada are sufficiently protected in the provisions and I recommend its approval.

Recommendation 53/1 by Permanent Joint Board on Defence

SECRET [n.d.]

1. Aircraft controlled by the Air Defence System of the United States, or of Canada, engaged in intercepting unidentified aircraft during peace time, shall be permitted to fly over the territory of either country as may be required to carry out effective interception. These flights will be carried out under the following provisions:

a) Investigations of unidentified aircraft by United States military aircraft over Canadian territory will only occur when it is not possible for a Canadian military aircraft to carry out the investigation; the activities of Canadian military aircraft over United States territory will be similarly restricted. For the purpose of this agreement, an unidentified aircraft is an aircraft which flies within an Air Defence Identification Zone in apparent violation of rules for operation within such zone. When the pattern of behavior of an aircraft is sufficiently suspicious to justify a belief that it has hostile intentions, it may also be considered to be an unidentified aircraft.

b) In accordance with published civil and military regulations, investigating aircraft will not approach closer than is necessary to establish identification. Investigation or interrogation will be performed solely on unidentified aircraft for the purpose of obtaining electronic or visual identification.

c) The Rules of Interception and Engagement of the country over which the interception or engagement takes place are to apply, even though the intercepting aircraft is being controlled from the other country.

d) The engagement of an aircraft is to be carried out only on orders issued by the Air Defence Commander of the country over which the engagement is to take place, or by an officer who has been delegated the requisite powers. The authority to issue orders to engage an unidentified aircraft should, to the greatest extent possible, be retained by the Air Defence Commander. However, when circumstances so necessitate, he may delegate such authority to a qualified officer not less in status than the senior officer in an Air Defence Control Center.

e) Translation of the general principles of this arrangement into coordinated operational instructions will be carried out by the Air Defence Commanders concerned.

f) This arrangement will remain in force until modified by mutual agreement, or until terminated by either Government.

II. SUPERSONIC ALL-WEATHER INTERCEPTOR AIRCRAFT — CF105

4. The Minister of National Defence said that the CF100, designed in 1947 and now in operational service, was an effective weapon against piston-engined bombers and against existing turbo-prop bombers. By 1958, it was estimated, the enemy would have turbo-jet bombers, which the CF100 could not adequately engage. The preparation of plans for a new type all-weather fighter was therefore urgent, but no western country had this problem in hand. The RCAF had studied the matter carefully in consultation with A.V. Roe Canada Ltd., and was confident that an aircraft could be produced to meet the new requirements. He therefore recommended that a replacement for the CF100 be developed; the new aircraft to be powered with the most suitable engines available.

An explanatory memorandum had been circulated.

(Minister's memorandum, November 30, 1953, "Supersonic all-weather interceptor aircraft — CF105 for the RCAF" — Document D49-53)†

5. In the course of discussion the following points emerged:

(a) The proposed development would not duplicate work in the United Kingdom or the United States and would be a contribution to common fighter defences.

(b) Funds for the proposed development programme would be found within the defence budget.

(c) Resources devoted to development work for the CF105 might have to be discarded as a result of new development programmes elsewhere, or a substantial change in the enemy threat; meanwhile, however, work on this form of fighter defence could be considered as risk insurance.

6. The Committee, after further discussion, recommended that approval be given for a development programme for the CF105 at a total estimated cost of $26,925,000.

672. DEA/50221-40

Note du ministre de la Défense nationale pour le Comité de la Défense du Cabinet

Memorandum from Minister of National Defence to Cabinet Defence Committee

CONTROL OF AIR DEFENCE FORCES AND THE UNITED STATES NORTHEAST COMMAND OPERATING OVER CANADA

1. The Committee will recall that at the 90th meeting on 14 November, 1952, they considered the matter of Canada-United States military installations in Newfoundland and Labrador, and noted that in informal discussions the USAF had indicated that they were prepared to assign squadrons to the US Northeast Command and place them under Canadian operational control while operating in Canadian Air Space. The following is a report of the arrangements which have been made.

2. The Canada-United States Military Cooperation Committee have met and drafted a revised command appendix to the Canada-US Emergency Defence Plan in which the principles governing the control of air defence forces are outlined. This paper has been approved by the US Joint Chiefs of Staff and the Canadian Chiefs of Staff.

3. The revised appendix states that the command of forces will be in accordance with the command structure of Canadian and US armed forces, except where otherwise specified by the Governments or Chiefs of Staff of Canada and the United States, and subject to the principles set forth hereunder:

(a) any forces located in Canada will operate under a Canadian Commander;

(b) any forces located in the United States or Alaska will operate under an American Commander;

(c) regardless of the area in which operating, the forces will come under the immediate command of a commander designated by the country furnishing the force;

(d) regardless of the area in which operating, internal administration shall be the prerogative of the country furnishing the force; and

(e) commanders who are responsible for operations should participate in the preparations of plans for such operations.

4. The following exceptions to the above principles were also agreed:

(a) paragraph 3(a) does not apply to forces stationed at the US 99 year leased bases. This exception, however, is modified in so far as air defence forces are concerned in paragraph 4(b);

(b) US air defence forces in Newfoundland operating over Canadian territory will come under the operational control of a Canadian Commander. Operational control, however, excludes re-deployment. The US Commander-in-Chief, Northeast Command, has the authority to re-deploy US air defence forces within the area of his command, but where possible, movement of these forces will be co-ordinated with the Canadian Commander. Before deploying US forces to a base in Canada outside the leased bases, authority must be sought from the Canadian Commander, except where the deployment is of a temporary tactical nature. In any case, the Canadian Commander is to be informed of any deployment of US air defence forces into, within, or out of Canadian territory; and

(c) any deviation from the principle outlined in paragraph 3(a) applicable to the US forces at Goose Bay are the subject of special arrangements approved by the Canadian Chiefs of Staff.

5. Since these command arrangements may involve deployment of US forces in Canada in peacetime, it will be noted that in paragraph 4(b), above, the US Commander-in-Chief, Northeast Command, is required to request authority from the Canadian Commander for any re-deployment in Canada outside the leased bases. In order that the Government may exercise control over the number of US troops stationed in Canada in peacetime, the Air Officer Commanding, Air Defence Command is being instructed to forward any such request for authority for re-deployment to National Defence Headquarters for Government approval.

UNITED STATES FIGHTER SQUADRONS AT GOOSE BAY

The United States Section of the Military Co-Operation Committee has informed the Canadian Section that it considers that there is a military requirement for the deployment of four squadrons of fighter interceptors for the defence of the Northeast air approaches to the critical industrial areas in Canada and the United States and to protect important military and civil installations in Newfoundland and Labrador as follows:

(a) Two squadrons at Goose Bay;

(b) One squadron at Harmon Base; and

(c) One squadron in the Torbay-Argentia area.

2. As you are aware, one US fighter interceptor squadron was posted to Goose Bay last fall on a temporary basis — this being taken to mean that the squadron might remain at Goose Bay until Canada was prepared to undertake the air defence of the base with Canadian forces. It now appears that the US are likely to ask formally for permission to station another squadron at Goose Bay.

3. The Chiefs of Staff Committee discussed this matter at a meeting on February 19 and agreed that the Canadian members of the MCC should ask their US colleagues to drop the proposal to station a second fighter squadron at Goose Bay at this time and, as an alternative, suggest the positioning of a fighter squadron at Limestone or Thule.

4. According to the draft Minutes of the Chiefs of Staff Committee, the Chairman, Chiefs of Staff, said that, although Canada had agreed to consider the positioning of a second US fighter squadron at Goose Bay at some future date, the US should be informed that politically the time was not right for such a move. If the US continued to press the matter, the Government might suggest that a Canadian squadron now scheduled for NATO be stationed at Goose Bay and the US undertake to provide a further squadron in Europe. He said that this would make political sense in some quarters, but internationally it would be a poor move. Accordingly, the US should be urged to drop the matter at this time.

NOTE ON THE CURRENT POSITION WITH RESPECT TO TORBAY[16]

The United States in the Fall of 1952 withdrew its proposals for the establishment of an airhead and the basing of a fighter squadron at Torbay in peacetime on the understanding that Canada would undertake to improve the air field to jet fighter standards. At the January 1953 meeting of the PJBD, the US Section of the Board presented its revised requirements for the use of facilities at Torbay. These were as follows:

"(a) Continuing Functions

(i) an air transport squadron, administrative flying, and those activities necessary to support administrative flying operations for Headquarters, Northeast Air Command (approximate strength 500 officers and men);

(ii) housing for transient personnel (up to 200).

(b) Temporary Requirement

(ii) Maintenance personnel;

(iii) 3rd Installation and Maintenance Squadron;

the total number of personnel involved in (b) is about 600."

At the meeting of February 10, 1953, Cabinet Defence Committee approved the following:

(a) the RCAF is to take over the operation of Torbay Airport from the Department of Transport as soon as possible;

(i) permission to station forces up to a total strength of 1300 on Torbay is granted until July 1, 1955, or until accommodation is available on the Leased Bases, whichever period shall be shorter. After July 1, 1955, the only forces to be stationed at Torbay will be those necessary in connection with the administrative flying operations for Headquarters, Northeast Air Command, i.e, approximately 500 officers and men;

(ii) every effort will be made by the USAF as rapidly as possible to provide accommodation on the Leased Bases for the 200 transients and for the 600 personnel for whom temporary accommodation is required at Torbay;

(iii) in event of action being taken to exercise the short term cancellation clause for any reason other than Canadian defence requirements, the matter may be referred by either Government to the PJBD.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs presents his compliments to the Chargé d'Affaires ad interim of the United States of America and has the honour to refer to discussions which took place at the January 1953 meeting of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence with respect to the requirements of the United States Air Force for the lease of certain buildings at Torbay Airport. The Canadian Government is pleased to approve the lease to the United States Air Force of the buildings and other facilities listed in the annex to this note† for a period of one year and thereafter from year to year, subject to termination by either country on thirty days notice, and subject to the following conditions:

(1) permission to station forces up to a total strength of 1300 on Torbay is granted until July 1, 1955, or until accommodation is available on the Leased Bases, whichever period shall be shorter. After July 1, 1955, the only forces to be stationed at Torbay will be those necessary in connection with the administrative flying operations for Headquarters, Northeast Air Command, i.e. approximately 500 officers and men;

(ii) every effort will be made by the United States Air Force as rapidly as possible to provide accommodation on the Leased Bases for the 200 transients and for the 600 personnel for whom temporary accommodation is required at Torbay;

(iii) in event of action being taken to exercise the short term cancellation clause for any reason other than Canadian defence requirements, the matter may be referred by either Government to the Permanent Joint Board on Defence. If it is decided by either Government, following consideration by the Permanent Joint Board on Defence, that the lease should no longer be in effect, then the thirty-day cancellation clause shall be operative.

The Canadian Government wishes to inform the United States Government that the Royal Canadian Air Force is taking over the operation of Torbay Airport from the Department of Transport in the near future. Since, however, the negotiations for the lease to the United States Air Force of the buildings at Torbay Airport have been underway for some time and have been conducted by the Department of Transport, it is intended that they should be carried to completion by that Department.

6. Transfer to Canada of United States Loran Stations in Newfoundland and Labrador

Defence Liaison (1) Division: In a recent Exchange of Notes Canadian and the United States Governments agreed to the conditions for transferring to the Canadian Government three Loran stations at Port-aux-Basques, Battle Harbour and Bonavista in Newfoundland which are at present operated by the United States Coast Guard. These stations were constructed in 1942 by agreement between the Newfoundland and United States Governments as a radio aid to air and sea navigation in the northern Atlantic. When the need for continued operation of these stations was established following the war, the United States Government agreed to operate the stations until such time as the Canadian authorities were able to accept full responsibility for them. In June, 1952, the Canadian Government agreed in principle to the transfer of the stations. Since then, officials of the two Governments have been working out the final agreement for completing the transfer. With the recent Exchange of Notes, the Canadian Government has agreed to assume responsibility for the three stations on September 1 of this year; the Department of Transport will operate the stations.

PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENT OF NINE ADDITIONAL TEMPORARY RADAR STATIONS IN CANADA

At the September 1952 meeting of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence, the US Section of the Board submitted detailed information with respect to a request they had made for permission to carry out surveys leading to the establishment of six additional temporary radar stations to improve cover against low-flying aircraft. These stations would be located at the following points in Ontario, and would require operating staffs as indicated:

Location	Establishment
	Military	Civilian
Mattawa (Early Warning Type)	85	5
Trenton " " "	65	5
Sultan " " "	85	5
Wiarton " " "	85	5
Fire River (Early Warning Ground Control interception Type)	195	6
Peninsula (Early Warning Type)	85	5

In addition, the US Section stated that there would be a requirement for three stations in British Columbia, one at Birken, one at Kamloops and one at Nakusp. A request covering these three stations was submitted to the Canadian Section at the January 1953 meeting of the Board.

2. A study of the US request for the six stations in Ontario has been carried out by the Chiefs of Staff, who from the military and technical point of view, recommend its approval (copy of Chiefs of Staff study attached†). The conclusions reached by the study are summarized as follows:

(1) Of the six stations, the site at Mattawa is the only one which will directly affect the Canadian system as such. However, since the permanent system is designed to afford mutual protection to the United States and Canada, any additional stations sited to fill the low cover gaps within this system will increase the protection afforded. These gap filler radars must be sited in relation to the permanent system and this precludes their being sited in US territory.

(2) It is essential that the entire radar net, including these six stations, operate on a 24 hour basis. It would not be feasible to construct them and put them on a care and maintenance basis for manning on very short notice in an emergency. Development of automatic unmanned stations is under way, but will not be completed for some time.

(3) It is agreed that low cover gaps in the permanent system may be of serious consequence in view of the enemy's increasing capability to penetrate and attack the United States and Canada at low altitudes employing revised tactics and technological improvements.

(4) The RCAF is not at present in a position to man any additional radar stations, and cannot, in fact, man the existing stations on a 24 hour basis.

(5) It is recommended that the USAF request for the establishment of six additional temporary radar sites be approved and that, for the present, the USAF be permitted to man them.

3. The military study of the requirement for the three stations in British Columbia has not yet been completed, but it is expected that the conclusion will be similar to that arrived at in the case of the six stations in Ontario.

4. Assuming the necessity for all nine stations to have been demonstrated and that consequently their installation would be authorized, it would be most desirable for political reasons that the stations in the more populous regions, viz., Wiarton, Trenton, Mattawa and Kamloops should be manned by Canadian personnel. On the other hand, in the face of an operational requirement, it would be difficult to justify rejection of the US request because of the inability of the RCAF to meet the commitment.

5. Arrangements governing the existing joint US-Canadian radar system in Canada were set out in an Exchange of Notes which took place on August 1, 1951. This agreement specifies that the costs of construction (except housing for dependents), equipment and operation of the system will be shared on the basis of approximately two thirds by the United States and one third by Canada. It further specifies that in order to simplify the division of costs in accordance with this principle, the United States and Canada will each assume financial responsibility for construction, equipment and operation of those stations (with their assorted control facilities) respectively allocated to each of them by agreement between the appropriate authorities of the two Governments. The agreement further provides that

(a) So far as practicable construction of installations will be carried out by Canadian agencies using Canadian labour and materials, and that electronic and other equipment manufactured in Canada will also be used so far as practicable;

(b) Canada will acquire and retain title to all sites required for the extension;

(c) Canada may by agreement take over the manning of stations initially manned by the United States.

6. The US Air Force Member of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence in a Memorandum to the Board, dated September 19, 1952, stated that the United States Air Force was prepared to bear the cost of construction, manning and operation of the stations. He also stated that manning of the stations by trained Canadian personnel would be acceptable. He asserted that since these stations were originally planned for deployment in the United States, procurement action for the equipment had been completed, thus precluding procurement of equipment from Canadian sources.

7. It is considered that in view of the statements by the USAF Member of the PJBD with respect to construction and operating costs and manning, the installation of these stations could be dealt with in accordance with the provisions of the radar extension agreement of 1951. It is further considered that in spite of the statement of the USAF Member of the PJBD with respect to the procurement of electronic equipment, the Canadian Government should insist on the right to supply this if it so desires.

8. It has been recommended:

(a) that the United States be granted permission to carry out site surveys with a view to subsequent installation and manning by the United States of the six stations in Ontario, and, if recommended by Chiefs of Staff, the three stations in British Columbia, in accordance with the provisions of the radar extension agreement of August 1, 1951, (including the use of Canadian electronic equipment so far as practicable) it being understood that the United States will meet all costs of installation, operation and manning until such time as the RCAF may desire to take over the latter two functions;

(b) that Cabinet direct that every effort be made by the RCAF to take over the manning of the stations at Trenton, Wiarton, Mattawa and Kamloops at the earliest possible date.

9. Before supporting the above recommendation, however, I would propose that further consideration be given to the possibility of the RCAF manning some or all of the above radar stations.

ITEM IV — PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENT OF NINE ADDITIONAL TEMPORARY RADAR STATIONS IN CANADA; US REQUEST FOR ADDITIONAL RADAR STATIONS

Memorandum, Secretary of State for External Affairs, undated, "Proposed establishment of nine additional temporary radar stations in Canada" — Document D8-53.

The Committee agreed that, subject to a favourable military view on the establishment of three additional radar stations in British Columbia,

(a) the United States be granted permission to make site surveys, to operate and to man nine additional temporary radar stations in Ontario and British Columbia, in general line with the provisions of the agreement on the extension of the radar defence system, concluded by an Exchange of Notes of August 1, 1951, it being understood, however, that the United States would meet all costs of installation, operation and manning until such time as the RCAF could take over the operation and manning of them; and

(b) the RCAF should, as soon as manpower was available, assume responsibility for the manning of the stations in populated areas.

US – CANADA RADAR AGREEMENT — US REQUEST FOR NINE ADDITIONAL STATIONS

Memorandum for Mr. Barton

The Under-Secretary called in Mr. MacKay and myself yesterday and gave us the following information.

Mr. Pickersgill had raised with Mr. Pearson the question of the kind of tenure to be given to the United States in respect of the nine additional stations. They had discussed the indeterminate character of the tenure granted in the 1951 Agreement and did not think that this aspect of the 1951 Agreement should be applicable to the nine new stations.

The Minister has accordingly instructed Mr. Wilgress that the tenure formula of the 1951 Agreement shall not apply to the nine stations.

I told Mr. Wilgress that we could probably work out a formula whereby (1) Canada could terminate permission for any of the nine stations at any time on reasonable notice provided (2) that the United States could ask the Permanent Joint Board on Defence to advise on the matter prior to the termination notice becoming effective. Something like this had been put in the recent GLOBCOM Exchange of Notes. Mr. Wilgress thought that a formula of this type would meet the Minister's point of view.

Mr. W.H. Barton, Department of External Affairs

Mr. Wilgress stated that he had convened the meeting in order to review, at the official level, the policy to be followed by the Canadian Government in implementing the provisions of the 1951 agreement regarding the radar extension programme with respect to radar stations which, by arrangement, were the financial responsibility of the USAF, but which the RCAF had undertaken to man. There were at present five of these stations, as follows: Gander, Newfoundland; Halifax and Sydney, Nova Scotia; and Clark City and St. Marie in Quebec. Mr. Wilgress noted that the Department of National Defence was proposing that the military manpower costs of these stations should be met by the RCAF. Since this proposal was not in accord with the original terms of the agreement of 1951, the Department of External Affairs wished to consider the matter further before concurring in the proposal of the Department of National Defence.

2. Mr. Drury presented a tabulation of the estimated costs of operation and maintenance of the various elements of the Pinetree Project (based on RCAF establishments). This table (copy attached†) indicated the approximate division of costs between the two countries which would result if various schemes were followed.

3. General McNaughton pointed out that one of the principal objectives of the Canadian Government representatives who had participated in the drafting of the 1951 agreement was to impose a deterrent factor which would ensure that the United States would wish to withdraw from installations in Canada just as soon as the need for them ceased to exist. This deterrent factor was almost entirely a financial one and any measure taken by Canada to reduce the US financial obligation, to that extent reduced the deterrent. If it were decided that Canada should meet the military manpower costs of US-financed stations which the RCAF was manning, then it would be necessary to try to devise some other deterrent as a substitute.

4. There followed a general discussion, in the course of which the following conclusions emerged:

(a) it was contrary to the policy of the USAF to pay the military manpower costs of other countries which were providing services for the USAF. By the same token, the USAF did not charge for its military manpower costs when it provided services for other countries;

(b) insistence by Canada that the USAF pay military manpower costs in accordance with the letter of the 1951 agreement might lead to a change in US policy with respect to services supplied by US Armed Forces to Canadian Forces abroad. It might also produce adverse publicity about Canadian forces being paid by the United States;

(c) Canada would undoubtedly be pressed by her NATO allies to increase the size of her defence budget, and the extent to which she responded to this demand would in turn influence political and economic relations with these other countries, particularly the United States. Payment of military manpower costs in connection with the joint defence of North America would be one way of meeting this demand.

5. Mr. Wilgress summed up the sense of the discussion by stating that reluctantly he had come to the conclusion that it would be wise for Canada to meet the military manpower costs of operating those radar stations in Canada which were the financial responsibility of the USAF, but which the RCAF was manning.

6. It was agreed that the Department of National Defence would submit a Memorandum to Cabinet Defence Committee seeking approval of this policy, subject to the proviso that the USAF continue to adhere to the same policy where Canadian forces were drawing on it for services. It was further agreed that the Canadian decision should be communicated to the US Government by means of a statement to be made by the Canadian Chairman at the next meeting of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence.

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to discussions which have taken place at recent meetings of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence with respect to United States proposals concerning the carrying out of site surveys with a view to the subsequent installation of six temporary radar stations in Ontario (to be located at Trenton, Sultan, Wiarton, Peninsula, Fire River and Mattawa), and three mobile radar stations in British Columbia (to be located at Birken, Kamloops and Nakusp).

The Canadian Government is pleased to inform the United States Government that permission is granted for the latter to make these site surveys, it being understood that the arrangements for the entry of the survey parties and their equipment into Canada and the carrying out of the surveys will be made through United States Air Force-Royal Canadian Air Force channels, under the same conditions as prevailed in the case of the site surveys for radar installations which are a part of the Pinetree Project. It is further understood that copies of all information obtained in connection with these surveys will be supplied to the appropriate Canadian authorities.

ESTABLISHMENT OF SIX RADAR STATIONS IN ONTARIO AND THREE RADAR STATIONS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

The Canadian Government is agreeable in principle to the construction and operation of the six radar stations in Ontario and the three radar stations in British Columbia referred to in Note No. D-85 of April 2, 1953, at the expense of the United States Government, and will be prepared to consider proposals to this effect when information is available as to the exact sites and the nature of the structures which the United States Government may wish to erect.

When permission is granted for the construction and operation of the stations, the Canadian Government will make the same requirement for the use of Canadian labour, materials and in particular electronic equipment, as was embodied in the agreement of August 1, 1951. This requirement will be incorporated in the Canadian approval as a matter of principle. The decision as to whether or not it would in actual fact be reasonable and practicable to insist that the electronic equipment be supplied from Canadian sources will rest with the appropriate Canadian authorities.

mobile radar stations in British Columbia (to be located at Birken, Kamloops and Nakusp).

I have the honor to refer also to discussions regarding the carrying out of these surveys which took place at the April, 1953 meeting of the Permanent Joint Board on Defense, United States-Canada. During the meetings the United States Section presented its views on the oral statement which had been given to the Untied States Embassy on April 2, 1952 at the time Note No. D-85 was transmitted. The Canadian Chairman stated that Note No. D-85 had authorized surveys of the several sites and he did not regard the carrying out of these surveys as constituting any commitment whatever on either side.

The United States Government has, therefore, authorized the United States Air Force to cooperate with the Royal Canadian Air Force in carrying out the surveys under the terms contained in Note No. D-85 and with the further understanding that no commitment is thereby undertaken by either Government with respect to conditions of construction and other matters which will require further discussion and consideration.

Oral Statement[20]

Reference is made to the lengthy discussions at the last meeting of the Permanent Joint Board on Defense at which the United States position was fully explained concerning the Oral Statement made by an official of the Department of External Affairs regarding the Canadian conditions for the eventual construction and operation of the proposed nine additional radar stations. This matter has been considered by the various Departments concerned in the United States Government who feel that the proposed conditions would cause great difficulties and that they represent a significant departure from past practice.

The conditions and arrangements agreed on in the Exchange of Notes of August 1, 1951 for the Pinetree Project were arrived at in part because of the nature of that project and the fact that the Canadian Government was bearing a large share of the cost. The conditions cited with respect to the temporary stations appear to go beyond the agreement of August 1, 1951 in that it was stated that "it would be for the Canadians to decide whether or not it would, in actual fact, in any given case be reasonable and practicable for the electronic equipment to be supplied from Canadian sources".

[20] Notre copie du document porte l'annotation suivante :
The following was written on this copy of the document:
(Made by Mr. Morgan of US Embassy to Mr. Wershof June 5, 1953)

The United States Government considers that the language in the notes of August 1, 1951 indicates that the use of Canadian equipment was not a condition precedent to the construction of the stations but was a matter for mutual determination by authorities of the two countries. Such decisions in the past had generally been made on the basis of mutual consultation and on an objective appraisal of the most effective use of the resources of the two countries.

The United States feels that it would not be in consonance with our long-standing joint defense arrangements if a principle were adopted whereby Canada would have the unilateral right to determine in any case that it would be reasonable and practicable for the electronic equipment to be supplied from Canadian sources. The United States would thereby have no voice in the final decision even though this Government supplied all the funds necessary for the construction of a project of joint defense value.

The Government departments concerned and the Permanent Joint Board on Defense supported strongly the principle of reciprocal procurement and have encouraged procurement from Canadian sources and the use of Canadian contractors on many occasions. It is the view of the United States Department of State that Canadian contractors should at every stage have equal opportunity to obtain specifications and to bid on construction of defense projects and that Canadian suppliers should have equal opportunity to furnish equipment on joint defense projects provided that prices, lead time and quality are competitive. The United States Government's opinion is that arrangements for joint defense projects should not be influenced by any commercial considerations or require the development of uneconomic production facilities. Arrangements for joint defense projects should not be such as to increase the cost to the United States, which is already bearing such a heavy burden in the defense of the free world. The President of the United States and the Prime Minister of Canada agreed during their recent meetings in May that defense installations in Canada were in the joint interests of the two countries. In the opinion of the United States, joint defense projects in Canada should be considered on their merits. Arrangements for equipment, manning and construction should be by mutual consultation and agreement, considering always the best and most efficient use of the resources available to the two countries for the joint defense of North America.

The United States Government accordingly hopes that the Canadian Government will reconsider the oral statement transmitted with Note No. D-85.

SECRET Ottawa, October 13, 1953

My dear Colleague,

In connection with northern continental defence and any further extension of the radar screen in Canada, I would like to bring to your attention the need for maintaining our position with regard to the provision of electronic equipment from Canadian sources, when the installations are made on Canadian territory.

This principle was first established in the Exchange of Notes between the United States and Canadian Governments on August 1st, 1951, setting up a radar network for joint defence (now known as Pinetree). In the agreement is a clause which states that, as far as practicable, electronic and other equipment manufactured in Canada will be used. In recent negotiations with United States officials, Canadian officials have affirmed the policy of adhering to the principles expressed in the Pinetree agreement. However, differences of opinion have arisen in connection with the clause covering the supply of electronic equipment. The objections of the United States officials apply particularly to projects in which Canada is not bearing a large share of the cost. The Americans have stressed the point that United States and Canadian contractors should have equal opportunity to furnish equipment for joint defence provided prices, lead time, and quality are competitive, but that the provision of such equipment should not be influenced by commercial considerations, nor require the development of uneconomic production facilities.

From the Canadian point of view, I feel that this position is untenable. The strategic importance of industrial production cannot be overlooked in defence planning nor the need to develop alternate sources of supply in this country. If the Canadian electronic industry is to play an effective part in the joint defence of the North American Continent, it must be given an opportunity to participate in the actual production of electronic equipment, particularly in the field of radar. Changes and technological developments are taking place so rapidly to-day and are resulting in precision-built equipment of such complexity that only through the experience gained in actually manufacturing such equipment can Canadian industry be kept in readiness to meet wartime demands.

In future negotiations, I believe that Canada should continue to support the principle that electronic equipment for radar systems on Canadian territory should, as far as practicable, be manufactured in Canada. It should, however, be made clear that determination of practicability in each instance must be a matter of consultation between Canada and the United States. The basis of such consultation would be recognition of the fact that, in the interests of mutual defence, practicability must include strategic as well as commercial or economic considerations. This would mean that every effort would be made to ensure that the Canadian electronic industry receives sufficient orders to put it in a position to make an effective contribution to the joint defence effort in time of war.

Another impelling reason why electronics gear for all radar in Canada should be provided wherever practicable by the Canadian electronic industry is that unless this position is maintained we can take it for granted that we will not be kept informed of new developments. In that event it is probable we would only hear of such developments when in the American view the time had come to make additions or improvements to the radar screen and then it would be too late for our industry to compete.

I would appreciate it if you would be good enough to advise any of your officers dealing with United States officials on these matters of the importance of bearing in mind the policy outlined above, in order not to jeopardize Canadian industry's position.

I am sending a similar letter to the Minister of National Defence.

Yours sincerely,

My dear Colleague,

I wish to acknowledge your letter of October 13, 1953, in which you refer to the need for maintaining our position with regard to the provision of electronic equipment from Canadian sources when radar installations are made on Canadian territory.

I am in complete agreement with your view that in future negotiations, the Canadian Government should continue to support the principle that electronic equipment for radar systems on Canadian territory should, as far as practicable, be manufactured in Canada. As you state in your letter, in recent negotiations with United States officials, Canadian officials have affirmed the policy of adhering to the principle expressed above. However, to ensure that all the officers of this Department who are dealing with United States officials on these matters are aware of the importance attached to the above principle, I have arranged to draw your letter to their attention.

I refer to a letter dated October 13, 1953, from Mr. Howe to you and me, in which he drew attention to the need for maintaining our position with regard to the provision of electronic equipment from Canadian sources when the installations are made on Canadian territory.

In his letter Mr. Howe requested that Canadian officials dealing with United States officials on these matters should be instructed to bear in mind the importance of safeguarding the position of Canadian industry.

I have been considering this matter further and am of the opinion that it would be advantageous to provide for the information of the United States Government, a formal statement of the Canadian position in this regard. The existence of such a statement should be most helpful to Canadian officials in dealing with American officials, and should ensure against any possibility of misunderstanding on the part of the United States Government.

Attached for your comments is a draft Aide Memoire which I propose should be sent to the United States Department of State.† At the same time, it might be desirable to have General McNaughton make a similar statement at the next meeting of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence. I should be grateful if you would let me know whether you are in agreement with this proposal. For your information, I am sending a similar letter to Mr. Howe.

My dear Colleague,

Thanks for your letter of November 17th and for letting me see a copy of the proposed Aide Memoire directed to the Secretary of State of the United States regarding the use of Canadian equipment for installations within Canada, regardless of whether these are paid for by Canada or by the United States.

At the moment, we have no complaint about our treatment in this regard, as we have succeeded in getting practically all the equipment presently installed made in Canada.

While a Canadian contractor secured the Canadian section of the pipeline to Alaska, the pipe itself was bought in England. However, a Canadian firm was given every opportunity to tender, and lost the business on price. Canada can have no objection to this situation.

In the circumstances, I doubt the desirability of forwarding this Aide Memoire at this time. Unfortunately, I have not been able to discuss the matter with Mr. Claxton, but I will do so and write you further after obtaining his views. It seems to me that there would be an advantage in filing the Aide Memoire only after we experience difficulty with the United States in carrying out the terms of the present understanding.

I am always reluctant to complain to the US when there is no present reason for the complaint. It seems to me that this weakens our position when we have cause to complain.

Yours sincerely,

My dear Colleague,

Thank you for your letter of November 17 about the provision of electronic equipment from Canadian sources for installations on Canadian territory.

I took the opportunity of discussing this in a preliminary way with Mr. Howe as it is primarily of concern to him. I understand that he rather feels that for the present at least this has been sufficiently covered in conversations he has had with Mr. Wilson and others.

If it were decided to send some communication, I think it might be, if possible, less formal in character and in language. It might take the form, for example, of one or more letters from minister to minister.

Another way of doing it would be to have a note put on the minutes of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence.

A third suggestion might be to raise this at the first meeting of the ministers dealing with economic questions.

Projet d'une note du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures pour le Cabinet[22]

THE CANADIAN ARCTIC[23]

Official interest in the Canadian Arctic has increased substantially since the Joint Arctic Weather Stations were established in 1947. Since that time, the display of interest, the expenditure of money and the exploitation of manpower in the Canadian Arctic Archipelago has been at least as great by the United States as by Canada, and in some respects greater. New defence projects may increase US activity; a list of such projects which have come to the attention of the Department of External Affairs is attached. It is not certain that requests will be made for all these activities, but they may be considered an indication of a progressive increase in defence activity in the Arctic. In the circumstances, it seems desirable to examine the extent of Canadian and US activity in the Arctic, with particular relationship to the maintenance of Canadian sovereignty, and to consider whether, and in what fields, further Canadian activity is justified to serve Canadian interests of a political, administrative, scientific or military nature. Since Arctic plans take long to execute, the consideration of future policy should be pursued aggressively. I suggest at the outset that to preserve the Canadian position the first approach is to consider means, not to restrict US activities, but to develop our own.

The main continuing activity in the Arctic Archipelago is centred at the five Joint Arctic Weather Stations where half the meteorological staff is Canadian. There are small Canadian weather stations at Arctic Bay and at Pond Inlet. At Resolute Bay, near the Joint Weather Station, there is an RCAF station. There is an Arctic Survival School open in the winter months at Cambridge Bay in the Southern Archipelago. These are the only exclusively Canadian installations and the total number of Canadian officials in the entire Archipelago is less than fifty. orological staff, operates an exclusively US weather station at Padloping and mans a floating ice island within the Canadian sector. Transient US Officials, whether civil or military, outnumber Canadian transients in the summer months. Present indications point towards an increase of US activity.

If Canadian claims to territory in the Archipelago rest on discovery and continuous occupation, Canadian rights to some relatively unexplored areas may in the future be questioned. For the present, however, the problem is not formal claims to territory since the US Administration has been entirely reasonable and co-operative in Arctic matters. Of more concern is the de facto exercise of US sovereignty, examples of which were numerous during the last war in other parts of Canada. Misunderstandings and petty incidents in recent years have not been lacking, but fortunately few of these have come to public notice. An increasing proportion of US activity in the Arctic would, however, present greater risks of misunderstandings, incidents and infringements of Canadian sovereignty.

Many solutions may be applied to the political and administrative problems which already exist in the Arctic and which may arise in future. Some of the solutions would involve the expenditure of money to enable Canada to undertake developments, particularly in airfield construction and electronic facilities, which both countries consider necessary. Other solutions may be possible without the expenditure of significant amounts of money. In this category may be included such measures as the conclusion of diplomatic agreements with the United States covering US rights and responsibilities in the Canadian Arctic and the organization through committees or departments of machinery to keep under review some of the civil and military problems which are likely to arise.

The Advisory Committee on Northern Development, which has not met recently, is charged with responsibility "to advise the government on questions of policy relating to civilian and military undertakings in Northern Canada and to provide for the effective coordination of all government activities in that area". I recommend that the Advisory Committee on Northern Development should be instructed to consider all phases of development of the Canadian Arctic and to report to Cabinet on the present situation and on the means which may be employed to preserve or develop the political, administrative, scientific and defence interests of Canada in the area.

Prospective New Developments in the Arctic

1. Distant Early Warning Radar Chain (Project Lincoln)

The US Government has allocated $20,000,000 for the establishment of three or four experimental early warning radar stations in the Arctic with a view to the ultimate development of a complete radar chain of possibly 40 stations extending across the Canadian Arctic archipelago. The United States will probably wish to set up the experimental stations in the general area of the Mackenzie River delta. Some or all of the experimental stations may well be located in the adjacent area of Alaska but this remains to be settled.

2. Development of Arctic Air Strips

The USAF has indicated that it proposes to approach Canada for permission to develop the air strips at the two northernmost joint Arctic weather stations on Ellesmere Island, i.e. Alert and Eureka. In addition, the USAF would like to construct an air strip at River Clyde on Baffin Island. The USAF proposes that these air strips be developed in order that they would be suitable for emergency landing for the heaviest freighter aircraft and for jet fighters. The USAF feels that these developments are required to meet the need for emergency alternatives for aircraft based at Thule and for Arctic resupply missions.

3. Loran Station on Baffin Island

The United States wishes to establish a Loran station on the east coast of Baffin Island to assist ships and aircraft en route to Thule and other Arctic destinations. It should be noted that it was only in 1952 that the Canadian Government decided to take over the last three Loran stations under US control on the Atlantic coast and the transfer does not take place until July 1953.

[24] Voir le volume 18, le document 744./See Volume 18, Document 744.

4. Radar Stations in the Northeastern Arctic

Over a year ago the United States was given permission to make surveys as a preliminary to the establishment of radar stations on Ellesmere and Coburg Islands for the protection of Thule. During the Spring air lift in 1952, the USAF investigated the possibility of putting these radar stations in the vicinity of the joint Arctic weather stations at Alert, Eureka and, or Resolute. Resolute with about 35 Canadians has the largest Canadian community in the Arctic archipelago. Alert and Eureka have 7 Canadians between them. Each US radar station would probably be manned by about 200 US service men.

5. Commercial Air Routes Across the Arctic

The Canadian Government has received a request for consideration of the possibility of opening up a commercial air route from Edmonton across the Canadian Arctic to Thule and thence to Europe. If or when this route is approved a variety of airways facilities will be required.

[Ottawa, n.d.]

Mr. Wilgress

You will recall that we sent up a memo a short time ago suggesting a meeting of General Young's[25] committee on the Arctic. The Minister approved.

We now discover parallel action was being taken in the Privy Council. Phillips prepared a memo for Mr. Pickersgill which was shown to the PM and quite informally to Mr. Pearson when, I think, he was in Pickersgill's office. The PM was somewhat concerned over Arctic policies, as was Mr. Pearson who mentioned he had already approved the calling of a meeting.

I understand Mr. Pickersgill is prepared to ask General Young to call his committee together. I think we might let him go ahead, since it is really an interdepartmental matter, and drop our letter to General Young.

ARCTIC; REVIEW OF US AND CANADIAN DEVELOPMENTS

30. The Secretary of State for External Affairs pointed out that interest in the Canadian Arctic had increased substantially since the joint Arctic weather stations were established in 1947. The display of interest, the expenditure of money and the exploitation of manpower in the Canadian Arctic Archipelago had been at least as great by the United States as by Canada, and in some respects greater. The main continuing activity was the weather station programme at the five joint arctic weather stations. Half the meteorological staff at these stations was Canadian. There were also small Canadian weather stations at Arctic Bay and at Pond Inlet. At Resolute Bay, there was an RCAF station and an Arctic Survival School was conducted during the winter months at Cambridge Bay in the southern Archipelago. These were the only exclusively Canadian stations and the total number of Canadian officials in the entire Archipelago was less than 50 men. This figure was now matched by the United States which, in addition to supplying half the meteorological staff, operated an exclusively US weather station at Padloping and manned a floating ice island within the Canadian sector. Transient US officials both civil and military, outnumbered Canadian transients during the summer months.

Everything pointed towards an increase in US activity in the Arctic during coming years. Several new US projects had recently come to the attention of the Department of External Affairs. The largest of these if implemented, would involve eventually the establishment of a chain of 40 radar stations right across the Arctic. As a first step in this programme, the United States government had allocated $20,000,000 for the establishment of three or four experimental radar stations probably in the general area of the Mackenzie River delta. The US Airforce had also indicated that it might approach Canada for permission to develop air strips at the two northernmost joint Arctic weather stations on Ellesmere Island. In addition, the USAF would like to construct an air strip at River Clyde on Baffin Island. The USAF proposed that these air strips be constructed in such a manner as to be suitable for emergency landing by the heaviest freighter aircraft and by jet fighters. The United States also wished to establish a Loran station on the east coast of Baffin Island. Over a year ago, the United States had been given permission to make surveys as a preliminary to the establishment of radar stations on Ellesmere and Coburg Islands for the protection of Thule. A request had also been received by the Canadian government for consideration of the possibility of opening up a commercial air route from Edmonton across the Canadian Arctic to Thule and thence to Europe.

If Canadian claims to territory in the Arctic rested on discovery and continuous occupation, Canadian claims to some relatively unexplored areas might be questioned in the future. He was concerned about the de facto exercise of US sovereignty, examples of which were numerous during the last war in other parts of Canada, and it seemed clear that an increase in US activity in the Arctic would present risks of misunderstandings, incidents and infringements on the exercise of Canadian sovereignty.

In the circumstances, he urged strongly that the Advisory Committee on Northern Development, which had not recently been active, be directed to consider all phases of development of the Canadian Arctic and to report on the present situation and on the means which might be employed to preserve or develop the political, administrative, scientific and defence interests of Canada in that area.

31. The Minister of Agriculture thought the problem was a serious one and that steps should be taken immediately to ensure that Canadian sovereignty was not imperiled by the continued and increasing exercise of de facto US jurisdiction in many parts of the Arctic Archipelago.

32. The Minister of National Defence said the last quarterly report received from the Pentagon on the subject revealed that there was a decrease in the total numbers of civilian and military US personnel in all parts of Canada except Newfoundland and Labrador.

He was satisfied that everything which could be done had, in fact, been done in respect of existing US activities in Canada to ensure preservation of Canadian sovereignty. There were several cases of US military developments in northern Canada having eventually been taken over by Canada. Nonetheless, continued US activity in the North presented a problem and he agreed that the matter should be looked into by the Advisory Committee and reported on as soon as possible.

Referring to US proposals for the establishment of a chain of 40 radar stations across the Arctic, he pointed out that it was not yet established by any means that radar could successfully be operated that far north. Such a programme would represent a very large outlay of money and manpower. Each station would cost from $6 to $15 million and would be manned by 100 to 300 persons. In this connection, he said that a possible substitute for radar was now being developed by his department in cooperation with McGill University. If this development proved successful, it might be possible to establish a chain of warning stations across the Arctic at a fraction of the cost involved in the proposed radar system.

33. The Prime Minister, in reply to a question as to how the matter of sovereignty was met in NATO developments in western European countries, pointed out that no parallel could be established between the situation in western Europe and the situation which might develop in the Canadian Arctic. A NATO establishment in, say, Germany was, in fact, sponsored and paid for by all NATO members and not by a single foreign state as was the case with US installations in the Canadian Arctic. Furthermore, such NATO establishments in Europe represented a very small fraction of the sum total of human activity in those areas and thus did not in any sense constitute a threat to the sovereignty of the state within which they were located, whereas it was within the realm of the possible that in years to come US developments might be just about the only form of human activity in the vast wastelands of the Canadian Arctic. This was the problem which had to be met. In the deliberations of the Advisory Committee some thought might usefully be given to the possibility of ensuring in some practical manner extension of normal Canadian customs and immigration facilities to those areas in the Arctic where the more important developments were taking place.

34. Mr. Pearson suggested that the Advisory Committee might usefully give consideration to the formulation of "principles of cooperation" in respect of the Arctic which might in future govern US-Canadian relations, in all matters pertaining to that area.

35. The Cabinet after considerable further discussion, noted the report by the Secretary of State for External Affairs on current and prospective Canadian and US developments in the Arctic Archipelago and directed the Secretary to request the Chairman of the Advisory Committee on Northern Development to have that Committee consider and report periodically on all phases of development of the Canadian Arctic and on the means which might be employed to preserve or develop the political, administrative, scientific and defence interests of Canada in that area.

STATE DEPARTMENT NOTE OF JANUARY 30 REGARDING US PROPOSALS CONCERNING AN EARLY WARNING SYSTEM IN THE FAR NORTH

I enclose herewith, two copies of a State Department note, dated January 30, containing the proposals of the United States Government for an experimental programme, known as Project "Counterchange", to investigate the feasibility of an early warning air defense system in the Far North. The note requests the approval of the Canadian Government to make preliminary site surveys and to construct two of the three experimental stations on Canadian soil. Permission is also requested to make surveys concurrently for the selection of the sites and to make preliminary arrangements for a permanent system, which it is planned to construct if the experiments prove successful and if it is desired to build a chain under a mutually satisfactory agreement between the two governments.

This matter has been the subject of discussions at the meetings of the Permanent Joint Board on Defense which began on January 26, 1953. The necessary explanatory data, including maps and technical information, is now being assembled by the US authorities and will be transmitted to you through this Embassy within a few days.

You will observe that this matter is stated in the note to be one of urgency and I should appreciate being informed of the reply which should be made to the State Department.

Le secrétaire d'État par intérim des États-Unis à l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis

Acting Secretary of State of United States to Ambassador in United States

TOP SECRET Washington, January 30, 1953

Excellency:

I have the honor to refer to recent discussions between representatives of the United States and Canada in the Permanent Joint Board on Defense on January 26, 1953, regarding the United States proposals for an experimental program, known as Project "Counterchange", to investigate the feasibility of an early warning system in the Far North. Details of the project were presented for the information of the Canadian Members of the Board, who considered it vitally important that the matter be given prompt consideration by their Government. It was agreed that a diplomatic note setting forth the desires of the United States Government should be presented to the Canadian Government.

Accordingly, I have the honor to state that authorities at the highest level of my Government consider that there is an urgent necessity for an early warning system in the Far North to provide time to enable the Canadian and United States Governments to take appropriate measures for military and civil defense. A much earlier warning is required than can be given by the existing joint radar system. The Secretary of Defense has therefore been directed to proceed immediately on the experimental phase of the project, which envisages the construction of three stations in the Far North. It is proposed that two of these stations be in Canada and one in Alaska. The United States Air Force has been given the responsibility for carrying out the research and development aspects of the program (Project "Counterchange").

My Government therefore requests the approval of the Canadian Government to make preliminary site surveys and to construct two of the three experimental stations on Canadian soil. Permission is also requested to make surveys concurrently for the selection of sites and to make preliminary arrangements for a permanent system, which it is planned to construct if the experiments prove successful and if it is desired to build the chain under a mutually satisfactory agreement between the two Governments.

Present plans propose that the stations in the western Canadian Arctic would be at Herschel Island and at Aklavik; the third experimental station would be on Barter Island, Alaska. If it were decided at a later date to implement the plan for the permanent early warning system, these stations would become operating units in the chain. The United States Government considers it urgent that the three experimental stations be installed during the coming open-navigation season in the Arctic. Therefore, the United States Government hopes that the approval of the Canadian Government can be received at an early date.

The United States Secretary of Defense has approved the use of twenty million dollars for the developmental stage of the early warning net and these funds are available to the United States Air Force. The United States Government is therefore prepared to meet all expenses in connection with the three experimental stations; at the same time, my Government would welcome Canadian participation in the project, both financial and technical.

I should like to emphasize that Canadian participation in the experimental phase of the program would materially advance the work if it were subsequently decided to establish the complete system.

At the recent meeting of the Permanent Joint Board on Defense, the Canadian Chairman asked that the United States Government's request contained in this note be explained by accompanying maps, technical data, and other pertinent information. The United States authorities are now assembling the desired data, and these materials will be transmitted to the Canadian Embassy within a few days.

My Government, as I have previously indicated, considers the above-mentioned proposals a matter of the utmost importance to the joint defense of the United States and Canada. In view of the urgency attached to the project, it will be appreciated if the Government of Canada will give the matter its most prompt and favorable consideration.

Accept, etc.

EXPERIMENTAL PROJECT "COUNTERCHANGE"

At the January 1953 meeting of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence, the US Section presented for consideration with the utmost urgency a proposal to proceed immediately on experimentation for an early warning system in the Far North. It was stated that if these experiments were successful, the US Government would desire to approach the Canadian Government to establish a portion of a permanent early warning system on Canadian soil under such arrangements for joint implementation as might be agreed upon by the two Governments. In the experimental stage, which the US Secretary of Defense had been directed by the President to embark upon immediately, it was proposed to establish three stations in the Far North during the coming open season in the Arctic. Two of these stations would be situated in Canada (at Herschel Island and Aklavik) and one in Alaska (at Barter Island). The Canadian Section was informed that a request would be made shortly through diplomatic channels for permission to undertake preliminary surveys for sites and to enter upon construction of the experimental stations. Further, during this experimental stage, permission would be requested to make preliminary surveys for the permanent sites and to make provision for entering upon the full project if the experiment proved successful and when it was determined to implement the project under such agreement as might be made between the two Governments.

2. On January 30, 1953, the Canadian Ambassador in Washington was presented with a diplomatic note putting forward the requests outlined above. Attached is a copy of the US note together with a copy of the covering despatch from the Canadian Ambassador in Washington and a record of a meeting which took place between the Canadian Ambassador in Washington and a senior official of the US State Department in connection with the US proposal.

3. The US proposal is here submitted for discussion at the meeting of Cabinet Defence Committee to be held on February 10, 1953.

ITEM III — EXPERIMENTAL PROJECT "COUNTERCHANGE"

Memorandum, Secretary of State for External Affairs, February 6, 1953, "Experimental Project Counterchange", Document D4-53.

The Committee agreed that the Secretary of State for External Affairs should be authorized to inform the US government that Canada approved the US request to conduct Experimental Project Counterchange on the following conditions:

(i) The project would be regarded entirely as experimental, and approval of the project would involve no commitment whatsoever to the Canadian government to give favourable consideration to a permanent radar chain across the Canadian Arctic;

(ii) There would be full Canadian participation at all levels;

(iii) Project Counterchange would be both a technical trial and an operational evaluation of the scheme;

(iv) A joint study group would be formed to examine not only the possibility of establishing radar stations in the Arctic but would also assess the relative value of additional radar stations in various parts of northern North America;

(v) All sites in Canadian territory would be subject to explicit approval by Canada;

(vi) Canada would bear no financial responsibility for the cost of constructing the stations or of providing or installing the equipment;

(vii) Conditions for ownership of land, buildings and equipment on Canadian sites would be as set forth in the Exchange of Notes on August 1, 1951, on the extension of the continental radar defence system (Pinetree).

ARCTIC DEFENCE; CANADA-UNITED STATES CO-OPERATION

14. The Minister of National Defence, as Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs, said that, on January 30th the US Secretary of State had sent a note to the Canadian Ambassador in Washington proposing that two experimental radar stations be established in Canadian territory, one on Herschel Island and the other at Aklavik. He submitted a draft note which he recommended be sent in reply.†

An explanatory memorandum was circulated.

(Minister's memorandum, Feb. 25, 1953† and attached draft note — Cab. Doc. 59-53†)

The proposed stations would be tied in with a third to be established in Alaska and with the US defence system there. If a trial with the three indicated that such advance warning stations were desirable, there might be a proposal by the United States to establish a chain of 40 stations stretching to the northern tip of Greenland. It had been suggested that the cost of such a chain would be about $200 million but it seemed more likely that it would cost many times that amount. Manpower involved would be very great. The plan for the three experimental stations had grown out of pressure by the US Civil Defence Organization to have some greater means of early warning of an attack. The project had been discussed in the Permanent Joint Board on Defence.

15. In the course of discussion it was suggested:

(a) that, as the proposal concerned US defence and as the United States was to undertake the full cost of the experimental stations, it would be difficult not to agree;

(b) that it should be made clear in the note that a condition of approval was that the United States turn over to Canadian authorities any data of scientific value concerning Canada acquired in carrying out the surveys or other work; and,

(c) that it would be desirable for the Minister of Resources and Development to notify the responsible authorities in the Yukon and Northwest Territories of the proposed developments as soon as possible.

16. The Cabinet, after discussion, approved the recommendation of the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs and agreed:

(a) that a draft note in accordance with the terms submitted be sent by the Canadian Ambassador in Washington to the Secretary of State of the United States concerning Canadian approval of and conditions attached to the establishment of two experimental early warning radar stations in the general region of Aklavik, Northwest Territories and Herschel Island, Yukon Territory and the making of surveys for the selection of sites for a possible permanent system of stations, on the understanding that the note would be modified before despatch to make clear the understanding that the US authorities would make available to the Canadian authorities any information of scientific value acquired in carrying out the project; and,

(b) that the Department of National Defence advise the Minister of Resources and Development when and to what extent it would be possible for him to give information to the authorities responsible for the administration of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon Territory concerning the projects to be undertaken.

NOTE NO. 163 Washington, February 27, 1953

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to your note of January 30, 1953, proposing an experimental programme known as Project Counterchange. My Government has considered these proposals and, having regard for the importance which the United States Government attaches to them in relation to the joint defence of the two countries, is pleased to approve: the making of preliminary site surveys for, and the construction of, two experimental early warning stations in the general region of Aklavik in the Northwest Territories and Herschel Island in the Yukon Territory, together with the intermediate unattended stations which it is understood are required to complete the experimental installation; and the making of surveys concurrently for the selection of sites for a possible permanent system should the installation of such a system be undertaken subsequently under a mutually satisfactory agreement between the two Governments. My Government is also pleased to participate in the conduct of the experimental programme, it being understood that the United States Government, as indicated in your note, will meet all expenses in connection with the experimental installations.

The Canadian Government requires, however, that its approval of the United States proposals shall be subject to the following conditions:

1. Canadian approval of, and participation in, Project Counterchange involves no commitment on the part of the Canadian Government to authorize the subsequent installation of an operational early warning chain.

2. A Joint Military Study Group designated by the Chiefs of Staff of each country shall be set up immediately with instructions to study those aspects of the North American Air Defence system in general, and the early warning system in particular, which are of mutual concern to the two countries. The Canadian and United States sections of the Military Study Group shall respectively report to their Governments through the respective Chiefs of Staff. The Military Study Group will be advised by a joint United States-Canada scientific team, whose primary task will be to carry out such operational research and other scientific studies as are required.

3. Project Counterchange should be planned and carried out so that it is not only a technical trial but also facilitates making an assessment of this element of a continental early warning system. The information obtained from the Project would thus be capable of being utilized by the Military Study Group and the joint scientific team.

4. All installations on Canadian territory in connection with Project Counterchange will be operated and maintained while there is a continuing need for them in order to carry the experiment to a conclusion. In the event that either Government wishes to discontinue the operation of any or all of the installations, the question of continuing need in relation to the experimental Project will be referred to the Permanent Joint Board on Defence. If it is decided at any time in the future by either Government following consideration by the Permanent Joint Board on Defence as provided above, that the facilities are no longer necessary for the purpose of the experiment, the land, together with any immovable fixtures on it, will on twelve months notice revert to the use of the Canadian Government, unless the two Governments should agree on the subsequent use of the installations for other purposes.

My Government desires to affirm its policy that, exclusive of any question of division of costs, and of tenure, which must of course be settled in respect to particular projects, all radar installations on Canadian territory will be carried out in accordance with the principles expressed in the Exchange of Notes of August 1, 1951, with respect to the radar extension programme. In view of the limitations imposed by the urgency and experimental nature of Project Counterchange the Canadian Government is prepared, in this case, to waive the requirement that construction should be carried out by Canadian agencies, using Canadian labour, materials and electronic equipment. The following principles and requirements will, however, be observed: (for convenient reference they are numbered to follow the preceding conditions)

5. Officials of the Canadian Government will participate in all surveys and the arrangements therefor to be carried out in Canada, and the selection of all sites on Canadian territory shall be subject to approval by the Canadian authorities. It is understood that any information of scientific value acquired in carrying out the Project would be made available to the Canadian authorities.

6. Canada will acquire and retain title to all sites which are agreed to be required in Canada for Project Counterchange. The Canadian Government hereby grants and assures to the United States Government without charge such rights of access, use and occupancy as may be required for the construction, equipment and operation of the stations pursuant to sub-paragraphs 1 to 4 of this note.

7. Within the sites made available to the United States Government pursuant to sub-paragraphs 5 and 6 of this note, the United States, so far as may be consistent with the laws of Canada, may do whatever is necessary or appropriate to the carrying out of its responsibilities in Canada in connection with the construction and equipment of the installations and the conduct of the experiment in accordance with the principles expressed in this note, including:

(a) construction, installation and operation of the necessary structures, facilities and equipment and such improvement of the sites as may be required to fit them for their intended use, provided that there shall be prior consultation with the appropriate Canadian authorities with respect to all major elements of construction and all installations of major equipment in order to avoid interference with other urgent projects in this particular area. Complete details of airstrips and other facilities for aircraft landing and servicing should also be included; and

(b) stationing of personnel under the control and command of United States Military authorities.

8. Ownership of all property brought into Canada or purchased in Canada by the United States Government and placed on the sites other than structures permanently affixed to the realty shall remain in the United States Government. The United States Government shall have the unrestricted right to remove or dispose of all such property provided that the removal or disposition shall not impair the operation of any station whose discontinuance has not been determined in accordance with the requirements of sub-paragraph 4 of this note, and provided further that removal or disposition takes place within a reasonable time after the date on which, in accordance with the provisions of sub-paragraph 4 of this note, the operation of the particular station has been discontinued.

9. The rates of pay and working conditions for all labour employed in construction of the installations in Canada will be set after consultation with the Canadian Department of Labour and will not be less than in accordance with the Canadian Fair Wages and Hours of Labour Act of 1935.

10. Canadian law (e.g. Tax Law, Labour Laws, Workmen's Compensation, Unemployment Insurance etc.) will apply. The importance of this requirement is to be drawn to the attention of all contractors.

11. Canada will take the necessary steps to facilitate the admission into the territory of Canada of such United States citizens as may be employed either on the construction of the installations or the conduct of the experiment, it being understood that the United States will undertake to repatriate at its own expense any such persons if the contractors fail to do so.

12. All radio frequencies used in Canadian territory in connection with Project Counterchange will be cleared through the Royal Canadian Air Force with the Department of Transport.

13. Personnel engaged in any way on Project Counterchange shall observe the Game and Wild Life Laws of the Northwest Territories and Yukon Territory as applicable and shall avoid any unnecessary contact with the natives.

My Government has noted that the United States Air Force has been designated by the United States Government as responsible for carrying out the research and development aspects of Project Counterchange. The Canadian Government for its part has, as a preliminary measure, named the Royal Canadian Air Force as the Canadian agency responsible to ascertain all details of the Project. When full information is known it will then be decided whether the Royal Canadian Air Force or the Defence Research Board will be the continuing agency for participation in the Project.

In accordance with the principles stated in this note, I propose that further details concerning the construction and equipment of the installations and the conduct of Project Counterchange shall be settled by subsequent arrangements between the appropriate authorities of the two Governments, through the aforementioned designated agencies.

Accept, etc.

Vandenberg, Chief of the Air Staff, General Twining, Vice Chief of the Air Staff, and several others, as well as General D. Bedell Smith, Under-Secretary of State.

(1) Project "Counterchange"

Mr. Wilson and his colleagues were all aware of this project and were acting on the assumption that it was urgent and important. Some of them had already received word that our Embassy had already, that morning, handed our note to the State Department accepting the American proposal, subject to the conditions as agreed to by our Cabinet at its meeting the previous day.

I told Mr. Wilson, Mr. Anderson and a number of others that we were by no means persuaded that the proposed additional screen would add sufficiently to our defence to justify the expenditures of money and manpower. I pointed out that the appearance of a single identified enemy aircraft might result in our alerting all of North America. This idea had not been suggested to them before.

Mr. Frank Nash, who still holds the same posts as he did under the previous regime, confirmed General Foulkes' account of the origin of this project. It resulted from an original suggestion for a basic study made by the USAF. This was submitted to a group of scientists and others which met last summer at MIT to consider air defence, with particular emphasis on early warning for civil defence. In consequence a strongly worded report had been made to the President, pressed by Gorrie[26] and Dickinson, urging that a screen of this kind would give six hours additional warning. To this, Mr. Truman said that something should be done about it. Without prior consideration by the Pentagon, the project was put before the National Security Council, which gave instructions that the project for the complete screen across the north should be completed by 1955. Mr. Kelly, the head of Bell Laboratories had been working on the development of early warning radar. I gathered that he had been instructed to proceed with the technical trials of three stations to be set up in the northwest of the continent. Mr. Nash was emphatic that the former Secretaries of Defense, expressly including by name Mr. Finletter, had been sceptical of the plan and critical of the way in which it had been pressed forward. I gathered that Mr. Wilson and his assistants were not familiar with the background and in any event, had had no opportunity to give any serious consideration to this matter.

I understand that the USAF and Bell Laboratories are ready to begin moving material to the proposed sites at once so that the stations can be completed at the earliest possible moment. Mr. Nash also expressed the view that the present directive was to proceed with construction of the whole chain.

Chairman, Canadian Section, Permanent Joint Board on Defence, to Minister of National Defence

TOP SECRET Ottawa, April 28, 1953

Dear Mr. Claxton,

STATUS OF CANADA-US MILITARY PLANNING

As you may have noted in your study of the Journal of the April 1953 meeting of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence, the Chairman of the US Section of the Board presented a paper on the status of Canada-US military planning with particular reference to the preparation by the Military Cooperation Committee of a Future

[26] Jack Gorrie, président de la National Security Resources Board des États-Unis.
Jack Gorrie, Chairman, National Security Resources Board of United States.

Defence Analysis. A copy of the US Chairman's paper is attached for convenient reference.† This paper was discussed in the Journal as Item 16.

2. As I understand the situation, Canadian Military planners have not, since 1950, been permitted to include in any combined Canada-US papers, force requirements which have not already been provided for in approved defence programmes. The reason for this restriction has been, of course, that while the requirements indicated in the plans could not be considered commitments from a legal point of view, in actual practice they might be held to be an affirmation of a military necessity and so to constitute a very real commitment.

3. It seems to me, however, that although this position was a valid one in 1950, the events of 1953 have overtaken it. As the matter now stands the Canadian Government with its peacetime military resources largely committed in Korea and Europe, is in effect presented by the United States with a long list of North American defence requirements and the statement that "these requirements must be met for our mutual security, and if you cannot do it, we will be glad to". Under such circumstances, it seems to me to be of cardinal importance that the Canadian Government should be able to satisfy itself that the US demands are in fact based on sound military and technical considerations and that the plans put forward by the United States are appropriate to the needs of the situation.

4. In the discussion at the PJBD meeting, the Chairman of the US Section made it clear that the US Government neither could nor would concede that plans for the defence of North America in future years should be based on present capabilities rather than on estimated military requirements. He said:

"To produce a productive programme for the future defence of Canada and the United States, the military planners must be given the authority to develop plans which are produced in accordance with sound military planning principles. It is recognized that the fulfillment of requirements in any plans so drawn would of course be subject to review by the respective Chiefs of Staff and further review on the basis of political and economic considerations prior to their approval by the United States and Canada at the governmental level. Such reviews should be conducted at levels above the MCC and the military plans in that Committee should not be circumscribed by these factors."

5. In the light of the above presentation of US views, I can but conclude that if Canadian military planners are not permitted to work with their US counterparts, then plans in which we are vitally concerned will be developed by US officers and firmed up without regard to Canadian interests. As a consequence, the Canadian Government will continue to be confronted piecemeal with a series of US military operating requirements on Canadian territory which it will be difficult if not impossible to deny.

6. I am aware that in requiring as a condition of Canadian approval of Project Counterchange the establishment of a joint military study group to consider air defence requirements with particular reference to early warning, we have in this one important aspect of our joint defence interests met the views which the United States Staffs hold generally. I may say that in this particular matter where the real requirements of the situation had been obscured by the way in which the US Chiefs of Staff had been by-passed I felt that it was imperative that by a proper objective investigation to be carried out by responsible technical personnel, we should be safeguarded from being stampeded into a vast undertaking, the costs of which we would have had to share in. However, I should like to suggest that we consider making it a general practice to require similar safeguards in future, and having first stated clearly our understanding of the circumstances of any such plans, insist on full participation by Canadian planners in joint planning activities. We would then be in a position to require that before any US proposals involving defence installations on Canadian territory could be considered they would have to be examined by the appropriate Canada-US military planning group (e.g., the Military Cooperation Committee) prior to formal consideration by the Canadian Chiefs of Staff and the Canadian Government. This would give the Canadian military authorities and the Canadian Government the opportunity to insist on exacting criteria of necessity and soundness of concept, and upon the provision of adequate information at an early stage in the development of such projects while they are still malleable.

7. I presume that this important matter will come up for discussion when the Journal of the April 1953 meeting of the PJBD is considered at the next meeting of Cabinet Defence Committee. In the meantime, I would very much appreciate the opportunity of discussing the question with you and Mr. Pearson at your convenience and in order to facilitate this I propose to send copies of this letter both to Mr. Pearson and to General Foulkes so that they may be fully informed of the anxieties which have developed in my mind as a result of the experience I have had in the PJBD discussions.

Yours sincerely,

A.G.L. McNAUGHTON

CONFIDENTIAL. IMPORTANT.

ARTICLE BY GENERAL BRADLEY IN AUGUST 29 EDITION OF SATURDAY EVENING POST

General Bradley's remarks on North American defence and Canada-United States defence relationships were most interesting. We are preparing a memorandum for the Minister on his return from New York reviewing the current situation regarding Canada-United States defence problems in the light of the views expressed in the article.

2. Your estimate of Washington opinion on this general subject, including the current lively issue of the need for increased air defence, General Bradley's proposals, and Canada-United States defence relationships, would be appreciated. We assume that you can prepare an estimate without, at this stage, making any enquiry at the State Department or Pentagon.

SECRET. IMPORTANT.

ARTICLE BY GENERAL BRADLEY IN THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

Reference: Your telegram EX-1471 of the 27th August.

We think you should assume that you will be faced before long with requests from the United States Government for co-operation in the field of continental defence on a scale considerably larger than any which have been made previously. On the other hand, we think it would be premature to assume that such requests will be as towering as General Bradley suggested, or even of the nature indicated in his article.

2. In estimating the likelihood of such an approach as General Bradley recommended, from President Eisenhower to the Prime Minister, you will no doubt want to keep in mind the background provided by the following facts, which we think are relevant:

(a) As one symptom of the nagging anxiety here about the vulnerability of the United States to air attack, there has been for at least six months widespread agitation both inside the United States Government and in the press for a more hermetic system of continental defence; and this agitation has grown with the news that the Soviet Union carried out, on the 12th of August, an atomic explosion involving a thermo-nuclear reaction.

(b) A new slate of Chiefs of Staff was installed this month, and they have been instructed by the President to conduct a thoroughgoing review of United States strategy and military planning.

(c) There has been a long-standing difference of opinion of a technical kind between the armed services, on the one hand, and scientists and civil defence authorities, on the other, over how to make the best use of whatever resources could be allocated for continental defence. This dispute has never been completely resolved, but, in so far as a decision has been reached, it has gone in favour of the scientists and the civil defence authorities and against the armed services, whose views of the best way to defend North America are presented by General Bradley.

(d) Repeated efforts to obtain more money for continental defence have foundered on the administration's determination to balance the budget and restore the soundness of the dollar.

3. In retrospect, the skepticism with which many administration spokesmen received Malenkov's announcement on the 8th of August that the United States did not enjoy a monopoly on the production of the hydrogen bomb now appears to have been singularly ill-advised. The tone of much newspaper comment on the hydrogen explosion in the Soviet Union reveals a strong disinclination to be fobbed off much longer with paternal reassurances from the government; and many responsible editors and columnists are calling for improved continental defence. In the same way as the news in 1949 that the Soviet Union had an atomic bomb was followed by a thorough re-examination in the National Security Council of United States foreign and defence policy and military dispositions, so the knowledge that the Soviet Union either now has, or shortly will have, a hydrogen bomb may be expected to lead to another searching re-examination which will almost certainly come to the conclusion that the defences against a Soviet air attack across the Arctic should be strengthened.

4. Such a re-examination had been begun even before there was knowledge of this new factor. Indeed, one of the reasons for the complete change in the United States Chiefs of Staff was to make possible a fresh look at the United States military planning and strategy. It is impossible to forecast what will be the conclusions of the new Chiefs of Staff. Almost certainly they will ask for more money for continental defence. But it should not be assumed that they will want to concentrate United States resources on the defence of North America at the cost of reducing United States capabilities in other parts of the world. Admiral Radford's personal opinions are by no means completely known; but he has made no secret in the past either of his support for an energetic policy to resist Communism in Asia, or of his belief in the important world-wide role the United States Navy has to play as a platform for air-attack in time of war. The new Chairman of the Chiefs of Staff may be expected to agree with General Bradley that more attention should be paid to continental defence, but he will have to balance its claims against the need to meet many continuing commitments around the globe.

5. In any case, the views of the new Chiefs of Staff may not be decisive. In arguing that an early warning system in the far north would be of little value unless "backed up with bases and radar installations to provide continuous tracking and converging interception", and in advocating instead that aerial defences should be advanced progressively northward in Canada without any gaps being left, General Bradley is putting forward the views that for many months have been held by the military services. However, the scientists at Brookhaven and MIT and their allies in the Civil Defence Organization and in the press who have proposed an early warning system in the far north have won the only engagement on this technical issue that has been fought within the United States Government since the new administration took office; and the experimental start that is now being made on "Operation Corrode" is the sign of their victory. It may be that the new Chiefs of Staff will share the opinions of their predecessors on how best to provide defence against a Soviet attack across the Arctic; and, if so, they may succeed better than General

Bradley and his colleagues in having their views accepted by the President. But this cannot be taken for granted.

6. It must also be borne in mind that budgetary considerations have hitherto defeated most of the efforts to extend and tighten the network of continental defence. The Kelly Report, the East River Project, and the Bull Report have not yet produced many tangible results; and the chief reason is that, prompted by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, the President has been unwilling to unbalance the budget further by authorizing large expenditures for continental defence. In a television interview on Wednesday night, Mr. Humphrey said that his chief concern was to balance the budget, but he suggested that, whether this was done at a high or low level, was of secondary importance. No doubt that is truth. But it is hardly conceivable that an administration which came to power on a promise to reduce taxation once the budget had been balanced, could afford to raise taxes unless there were a marked deterioration in the international situation. Since that method of raising money for improved northern defences would seem to be virtually precluded, it can be anticipated, we think, that the administration will continue to show reluctance to finance costly and elaborate schemes of continental defence. They sincerely believe that the fundamental strength of the United States cannot be maintained unless the soundness of the dollar is restored. They may be forced to sacrifice their budgetary and fiscal principles, but they will not abandon them lightly.

7. You will appreciate that it is particularly difficult to make any reliable predictions in this field. Many different plans are still being mooted by various United States authorities; and the President and the National Security Council will have to take into account many conflicting considerations before coming to firm decisions. It is therefore impossible to say whether General Bradley's article is to be taken as an accurate forecast of the kind of approach that is to be expected. In any case, you would do well, in our opinion, to assume that before very long Canada will probably be faced with new, and even larger requests, for co-operation in the defence of North America.

Memorandum from Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Secretary of State for External Affairs

CANADA-US DEFENCE PROBLEMS

You may have seen the article entitled "A Soldier's Farewell" by General Bradley, which was published in the Saturday Evening Post of August 29. From the Canadian point of view, the principal item of interest was the suggestion that the urgent need for improved continental defences merited the President and the Prime Minister conferring with a view to the establishment of an over-all continental defence command. In General Bradley's words, "The issues are too large, the time too pressing, for us to let this drift along in routine negotiation."

In addition to this reference to Canada-United States defence relationships, General Bradley dealt in some detail with the problem of continental defence. While he took issue with the concept of the arctic early warning line advocated by the Lincoln Summer Study Group, he made it plain that, in his view, it was necessary to take immediate steps to "push our aerial defences northward in Canada as fast as we can without leaving gaps or holes for the enemy to play tricks in".

It seems to me that General Bradley's remarks serve to illustrate a situation that deserves increased attention in Canada. The plain fact of the matter is that, rightly or wrongly, there is general agreement in the United States that North American defences are inadequate and that immediate measures must be taken to improve the existing situation. The current economy drive in the US, coupled with the confusion of ideas about what should be done, has delayed the adoption of a firm policy, but there are many indications that a combination of political and military pressures will force a decision in Washington in the immediate future, if, indeed, it has not already been reached.

Willy-nilly, Canada will become deeply involved in the US program for improving continental defences. In Bradley's words, ". . . we can do almost nothing without the friendly cooperation and the teamwork of the Canadians." By cooperation and teamwork, much more is meant than the mere provision of land for bases:

"Hitherto there has been a most cordial working relationship between the military leaders of the two countries. But now, as we plan to move our mutual air defences northward toward the Hudson Bay country, something more is required. . . . In my opinion a more effective over-all continental defence command must be worked out between Canada and ourselves. This command would include not only the air forces, but elements of the armies and navies of both countries."

You may consider that, in view of the US pressure for more elaborate defences, and the suggestion in General Bradley's article that existing command arrangements between Canada and the United States should be modified to meet the needs of the newly developing situation, it might be useful, within the Department of External Affairs, to make a study of the various aspects of the current Canadian defence policy with particular reference to Canada-US relationships.[27] This study would deal with such facets of the over-all problem as the work of the Canada-US Military Study Group, which was set up as a condition of Canadian approval of Project CORRODE (formerly known as Project COUNTERCHANGE) to study North American air defence requirements; the current restriction on Canadian participation in joint Canada-US planning of future defence requirements; the difficulties raised by current US defence projects which involve Canada; etc.

If you think that such a study would be helpful at this stage, I will have a paper prepared for your consideration.

CONTINENTAL DEFENCE

Reference: Your EX-1471 of August 27 and our WA-2012 of August 28, 1953.

We have been told informally and in strict confidence by Gordon Arneson of the State Department that the various studies of the problems of continental defence in Washington have now been brought together in some comprehensive recommendations of the Joint Planning Board of the National Security Council. These recommendations, we understand, have been approved by the United States Joint Chiefs of Staff. They are to be considered by the National Security Council shortly.

2. We have been given only in general outline the nature of these recommendations. They are based apparently upon the material produced by the Kelly, Edwards and Bull Committees which had studied the various aspects of the problem, including the requirements of an early warning system, the offensive capabilities of the Soviet Union and the budgetary limitations.

3. The principal conclusion of the Planning Board is that the United States does not, repeat not, now have adequate continental defence in relation to the risks of attack. The Board therefore urges that this unacceptable degree of risk be reduced by new and increased measures to be worked out in conjunction with Canada.

4. The Board finds, in effect, that the security programme of the United States is out of balance, in that insufficient resources have been devoted to continental defence in relation to the resources deployed abroad — notably for NATO, foreign military aid and the purposes of strategic air.

5. The Board's recommendation, we were told, does not say precisely what further measures of continental defence should be undertaken. It recognizes that it cannot prejudge Project Corrode or the conclusions of the joint Canada-United States study group which is at present examining the feasibility and relative merits of additional radar systems in various parts of North America. The Board, however, is said to favour the approach reflected in General Bradley's article in the Saturday Evening Post of August 29, when he advocated that aerial defence should be advanced progressively northward rather than that an early warning system should be established in the far north. The Board also argues apparently in favour of increased provision of weapons of interception, including both aircraft and the most modern missiles.

6. Arneson was rather vague about the extent of the additional measures for continental defence that might be involved in the Board's recommendations. He said, however, that, if the Board's proposals were accepted, the expenditures involved would not be of the magnitude which have been mentioned in speculative articles in the press; they would, at the most he thought, require an additional expenditure of some $1.6 billion as the peak in any one year.

7. Finally, Arneson emphasized that the recommendations of the Board had been formulated in response to instructions from the President and the NSC to clarify conflicting United States views on problems of continental defence, as reflected in various studies and reports which had come before the NSC. He assured us that it was fully recognized that nothing could or should be done without full advance consultation with the Canadian Government. If the Board's recommendation for an increased programme of continental defence were accepted, he thought that there would be a high-level approach to the Canadian Government. He expressed the personal opinion that the President might, for instance, take the occasion of his possible visit to Ottawa to discuss this whole question with the Prime Minister.

8. It cannot, of course, be taken for granted that the Board's recommendations will be approved by the National Security Council or the President. Although the National Security Council will apparently be considering recommendations which have been agreed at the staff level, the dilemma of trying to provide for increased measures of continental defence and at the same time balance the national budget will not be easily resolved and the President will be faced with difficult decisions, particularly on the magnitude and timing of further measures.

9. This report is based on an informal conversation on various aspects of atomic energy. As you know, we have from time to time obtained information on a personal and informal basis from Arneson on developments in the atomic energy field as well as on questions relating to continental defence. As it was made clear to us that Arneson did not have any specific authority to pass this information on to us, I would appreciate it if, in any enquiries which may be made on this subject in other quarters, special care be taken to protect the source.

10. I know that General Foulkes has had valuable personal contacts on this subject in Washington and that he has been following developments very closely. He will therefore be interested in this message which we have discussed with the Chairman of the Joint Staff here.

11. We will endeavour to keep you informed of developments after the National Security Council has considered this problem and we would like to be kept abreast of any information you receive through Foulkes and indeed from any other source.

CONTINENTAL DEFENCE

Reference: Your EX-1584 of September 23,† and our WA-2150 of September 21, 1953.

Mr. Claxton telephoned me on Tuesday afternoon (September 21) to draw my attention to the serious implications for Canada of the issues raised on this subject in recent pieces by various United States columnists, notably Alsop and Childs. I drew the Minister's attention to our telegram under reference which no doubt he has now seen.

2. I told Mr. Claxton that we fully appreciated the gravity and delicacy of this problem and that, in consultation with Admiral DeWolfe, we were doing everything possible to keep in touch with developments in the United States Government. At the moment there was nothing substantial to add to our telegram of September 21st; my impression was that much that had appeared in the newspapers was inaccurate and premature.

3. We have already ensured that at the working levels of the State Department there is a realization of the important considerations of national policy, which from the Canadian standpoint, should be taken into account in any new proposals for continental defence. We have also emphasized the importance which the Canadian Government attaches to being consulted at a sufficiently early stage; it was essential that we should not be confronted with large decisions on which we had had no adequate chance to express our views; further, it was particularly important to avoid any leakage of any United States proposals until joint solutions could be worked out.

4. The best procedure for consultation is a question which is not easy and requires some thought. Clearly, it should be kept very secret at the early stages particularly, and should involve very few. What would the Ministers think of Foulkes coming down and meeting say Bedell Smith and one or two others very privately, if that could be arranged? Ignatieff and I are to have Arneson to lunch tomorrow and we may have further news for you thereafter.

5. Incidentally, you have no doubt seen Reston's article in yesterday's New York Times (September 23). This puts the background to the discussion of continental defence in the United States into better perspective than the Alsop articles.

6. Will you let Mr. Claxton see this message and also make sure that Mr. Pearson sees it and my telegram under reference when he is in Ottawa this coming weekend.

CONTINENTAL DEFENCE

1. It so happened that this afternoon I was making my "courtesy" call on the Secretary of Defence. After the usual exchange of platitudes about our two countries, Mr. Wilson mentioned this subject, which was clearly on his mind (as it was on my own, although I had decided not to be the first to mention it on this occasion). He said that the National Security Council had been considering this difficult problem this morning — a subject which was of importance to my country as well.

2. The Secretary went on to say that it was difficult to arrive at a correct balance between United States requirements abroad and on this continent, particularly now that the new element of Soviet possession of the hydrogen bomb had been added. United States military authorities had been giving anxious consideration to what should be done. It was to be remembered that the strongest final deterrent to Soviet aggression lay in the capacity of the United States to retaliate. As he put it, the best deterrent was the Soviet realization that they could not win a war, no matter how much destruction and harm they might do to our side. For this reason we must not deploy too much of our strength on "fixed" defences.

3. With respect to Northern defence, he did not seem to be very fully informed on the various schemes. At any rate, he did not say much to me other than that consideration was being given now to a chain of radar stations on the 54th Parallel. He also knew of the (joint) experimental work being done in the Far North.

4. This is all pretty familiar, but it gave me the opportunity of putting to the Secretary the vital importance to Canada of decisions in this matter. I told him that I very much hoped that, before the United States Government's own opinions as to the requirements of the situation had "jelled", there would be full opportunity for Canadian authorities to have the United States appreciation and to express their own. Whatever decisions were ultimately taken would involve most important national considerations in Canada. The position would be very much more difficult to deal with if the United States were to come to us with everything cut-and-dried.

5. Mr. Wilson agreed that we were entitled to be consulted at an early stage. He even said that he would be prepared himself to go to Canada for a couple of days, or, alternatively, to have the Minister of National Defence come down here. I said that this would certainly be very helpful at some stage but that perhaps before either visit (which would be bound to attract public attention — already pretty stirred up on this topic, at least in this country) it might be wise to have informal and very private discussions at a high official level. It might be, for example, that the Chairman of our Chiefs of Staff and I could be put in direct touch with the United States Under-Secretary of State and the Chairman of the United States Joint Chiefs of Staff.

6. It was left that Mr. Wilson would turn over in his mind the best procedure for consultation. He will I hope let me know shortly what course the United States authorities decide to suggest. Incidentally, I gather the impression (although this may prove wrong) that no decision had been taken this morning by the National Security Council on the form and extent of the program which should be undertaken.

CONTINENTAL DEFENCE

Reference: My WA-2172 of September 24.

The lunch which Ignatieff and I had with Arneson today gave me an opportunity of impressing upon him (as I had on Secretary Wilson yesterday) the vital importance to Canada of decisions on continental defence, and to discuss informally procedures which might be followed in enabling Canadian authorities to be informed of United States thinking and plans before any new proposals are put forward.

2. I told Arneson of my talk with Secretary Wilson, as reported in my WA-2179 of September 24. I repeated to him in some detail what I had said to the Secretary of Defense about the way in which any decisions which the United States Government might ultimately take would affect most important national considerations in Canada. I told him that I would assume that the State Department as well as the Defense Department would now be fully alive to the necessity of giving full information to the Canadian Government and consulting us before any new proposals were put forward officially.

3. Arneson readily agreed that I could proceed on this assumption. He said that, rather than have the initiative come from the Canadian side requesting such information and co-operation, it would be preferable if the initiative should come from the United States side. In the light of the history of Canada-United States co-operation in continental defence, he thought that there might be three phases in joint action on this matter:

(a) a joint analysis of the general considerations affecting the risks of war, renewing the earlier series of meetings of consultation;

(b) a United States appreciation of Soviet atomic net capabilities in the light of the most recently acquired information resulting from this year's Soviet atomic tests; and

(c) an exposition of the measures of continental defence which the United States authorities were considering in the light of (a) and (b).

4. As to procedure, the three phases might be compressed into one meeting attended by a few senior officials of the Departments of State and Defense which had joint responsibility in the matter. For instance, a meeting might be arranged, at which attendance for the United States would include the Under-Secretary or his deputy, the Director of Policy Planning Staff, and Arneson for the State Department, and representatives of the Secretary of Defense and United States Chiefs of Staff. Arneson agreed that if such a meeting were arranged, it would certainly be desirable to have the Chairman of the Canadian Chiefs of Staff in addition to myself. This would seem to me to be a sensible procedure at this stage and one that would suit our purposes.

5. As the next step towards arranging such a meeting, Arneson said that he would like to consult the Deputy Under-Secretary, Mr. Freeman Mathews, who is thoroughly familiar with the meetings of consultation which had been held under the preceding administration. Since Mathews was the connecting link in the senior echelon of the State Department between the two administrations, he thought he would like to have him present in discussing the matter with the Under-Secretary and the Director of the Policy Planning Staff who had not participated in these arrangements. Mathews is away at the moment but is expected back at the end of next week. Arneson thought that, if matters would be handled in this way, there would be little difficulty in making arrangements which would be acceptable to us.

6. As to the timing factor, it was Arneson's impression that no decision had been taken by the National Security Council at its meeting yesterday and that no definitive conclusions were likely to be reached on the magnitude and timing of any additional measures of continental defence until further information is available on its effects on the budget and on the deployment of resources for defence purposes, which is now being studied by the new United States Chiefs of Staff. However, Arneson thought that it was almost certain that the question of continental defence would arise in some form in the event of the President visiting Ottawa. He realized therefore that, on the assumption that this visit was now probable, it was necessary to make arrangements for preparatory joint talks along the lines he had suggested early in October.

7. Referring to the newspaper reports about plans for the President to make a nation-wide address on defence problems (sometimes referred to as "Operation Candour"), Arneson said that he had had it in mind to give us and the British advance information on the substance of the President's address. No firm decision had yet been taken at the White House about the speech but the date proposed was October 4. Arneson said he would get in touch with us as soon as he had any information for us on this subject.

CONTINENTAL DEFENCE

Reference: Your telegrams 2172 and 2179 of September 24, and 2195 of September 25, 1953.

Following for Heeney from the Minister, Begins: I have been very much interested in your messages, about which I commented with you on Saturday morning on the telephone. I am also glad that you have been able to take advantage of your meeting with the Secretary of Defence to make known our apprehensions over certain possible developments in regard to continental defence. The United States Government should be as aware as we are of the importance of this question to Canada and of the inadvisability of making any plans or general statements about it which would embarrass us and, indeed, complicate any ultimate arrangements which may have to be made.

2. Mr. Claxton has done a memorandum on the subject for the Prime Minister, expressing his worries, a copy of which has been forwarded to you.† He has also had a number of talks with General McNaughton, officials of this Department, and the Chairman, Chiefs of Staff, as well as with myself. We are all very much aware here of the difficulties, and even the dangers ahead if wrong impressions are created by articles along the lines of those emanating from the Alsops.

3. While we should keep in close and continuous touch with the United States Government on these developments at every possible level, Mr. Claxton and I both agree with you that a visit at this time to Washington by either of us, or a visit by Mr. Wilson here, would excite too much interest and arouse unnecessary speculations. I think, however, that a meeting along the lines suggested in paragraphs 4 and 5 of your telegram 2195, reporting on your talks with Arneson, would be most helpful, though we might wish to send someone from Ottawa from External Affairs on the official level to attend such a meeting along with General Foulkes. Such a meeting should, I think, be held as soon as possible. We would like it to take place far enough in advance of the President's address to permit the possibility of the meeting influencing the address; this may mean having the meeting this week before Freeman Mathews returns (which you expect at the end of the week).

4. The line we should take with them would, of course, be to assert that since they did not know what they wanted or might want and we did not know yet what we wanted or might want, we should wait until the work of the Military Study Group is more advanced (which might be mid-October) and such other consideration as the subject warranted, and arrive at an agreed policy before making public statements which would create a public opinion which would circumscribe and even terminate all possibility of freedom of action in working out the best programme to meet our need. Although the Military Study Group may still have a few months' work to do, we hope to have a tentative report from the Canadian section by October 15.

5. I hope that Arneson or someone else will be able to let us have an advance copy of the President's address on defence problems, now proposed for October 4, on the assumption that this address will deal with matters of direct and essential interest to Canada. If, however, the address is general in character and could not be related to Canada, directly or indirectly, then while welcoming knowledge of its contents, we would have no particular claim to such knowledge in advance. However, for the President to refer to matters in this address which could only be implemented with the co-operation of Canada, and without our advance knowledge, and without the prior consultation which would be rendered necessary in these circumstances, might cause very considerable embarrassment and add to the difficulties on both sides of the border in subsequent discussions of this vitally important matter. Message ends.

CONTINENTAL DEFENCE

Reference: Your EX-1613 of September 28, 1953.

Following for the Minister, Begins: Thank you for your very helpful message. I was also anxious about the possible impact upon Canada of the President's speech projected under "Operation Candor" for October 4 and asked Ignatieff to discuss the possibility of advancing the timing of the proposed senior officials meeting with Arneson. Arneson showed Ignatieff in confidence a memorandum from the White House dated September 28 cancelling "Operation Candor", as a "series of connected and integrated weekly talks". The memorandum said that the President "may" deliver a single speech on the subject, but that no final decision had been taken on such a speech or the "what, when or whether" of it. Arneson explained that, while the idea of the President himself speaking had not been dropped, the main purpose of any address would be to give the public a sober appraisal of the threat resulting from recent developments in Soviet atomic capabilities so as to allay exaggerated anxieties that the Alsops and other columnists have been playing on in recent articles.

2. In fact, the White House memorandum sarcastically apologized for using the old-fashioned and regular channel of an interdepartmental memorandum instead of the Alsop column. Arneson said that government officials had been annoyed by the assumption by the Alsops and a few others of the self-appointed role of Jeremiah on the subject of the nation's defence against air attack. He was unaware of any official support for this press campaign. He thought that some encouragement might have been given to the Alsops from private individuals and organizations interested in developing support for voluntary civil defence and from some scientists connected with the East River project and similar studies.

3. As to the timing of the projected meeting of consultation, Arneson recognized the desirability of arranging this as soon as possible. The delay in arranging the meeting is apparently not only connected with Mathews' return, but also with the preparation of the information which would be passed to the Canadian representatives at this meeting. It is also necessary to obtain authorization at the highest level for the passing of certain information connected with Soviet atomic capability. He hoped, however, to be able to tell us some time this week when arrangements could be made for the meeting.

4. The information contained in the White House memorandum about "Operation Candor", I suppose, makes some difference to our own views on timing. I agree that we should try to have the meeting as soon as possible. The question of procedure seems to boil down to this: should we wait until the officials here feel that they are ready for consultations with us, or should we make a high-level approach requesting information about United States plans on continental defence? I believe that the former procedure would yield better results, provided, as you say, that, meantime, we keep in close and continuous touch with the United States Government at every possible level.

5. Arneson also threw a little more light on the results of the discussion on continental defence at last week's Security Council meeting. He said that the government had not made any decisions and that, before doing so, would have to await the result of the analysis of the possible cost of alternative methods of strengthening continental defence as well as the budgetary implications of such proposals. This additional information would not be available until December 1. Thus there would be more time than had previously been anticipated for prior consultation with the Canadian Government on those aspects of continental defence that required cooperation with Canada, if they were to be implemented.

6. Incidentally, the columnists, including the Alsops, are now describing the new plans for continental defence which are supposed to be under consideration in Washington in much more moderate terms. Reston, in his article in the New York Times of September 25, said that "continental defence expenditures against the possibility of airborne and submarineborne atomic attack will be increased — probably by considerably less than $1 billion of new money — but all dramatic continental defence plans will be postponed or rejected". Alsop, in his column on September 28, said that "since the final decisions have not been taken, it is too early to say what manner of animal all this laboring of mountains may produce. But it begins to seem that the end result may be a mouse — a rather large mouse, but a mouse all the same". He added, "at least for the first year, the cost of the radar installations alone should be no more than a fraction of a billion dollars". Ends.

Déclaration du président du Conseil de recherches pour la défense

Statement by Chairman, Defence Research Board

What has been referred to in the press as "The McGill Fence" is an early warning device that has been under intensive development during the last eighteen months. Details of the device are naturally secret. However, it can be said that it is not a substitute for a chain of radar stations but is intended to supplement such a chain.

Development of the device has been directed by the Defence Research Board. Professor G.A. Woonton, Chairman of DRB Electronic Advisory Committee, Dr. J.S. Foster, former Chairman of DRB Electronic Research Panel, Dr. W.B. Lewis of Chalk River, Dr. G.S. Field, Chief of Division A, and Mr. L.G. Eon, a senior scientific officer of DRB, are those that have been principally concerned with the work. The first stages of the search for a cheaper and more effective early warning device involved three laboratories: the Radio Physics Laboratory of the Defence Research Board under Mr. J.W. Scott, the Radio and Electrical Engineering Division of the National Research Council under Mr. B.G. Ballard, assisted by Dr. D.W. McKinley, and the Eaton Electronics Research Laboratory at McGill University which is under the direction of Professor G.A. Woonton. Later the work was centralized at the Eaton Electronics Laboratory with financial support from the Defence Research Board and under the direction of Professor Woonton and Mr. Whitehead. The actual experimental equipment that is now being tested was manufactured by RCA Victor Company of Montreal under the direction of the Eaton Laboratory. The unusual speed with which the development has been carried through has been largely due to the initiative of Mr. Eon and a remarkable cooperation of all the agencies concerned.

A number of these stations have been installed experimentally to determine their operational capabilities. Trials have been going along all summer and have shown that this equipment can be used to provide a warning system that can be installed at comparatively low expense in terms of money, materials and manpower. All the equipment can be manufactured in Canada.

United States authorities have been in on this from the beginning and have shown great interest in the results achieved.

Both development work and further trials are still proceeding.

It should be emphasized again that even if this equipment proves to be as effective as would appear likely, it is not a substitute for a radar chain but would provide an additional device for obtaining early warning of the approach of aircraft. The indications are that this is likely to constitute a considerable advance in our capacity for protection against air attack.

Extract from Journal of Permanent Joint Board on Defence

SECRET Rivers, Manitoba, September 28-October 1, 1953

The Canadian Chairman . . . explained that he wished to make a statement which would bring out clearly the policy of the Canadian Government with regard to Canada-United States military planning. This statement is recorded as follows:—

"I should like to refer to the discussion recorded under Item 16 of the Board's Journal of the April, 1953, meeting. At that time the US Chairman drew attention to the difficulties being experienced by the Military Cooperation Committee in producing the Future Defence Analysis required for the Canada-US Basic Security Plan. As I understood his remarks, he attributed the difficulties almost entirely to the Canadian planners' lack of authority to develop requirements. He then summed up the United States position in the following words:

"To produce a productive program for the future defence of Canada and the United States, the military planners must be given the authority to develop plans which are produced in accordance with sound military planning principles. It is recognized that the fulfillment of requirements in any plans so drawn would, of course, be subject to review by the respective Chiefs of Staff and further review on the basis of political and economic considerations prior to their approval by the United States and Canada at the governmental level. Such reviews should be conducted at levels above the MCC, and the military plans in that Committee should not be circumscribed by those factors."

Because of the importance of the representations made by the US Chairman, I should like to define the Canadian position in some detail, as follows:

(a) The only defence "requirements" the Canadian Government recognizes are those incorporated in the current defence program of the Government, as approved by Parliament. If the Canadian Government did not incorporate within its defence program anything which it considered to be a defence requirement, it would not be fulfilling its duty to the Canadian people. It follows, therefore, that a subordinate official of the Government cannot be permitted, in joint discussions with representatives of another country, to assert that he considers a "requirement" exists for something which has not been approved by the Canadian Government.

(b) The Canadian Government regards it as unrealistic for the armed forces to describe as "requirements" (or any equivalent term) what the military planners put down as estimates of the forces they consider necessary to meet the probable enemy threat. Not infrequently, when such "requirements" are the joint efforts of more than one country, the next step is to measure these "requirements" against the forces actually available, thus creating a "deficiency". All this, of course, leads to misunderstanding and even recrimination, particularly because all too frequently the "requirements" become known to the public.

(c) While the above-stated considerations, from the point of view of the Canadian Government, make undesirable the development of future defence requirements plans as such, it recognizes that an essential element of Canada-US defence cooperation is the joint preparation by the military planners of the two countries of estimates of the forces and equipment which, in their opinion, it would be desirable to have for the defence of North America, and the defence benefits which could be expected to accrue if such forces were available. These estimates should be based upon consideration of all relevant factors so that they represent realistic measures.

In summary, the Canadian Government recognizes the desirability of, and is agreeable to, the joint preparation by the military planners of the two countries of realistic estimates of the forces which, in their opinion, it would be desirable to have for the defence of North America. Such estimates are not to be confused with, or construed as, "requirements plans". In order to ensure that the Canadian position is not lost sight of, every document containing estimates should be headed by a preamble worded along the following lines:

"These estimates constitute a military opinion only of the desirable future strength of armed forces and equipment, and in no sense are to be construed as commitments by either country."

The United States Chairman expressed satisfaction with the statement of the Canadian Chairman, and said that in his view the statement met in full the needs of the situation as outlined in the April 1953 memorandum of the US Chairman. He said further that he was confident that it would now be possible for the Military Cooperation Committee and other joint planning bodies to proceed in their important work.

Extract from Memorandum from Department of External Affairs to Cabinet

CONTINENTAL RADAR DEFENCE

The object of this paper is to summarize our relations with the United States in this field, in order to provide a basis for discussion of likely developments in the near future.

Presently Authorized US Radar Installations in Canada

2. The biggest project is usually known as PINETREE. This is a joint Canada-United States chain of 33 big radar stations in Labrador and southern Canada (from coast to coast), which was recommended by the Permanent Joint Board on Defence and approved by Cabinet in February, 1951. The chain will be fully operational by July, 1954. Its original cost is about $350 million, of which Canada is bearing one-third. Canada will man 16 of the 33 stations. The stations are big ones and the United States personnel at the 17 stations to be manned by them will total about 2700. The arrangement between the two countries is contained in an Exchange of Notes of August 1, 1951, which has been made public.

3. After the Pinetree chain of 33 stations had been authorized, the United States came up with a proposal for nine additional "gap-filling" temporary radar stations in British Columbia and Ontario. The United States has not yet formally requested permission to build these stations, but is carrying out surveys, which were authorized by Cabinet Defence Committee in February, 1953. Defence Committee said at the same time that the prospective United States request to build these stations will be granted. It is understood that these 9 stations will be paid for and manned by the United States. The United States may ask for leave to put one of the nine stations in Nova Scotia. The 9 stations will fill gaps in the Pinetree chain.

4. In January, 1953, the United States presented an urgent request for permission to build two experimental radar stations (later changed to one) in the Canadian Arctic near Herschel Island. The experiment, first known as Project COUNTERCHANGE and now as Project CORRODE, is designed to demonstrate the feasibility and value, or otherwise, of an early warning system of radar stations in the Arctic. The Canadian Government agreed to permit the United States Government to build this experimental station at United States expense, but made it a condition that the two Governments should establish a Joint Military Study Group, to study those aspects of the North American Air Defence System in general, and the early warning system in particular, which are of mutual concern to the two countries. The Canadian Government's purpose in making a condition was, in part, to ensure that the United States Government would not in future confront the Canadian Government with plans for radar construction in Canada which had not first been studied by a joint Canada-United States body. In order to emphasize this objective, the State Department was told, when it was given in February, 1953, the note authorizing Counterchange, that the Canadian Government would not be prepared to consider proposals for an Arctic early warning chain until it had had time to consider the report of the Military Study Group. The head of the Canadian Section of the Military Study Group (MSG) is AVM Miller, Vice Chief of the Air Staff. The MSG is advised by a combined Canada-United States Scientific Team. Although the MSG has done a great deal of work, it is understood that it will be at least 3 or 4 months before its two sections make final reports to the respective governments.

Development of United States Thinking

5. In April, 1952, the President of the United States established a "Panel of Consultants on Armaments" to advise him and the departments concerned with the work of the United Nations Disarmament Commission.

6. The Panel submitted its report in January, 1953, to Mr. Acheson, who made it available for the incoming administration. The report advanced the following theses:

(a) The value of the United States stockpile of atomic weapons is a wasting asset, since before long the point will be reached when the Soviet Union will have produced enough atomic weapons to use against the US in a surprise attack on a scale which would cancel out the advantage the United States now enjoys because of its lead in the production of atomic weapons.

(b) If the American people are to be made aware of the dangerous situation which confronts them, they must be told frankly of the characteristics and probable effects of atomic weapons, and "roughly" the number of bombs available.

(c) The situation is rapidly developing when the ability to deliver atomic weapons and the defence of the United States against them will become relatively more important then supremacy in the atomic munition field itself.

These views were subsequently given general circulation in speeches and articles.

7. Coincidentally, while the "Panel of Consultants" was at work during 1952, the US Air Force set up at the Lincoln Laboratories of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, a "Summer Study Group", composed mainly of university scientists, to take a "new look" at the problem of air defence. The Study Group started out with essentially the same assumptions as were subsequently to be put forward by the Panel of Consultants, and with this as a background of justification, proceeded to develop on paper an extremely ambitious air defence system which would completely cover the northern approaches to the United States.

8. The completion of these two reports in the dying days of the Truman Administration provided an ideal weapon for Civil Defence officials who succeeded in getting the Lincoln Report directly to the National Security Council (the highest defence body) by a "big end run" around the United States Air Force and the Joint Chiefs of Staff. Out of this incident arose "Project Corrode" (at that time known as "Counterchange"), which the United States Government put up to Canada on the basis of the Lincoln report.

9. In March, 1953, the fact that "the scientists" were concerned about the inadequate defences of North America, but had an answer to the problem, at a price, first reached the press in a series of five newspaper articles by the Alsop brothers, and in a feature article in the Saturday Evening Post by Stewart Alsop and a scientist named Ralph Lapp. Our Embassy in Washington discussed these articles at the time with the State Department and reported they had not been inspired from official sources but appeared to have been a private enterprise of the Alsops, undoubtedly aided by leaks of classified information.

10. Since March there has been a steady stream of articles in the United States press on the need for improved defences. Most of them have purported to describe arguments going on within the United States Government as to which is the more important, a balanced budget or increased defence forces for North America. Obviously these stories have been fed by leaks of information from official sources. The interesting question is whether they result from a sly campaign on the part of the Government to condition the public to the idea that taxes cannot be cut, or whether, as is more probable, there has been a real difference of opinion within the Government, and the protagonists have been following the good old American tradition of using the press to help quell the opposition.

11. The article of greatest general interest was that by General Bradley (retired Chairman, Joint Chiefs of Staff) in the August 29 issue of the Saturday Evening Post. He stressed the fact that Canadian agreement and participation in any scheme to improve the air defence system was essential, and proposed the establishment of a Continental Defence Command involving the armed forces of two countries. Finally, he suggested that the matter should be considered by the President and the Prime Minister as soon as possible.

12. During 1953 a series of important committees have worked on the problem of air defence, at the behest of the President, the National Security Council, and others. These are, of course, purely United States Committees. We learnt recently that the reports of all these committees had been brought together in some comprehensive recommendations by the Joint Planning Board of the National Security Council, had been approved by the Chiefs of Staff, and were to be considered by the National Security Council. The Canadian Embassy in Washington reported on September 21 that it had been told in strict confidence by an officer of the State Department something of the contents of this report.

13. The National Security Council met on September 24 and the Embassy learned, from the same sources, that no decision had been taken . . .

What will the United States Government ask of Canada?

14. It will be clear from the foregoing that we can only guess at the answer to this question. It is fairly clear that the United States will wish to have more radar defence in Canada, but the order of magnitude is still pretty uncertain.

Some Problems for Canada

15. If United States Government policy develops as forecast in this paper, it will, of course, create many serious problems for Canada. The Canadian Government may or may not be convinced, when United States projects are proposed, that they are reasonably necessary when weighed against global strategic factors and political obligations overseas, as well as against the possibility of air attack taking new forms in the next decade. However, it may be very difficult indeed for the Canadian Government to reject any major defence proposal which the United States Government presents with conviction as essential for the security of North America.

16. If new United States defence projects in Canada, and in particular new radar defence, should become inevitable, the Canadian Government will be faced by the question whether Canada should share in the cost and operation of the new projects or whether the United States should be allowed to develop and operate them exclusively with United States money and men. If Canada is to share in these projects, how will that affect the level of future defence expenditures and, in particular, Canada's continuing share of NATO defence in Europe?

17. It is not the purpose of this paper to try to answer, or even discuss, the questions in the preceding paragraph. It does seem, however, that the time has come to start thinking very seriously about them.

The Immediate Prospects

18. Despite press stories to the contrary, there is now a good chance that the National Security Council will not take any decisions for a few months. The Canadian Embassy has impressed upon the State Department the serious objection there would be from Canada if the United States Government were to settle its policy, in matters vitally involving Canada, without full prior consultation with the Canadian Government. In particular, it would be wrong if the United States Government were to decide on new radar projects in Canada before the Military Study Group has made its report.

19. In the meantime, it is likely that an exploratory meeting will shortly be arranged in Washington between the Canadian Ambassador, General Foulkes and an External Affairs officer from Ottawa, on the one hand, and appropriate members of the State Department and Defence Department on the other. This meeting will provide an opportunity for the Canadian representatives to obtain more information and also to caution the United States representatives against the dangers of premature unilateral United States decision and, what would be even worse, premature public announcement of United States Government desires.

I. Continental Defence Developments

1. The Secretary of State for External Affairs reviewed relations with the United States in the field of continental radar defence from 1951 to the present. He referred in particular to the increased interest in continental defence which had been expressed in the United States both by journalists and officials within recent months. Canadian representatives in Washington had constantly emphasized the vital interests of Canada in consideration of continental defence and the necessity of prior consultation with the Canadian government. It was expected that within a few days there would be discussions in Washington at which the Canadian Ambassador, the Chairman of the Chiefs of Staff, and an External Affairs officer would meet members of the State Department and Defense Department to obtain more information and to emphasize Canadian interests.

An explanatory memorandum was circulated.

(Minister's memorandum, October 3, 1953, "Continental Radar Defence" — Document D43-53)

2. The Minister of National Defence referred to an article in the October 16 issue of Collier's entitled "Russian Planes Are Raiding Canadian Skies". An inaccurate impression had been given of the number of unidentified aircraft detected over northern Canada. It seemed desirable to consider whether any denial should be made of the statement that Russian planes flew daily over Canadian territory.

3. In the course of discussion on publicity about unidentified aircraft over Canada, the following points emerged:

(a) The reluctance of officials to comment might lead the public to put undue credence in the story.

(b) Exaggerated accounts of Soviet flights over Canada might give support to irresponsible elements advocating ill-considered large-scale projects.

(c) A denial of daily flights would invite questions on the number of interceptions which had been made.

(d) Any information on the number of Soviet planes sighted would be useful to Soviet intelligence.

(e) It was hoped shortly to learn what information had been given out by USAF officers on this subject.

4. The Vice Chief of the Air Staff gave a briefing on the work of the Military Study Group which was considering the best forms of radar defence in North America.

5. The Chairman, Defence Research Board presented an oral report on the development of the "McGill Fence", which showed high promise of making an important contribution to radar defence.

6. In the course of discussion on radar defence plans, the following points emerged:

(a) The United States should be constantly made aware of Canadian concern in every phase of continental defence plans.

(b) Until the work of the Military Study Group had been completed, Canada was not in a position to comment on possible US plans for radar defence.

(c) There was much concern in some NATO countries that the aroused interest of the United States in continental defence might lead to some slackening of interest in Western Europe and consequently might strike a serious blow at NATO.

(d) The increased interest of the United States in continental defence would raise new political problems for Canada: for instance, the emphasis on fighter aircraft would probably lead to demands for additional airfield facilities in Canada and for rights to station substantially larger numbers of US servicemen in Canada.

7. The Committee, after further discussion, agreed that:

(a) no statement would be volunteered on the incidence of Soviet flights over Canadian territory until further information was available from the USAF on the publicity which they had given to this subject;

(b) in due course a statement might be made to the following effect:

Canada has all the information which is available on the rare appearances of unidentified aircraft over North America. This information has not proved alarming, nor has it supported recent statements in the press concerning frequent violations of Canadian territory;

(c) US authorities should continue to be reminded of the vital concern of Canada in all continental defence plans and of the necessity for consultation of Canada at an early stage in the development of the plans.

CONTINENTAL DEFENCE — MEETING OF CONSULTATION IN WASHINGTON

Reference: My WA-2330 of October 14, 1953.†

We were informed today that the meeting, subject to your concurrence, has been fixed for next Thursday, October 22, at 3:00 p.m. in the State Department.

2. The Under-Secretary of State himself has now decided to be Chairman of the meeting. This, I gather, reflects the importance which the United States Government attaches to this consultation with us. The United States side will be represented by the following:

Under-Secretary Walter Bedell Smith,
Admiral Radford, Chairman of the United States Joint Chiefs of Staff,
Deputy Under-Secretary Robert Murphy (Freeman Matthews will probably not attend),

Robert Bowie, Director of the Policy Planning Staff, Assistant Secretary for European Affairs Livingston Merchant, Gordon Arneson, and Hayden Raynor.

3. As indicated in my message under reference, the thoughts of the United States side on the agenda of the meeting are that Robert Bowie should lead off with a presentation of the United States views on their assumptions regarding the development of Soviet policy since Stalin's death. In order that the meeting should not be unnecessarily prolonged and also because of the attendance of Admiral Radford and General Foulkes, it is thought that the detailed analysis of the risks of war, such as was presented by Messrs. Acheson and Nitze at previous meetings of consultation, will be held over for another session. It is thought that this meeting should be more directly focused on a discussion of the risks of attack upon the continental United States and the measures which the United States believes should be taken to meet this threat.

4. After Bowie's presentation it is thought that Admiral Radford might take up the discussion with an appreciation of Soviet atomic capabilities, using as the basis of his presentation document NIE 90 and its revision, (which was cleared for transmission to Ottawa on Tuesday). Admiral Radford would then give an exposition of United States views on the measures which the United States Government thinks should be taken to deal with this threat.

5. It is understood that the discussion should be without commitment to either government. However, we have been told that it is the hope of the United States side that we should at least be prepared to offer opinions on the underlying assumptions regarding Soviet policy since Stalin's death, and on the United States appreciation of Soviet atomic capabilities as contained in document NIE 90 of August 27 and its revision.

6. This desire on the United States side that we should express some opinions (even though they may not be strictly official) on the under-lying assumptions regarding Soviet policy and offensive capabilities seems to me a reasonable request, considering the expected attendance at this meeting on the United States side. The nature of the subjects to be discussed might affect the composition of the Canadian group. For instance, if there is to be a discussion on Soviet offensive capabilities, taking into account developments in the Soviet Union in the atomic field, it might be desirable to have Dr. Solandt come down for the meeting as well as General Foulkes and Mr. MacKay.

7. There is to be, of course, no publicity at all about this meeting and the United States authorities are taking steps to do everything possible to keep the meeting secret. As precautions to this end, we shall probably be asked not to arrive in a group and some of the senior officials on both sides who are attending may be asked to use the private entrance which gives access to the Under-Secretary's Office, where the meeting probably will be held.

TOP SECRET Ottawa, October 19, 1953

Dear Mr. Wilson:

I greatly appreciate your telephoning me today and the spirit of friendly co-operation which prompted you.

As you can imagine, we have been greatly disturbed over this spate of writing, particularly on continental defence, some of it speculative and other of it not so speculative but sometimes based on specific and detailed information.

One of these pieces was by Marquis Childs. It appeared in a number of American newspapers on September 12. It carried the first reference to the McGill Fence and, because it bore an Ottawa dateline, I was very disturbed that this leak might have occurred here.

We had a very thorough investigation and from this it appears as if Mr. Childs had full information about this project before arriving in Ottawa.

This sparked off a whole series of highly coloured articles in Canadian papers and it was followed by the piece in Collier's for October 16.

Throughout this period the press kept pressing service officers at every level, as well as the public relations officers and myself and staff, for statements. We decided to say just as little as possible in the hope that the heat would go out of all this.

However, after a good deal of consideration, I authorized Dr. Solandt, Chairman of the Defence Research Board, to make a statement about the McGill Fence and I enclose a copy of the statement he gave.† This was designed to cool things off and I must say that it was very effective indeed.

The Ulman article was very disturbing, not only because of the detailed information it contained, but even more because of the authoritative air it bore because of his sources.

I gave instructions that no references whatever were to be made to this and, as far as I know, when our people were asked for comment they refused on the score that this was an American article and that any comment should come from the United States.

However, the article did refer expressly to talks Mr. Ulman said he had with Canadian top ranking officers and scientists. This caused some comment and I decided last Friday in opening a new laboratory of the Defence Research Board to refer to it, which I did in the speech of which I enclose a copy.† You will notice the passage marked at page 5.

The only other feature of the Ulman article which was of particular interest to Canada was the sub-title, "Russian Planes are Raiding Canadian Skies". The passage on which this was based appears in the first column on page 33, "Almost every day, at least one unidentified airplane violates our continental borders. 'They come in at all times and places,' a general in the Alaskan Air Command had told me, 'and some have even penetrated deep into north central Canada'". I asked the Chief of our Air Staff to check with General Twining to make sure, as we would expect, no such statement had ever been made. General Twining confirmed this.

At a meeting of the Cabinet Defence Committee (corresponding roughly to your National Security Council) we considered for some time whether or not a statement should be made setting this right. However, I was against it at the time and that view prevailed.

Unquestionably I shall have to say quite a lot about all this when our House meets on November 12. My present intention is between now and then to make all the references I feel I need but in a way to attract as little attention as possible so that when the House meets I can say that I have already dealt with this and that I said so and so, trying to treat it all as rather stale stuff. To what degree this will succeed depends on what appears in the press between now and then.

The last week I was a good deal bothered by an article by Hal Burton which the Saturday Evening Post referred to our Director of Public Relations asking for clearance. The article was brought by the Director of Public Relations to me and I got the views of both External Affairs and the Chairman of the Chief of Staff Committee.

We all agreed that while the article contained no specific breach of Canadian security, the article itself was thoroughly objectionable in that it gave precisely the kind of information that we would like to have about the Russians as to the state of training and ability to carry on Arctic warfare.

The Saturday Evening Post is generally a friendly and responsible journal and naturally one would avoid doing anything which would be likely to be resented.

On the other hand, we felt strongly that it would not be correct to give security clearance without qualification.

In any event, we felt that we should go so far as to say that the clearance must not be taken as approval. Otherwise, publication of the fact of clearance without qualification would be assumed by the reader to be tantamount to approval.

We then considered if we should not go further and state that publication of the article would give the Russians information they would like to have or that we would like to have about them.

I enclose a copy of the letter which the Director of Public Relations of the Department proposes to send to the Saturday Evening Post.† You will see that in this form it contains both qualifications.

However, I am in some doubt about this unless your people took the same line. If both US authorities and Canadian authorities did take the same line it would have some effect. If we did and you did not, it would only cause resentment against us and would not have any other effect.

I would be very glad indeed if you could send me by telegram your view on this, as we are being pressed by Saturday Evening Post to send an answer and we would naturally like to accommodate them just as soon as possible.

I should add that it was a condition of Burton's going to Churchill that anything he wrote would be subject to clearance.

Reverting to the general subject, it is unquestionably one of the most difficult with which we have had to deal during the cold war. The chances are that the information made available to the Russians has been so extensive as to mystify their intelligence in evaluating its authenticity.

Our experience has shown that by and large it is not possible to exercise effective control over the form of an article for an important publication even though the information it contains has been made available subject to the express condition that the article must be cleared for security. Agreement that clearance will be sought will usually ensure that there is no specific breach of security; nothing can ensure that an article which is thoroughly objectionable on general grounds will not result from making the classified information available or from allowing the place to be visited.

It has seemed to us here that the right course to follow is not to give information which has been properly classed as Top Secret or Secret to people other than those who properly need it in the course of their work for our defence. (One thing which leads to breaches of security is that much too many matters are labelled "Top Secret" or "Secret". That is part of the problem.)

Another thing which helps is to have personnel from top to bottom thoroughly informed as to what we are doing and what has been told and what can be told about it and how they are to deal with the press and others. Here, the fact that our governmental system is so different from yours makes our position a bit easier. Here, it is well recognized that no one can, should or does make a statement on policy or describing an important development except the Minister himself. Generally speaking, our Generals do not make speeches and never give evidence before Parliamentary committees. Here, matters of policy are expressly excluded from reference to the only committee dealing with defence matters. The job of the committee is to go into defence expenditure and nothing else. No piece of classified information has ever been given to the committee.

I do hope that if you have any views in this connection you will let me have them quite frankly. As I pointed out to the Permanent Joint Board at a luncheon I gave them here on October 2 (we already had the Collier's article then) this was a matter of the gravest concern to all of us. We must not have censorship but we should have responsibility if our great progress in defence is to remain our progress and not that of the Russians as well.

We look forward to the President's visit in November. As I told you last February, we are most anxious that you should come here whenever you find it convenient to do so. Perhaps this might be arranged early in the new year.

With kindest personal regards,

Yours sincerely,

[BROOKE CLAXTON]

P.S. I find that in addition to the articles mentioned, including that in Fortune, an article on the possibilities of chemical warfare and especially of the G gases is scheduled to appear in Collier's Magazine early in November. I understand that this has been cleared with your Chemical Corps. As far as I know, no one here has seen the text but it is understood that it goes further than any previous revelation on this subject. There have been practically no articles on this subject in Canada. We have not allowed the press access to any establishment connected with chemical warfare and have not given out any information on it except of the most general character.

Le ministre de la Défense nationale au premier ministre

Minister of National Defence to Prime Minister

TOP SECRET Ottawa, October 21, 1953

My dear Prime Minister:

1. As reported from time to time to the Cabinet Defence Committee, continental defence against air attack is being studied by a joint Canadian-American Study Group under the chairmanship of AVM Miller, Vice-Chief of the Air Staff. He has just given me an interim report in which the group recommends the establishment of additional radar defences which would follow a line roughly along the 55th parallel. But while the exact nature of this is not suggested, I understand that it would largely consist of equipment of the type of the McGill Fence, supplemented by equipment of a more discriminating type at places where air travel was heavy or where we needed additional protection for various reasons. The Group recommended a joint Canadian-American survey to determine the general location of the line and later the precise location of stations and work out an estimate of costs.

2. All this is very much more reasonable than the Lincoln Project. Indeed, the report is one with which I think any reasonable person would find it difficult to disagree. I anticipate that US defence authorities will wish to see it implemented at the earliest possible moment without prejudice to other studies being made of further measures, including possibly something like the Lincoln Project.

3. Mr. Howe and I have been giving consideration to this and we feel that [for] several reasons there would be a considerable advantage in our proceeding to build additional projects of the general character of the McGill Fence as an exclusively Canadian project. This would enable us to keep greater control of the production of equipment and the construction of sites. Experience would show that the cost would be so much lower than anything that might be undertaken jointly with the US that our paying for all of it would not involve us in a greater outlay than whatever might be considered as a proper share of a joint operation.

4. Making this suggestion now would moreover give us the initiative and enable us to tell our own people and the Americans that we were quite prepared to do anything we thought necessary in continental defence.

5. I feel quite certain that the Americans will not remain content with a line along the 55th parallel but will ultimately want to go for something like the Lincoln Project or even more.

6. Our taking the initiative with regard to the McGill Fence would put us in a better position to say: "Well, we think we have done what we thought was necessary for continental defence. If you want to go on and do more we are not going to stand in the way" and keep our self-respect without having to put out too great an expenditure of materials, manpower and money.

7. So that you may consider this, I have asked the Chairman of the Chiefs of Staff to prepare a plan with as accurate an estimate of what is involved as can be made with the information we have. We had a meeting last Monday night with the Chief of the Air Staff and the Chairman of the Defence Research Board and they should have something ready next week. I don't know if the information available will enable us to go even so far as an informed guess. It seems to me, however, that it would be useful to have this and give it some consideration before the President's visit.

8. One of the problems involved here is how we can continue to engage in a joint operation with all its advantages and still take the initiative in going right ahead along the lines we want.

Yours sincerely,

[BROOKE CLAXTON]

CONTINENTAL DEFENCE — MEETING OF CONSULTATION IN WASHINGTON[28]

Reference: My WA-2346 of October 15, 1953.

1. The meeting was held as planned in the State Department yesterday. For the United States it was attended by Under-Secretary Bedell Smith (who acted as Chairman), Admiral A.W. Radford, Chairman of the United States Joint Chiefs of Staff, Livingston Merchant, Assistant Secretary for European Affairs, Robert Bowie, Director of Policy Planning, Gordon Arneson and Hayden Raynor. As Canadian representatives, in addition to myself, there were General Foulkes, R.B. Bryce, R.A. MacKay, Admiral De Wolfe, and Ignatieff.

2. The discussion at the meeting took the form outlined in my message under reference. Bowie, after some introductory remarks by the Chairman, led off with a United States estimate of Soviet policy and the risks of war. Admiral Radford gave an appreciation of Soviet atomic capabilities and followed this up with an exposition of United States views on action which the administration thinks should be taken to strengthen continental defence. There was a round-table discussion on an informal basis on the views presented. A full report of the meeting will be sent forward early next week. This teletype is intended as an interpretative summary of the highlights of the meeting.

3. Bowie's analysis of Soviet intentions and his estimate of risks of war were reassuring. The views he presented, we understand, were based upon up-to-date appreciations prepared for the National Security Council. The main point in this appreciation was that, while the Soviet Union, in continuing to follow its ultimately hostile aims, might resort to war if its essential interests were challenged, the United States authorities do not consider that the Soviet Government intends to launch a general war in the near future. The reasons for this assumption included the following:

(a) Uncertainty about the outcome of general war,

(b) Change in Soviet leadership,

(c) United States capabilities of atomic retaliation, and

(d) Unrest among satellites.

Moreover, although Soviet military, political and economic strength are assumed to be increasing (particularly their atomic capability), and although the ultimate objective of the Soviet Union may be world domination, the United States appreciation is that for tactical reasons the Soviet Government may be prepared to establish a détente with the Western powers by negotiation. He entered the caveat, however, that there was at present insufficient evidence that the Soviet Government may be willing to make sufficient concessions to enable a modus vivendi to be arrived at. Another encouraging feature of Bowie's presentation was that, looking forward into the future a decade or more, the United States appreciation does not exclude the possibility of peaceful co-existence on the assumption that revolutionary zeal may diminish in the Soviet Union and that a vested interest in the status quo may develop from popular pressure and the growing managerial class.

4. The United States appreciation of Soviet atomic capabilities given by Admiral Radford was also somewhat reassuring. Based on a recent JIC report to the United States Joint Chiefs of Staff, he said that although the Soviet Union should be assumed to have the potential to deliver its existing stockpile against the United States, the JIC report concluded that no such Soviet attack was thought to be imminent. The following reasons were adduced:

(a) The danger of United States atomic retaliation;

(b) The questionable effectiveness of existing Soviet equipment, particularly reliance on TU4 aircraft capable only of one-way mission;

(c) Basic Soviet cautiousness; and

(d) Greater success might be expected of pursuing Soviet aims by other means.

Thus, Admiral Radford concluded that although the Soviet Union [sic] launch atomic attacks against the United States, such attacks would not be sufficient to destroy United States retaliatory capability and its industrial base, and that the Soviet Union was not thought likely therefore to launch such an attack at least until its atomic potential was further developed.

5. After furnishing this background, Admiral Radford outlined United States views on continental defence. These views were based upon a directive issued by the National Security Council as guidance to the United States Joint Chiefs of Staff and to United States departments concerned with planning for continental defence. These views proceeded from the assumption that "Canadian participation on an adequate scale is essential to any effective continental defence system" and that "this requires a common appreciation of the urgency and character of the threat to United States-Canadian security and the measures required to meet it." In this connection, Admiral Radford said: "We naturally seek to determine the extent to which Canada may wish to take leadership in parts of the system and to contribute to its expense". Among the immediate objectives listed were — the "Southern Canadian" early warning system, the extension to seaward of contiguous radar coverage in selected areas, consideration of methods, of aircraft identification, completion of defence plans, and development of a device for the detection of fissionable material introduced by clandestine means.

6. In connection with "the Southern Canadian early warning system", which is the term employed by Radford, MacKay has sent a separate message to McNaughton, transmitting a letter from General Henry suggesting an early meeting of the PJBD to consider the recommendations of the joint Military Study Group, which have apparently already been approved by the United States Joint Chiefs of Staff.

7. In commenting on these United States views, we stressed the informal nature of the discussion. We found little to quarrel with in Bowie's presentation, which as I say, was admirable and reassuring. We stressed, of course, the importance of not missing any chance of negotiations leading to a possible modus vivendi. In the discussion of Soviet atomic capabilities and the United States contemplated measures, we stressed that it would be more reassuring to our NATO partners if it could be explained that efforts in strengthening the air defences of North America are in line with the NATO concept and are essential for the defence of the war-making potential of the NATO alliance. Bedell Smith and Radford were sympathetic to this view. Likewise, we underlined the various high policy considerations which the Canadian Government has to take into account in considering proposals for increased measures of continental defence, including balance of forces and commitments at home and abroad. We found a cordial and understanding reception for the points we made.

8. There was also ready agreement that hysteria or exaggeration in the public press in the discussion of continental defence problems was harmful and that a joint statement might help to put the issues into proper perspective. Bedell Smith, in concluding the meeting, said that apart from continuing such a series of meetings of consultation for the purpose of discussing risks of war generally, he welcomed this kind of free exchange of views on problems of continental defence and suggested that it might be desirable to hold another meeting shortly. He said he would be ready to meet just as soon as we desired another meeting and threw out the suggestion that there might be a case for another consultation before the President goes to Ottawa preparatory to any statement that might be issued then.

Washington, October 29, 1953

Dear Mr. Claxton:

I have received your letter and was glad to have your thoughts concerning the articles which have been appearing recently in the journals and periodicals, because we have been devoting considerable attention to this problem.

I feel, and from your letter I believe you agree, that for the most part the people who write and publish these magazines and periodicals are well intentioned folks. However, sometimes they appear to have a little difficulty discerning between what might sell a few more magazines and what is in the best national interest.

We have found that certain statements in the Collier's article are complete fabrications and propose to call these to the attention of the writer and the publisher as well as certain other statements that border on serious violations of security. With your permission, we would also like to direct their particular attention to the statement you made on October 16th.

We have reviewed the article which the Saturday Evening Post plans to print, and while we find no grounds for objecting to the article on the basis of security violations, we are requesting the deletion or modification of certain statements which we consider objectionable on general grounds in the overall national interest, per the manuscript copy enclosed.

We are making a concerted effort to develop a program that is mutually satisfactory to our military establishment and the press in that it will afford the media an opportunity to write concerning matters which they think are of interest to their readers but will also give us the prerogative of deleting statements and opinions which in our judgment are objectionable from the overall security point of view. To accomplish this will undoubtedly take a considerable amount of doing and painstaking effort to impress upon the newsmen that we neither are attempting censorship nor arbitrarily controlling their efforts to write the truth as they see it, so long as what they write is reasonably constructive and is not damaging to our relation with our friends and allies and does not violate security restrictions. At the same time we are working closely with our own people to develop a closer coordination of public statements concerning defense policy and important developments.

I am hopeful that through a frank, open-minded interchange of point of view and the maintenance of the type of mutual trust that prevailed between the press and the defense establishment during World War II, we can each perform our tasks and discharge our responsibilities in a manner which is in the best national interest.

Sincerely,

C.E. WILSON

CABINET DEFENCE COMMITTEE; REPORT OF MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

64. The Minister of National Defence reported on developments in recent meetings of the Cabinet Defence Committee:

(h) Discussions had been held with reference to continental defence. From the successful thermo-nuclear explosions in the Soviet Union it was clear that the Soviet Union could manufacture formidable weapons and that they were further ahead in development in this field than had been thought possible. Continental defence loomed large in the calculations of the military planners in the United States. On the other hand, the concern of officials in the United States had been highly exaggerated in the press, and, on the whole, reasonable views prevailed in Washington. The Committee had agreed that an early warning line should be established along the 55th parallel and that Canada should undertake the planning and construction of the line without prejudice to a later decision on the division of costs. It was proposed to use the so-called McGill Fence type of equipment which was much cheaper than the ordinary type of radar station. With the developments in the Soviet Union and the character of the aircraft which might be available it was now thought possible that any attack on the North American Continent might come from seaward directions rather than along the primarily overland routes.

65. The Cabinet noted with approval the report of the Minister of National Defence on matters dealt with at a recent meeting of the Cabinet Defence Committee.

FURTHER MEETING OF CONSULTATION ON CONTINENTAL DEFENCE

We have just been informed by the State Department that Under-Secretary Walter Bedell Smith and General Ridgway agree to the holding of a further meeting next Friday, November 6, at 5:00 p.m. The meeting would be in the Under-Secretary's office. Pending receipt of written instructions from you, we have indicated that the purpose of the meeting is to put forward certain reactions to the discussion on continental defence at the previous meeting held on October 22, with particular reference to what might be done as the next step.

2. We have been told that it is desired to keep the meeting as small as possible. Apart from Bedell Smith, there will only be General Ridgway and one or two State Department officials. General Ridgway has indicated that he will represent the United States Joint Chiefs of Staff in the absence of Admiral Radford, and prefers not to have any other subordinate officers, such as General White.

3. I assume that apart from General Foulkes we need be represented only by myself and Ignatieff.

4. As to the agenda, the United States side want to keep the meeting short and directed to a discussion on continental defence. They assume that there will be no discussion on a statement on defence matters since there have already been informal consultation between Ottawa and Washington on this matter in connection with the preparation of a draft of a possible communiqué to be issued on the occasion of the President's visit to Ottawa. In fact, it is my understanding that the idea of issuing a separate statement on defence at this time has been dropped; it would certainly come as a surprise here and might well be resented.

FURTHER MEETING OF CONSULTATION ON CONTINENTAL DEFENCE

Reference: Your Telegram No. WA-2519 dated November 4, 1953.

Following from the Under-Secretary, Begins: I think that in keeping with the procedure followed at previous Meetings of Consultation, you, as Canadian Ambassador, should present to the Meeting the conclusions of the Canadian Government as reached at the meeting of Cabinet Defence Committee on November 3. The text of the discussions and conclusions is being sent to you in a separate telegram. General Foulkes, who was present at the Cabinet Defence Committee Meeting, will be present to collaborate with you in the presentation.

2. It is suggested that you might make the following points in the course of the discussion:

(a) Because of the importance it attaches to the problem of continental defence, the Canadian Government has acted with the greatest possible speed in order that the measures considered necessary by the two Governments might be instituted as rapidly as possible. The Canadian Government has been able to determine its policy quickly because the requirement has been evolved jointly from the earliest stages through the medium of the Canada-United States Military Study Group.

(b) When informing the meeting of the decision of the Canadian Government that it should take responsibility for construction of the line, without prejudice to any financial arrangements which may, in due course, be made between the two Governments, you might explain that it is the opinion of the Canadian Government that by vesting responsibility for construction in a single authority, the project will be carried through with the greatest possible rapidity and administrative convenience.

(c) You might point out that this Meeting is informal and that it will be necessary subsequently to formalize the arrangements by discussions in the Permanent Joint Board on Defence, and possibly by an exchange of correspondence.

3. In view of the proposal made by General Henry in a letter to General McNaughton dated October 20, that the Permanent Joint Board on Defence should meet at an early date to discuss this matter, I am of the opinion that as a matter of courtesy, General Henry should be informed of what is taking place. My immediately following telegram is a message for General Henry from the Secretary, Canadian Section, PJBD,† which, if you agree, could be delivered to the Secretary, United States Section, PJBD, tomorrow, November 6. Message ends.

CONTINENTAL DEFENCE

Reference: Our Telegram No. EX-1898 of November 5, 1953.

The following is the text of the minute of the meeting of Cabinet Defence Committee held on November 3, 1953, concerning continental defence. This is sent to you with the permission of the Acting Secretary to the Cabinet who requests that its distribution be strictly limited. Begins:

Continental Defence

The Minister of National Defence referred to the work of the Military Study Group on which a progress report had been made at the previous meeting of the Committee. The interim report of the Group, which had now been completed, recommended a new early warning line generally along the 55th parallel between Alaska and Newfoundland. The Canadian and US Chiefs of Staff had approved the report of the Military Study Group and recommended an early warning system providing a minimum of two hours' notice of advancing aircraft. It would first be necessary to make a detailed survey of the early warning line, only on completion of which would it be possible to arrive at a firm estimate of cost.

The Chairman, Chiefs of Staff, reported on talks in Washington between Canadian and US officials. He explained that the recent US emphasis on continental defence was closely related to the successful thermo-nuclear explosions in the Soviet Union. It was now clear that the Soviet Union could manufacture weapons of formidable power and advanced design and would soon be able to provide the means of delivering them. In these circumstances, North America, and particularly the Strategic Area Command bases and atomic energy facilities, became increasingly attractive targets.

An explanatory memorandum had been circulated.

(Minister's memorandum, October 29, 1953, "Continental Air Defence" — Document D45-53)†

In the course of discussion the following points emerged:

(a) The assumption by Canada of the cost of the new early warning line might be justified since it might be difficult to explain large US expenditures of US resources on Canadian soil while Canada was maintaining substantial forces abroad.

(b) It was too early to make any reliable estimate on the cost of the line, and the problems of northern construction would likely make the final charges very high;

nevertheless, the cost of Canadian construction would probably be substantially lower than of US construction.

(c) No decision was necessary at present on the division of costs for a new early warning line; it would be preferable at this stage of negotiations to give no indication to the United States of the likelihood or size of a Canadian contribution to the line.

(d) Canada should assume the leadership in the planning and construction of this line without prejudice to a decision on the division of costs.

(e) It would be desirable to record in the records of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence the views of each country on the need for additional early warning facilities on the 55th parallel line; it was, however, not necessary to await a meeting of the Board to inform the US authorities of the views of the Canadian Government.

The Committee, after further discussion, agreed that:

(a) an early warning line should be established along the 55th parallel of latitude;

(b) The Chiefs of Staff should instruct the Canadian Section of the Study Group to urge the Study Group to complete the selection and specifications for equipment for the early warning line;

(c) The RCAF, in consultation with the USAF, should carry out a detailed survey of the proposed early warning line and the sites along it.

(d) Canada should undertake the planning and construction of the early warning line, without prejudice to a later decision on the division of costs.

(e) the views of the Canadian and US Governments on the need for additional warning facilities in the vicinity of the 55th parallel of latitude should be recorded in the Journal of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence at its next meeting; meanwhile, however, the Chairman of the Chiefs of Staff and officials of the Department of External Affairs might meet in advance with US officials to inform them of Canadian views. Message ends.

FURTHER MEETING OF CONSULTATION ON CONTINENTAL DEFENCE[29]

Reference: Your teletypes Nos. EX-1891 of November 4[30] and EX-1898 of November 5, 1953.

The further meeting of consultation, arranged in accordance with instructions contained in the messages under reference, took place Friday, November 6. The measure of interest in this meeting on the United States side may be judged from the fact that unexpectedly all those who had attended the previous meeting held on October 22 were present, except Admiral Radford who is in Europe and Livingston Merchant who is occupied with Trieste. General Matthew B. Ridgway, Chief of the Army Staff and Acting Chairman of the United States Joint Chiefs of Staff, substituted for Admiral Radford. General Foulkes, Admiral De Wolfe, Ignatieff, McCardle[31] and I attended as Canadian representatives.

2. In opening the discussion on the lines suggested in your EX-1898, I explained that we had suggested a further meeting in order to inform the United States officials at the highest level of certain conclusions reached by the Canadian Government at a meeting of the Cabinet Defence Committee on November 3 concerning continental defence. After outlining these conclusions, I stressed that the speed with which the Government had acted and communicated its views in this manner to the United States indicated the importance we attached to the problem of continental defence. I also said that the Canadian Government had been able to determine its policy quickly because the requirements for the southern early warning line had been evolved jointly through the Canada-United States Military Study Group. I explained that in being willing to assume responsibility for the construction of the line without prejudice to any financial arrangements which might in due course be made between the two governments, it was the opinion of the Canadian Government that the project would be carried through with the maximum speed and convenience by vesting responsibility for construction in a single authority. Finally, I suggested that since this meeting was informal, it would be necessary subsequently to formalize arrangements later by discussion in the PJBD and possibly by an exchange of correspondence.

3. General Foulkes supplemented my presentation with a statement on behalf of the Canadian Chiefs of Staff, explaining the nature of the recommendations which they had made to the government in the light of the United States views on continental defence presented at the meeting of October 22. He stressed that in accordance with the decision of the government it was important that certain measures should be undertaken forthwith, such as the detailed survey of the early warning line and the finalization of the selections and specifications of equipment. To this end there should be consultation between the RCAF and the USAF on the survey of the line and the detailed estimate of the cost. The Joint Study Group should be urged to finalize selection and specification of the equipment. He also suggested that as soon as these details had been cleared up, Canada would undertake the necessary steps as regards equipment so that there would be no delay in establishing the line once construction is completed. He suggested also that the operating agencies from now on should be the RCAF and the USAF, it being understood that the Chiefs of the Air Staff of both countries would report progress through the respective Chiefs of Staff. Finally, General Foulkes suggested that the Canadian authorities would be prepared to go ahead with the immediate steps he had indicated as soon as the proposals had been agreed by the United States Joint Chiefs of Staff; agreement on any joint arrangements could be formalized through the PJBD.

4. The Chairman, General Bedell Smith, commenting on our presentations, remarked that he could not say how gratified he was at the quick action which had been taken by the Canadian Government. He said that what had been proposed seemed completely acceptable and it now seemed to be up to the United States Joint Chiefs of Staff to take prompt action.

5. General Ridgway said while he was personally in complete agreement he was not in a position to commit the United States Joint Chiefs of Staff at the present meeting. However, in his capacity as Acting Chairman he undertook to call a meeting early next week to report what had been said on behalf of the Canadian Government and to approve necessary action.

6. Both Bedell Smith and Ridgway expressed satisfaction on the progress which had been made. Bedell Smith mentioned that the National Security Council was keeping a close watch on the continental defence problem and that he was glad that he would be able to report some progress.

7. As regards further meetings of consultation, Bedell Smith said that it was for the Canadian representatives to call a meeting at any time they wished to have one. He thought that it was not desirable to have meetings at set periods, but he was impressed with the usefulness of the two meetings which had been held.

8. After the discussion on continental defence had been concluded, General Foulkes raised the question of the participation of personnel from the Canadian armed forces in United States exercises involving atomic weapons. He explained that, at present, experience in the Canadian armed forces was extremely limited because they could draw only upon Canadian facilities in view of the restrictions placed upon co-operation between Canada and the United States in the McMahon

Act of 1946. It was becoming difficult to explain why at least a selected group of officers and other ranks from Canada could not take part in United States exercises and thus be in a position to train Canadian forces in order to prepare them for possible joint operations. He realized that it might not be possible to obtain an immediate answer, but he hoped that this matter would be considered urgently by the United States authorities, and particularly the United States Joint Chiefs of Staff.

9. Both Bedell Smith and Ridgway immediately replied that they were most sympathetic to the desirability of having co-operation between Canada and the United States along the lines suggested by General Foulkes. General Bedell Smith said that he hoped that the Canadian authorities would bear with the "ponderous procedure" which had to be followed in the United States. He suggested, however, that if the Chairman of the Canadian Chiefs of Staff were to submit a specific requirement in writing to the Chairman of the United States Joint Chiefs of Staff for training facilities for personnel from the Canadian armed forces in regard to effects of atomic weapons, the United States authorities would go as far as possible under the law to meet this request. He said that this request would come before the special committee set up under the National Security Council to deal with atomic matters consisting of representatives of the USAEC, the State Department, and the Department of Defence. He said that he represented the State Department on this committee and would be glad to make the presentation on behalf of Canada, basing his justification on the special needs of co-operation in defence between Canada and the United States, particularly in continental defence. He suggested that in the first instance, it would be desirable to have the approach from Canada go through the service-to-service channel, to be handled informally. If it were necessary, the arrangements might be formalized later through the diplomatic channel.

10. After the meeting we were told by Arneson in confidence that only on the previous day arrangements had been authorized by the President, after consulting members of the Joint Congressional Committee, to make special arrangements with the British and ourselves to receive information on atomic weapons' effects. We judged that these arrangements developed largely as a result of the talks which Cherwell and Cockroft recently had in Washington. The quasi-legal basis for these arrangements is to be the tripartite modus vivendi of 1948 which envisaged exchange of information on factors concerning "health and safety". The Chairman of the USAEC, Admiral Strauss, is to talk further about these measures with Makins and myself next Tuesday at lunch. Arneson said that he was giving us this information in private to indicate that in submitting a request for co-operation in the field of atomic weapons' effects, we would be "pushing at an open door".

11. As you see, this further meeting proved to be justified and the results were pretty satisfactory from our point of view. The usual record will follow later after it has been compared with the notes taken on the United States side.

CONTINENTAL DEFENCE

11. The Minister of National Defence, referring to discussion at the meeting of November 4th, suggested that it would be an opportune time to provide some information to the public on government policy on continental defence. The President of the United States, in his speech in Ottawa on November 14th, had already made general reference to the urgency of action on agreed measures of defence. It seemed appropriate to outline the action which the government was considering and, to this end, he proposed making a statement, shortly, in the House of Commons.

12. The Cabinet approved the proposal of the Minister of National Defence to make, shortly, a comprehensive statement on continental defence in the House of Commons, in the course of which he would refer, in general terms, to the military studies which had been made and to the intention to strengthen radar defences.[32]

HAINES – FAIRBANKS PIPELINE PROJECT

Immediately following the approval by Cabinet last week of our proposals regarding the Haines-Fairbanks pipeline project, we took up with the US Embassy the question of when the announcement of the project should be made public and when the US Army proposed to call for tenders. The fact that Canadian approval of the arrangements for the project was expected last week was well known both to the Embassy and the State Department since the timetable for the various actions involved had been discussed fully with Mr. Peterson of the State Department and Mr. Morgan of the Embassy in January. To our surprise, the Embassy, after consulting the State Department, reported that the Defense Department had not yet approved the arrangements which had been arrived at in consultation between the State Department and ourselves and that the new administration had issued an order that all large projects outside the continental limits of the United States would have to be reviewed.[34]

2. Since making its first request to the Canadian Government for approval of the project last June, the United States has repeatedly emphasized the urgency with which it regarded the project. The Journal for the June 1952 meeting of the PJBD states as follows:

"The urgent military requirement for an assured supply of POL[35] products for forces in Alaska was emphasized to the Board by the US Army Member. He stated that the US services had accorded an extremely high priority to this project since it was considered that it would be logistically of great value in an emergency and could serve the joint defence interests of Canada and the United States."

3. At a meeting of the Canadian and US officials in Ottawa in August, the representative of the US State Department stated that it was desired to advertise the contract at the earliest possible date. In September 1952, Mr. Wershof again asked for assurances from the US that the project was regarded as urgent. As a consequence, on October 14, 1952, Mr. Frank Pace, Jr., Secretary of the US Army, wrote a letter to the US Secretary of State stressing the urgency with which the project was regarded by the US Army.

4. Because of the difficulties encountered in connection with the negotiations with the BC Government, it was not possible to complete the negotiations with US officials until the end of January 1953. At that time, Mr. Wershof again asked Mr. Peterson of the US State Department whether the US Army still considered the project as urgent and wished to advertise for tenders in advance of the Exchange of Notes. Mr. Peterson stated that this was the case, and as a consequence, the Memorandum which this Department submitted to Cabinet incorporated a provision to this effect.

5. The obscurity of the intentions of the US Government at this point is most embarrassing in view of the pressure which this Department has exercised to get negotiations completed as rapidly as possible. In particular we are faced with the question of whether or not we should now ask the BC Government to pass the Order-in-Council in connection with the right-of-way through that Province. I propose, therefore, that if the US position is not clarified by tomorrow, Mr. MacKay should call in Mr. Bliss and discuss the matter with him.[36]

HAINES PIPELINE

As agreed, I asked Mr. Bliss to come over this afternoon to have a word about the Haines pipeline. I explained to him that we were all ready to go ahead with the note, that British Columbia was waiting to pass the Order-in-Council agreed upon and that a letter to British Columbia had been drafted and was all ready to go requesting them to pass the Order-in-Council but that, in view of the word from the Embassy that the Pentagon was reconsidering the project, we were holding up the letter to British Columbia.

2. I suggested to Mr. Bliss that the Department had gone to considerable length to accommodate the United States, that the project had been put before Cabinet as a matter of urgency and that the Government had had considerable difficulty in getting British Columbia to agree to a satisfactory Order-in-Council. I suggested that he might like to impress upon Washington that this Department felt there was some danger of difficulties arising on this side if further changes were proposed by Washington or if the decision were unduly delayed.

3. Mr. Bliss seemed to agree fully with what I had to say. He said, further, that the Embassy and the State Department were rather "red in the face" over the Pentagon's action and that he would certainly bring it to their attention by telephone this afternoon.

CONFIDENTIAL Ottawa, March 26, 1953

Dear Mr. Wershof:

I am pleased to inform you that the United States Department of the Army has now informed the Department of State that it concurs in the proposed Exchange of Notes concerning the Haines-Fairbanks Pipeline, of whose approval by the Canadian Cabinet the Embassy was orally informed on February 27.

In advising the Department of State of its concurrence, the Department of the Army indicated that in so doing, it assumed that the Department of External Affairs would, as has been orally agreed, formalize in a letter to this Embassy the arrangements regarding customs and excise arrangements set forth in the letter addressed to Assistant Under Secretary MacKay by Mr. David Sim, Deputy Minister of National Revenue, on August 21.

The Embassy is therefore in a position to proceed at the convenience of the Department of External Affairs with the proposed Exchange of Notes.

Very truly yours,

CONFIDENTIAL Ottawa, May 19, 1953

Dear Mr. Morgan:

HAINES-FAIRBANKS PIPELINE PROJECT

I refer to your letter of March 26, 1953, in which you stated that the United States Embassy was in a position to proceed at the convenience of the Department of External Affairs with the proposed Exchange of Notes on the Haines-Fairbanks Pipeline Project.

2. The British Columbia Government, on May 2, 1953, passed Order-in-Council No. 1071 covering the transfer to the Government of Canada of the administration, control, and benefit of the land required in British Columbia for the right-of-way for the pipeline. On May 13, 1953, the Governor General in Council approved Order-in-Council No. PC 1953-763 accepting on behalf of Her Majesty in right of Canada the administration, control, and benefit of lands required in British Columbia for the right-of-way.

3. This Department has requested the Department of National Revenue to obtain an Order-in-Council in connection with the customs and excise arrangements set forth in the letter from the Deputy Minister of National Revenue to Mr. MacKay of this Department and dated August 21, 1952. As soon as this Order-in-Council has been obtained, this Department will confirm in a letter to you the arrangements regarding customs and excise as outlined in the above-mentioned letter of August 21, 1952.

4. It seems to me that we are now sufficiently close to the time when the Exchange of Notes might take place that it would be worth while for each of us to set up our notes, without actually dating them, in order that we might give each other an opportunity to check the texts, thus making it possible for all three notes to carry the same date.

5. The Department of Resources and Development has asked this Department to ascertain the intentions of the United States Army regarding advertising for tenders and starting actual work on the project, since the answers to these questions will determine the date of the appointment of the Special Commissioner for the project. We should also be interested to know of your views regarding the time of issue of the press release. Do you propose that it should be done immediately subsequent to the Exchange of Notes, or are you for any reason likely to wish that it be delayed for a further period, and, if so, for how long?

Yours sincerely,

M.H. WERSHOF

NOTE NO. 288 Ottawa, June 30, 1953

Excellency:

I have the honor to refer to discussions which have taken place in the Permanent Joint Board on Defense, and subsequently between representatives of our Governments, concerning a proposal for an oil pipeline installation from Haines to Fairbanks, Alaska, passing through northwestern British Columbia and Yukon Territory, to be constructed, owned and operated by the Government of the United States of America in the mutual defense interests of both countries.

Upon instructions from my Government, I propose that the Government of Canada grant permission to the Government of the United States of America to construct, own and operate a pipeline from Haines to Fairbanks, passing through Canada, on the terms and conditions which have been arranged in recent discussions between our Governments, and which are set forth in the annex to this note.

Annexe

Annex

CONFIDENTIAL [Ottawa], June 30, 1953

(In this Annex, unless the context otherwise requires, "Canada" means the Government of Canada, and "United States" means the Government of the United States of America.)

1. Right-of-Way

All land or interest in land required for the right-of-way of the pipeline and appurtenances including any pumping stations (hereinafter referred to as the pipeline unless otherwise specified), and for access roads, will be acquired by and remain in the title of Canada. Any expense incurred in the acquisition of such land shall be assumed by Canada. The United States will be granted without charge an easement for the pipeline for such time and upon such conditions as may be agreed pursuant to paragraph 3 of this agreement. The United States shall have free of charge the use of access roads to the pipeline under such reasonable conditions as shall be mutually agreed upon.

2. Plans

In order to safeguard Canadian interests, the detailed plans, description of the route and access roads, and specifications of the pipeline will require the approval of the appropriate Canadian authorities in advance of construction, and Canadian officials shall have the right of inspection during construction.

3. Tenure

It is mutually agreed that the common defense interests of the two countries will require continuance of the pipeline for a minimum period of twenty years. At the expiration of this period, in the event that either Government wishes to discontinue the arrangement, the question of continuing need will be referred to the Permanent Joint Board on Defense. In considering the question of need, the PJBD will take into account the relationship of the pipeline and related facilities to the defense installations in Alaska. Following consideration by the PJBD as provided above, either Government may terminate the arrangement, in which case that Government shall give due consideration in any subsequent operation of the pipeline to the defense needs of the other country.

4. Title

Ownership of the pipeline and auxiliary installations shall remain with the United States pending any termination of the arrangement pursuant to paragraph 3, at which time the United States may remove the pipeline from the right-of-way, restoring the right-of-way to its original condition as far as it is practicable and reasonable so to do in the opinion of Canada. Such removal of the pipeline and restoration of the right-of-way shall be completed within two years of the effective date of the termination of the arrangement.

5. Use of the Pipeline to Meet Canadian Requirements

The United States will connect the Haines-Fairbanks pipeline to the three-inch Whitehorse-Fairbanks pipeline at a point near Haines Junction. The United States will permit additional connections to be made to both the Haines-Fairbanks and the three-inch pipeline within Canada on reasonable terms and conditions as shall be mutually agreed upon. For the period of operation by the United States of the Haines-Fairbanks pipeline, the United States, if requested by Canada, will continue to operate and maintain the three-inch pipeline between the point of connection referred to above and Whitehorse. In the operation of both the Haines-Fairbanks pipeline, and the three-inch pipeline between the point of connection and Whitehorse, and the storage facilities at Whitehorse the United States undertakes:

(a) to give assurance of equal consideration to Canadian defense requirements with those of the United States;

(b) to make available at the request of Canada, on reasonable terms to be mutually agreed upon, the use of these installations to meet Canadian civil needs as military requirements permit.

6. Understanding regarding Disposition of Title to Rights in Existing Pipelines in Northern British Columbia and Yukon Territory

Nothing in this agreement shall add to, or subtract from, the existing agreements between Canada and the United States regarding the disposition of existing pipelines (see below) except as provided in paragraphs 5 and 7 of this agreement.

Note: Exchange of Notes of June 27 and 29, 1942; Exchange of Notes of August 14 and 15, 1942; Exchange of Notes of June 7, 1944; Exchange of Notes of February 26, 1945; Exchange of Notes of December 21, 1945 and January 3, 1946.

7. Disposition of Four-inch Pipeline from Skagway to Whitehorse

In the event that notice is given by the United States of the termination of operation of the existing four-inch pipeline between Skagway and Whitehorse, the United States will transfer to Canada, if requested by Canada, without compensation, any equity which it may have in that part of the pipeline located in Canada and, to the extent that it lies within the power of the United States, will undertake under such terms and conditions as shall be mutually agreed upon, to make available for use by Canada that part of the four-inch pipeline from the Canadian border to Skagway as well as the terminal and pumping facilities at that port.

8. Construction

(a) Canadian contractors will be extended equal consideration with United States contractors in the awarding of contracts, and Canadian contractors and United States contractors shall have equal consideration in the procurement of materials, equipment and supplies in either Canada or the United States.

(b) Any contractors awarded a contract for construction in Canada will be required to give preference to qualified Canadian labor for such construction in Canada. The rates of pay and working conditions for all labor employed in such construction will be set after consultation with the Canadian Federal Labor Department and will be not less than in accordance with the Canadian Fair Wages and Hours of Labor Act of 1935.

(c) Canadian materials will be used on the Canadian portion of the line as far as feasible.

(d) Canadian law (e.g. tax laws, labor laws, workmen's compensation, unemployment insurance, etc.) will apply.

(e) Subject to the agreement of the appropriate Canadian authorities, the United States may be granted permission to use, without charge, timber, gravel, and other construction material on Federal Crown lands; these materials to be used only for construction in Canada.

(f) The United States will be responsible for the satisfactory disposal of any construction camps and materials abandoned in Canada after completion of the pipeline.

(g) Canada will take the necessary steps to facilitate the admission into the territory of Canada of such United States citizens as may be employed on the construction or maintenance of the pipeline, it being understood that the United States will undertake to repatriate at its expense any such persons if the contractors fail to do so.

9. Maintenance

Qualified Canadian civilian labor will be used as far as feasible for the maintenance by the United States of the section of the Haines-Fairbanks pipeline within Canada.

10. Non-transferability of Rights

Rights granted by Canada under this agreement are granted to the United States and may not be transferred or alienated by the United States to any person or corporation without the express consent of Canada in advance in writing.

11. Supplementary Arrangements and Administrative Agreements

Supplementary arrangements or administrative agreements between authorized agencies of the two Governments may be made from time to time for the purpose of carrying out the intent of this agreement.

12. Telephone and Telegraph Facilities

This agreement contemplates that communications facilities may be erected, operated and maintained at the expense of the United States, located within or reasonably near the right-of-way, under terms and conditions to be mutually agreed, for use solely in the construction and operation of the pipeline.

13. Claims

The United States undertakes to make reasonable provision for the disposition of claims and for the satisfaction of any proper claims arising out of damage or injury to persons or property occurring in the territory of Canada in the course of, or in connection with, the construction, maintenance or operation by the United States of the pipeline or of any of the works herein provided for.

NOTE NO. D-180 Ottawa, June 30, 1953

CONFIDENTIAL

Sir,

I have the honour to acknowledge receipt of your Note No. 288 of June 30, 1953, proposing certain conditions which should govern the installation on Canadian territory of a section of an oil pipeline from Haines to Fairbanks, Alaska, passing through Northwestern British Columbia and the Yukon Territory, to be constructed, owned, and operated by the Government of the United States of America in the mutual defence interest of both countries.

I am pleased to inform you that my Government approves the United States proposal for constructing the pipeline on the terms and conditions annexed to your note, and the granting, for this purpose, of an easement for the pipeline through Canadian territory. To facilitate the carrying out of this proposal, the Government of British Columbia, by Order-in-Council No. 1071 of May 2, 1953 (copy of which is attached†), has made available by transfer to the Government of Canada the administration and control of the land required for the right-of-way of the pipeline through that Province. The Canadian Government, for its part, has approved, by Order-in-Council No. P.C. 1953/763 of May 13, 1953 (a copy of which is attached†), the transfer of administration and control of this land subject to the conditions stipulated by the Government of British Columbia, and at the same time has given the Government of British Columbia an undertaking, in a letter dated May 16, 1953 (a copy of which is attached†), to carry out a subsequent survey to comply with the Land Registry Act of British Columbia.

Accordingly, in agreeing to the conditions proposed in your Note, my Government stipulates that this agreement is governed by the conditions prescribed by the Government of British Columbia in Order-in-Council No. 1071 of May 2, 1953, with respect to the land required for the right-of-way through that Province, and that all obligations incurred by the Government of Canada towards the Government of British Columbia in accepting responsibility for the administration and control of the land in British Columbia shall be fulfilled by the United States Government as the user of the land, with the exception of that set forth in paragraph 7 of the British Columbia Order-in-Council. It is not at present apparent what financial responsibility may be assumed by the Government of Canada in making an exception regarding paragraph 7 of the British Columbia Order-in-Council, but, in the event that liability should be incurred, the Government of Canada would expect sympathetic consideration by the Government of the United States of any representations regarding reimbursement.

I propose that your Note No. 288 of June 30, 1953, this reply, and your note accepting the above stipulations with respect to the section of the pipeline passing through British Columbia, shall be considered by our Governments to constitute an agreement to be known as the "United States-Canada Haines-Fairbanks Pipeline Agreement" stipulating the conditions of the construction, ownership and operation by the United States of the section of the pipeline within Canada.

Accept, etc.

Dear Mr. Bliss,

I have today sent you Note No. [180] regarding the Haines Pipeline project.

In sending this note on behalf of the Canadian Government, I do so on the understanding that the US Government will call for tenders in the near future and that construction in Canada will commence in 1953.

If for any reason, such as a suspension of the appropriation of funds for the project, the United States finds itself unable to commence construction in 1953, the Canadian Government reserves the right to cancel, on two months' notice, the agreement of which Note No. [180] forms a part. In that event, both Governments will of course be free to renew negotiations at any time and to enter into a new agreement on the same or other terms if they so desire.

Yours sincerely,

CONFIDENTIAL

Excellency:

I have the honor to refer to my Note No. 288 of June 30, 1953 and to your Note No. D-180 of June 30, 1953 in reply, concerning the proposal for the construction by the Government of the United States of America of an oil pipeline installation from Haines to Fairbanks, Alaska. I am pleased to inform you that my Government accepts the stipulations stated in your note with respect to the section of the right-of-way for the pipeline passing through British Columbia.

My Government further agrees with your proposal that my Note No. 288 of June 30, 1953, your reply of June 30, 1953, and this note, should be considered by our Governments to constitute an agreement to be known as the "United States-Canada Haines-Fairbanks Pipeline Agreement" covering the conditions of construction, ownership and operation by the United States of the section of the pipeline within Canada.

Note de la 1re Direction de liaison avec la Défense

Memorandum by Defence Liaison (1) Division

Notes on a discussion between Mr. Wershof of DL(1) and Mr. Morgan of the US Embassy on the application of provincial and municipal taxes on the Haines-Fairbanks pipeline and on the status of the Exchange of Notes of August 6 and 9, 1943, regarding exemption from provincial and municipal taxation of US defence projects in Canada (CTS 1943/11)

Mr. Wershof first informed Mr. Morgan that the Special Commissioner for the Haines-Fairbanks pipeline had recently been in Victoria where he had met with representatives of the US Corps of Engineers and officers of the BC Government. It had developed at these meetings that there was a possibility that the BC government might attempt to apply the provisions of its sales tax on material, equipment and supplies to be used in constructing and maintaining the BC section of the Haines-Fairbanks pipeline. Mr. Wershof informed Mr. Morgan that the Special Commissioner had reported this on his return to Ottawa and that officials of the Canadian Government were taking the matter under immediate consideration with a view to proposing to Ministers that representations be made to the BC Government that the sales tax should not apply to this joint defence project. Mr. Wershof then added that, if the US Government wishes to make representations on this point, he could see no objection to it doing so, but that the matter was being pursued in any case.

Mr. Wershof then stated that, by coincidence, a related matter was also currently under discussion between the State Department and the Department of External Affairs. This involved the question of whether the Exchange of Notes of August 6 and 9, 1943, regarding the exemption from provincial and municipal taxation of US defence projects in Canada (CTS 1943/11) was still in effect. He stated that, while in his judgement the Canadian Government would still consider, as it did in 1943, that the US Government itself cannot be effectively taxed by provincial or municipal authorities, the specific undertakings outlined in the 1943 Note were related to wartime defence projects and, since these projects had long since been completed, the Exchange of Notes was no longer in effect. He then went on to say that, while this matter and the question of the provincial taxation of the Haines-Fairbanks pipeline project were closely related, they should be dealt with quite separately. Officials of the Canadian Government would pursue the question of the BC tax irrespective of the progress of discussions with the State Department on the 1943 Exchange of Notes.

Dear Mr. Mayer,

I am glad to be able to inform you that the British Columbia Government has informed the Canadian Government that,

"instructions have been given to the Commissioner of our Social Services Tax Act to exempt from taxation, materials, equipment and supplies which are to be used in connection with the Haines-Fairbanks Pipeline Project, and which are directly, or will as a result of contractual arrangements by that Government, become the property of the United States Government. The Commissioner has been advised that this exemption will remain in force and be applicable to such property in the future as long as it is related strictly to the said pipeline project, and while the project is deemed to be a defence measure".

WEATHER STATION AND RADIO RANGE
AT PADLOPING, BAFFIN ISLAND

Attached for your information is a copy of a letter from the Deputy Minister of Transport, dated March 24, 1953, stating that the Department of Transport will be unable to undertake the operation of Padloping weather and radio station due to a shortage of staff.† Since the situation at Padloping is a very good example of Canadian failure to fulfil its responsibilities in the Arctic, I thought it advisable to give you a brief recapitulation of past history in connection with this station.

2. On January 28, 1947, Cabinet approved the taking over by Canada of weather stations which had been set up during the war by the United States in Northeastern Canada. The transfer was to be made on a progressive basis over a three year period, commencing in 1947. Among the stations listed for transfer in 1949-1950 was Padloping. The Journal of the October 1949 meeting of the PJBD states that unless sufficient Department of Transport personnel were available at an earlier date the combined meteorological and radio range station at Padloping would be taken over in the summer of 1951. This statement was noted specifically by Cabinet Defence Committee at a meeting held on November 23, 1949.

3. On June 16, 1951, the Deputy Minister of Transport wrote to this Department stating that it had been found impossible to recruit sufficient radio operators to man the Padloping Island station, and therefore, the Department of Transport would be unable to assume this commitment at least during 1951 and possibly not in 1952. He asked whether it would be possible to have the United States continue to man the station until the Department of Transport could take it over. Although some dismay was expressed within External Affairs at this situation, the Department of Transport request was passed on to Washington and the United States agreed to continue the operation of Padloping until Canada was in a position to take over.

4. The attached letter from the Deputy Minister of Transport suggests that the decision as to when Canada will take over Padloping is being given a further indefinite hoist. This raises the question of what action, if any, should be taken by this Department. It is suggested as a first step that you might wish to have the matter discussed at the next meeting of the Advisory Committee on Northern Development.[37] For your information, a copy of the letter from the Deputy Minister of Transport has already been referred to the Secretary of the Advisory Committee.

RESUPPLY OF THE JOINT ARCTIC WEATHER STATIONS

1. On January 28, 1947 the Cabinet approved the establishment of nine joint Canada-United States Arctic weather stations — it being understood that Canada would provide the Officer-in-Charge, one half of the staff and permanent facilities; and the United States would bear all other costs, including transport. The Royal Canadian Air Force is responsible, with assistance of the United States Air Force when requested, for air supply; but the United States has, until now provided all sea transport.

2. The Advisory Committee on Northern Development has reported that the only Canadian government establishments which are not supplied by Canadian vessels are the joint arctic weather stations at Resolute, Eureka and Alert. The Department of Transport icebreaker d'Iberville is now in operation, and the RCN icebreaker HMCS LABRADOR is expected to be operational by the spring of 1954. It is considered necessary to employ two icebreakers together with a cargo vessel of approximately 3,000 tons capacity and a small tanker for the supply of these stations. (The joint stations at Mould Bay and Isachsen are supplied entirely by air lift from stores transported by sea to Resolute.) The United States has a large supply commitment each year to Thule in Greenland.

3. The Advisory Committee on Northern Development has recommended that:

(a) Canada undertake with the Department of Transport and the Royal Canadian Navy icebreakers and a chartered supply vessel of approximately 3,000 tons capacity and a tanker, the resupply of Resolute and Eureka in 1954 and subsequent years;

(b) For the time being the United States continue to be responsible for the sea supply of Alert as a projection of its commitment to Thule (see map†); and

[37] Note marginale:/Marginal note:
Yes. W[ilgress]

(c) The Department of Transport be authorised to include an item of $120,000 for the chartering of the cargo vessel and the tanker in the estimates for 1954 and subsequent years.

4. I concur in these recommendations.

PROPOSED US LORAN STATION AT CAPE CHRISTIAN, BAFFIN ISLAND

6. Defence Liaison (1): The US Government has asked for Canada's approval for the construction of a Loran Transmitting Station on Cape Christian, Baffin Island, an area which a joint US-Canadian expedition surveyed for this purpose last year. The proposed station will be one of several on Canada's east coast and is intended especially to aid in the air and sea traffic en route to the US base at Thule. The Canadian Government has given approval in principle. The written agreement confirming the arrangements for the tenure, use and construction plans of the stations has yet to be worked out.

The negotiations have been divided into these two phases in order to give the US authorities the opportunity to take advantage of the short period during the summer when ships are able to reach the site and construction work can be carried on. The US Coast Guard will be able this summer to ship building materials to the site, and make the initial preparations for the station. Since we expect to negotiate mutually satisfactory conditions for the tenure and use of the station during the next few months, the USA should then be able to proceed with the erection of the station in 1954.

ST. LAWRENCE PROJECT; PROPOSALS FOR US PARTICIPATION IN CONSTRUCTION OF SEAWAY

11. The Prime Minister, referring to discussion at the meeting of December 17th, 1952, said that, in his budget message to be delivered to Congress on January 9th, President Truman would include a strong recommendation to Congress for US participation in construction of the St. Lawrence Seaway. Furthermore, the new Republican chairmen of the principal congressional committees concerned with St. Lawrence matters had already announced that they intended to introduce legislation immediately covering a joint seaway or a joint seaway and power project. Senator Taft had also stated that he intended to do everything possible to have the St. Lawrence project approved by Congress early in the present session.

In the circumstances, it was thought that the present arrangements for the power project in the International Rapids Section could be jeopardized if the Canadian government failed to respond to the President's proposal which the US Ambassador to Canada had been instructed to bring officially to the attention of the Prime Minister during the next day or so and to similar proposals announced by congressional leaders of the new Administration.

It had, therefore, been suggested that following the US Ambassador's interview with the Prime Minister, Mr. Woodward might usefully be given a memorandum clearly setting forth the Canadian position in the matter.

A draft memorandum was circulated and read.

(Memorandum, Privy Council Office, Jan. 7th, 1952, Cab. Doc. 6-53)†

12. The Secretary of State for External Affairs suggested that the draft memorandum was possibly a shade too uncompromising in tone and urged that it should not offer any excuse for delay on the granting of a licence by the Federal Power Commission to the New York State Power Authority. This should be avoided at all costs. He suggested certain changes in the wording of the last paragraph including a sentence to be added to the effect that the Canadian Government naturally expected that any discussion on US participation in the construction of the seaway would not be such as to cause undue delay in the construction of the seaway.

Furthermore, although it had been estimated that some $35 million might be saved if the seaway in the International Rapids Section were constructed in US rather than in Canadian territory, it would be advisable to comment more fully on the Canadian position for the benefit of the press and public here in order that Canadians not be left with the impression that the government was lightly abandoning the all-Canadian scheme which had gained strong support throughout the country.

13. Mr. St-Laurent agreed that the Canadian position could profitably be spelled out more fully for the benefit of the public. In this connection, it should be made quite clear that Canada had a perfectly sound scheme which had been approved by the Parliament of Canada and the Legislature of Ontario and that the government was, of course, prepared to carry out that plan as soon as all the preliminary arrangements had been completed and authorizations obtained, but that if before the plan could be undertaken the US wished to submit an alternative plan involving joint participation in the construction of the seaway (which incidentally might involve a saving of some $35 million) the government would naturally be prepared to discuss such a plan with the US authorities provided that such discussion did not cause any serious delay in the construction of either the power project or the seaway.

14. Mr. Pearson noted that the draft memorandum stated that the Canadian government would be prepared to discuss a joint scheme with the US government once an appropriate entity had been fully authorized and was able to construct the US share of the power development in the International Rapids Section. This would seem to imply that Canada did not contemplate entering into any such discussions until after possible court injunctions against the New York Power Authority had been lifted.

15. Mr. St-Laurent was of [the] opinion that Canada should agree to enter into such discussions once the New York Power Authority had been licensed by the Federal Power Commission and designated by the US Administration even though protracted court actions might prevent New York from undertaking actual construction. Canada's willingness to negotiate under such circumstances might possibly be helpful in hastening the removal of any such injunctions against New York.

16. The Cabinet, after further discussion, noted the Prime Minister's report on various proposals which had recently been made in the United States for joint development of the seaway in the International Rapids Section by both countries and agreed that, —

(a) following delivery to Congress on January 9th of President Truman's budget message, in which United States participation in construction of the seaway would again be urged, a memorandum be given to the US Ambassador in the following terms:

"President Truman's observation in his budget message to Congress that there is still an opportunity for the United States to join in building the St. Lawrence Seaway has been noted by the Canadian Government. Various other proposals by members of the Congress for United States participation in the St. Lawrence Seaway have also come to the attention of the Canadian Government.

"While the Canadian Government is of course prepared to discuss, in appropriate circumstances, joint participation in the Seaway, the demand for power in the area to be served by the International Rapids power development is so urgent that the Canadian Government is most reluctant to engage in any discussion which might delay the progress of the plan now under way for the development of power in the International Rapids Section of the St. Lawrence River at the earliest possible moment.

"Once an entity is designated and authorized to proceed with construction of the United States share of the power works, if the US Government wishes to put forward a specific proposal differing from that put forward by the Canadian Government for the construction of the seaway in the international section which proposal would not delay the development of power under arrangements agreed upon in the Exchange of Notes of June 30th, 1952 and approved on October 29th, 1952 by the International Joint Commission, the Canadian Government will be prepared to discuss such a proposal.

"The Canadian Government would naturally expect the discussion to be such as not to cause any serious delay in the completion of the whole seaway."[38]

and

(b) the memorandum to the US Ambassador be made public as soon as the President's budget message was made public together with an appropriate indication of the government's position regarding the all-Canadian seaway and any specific alternative that the US government might wish to suggest for joint development of the seaway in the St. Lawrence River.

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA
ST. LAWRENCE PROJECT

10. Mr. Eberts. Representative Dondero,[39] Chairman of the US House Public Works Committee, and Senator Wiley,[40] Chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee in the present Congress, have now introduced almost identical bills in the House and Senate, which would provide for the establishment of a government-owned corporation in the United States to construct the international portion of the St. Lawrence Seaway between Lake Ontario and the head of Lake St. Francis. A number of other bills have also been introduced, many of which authorize proceeding according to the 1941 Agreement, but it is likely that the bills introduced by Messrs. Dondero and Wiley will be given precedence by the respective committees. Senator Wiley has also obtained the support of sixteen senators including Senator Taft[41] and other Republican leaders who appear as co-sponsors of the proposed legislation. Both bills, if passed by Congress, would carry implicit approval of the present arrangements for developing power in the International Rapids Section by "an appropriate agency in Canada" (the Hydro Electric Power Commission of Ontario) and "the State of New York, or an entity duly designated by it, or other licencee of the Federal Power Commission". Although this proposed legislation would appear to assist in completing the necessary arrangements for the development of power and thus make it possible to proceed with the seaway either jointly, as the bills suggest, or by Canada alone, we are unlikely to take any cognizance of it until, as our memorandum to the United States Ambassador on January 8 indicated, an entity has in fact been authorized to proceed with the United States share of the power works and a specific proposal has been put forward for joint construction of the seaway which would not delay the power works or seriously delay the completion of the whole project.

ST. LAWRENCE PROJECT: CONGRESSIONAL LEGISLATION

Dean Brown of the State Department told Ernest Côté today that the State Department would welcome any comments we had to make on the bill Senator Wiley introduced on January 23, being S.589.

2. One question Dean Brown said we might consider was whether the two St. Lawrence authorities, the Canadian and the American, could within their own powers satisfactorily construct and operate the seaway or whether a new international agreement might be needed before the seaway authorities could collaborate. The present bill S.589 has been drafted with a view to empowering the United States authority in advance to negotiate and conclude arrangements with Canadian seaway authority, obviating the necessity of a treaty and its ratification.

ST. LAWRENCE PROJECT: PROPOSALS IN CONGRESS FOR A JOINT SEAWAY

Reference: WA-92 of January 12.†

1. Mr. Pierce[42] suggested some time ago that the new proposals in Congress for US participation in the seaway should be examined with a view to deciding whether we should make known any response to them,[43] and some thought has been given to this matter here. It is felt that the response to President Truman's reference to US participation in his Budget Message, contained in the memorandum to the [42] Sydney Pierce, ministre, ambassade aux États-Unis, ambassadeur au Brésil à partir d'octobre.

Sydney Pierce, Minister, Embassy in United States; Ambassador in Brazil, (Oct.-).

when & how?

US Ambassador here, dated January 9[44] (EX-37 of January 8†) which also refers to "various other proposals by members of the Congress", is sufficient comment for the present, and I think we should avoid specific comment on features of the relevant bills now before the Congress.

2. It is assumed that the Dondero and Wiley bills are the most likely to engage the attention of the Congress. Any questions on the Canadian attitude to these bills might, for the present, be answered by referring to the position taken in the memorandum mentioned above, i.e., we might comment that, in view of the urgent need for power, arrangements for which are now nearing completion, we would not be prepared to discuss any new proposals until those arrangements are completed but that we would then be prepared to discuss any reasonable proposal for US participation in the waterway which would not delay the power works or unduly delay the completion of the whole project.

3. We are, of course, particularly examining the implications of the Dondero and Wiley bills, the most satisfactory of which is the implied approval of the present arrangements for power (including a reference to New York), which might encourage the Federal Power Commission to proceed with its licencing function. There are, of course, a few points which may cause difficulty, such as the disparity in the cost of the work to be undertaken by each country, as envisaged in these bills. This would be accentuated in the public mind in Canada because of the work we have already done toward building the seaway, such as the construction of the Welland Canal, which is offset much less in the public mind than it is in fact by the work the US has undertaken in the regions of Detroit and Sault Ste. Marie.

4. A more delicate point at the present juncture (before FPC action is complete) is the relevance and status of Canada's commitments (regarding a Canadian waterway) in the Exchange of Notes of June 30, 1952, (a) not to require the power entities to rebuild the 14-foot waterway or pay compensation in lieu thereof, and (b) to contribute $15 million to the cost of dredging in the international section. It is to be hoped that doubt on these points will not enter into the thinking of those concerned with the FPC decision.

A memorandum was sent to the Minister informing him of the conversation which Mr. Pierce had with Danielian[45] earlier this week concerning the proposal of Senator Wiley and Representative Dondero to invite Mr. Chevrier and you to dine with them and other members of their committees informally, in order to have a frank discussion of the whole St. Lawrence problem in the near future. Mr. Chevrier was also informed orally through his Deputy Minister. In a second memorandum, the Minister was informed that you considered that the discussion proposed by Senator Wiley and Representative Dondero might be useful in providing a suitable opportunity to discuss an important issue directly with influential groups in Congress. Both memoranda suggested that the Minister might wish to discuss the proposal with Mr. Chevrier.

2. On the first memorandum Mr. Pearson has commented "I have (i.e. discussed the proposal with Mr. Chevrier) and he shows no enthusiasm for the proposed meeting. I agree with him." On the second memorandum Mr. Pearson has further commented "I think that direct contact, between Mr. Chevrier and Congress on this matter, even informally, might be misunderstood and exploited by Senator Wiley and others. Mr. Chevrier feels pretty strongly about this. Mr. Wrong can give the congressmen our views without a special visit at this time by Mr. Chevrier." . . .

At a meeting of the interdepartmental group yesterday it was decided that we should not make any comments on the bills introduced by Senator Wiley and Representative Dondero on the grounds that anything we might suggest would be open to misinterpretation in several ways.

2. It might, for example, be considered improper for us to suggest changes in legislation before the Congress (we did not solicit and would not have welcomed such advice in respect to our own legislation). More important is the probability that the rejection or acceptance of any or all suggestions that we might make would prejudge the question as to whether or not we would arrange for United States participation in the seaway on the basis of the final form and content of the legislation as passed.

3. It would be advisable to support our position in refusing to comment by reference to the memorandum given to the United States Embassy here on January 9,[46] the text of which is contained in EX-37 of January 8.† This might be an opportune way of bringing that memorandum to the attention of the new administration.

4. It would, of course, be difficult for you to decline to dine with Senator Wiley and his colleagues. It had occurred to the committee that probably the best line to take with Wiley on such an occasion would be to point to the memorandum (which had Cabinet blessing) of January 9 and our dire need for hydro-electric power in Ontario. If and when the FPC designates an agency and a concrete proposal is made to build the seaway without delaying the power project, we would naturally, at that time, be prepared to discuss arrangements for US participation in the seaway.[47]

DESPATCH 370 Washington, February 18, 1953

ST. LAWRENCE PROJECT

I called this afternoon on Mr. Phleger, the new Legal Adviser of the State Department, in order to acquaint him with present Canadian views on the means of developing power and navigation on the St. Lawrence River. I told Mr. Phleger, who comes from San Francisco, that I did not expect him to be very familiar with these matters. I found, however, that he had had a discussion within the last day with Mr. Hickerson who had been asked by Mr. Dulles to pass on to Mr. Phleger the reference to the St. Lawrence which was made by you at the end of your talk with Mr. Dulles here on February 15.

2. I need not repeat the review of the situation, which I gave to Mr. Phleger, beginning with the signature of the Treaty of 1932 and ending with references to the Wiley Bill recently introduced in Congress. My chief purpose was to impress on Mr. Phleger the great urgency which the Canadian Government attached to a start, as soon as possible, on the development of St. Lawrence power. I pointed out that all that was required in the way of action by the United States Government was for the Federal Power Commission to approve the application of the New York State Power Authority and for the President to endorse this decision. As to the navigation the requisite international approval had already been given by the International Joint Commission. The Canadian Government would be in a position to start construction of the Seaway from Montreal to Lake Erie once the arrangements for power had been completed.

3. I then mentioned the Wiley Bill and the readiness of the Canadian Government to look again at the question of US participation in the Seaway but only after the power development had been authorized. I said that we were not prepared to comment on the Wiley Bill itself. I considered that, in addition to action authorizing the power project by the Federal Power Commission, the Wiley Bill or another proposal should have been approved by the Congress or its prospective approval should be manifest before we would wish to reopen discussions on US participation in the Seaway.

4. Mr. Phleger listened intently, asking a number of questions in the course of my review. At the end, he summed up the situation as I had expounded it by saying "Time is of the essence". I remarked that it was very probable that the Prime Minister would be visiting Washington at the invitation of the President early in May, that I was sure the Prime Minister would wish to discuss the St. Lawrence Project with the President, and that I hoped that by that time the Federal Power Commission would have licensed the State of New York to develop the US share of the power and that the prospects of Congressional approval for the Wiley Bill or a similar measure would have become clear.

Dear Mike [Pearson],

Thank you very much for your letter of the 18th instant[48] enclosing a note dealing with that part of your conversation with Mr. Dulles having to do with the St. Lawrence Seaway which I have read with interest.

I am becoming each day more strongly in favour that we should maintain our position that the Seaway should be built entirely on Canadian soil. I should like to even go further and if there is to be more delays, then to give consideration to an immediate start on one of the three canals which will have to be built. If we were to do this, I think the Americans would move quickly on the power application.

Answering your enquiry in the above teletype, I believe the State Department in its report to the President supports the St. Lawrence project generally and the Wiley-Dondero approach specifically.

2. In considering our further action, you might want to consider a proposal Danielian made to us today, which at this stage we pass on to you without comment. It is that the Prime Minister should now write to the President along the lines of the Prime Minister's memorandum to the United States Ambassador of January 8.

3. Danielian reasons that the administration will have to take a position on the project very soon because the hearings on the Wiley Bill begin on the 23rd of this month and the administration will want to give a lead to the departments before the hearings open. Danielian hopes that the bill will be reported out of Senate Foreign Relations Committee by the middle of April. He says the situation in the committee is favourable and general sentiment running more strongly in favour of the seaway than ever. Nonetheless he feels that the issue will be very close, as it was last year, in both House and Senate. He admits that the issue will be decided primarily in terms of the conflicting United States domestic interests in power and seaway. However, if, as he expects, these interests are evenly balanced, he thinks a show of Canadian interest at this time may have an important influence. Hence he urges that the Prime Minister state to the President, as long before 23 March as possible, the Canadian need for power and our interest in the seaway.

4. Danielian tells us his present aim is to push the Wiley Bill through the Senate as quickly as possible. He feels it should be at least out of committee before the FPC makes its decision. He hopes this action would influence the FPC in the right direction because it would give some flavour of congressional approval to the granting of a license by FPC to New York.

We are of two minds about acting on Danielian's suggestion that the Prime Minister should write the President along the lines of his memorandum to the United States Ambassador of January 8. On the one hand we can see some force in the suggestion that the Canadian interest should be kept before the President and, although the State Department no doubt has done this, it might be more useful were it to be done directly as Danielian suggests. On the other hand, the Canadian position has been repeatedly made known to the United States and a new letter at this time might be regarded as an attempt to influence domestic politics. There is also something to be said for the Prime Minister reserving his ammunition for his visit to the President, although there is a possibility that in the case of the St. Lawrence, this might be too late.

2. A meeting of the Interdepartmental Committee on the St. Lawrence is scheduled for to-morrow and the question of a letter from the Prime Minister is likely to be under discussion. We should greatly appreciate your opinion as to the desirability of such a letter, or any other suggestions on tactics.

1. We also are in two minds about adopting Danielian's suggestion for the reasons you mention. It is certainly possible that the President is not fully aware of the urgency which we attach to getting on with the project. He is quoted as informing the press at his conference this morning, first that he has heard no objection to the development of power by New York and Ontario, and secondly that he still believes development of the seaway is bound to come if it is an economic necessity. He answered a further question by saying that no finalized recommendations had been presented to him on the power part of the project and he could not, therefore, say whether the administration would endorse or abandon it at this time.

2. We suggest that you might consider a method of reiterating our interest by the Prime Minister which might be an effective alternative to a letter from him to the President. If the Prime Minister were to make a statement in the House, perhaps in response to a question on the orders of the day on what progress was being achieved, we could request the State Department to bring this statement to the President's notice. I am dubious about the wisdom of resorting to direct communication between Mr. St. Laurent and President Eisenhower, for the first time since the latter's inauguration, on a subject which has been exhaustively discussed between the two governments and about which we have nothing new to say. I think that the channel of Prime Minister to President should be reserved for important matters on which some new initiative is desired. I also think that I could appropriately send Mr. Sherman Adams, under an informal letter, a copy of a statement in the House and ask him if he would be good enough to bring it to the President's attention, in addition to making sure that it was noted by the State Department.

ST. LAWRENCE PROJECT

It has been announced that the US Senate Foreign Relations Committee will begin hearings on the St. Lawrence Development during the week of March 23. Press reports indicate that President Eisenhower has this matter under study now and we are informed that he has asked various agencies of his Government to brief him on it at this time. Several US Government departments are also preparing memoranda on the position they will take when called upon by the Senate Committee in the course of the hearings. The attitude of the new US Administration thus appears to be approaching a crystallization stage, but most of the expressions of views being put before President Eisenhower at this time necessarily relate to the various seaway bills now before Congress, the most important of which have little to do with the power aspect of the project.

In these circumstances, the St. Lawrence Committee considers that Canadian views on this matter, particularly in relation to the urgent need for the power development should be brought directly to the attention of the White House in a forceful manner. Two methods of doing so were discussed. One idea was to have a question asked in the House of Commons which could be replied to by the Prime Minister in a form suitable to bring to the attention of the White House through a letter, say, from Mr. Wrong to Mr. Sherman Adams; this, however, was considered to be somewhat unwieldy and lacking in force. Another suggestion, which the committee on the whole supported, was that the Prime Minister should address a letter to the President, bringing our views to his attention directly.

Action of this sort would undoubtedly be valuable from the domestic political point of view and it may well be of value in the United States. There are, however, two objections: first, it might be construed as suggesting that the President should use the authority of his office improperly (by urging a certain course of action on the Federal Power Commission); and secondly, it might "debase the currency" of this channel of communication.

The attached draft of such a letter has been worked out after discussion with various members of the St. Lawrence Committee.† You may wish to discuss with the Prime Minister and your other colleagues in the Cabinet whether a letter such as this should be sent to the President at this time.

ST. LAWRENCE PROJECT

With reference to the attached memorandum dated March 12 which we submitted to the Minister, he is of the view that we should not "debase the currency" of the channel of communication between the Prime Minister and the President by addressing the note on this subject to President Eisenhower. Mr. Pearson thinks that instead, it should be a note from the Canadian Ambassador to the Secretary of State or, alternatively, from the Secretary of State for External Affairs to the United States Embassy in Ottawa. Mr. Pearson sees another advantage in using the ordinary diplomatic channel, because in this case the note can be published whereas if the communication is one from the Prime Minister to the President it would not be possible to make public the text.

Accordingly, Mr. Pearson thinks the note we had drafted should be revised as one suitable for transmission through the usual diplomatic channel.[50]

Dear Mr. Dulles:

I should like to refer to our conversation in Washington on February 15 when, among other matters, I mentioned to you the St. Lawrence Project.

The completion of the power aspect of this project is becoming increasingly urgent. Hence, I am taking the liberty of putting these views to you again at a time when, I feel certain, the United States Administration will wish to consider all aspects of the St. Lawrence Project.

From the Canadian viewpoint, all other major sources of hydroelectric power available in the area to be served by the power project have already been developed or are in the process of development. Even if construction of the St. Lawrence power project were to begin this spring, the work would barely be completed in time to avert a serious shortage of low-cost power which is already developing and which is expected to become acute by 1957. If the power project is not undertaken soon, this area of Canada will face a serious impairment of its industrial capacity.

You are no doubt aware that in this area are located industrial plants comprising approximately one-half of Canada's total manufacturing capacity. Many critical materials supplying the defence industries of both Canada and the United States are produced there. In the case of nickel, for example, some idea of the importance of this source of power in Canada is indicated by the fact that 90% of the free world's supply of nickel comes from the area served by the southern system of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario.

The development of the power potential of the St. Lawrence River is thus a matter of prime importance and urgency to Canada. If Canadian economic resources are to be adequately developed to meet civilian and defence needs, the Government of Canada must arrange for the construction of this power project without delay. The Government and people of Canada would, of course, very much like to see an immediate start made on the seaway. Indeed, all the necessary legislation has been enacted and all other prerequisite steps have been taken to enable the deep waterway to be constructed either by Canada alone or under mutually agreeable arrangements by both our Governments together. The immediate development of the power works, however, would in no way prejudice whatever arrangements may be mutually agreed upon for the development of the deep waterway.

I hope that this information may be of assistance to you. May I ask that you be good enough to bring this expression of the views of the Canadian Government to the attention of the President?

Yours sincerely,

[L.B. PEARSON]

The interdepartmental committee dealing with the St. Lawrence Project was generally agreed that the letter which Mr. Pearson sent to Mr. Dulles on March 21 should not appear in the testimony which the State Department will be making to the sub-committee on the Wiley Bill. By allowing the recent Pearson-Dulles letter to become part of the State Department testimony so soon, Canada might be said to favour the Wiley Bill. Should the Wiley Bill become law, it might be argued then that Canada was morally obligated to build jointly with the USA because of the sentence in the Pearson letter that Canada was prepared to build the seaway alone or "under mutually agreeable arrangements by both our Governments together".

2. The line you might therefore take orally with Andrew Foster is that the use of Mr. Pearson's letter (which was written after the introduction of the Wiley Bill) in connection with Congress hearings on that Bill, might be misinterpreted as an undue intervention by Canada in the Congressional field. As Foster will appreciate, Mr. Pearson's letter is a restatement of the well-known Canadian attitude to the St. Lawrence Project. There could be no objection, of course, to the Administration using any data concerning Canada's attitude which has already been made public.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY PROJECT

I lunched today with Mr. N.R. Danielian who, as you know, is the Executive Vice-President of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Association.

2. Mr. Danielian had been to Toronto yesterday to invite Premier Frost and Hydro Chairman Robert Saunders to the second annual "Heartland" Conference in Washington, on April 30. Both accepted the invitation. Mr. Danielian had seen Mr. C.D. Howe and pressed him to be the guest speaker at the dinner that night, where Mr. Alben Barkley, former Vice-President of the United States, would preside, and Senator Taft would be present. Mr. Howe did not say whether he would attend but, according to Mr. Danielian, gave an assurance that someone would go. There is a probability that a number of Congressmen may attend and, indeed, as the Conference proposes to discuss Canada-United States problems, it would appear to be an excellent opportunity for some Minister like Mr. Howe to make some forthright declarations if the Government so desires.

3. On the St. Lawrence seaway question, Mr. Danielian told me that he thought if the examiner had completed his report, it would be presented formally to the FCC [FPC] and that most certainly at least one member would enter an objection to the report, whatever the nature of it was. This, of course, would mean that the FCC would have to have a formal hearing of arguments again before it could come to a decision, which would not be before sometime in June. Under these circumstances, it appeared to Mr. Danielian that if the Prime Minister could sufficiently influence the President to get a commitment in favour of the Power Project, there would seemingly be no difficulty in getting then either a Chairman who would be in favour of the Project or replace one of the "opposition" members on the Commission by a favourable one when the former's term of office ends in June.

Following for Mr. Pearson, Begins: Mr. Dulles has just given me an oral reply to your letter to him of March 20th emphasizing the urgency of starting construction on the power development. He said he did not wish at this time to reply in writing because consideration of New York's application by the FPC was still going on and he thought that it would be open to objection if in a letter to another government he took a position on the case.

2. He went on to say that matters were moving in the right direction from the Canadian point of view. The administration favours the early issue of a license to the state of New York, and he hopes and thinks it likely that the FPC will soon approve. Should the FPC fail to act, the administration is considering an attempt to push special legislation through Congress which would name New York as the United States entity.

In yesterday's "Legislative Daily" issued by the United States Chamber of Commerce Senator Taft is reported as having said that no final determination of policy, "if any", on the St. Lawrence Seaway and Power Projects would be made by the administration until after the Senate Foreign Relations Committee completed these hearings. Attached is a copy of telegram WA-805[55] of April 1 from Washington, which contains the information that your letter to Mr. Dulles has been forwarded to the President with a covering memorandum signed by Mr. Dulles. It would thus appear that the greatest possible use has now been made of this representation.[56]

I have spoken to Mr. Chevrier, who feels that it would not be wise for him to approach Mr. Dewey at this time.[57] Our information is that the Counsel for the New York State Power Authority has already discussed with the Chief Examiner of the Federal Power Commission various possibilities for expediting the report of Examiner Law. Although this effort has not been successful in hastening Law's report — he is also the Examiner in the Northwest Natural Gas hearing — our Counsel in Washington, after discussions with various officials concerned, considers that any further representations to the FPC might only antagonize the Commission or its officials. (You will recall that Acting Chairman Buchanan voiced a mild protest to the State Department as a result of Mr. Chevrier's recent speech in Port Arthur.)

It is unlikely that the Examiner will make his report before the Northwest Natural Gas hearing is concluded, i.e. until about a month from now. Once the Examiner's report is put to the Federal Power Commission, any party to the hearings may take exception to it within the next twenty days. The likelihood is also, I understand, that a member of the Commission itself may enter an objection. In either case, formal hearings will require to be held before the Federal Power Commission itself. One estimate has it that such hearings would not be ended in June. At that time the question will arise of replacing at least one of the members of the Commission who is opposed to designating New York as the entity. There will later be the question of replacing another member (favourable to the Project) who reaches his retirement age in September. These two changes, with the appointment of the Chairman of the Commission are within the jurisdiction of the Executive Branch of the United States subject to the approval by the Senate.

Unless the Administration is able to persuade the Commission that the New York State application ought to be granted without dissent and unless other interested parties such as Spalinsky do not object, I do not see an early decision in the matter.

Because the FPC decision lies with a semi-judicial United States body and because it is, at this juncture, a matter affecting the rights of United States citizens in the United States, it seems to me that the Canadian Government ought not to intervene further than it has, but it should base its plans on the assumption that no favourable decision is likely to emerge from the FPC until the summer or autumn of 1953.[58] If a favourable decision emerges before then, so much the better.

In the meantime, Canadian efforts should perhaps be directed toward keeping the attention of the Administration focussed on the urgent need Canada has for the power project.[59] This might be done by Canadian channels on all appropriate occasions. For instance, when the Prime Minister meets the President, he will undoubtedly discuss the matter. When Mr. Lawson, Consul-General in New York, officially meets Governor Dewey early in May, he might put to him the Canadian case. Likewise, should an appropriate occasion present itself, Mr. Wrong ought to bring this matter to the attention of Senator Taft. In addition, Mr. Saunders, of the Hydro-Electric, or the Province of Ontario itself, might find means of making its views known to the State of New York and of ascertaining what Governor Dewey proposes to do.

Mr. Chevrier has accepted an invitation to attend the annual meeting of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Association in Washington on April 30 and will be, I understand, the main speaker at the closing dinner. Premier Frost and Mr. Saunders will also attend and newspaper reports indicate that Senators Wiley and Taft, former Vice-President Barkley and Chairman Burton of the New York State Power Authority will also be there. This meeting is obviously an exercise in support of the Wiley Bill and, as a result, Mr. Chevrier may find himself in embarrassing positions at times.

I am somewhat apprehensive lest the Canadian Government associate itself too closely with the Wiley lobby interests. However, having been committed to speak-

Following is the text of the Department of Transport press release on Mr. Chevrier's speech to the Heartland Conference this evening. Text begins:

Press Release #422
For Release April 30/53 9.00 p.m. (EDT)

WASHINGTON — Canada's Minister of Transport, Honourable Lionel Chevrier, tonight offered a solution to the current delays in permitting the construction of the St. Lawrence Seaway by suggesting that "if it is felt that United States' interests would be safeguarded by the construction of a canal on your side of the International Section, why not go ahead and build and let us do likewise on our side?" He pointed out that while this might appear foolish at this time "we have done this at the Sault where there are two canals, one on each side of the boundary line, and both are pretty fully used. I am confident this would soon become true here too."

Mr. Chevrier made this suggestion tonight when addressing the Second Heartland Conference, sponsored by the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Association. This dinner meeting was attended by Senator Taft, former Vice-President Barkley, and many Senators and Congressmen, who with others have been following the proceedings of the Conference.

Canada's Minister of Transport emphasized the fact that "for well over 200 years Canada has been actively interested in and exclusively responsible for the progressive development which has taken place in the St. Lawrence River from the Gulf to Lake Erie." He pointed out that "the bottleneck in the Seaway — 14 foot navigation in the International Rapids Section — would have been removed long since had your country extended the necessary co-operation."

Emphasizing that Canada was not asking for any funds from the United States to build the Seaway, Mr. Chevrier said: "Canada is not seeking financial aid on the St. Lawrence Seaway. On the contrary Canada is ready, willing and anxious to proceed with the Seaway at her own expense without cost to the American taxpayer. Canada has passed legislation, both provincially and federally, and could start the project tomorrow." He added that all that was required was "the granting of a licence by the Federal Power Commission and the naming of an entity by the American Government, in accordance with their undertaking, to join with the Canadian entity in the development of power." The Ontario Hydro Electric Power Commission would develop the power jointly with the American entity and the Federal Government at Ottawa would build the navigational facilities.

Mr. Chevrier is almost sure to speak out very frankly — and what he says will be more pleasant to Canadian than American ears. L.B. P[earson]

"If it is felt that the Seaway is an uneconomical investment for the United States, and since more than 1,000 miles of the St. Lawrence is wholly within Canadian territory, this appears to me to be a good case for encouraging independent action by Canada," said the Minister. He added that "we are co-operating with the United States in the defence of this Continent. It is incomprehensible to us why the same effective co-operation is not forthcoming with respect to the Seaway, a project that has been declared by the Permanent Joint Defence Board — a United States and Canadian body — to be urgent from the point of view of national defence."

Up until this moment "the United States has assumed almost complete responsibility for through navigation facilities from Lake Erie to the head of the Lakes," said the Minister. On the other hand, the St. Lawrence Seaway from Lake Erie to the sea has been improved and maintained by Canada from time immemorial "with every important betterment being carried out and paid for by Canada at a cost of around $300,000,000." Saying that Canada proposes to pay on a self-liquidating basis for improvements in the International Rapids Section, he asked, "why should your country withhold co-operation and thus delay completion of this vital Canadian transportation outlet?"

The Minister predicted that while certain interests may be powerful enough to stop the Seaway for a time, "in the long run common sense must prevail." He urged that common sense should prevail now "not in a year's time or two years' time, but now because each and every day Canada is being hampered in her efforts to expand her economy and to grow to greater strength."

Outlining Canada's "gathering strength and great strides forward in wealth and power", Mr. Chevrier dealt with some of the country's resources. He pointed out that "overnight, Canada has made good her two most serious deficiencies as an industrial power — oil and iron." He also referred to the fact that "in this atomic age the production of uranium is of the greatest importance to a nation" and that deposits which were being uncovered in Canada are "among the most important in the world." He also referred to expansion of aluminum production and development of new deposits of copper and zinc.

"The development of these resources and the accompanying industrial expansion required ever increasing amounts of hydro-electric power", he said. Quebec-Labrador iron provided the final and convincing reason why the building of the St. Lawrence Seaway without further delay is necessary to provide transportation for our expanding commerce." He added that "these developments will unquestionably assist the industrial growth of the United States."

Taking the view that the rapid economic progress of Canada should be in the best interest of the United States, Canada's Minister of Transport said that "taking the long view, this would tend to make Canada a more important ally, increasing continually in strength and standing shoulder to shoulder with the United States in the interests of human liberty which we both hold so dear."[61]

INTERNATIONAL RAPIDS POWER DEVELOPMENT ACT; COMING INTO FORCE

18. The Minister of Transport reported that the examiner of the US Federal Power Commission had, on May 12th, filed his decision ordering the issuance of a fifty-year licence to the New York State Power Authority for the development of the US share of power in the International Rapids Section of the St. Lawrence River. There was a possibility that the Federal Power Commission might make this Order final on or about June 11th.

In the circumstances, he recommended that a proclamation be issued bringing the International Rapids Power Development Act into effect on May 20th, 1953. It would then be possible for the Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission to proceed with its share of the project as soon as final action had been taken by the Federal Power Commission on the US share.

19. The Cabinet agreed that a proclamation be issued bringing the International Rapids Power Development Act into force on May 20th, 1953; an Order-in-Council to be passed accordingly.

ST. LAWRENCE PROJECT

1. It was decided in Cabinet yesterday and an Order-in-Council was passed accordingly, to proclaim the International Rapids Power Development Act (ch. 13 of the Statutes of 1951, Commons, 2nd session), and this act will be proclaimed tomorrow, May 20. As you know, this act and the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority Act (ch. 24 of the Statutes of 1951, Commons, 2nd Session) comes into effect only upon proclamation, although both have been assented to and both are on the statute books.

2. No action in this respect has been taken with regard to the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority Act and there are reasons both for and against proclaiming it in the near future. One of the reasons influencing the timing of the proclamation of the Seaway Act is, of course, the effect this might have in the US. In this regard, your present views would be appreciated.

3. With regard to the designation of the US entity to construct the power works, it is our understanding that no formal designation is legally required in addition to the issuance of a licence by the Federal Power Commission. However, it might be helpful to have a formal designation by the President as soon as the Federal Power Commission action in issuing the licence is complete, particularly if the designation could be given added authority by a renewed reference to the "determination" of the National Security Council announced on April 23.[62] The designation by Canada of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario was made by a letter addressed to the International Joint Commission and signed by the Prime Minister. A similar designation by the United States Government would be welcome here.

We think you can decide when to proclaim the Seaway Authority Act solely in the light of domestic Canadian considerations. The proclamation will likely have no effect on general public opinion here and but little on the men here who are dealing with the project. Nor is any further evidence needed that Canada is determined to proceed: The Prime Minister and the Minister of Transport made that clear during their recent visits to Washington. If we were to choose a date we would be inclined to have the act proclaimed shortly after the FPC has confirmed the trial examiner's decision.

2. With regard to the designation of the United States entity we have enquired quietly from the State Department what their thinking is. If you agree we shall let this question rest until we hear from them. In general our view is that unless designation is a legal requirement or unless it would prove useful in Canada, we would not be inclined to press for it since the support of the administration has been made quite clear by the President's own actions and by the testimony of administration officials during the hearings this week on the Wiley Bill.

ST. LAWRENCE PROJECT: FEDERAL POWER COMMISSION'S PROCEEDINGS

The present status of the Federal Power Commission's proceeding on the St. Lawrence project is one in which the full Commission is in the process of reaching a final determination on the applications before it for a licence to develop the United States share of the St. Lawrence River power. The Commission's Examiner has recommended a decision to grant a licence to the New York State Power Authority and the Commission has completed hearing oral argument by parties to the proceedings who requested that the Examiner's decision be reversed or modified.

While the Commission is expected to arrive at its own determination at any time, (now that all arguments have been put before it), the situation is analogous to one in which a matter is sub judice and a court is about to announce its decision.

In these circumstances, Mr. Wrong has recommended, after consulting all friendly counsel in Washington, that we should try to avoid any public expressions of impatience and any indications that we are urging hasty consideration of, or any particular decision on, the matters which are before the Commission for determination. It is the Ambassador's view that any such expressions would accomplish nothing and might do harm by arousing personal antagonism within the Commission. It was suggested that, if the matter must be referred to publicly, — as, indeed, is likely, — it would be best to refer to the President's assurance to the Prime Minister, during the meeting last month, that everything was being done to facilitate an early decision and to the fact that the Commission had made arrangements to expedite consideration of the matter by the Examiner who recommended his decision to the Commission on May 12. The statutory requirements of the Federal Power Act in the United States make it necessary for the Federal Power Commission to follow certain procedures. In view of the fact that there are a variety of interests in the United States which have strong views as to whether the power should be developed by Federal, State, or private agencies, and as to the conditions under which the power should be developed and distributed, it is important that whatever licence is granted by the Commission should be based on a firm legal foundation so that any subsequent challenge in the courts will not upset the authorization.

The complete judicial process provided by the Federal Power Act is fully set out in the memorandum annexed to letter No. 1074 dated May 26, 1953, from Washington, a copy of which is attached.† (The time-table set out in this memorandum was based on the assumption that the oral argument on exceptions heard by the Commission on June 15 would have been omitted; as a result all dates are about two weeks ahead of those now expected.) As the Commission has given the fullest possible consideration to the matter, however, it will be in a better position to deny any petition for re-hearing of the case and subsequent litigation in the courts will also be less likely to upset or modify the Commission's decision.

These are the advantages to be derived from the manner in which the Commission has been dealing with the case and, on the other hand, there is nothing to indicate that the Commission has been "stalling" or that those dealing with the matter in the United States have not been doing everything possible to "deliver" on the assurances of cooperation that have been given.

It is, of course, possible that the validity of the decision of the Commission will be litigated in the Court of Appeals and even carried to the Supreme Court, but this is a matter for the opponents of the power development to decide and they will always have, under the Federal Power Act, the statutory right to carry the case as far as they choose.[63]

ST. LAWRENCE POWER PROJECT: RECENT DEVELOPMENTS

17. The Minister of Transport, referring to the discussion at the meeting of May 18th, reported that, although the Examiner of the Federal Power Commission had, on May 12th, 1953, filed his decision ordering that a licence be issued to the New York State Power Authority for the development of power in the International Rapids Section of the St. Lawrence River, this Order had not yet been made final by the Commission. There were indications, however, that the Federal Power Commission might give final approval to this Order some time during the week of July 13th,[64] despite the writ of prohibition filed with the US Court of Appeals by the President of the Public Power and Water Corporation of Trenton, New Jersey, to prevent the Federal Power Commission from handing down a decision in favour of New York State. It was thought that the US Court of Appeals would dismiss this motion within a matter of days.

Canadian officials, in consultation with the Chairman of the Canadian Section of the International Joint Commission, and the Chairman of the Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission, had suggested that the St. Lawrence River Joint Board of Engineers to be appointed by the Canadian and US governments under the terms of the October 29th, 1952, Order of Approval issued by the IJC, should be established as soon as possible after the US Federal Power Commission had taken final action on New York's application, that the Board consist of three Canadian and three US members, that the terms of reference for the Board follow substantially the wording of the appropriate clauses in the IJC Order of October 29th, 1952, and that the Board be authorized to give final approval to plans, specifications and programmes of construction without reference to their respective governments. It should be provided, however, that the Board would keep both governments currently informed as to the progress of the work and that, in case of disagreement within the Board, the points in contention would be referred to the respective governments for instructions.

He recommended approval of these proposals.

It was understood that the IJC also planned to appoint the International St. Lawrence River Board of Control as soon as possible after the New York State Power Authority obtained a licence from the Federal Power Commission. This Board would also probably consist of six members — the Canadian members comprising a Federal representative and nominees of the Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission and the Quebec Hydro-Electric Power Commission.

An explanatory note had been circulated.

(a) noted the report by the Minister of Transport on recent developments relating to the St. Lawrence power project; and,

(b) approved in principle the Minister's recommendation on the composition and terms of reference of the St. Lawrence River Joint Board of Engineers to be appointed in accordance with the Order of Approval issued by the International Joint Commission on October 29th, 1952, and agreed that the Board should be appointed as soon as possible after the US Federal Power Commission had issued a licence to the New York State Power Authority for the development of the US share of power in the International Rapids Section of the St. Lawrence River.

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER DEVELOPMENT: BOARD OF ENGINEERS

10. The Minister of Transport, referring to the discussion at the meeting of July 6th, said the United States had not as yet reached definite views concerning the size thought desirable for the Board of Engineers for the St. Lawrence project. Once agreement had been reached on this point and on the terms of reference for the Board, it was desirable that action with regard to the Canadian appointments should take place at once.

11. The Cabinet noted the report of the Minister of Transport and agreed:

(a) that if the United States government agreed that the Board of Engineers for the St. Lawrence River development should consist of three representatives from each country, immediate action be taken to have an Order-in-Council passed to appoint the following persons for Canada:

Carl West, Esq., (Chairman)
M.V. Sauer, Esq.,
Emile St-Laurent, Esq.;

and,

(b) that if the United States favoured two representatives on the Board from each country, immediate action be taken for the appointment of such two of the above three persons as might be designated by the Minister of Transport.

ST. LAWRENCE PROJECT

Following for the Minister, Begins: Today I had lunch with the Attorney General and all his principal assistants, including Lee Rankin, Assistant Attorney General (Executive Adjudications Division) who, it developed, was fully familiar with many of the legal phases of this problem. The luncheon was entirely informal and exceedingly friendly. In view of LePan's report of discussions in Ottawa on Friday, I felt that I should take the opportunity of mentioning our anxieties concerning legal delays.[65]

2. Brownell suggested that I have a talk with Rankin after lunch, and this I did. I told Rankin that, after taking legal advice here, we were contemplating an earnest request to the United States Administration to co-operate with us by taking every opportunity of expediting the legal proceedings. Although I did not go into detail, he was very quick to appreciate our anxieties and the reasons why we felt it appropriate to approach the United States authorities.

3. Rankin then went on to tell me something quite new. The White House were worried about the President's constitutional authority to participate in the appointment of a board of engineers. The only legislation under which this could be done

September 4, 1953 the Federal Power Commission denied petitions to reopen the decision to issue a licence to the New York State Power Authority to develop power in the International Rapids Section of the St. Lawrence River. American opponents of the project, however, were challenging the decision in court. This action, it was feared, would considerably delay construction of the project.

seemed at first sight to Rankin to be pretty flimsy. He knew that the White House themselves were anxious to have an affirmative answer. The Justice Department would give such an opinion if they conscientiously could after an examination of the constitutional position. Pending their conclusion on this matter, Rankin thought that it would be a mistake for us to make representations for speeding up the legal proceedings.

4. I am satisfied that we would have no hope of making progress with such representations until Justice have given their opinion to the President. For this reason and, since Rankin himself invited me to do so, I am sending him, privately and informally, the suggestions of our own counsel for the reducing of the legal delays. Until I have heard from him, I would recommend that the proposal for fresh representations to the State Department be held in abeyance.

5. Needless to say, I impressed upon Rankin the dismay with which Canadian authorities would receive word of any new legal impediment to executive action at this belated stage. I am satisfied that he was fully conscious of our feelings. When Mr. Howe is here on Thursday, he and I will be seeing Brownell and we may have an opportunity of making this point again. Ends.

ST. LAWRENCE PROJECT

This morning I met with Burling and Fisher and discussed thoroughly with them the new situation created by the information I received yesterday at the Department of Justice. They were both less disturbed by it than I had expected and strongly recommended that we should go ahead and make high-level representations to the State Department in an effort to expedite the legal proceedings.

2. Burling had been in touch with Burton and Goetz of the New York state power authority and, as a result of these conversations, was convinced that such new legal difficulties as had arisen related not to the President's competence to appoint some authority on the United States side to supervise construction of the Hydro-Electric installations, but rather to the question of where, under existing legislation, such supervisory powers should lie. For example, it might be claimed that these duties should be exercised by the Federal Power Commission.

3. If Burling's interpretation proves correct, the difficulty should be surmounted with comparative ease. I had been afraid that it might have arisen from a more fundamental doubt on the part of the new administration whether it would be possible to conclude an agreement with Canada in this form, bearing in mind the strong current of opinion in Congress (which has found expression in the widespread support of the Bricker amendment) that the power of the executive branch to conclude international agreements has grown to excess and must be curtailed. In view of what Rankin said to me yesterday I confess that my own uneasiness has not been removed.

4. Fisher also pointed out — what I imagine is quite accurate — that Rankin's responsibility does not extend to major policy decisions concerning the St. Lawrence project. It would not, for example, be for him to decide whether the Attorney General should ask the courts to expedite the legal proceedings. Fisher was also of the opinion that it would now be virtually impossible for the President to disavow the support he expressed in the communiqué issued on the 8th of May at the end of Mr. St. Laurent's visit here for the development of power in the international rapids section by the New York State Power Authority, and to thus renege on the many commitments, both public and private, which have been given to Governor Dewey on this subject. This is also a valid point, I think.

5. On the basis of these considerations, the government may deem it wise to go forward and make representations much along the lines that were discussed at the interdepartmental meeting in Ottawa on Friday, the 2nd of October. As you will have seen from my telegram No. 2251 of the 5th October, Mr. Howe and I are seeing Mr. Brownell on Thursday morning. On that occasion it would be well, I think, for Mr. Howe to stress to the Attorney General how anxious we are to start work on the power project during the next construction season. He might also consider it desirable to indicate in general terms that we have been studying possible methods for reducing the legal delays to a minimum and would welcome the co-operation of the Department of Justice to that end.

6. In the circumstances it may be considered that a Cabinet Minister should see Mr. Dulles on this matter. Among the many considerations that must be borne in mind is that Mr. Saunders of the Ontario Hydro has perhaps been led to expect that formal and very high-level representations will be made to the State Department. The purpose of a meeting with the Secretary of State would be to persuade him to state that it was in the national interest of the United States that everything possible should be done to expedite the legal proceedings. No doubt Phleger, the legal adviser in the State Department, would be present at such a meeting; and it would then be for him, in co-operation with the Department of Justice here, to work out ways and means of accelerating proceedings as much as possible.

7. Burling and Fisher are now of the opinion that it would not be necessary at such a meeting to supply the Secretary of State with full and formal documentation either about the necessity for getting on with the construction next summer or about possible ways of disposing quickly of appeals against the order of the Federal Power Commission. As they see it, it would be sufficient to secure from the Secretary of State an expression of the interest of the United States in avoiding delay. At that point our representatives would offer to co-operate closely with Phleger and with the Department of Justice in preparing the material that it would be necessary to present to the Court of Appeals here on the 5th of November to support an application for an accelerated hearing.

8. I have been wondering whether, if it is decided to go ahead at once at the ministerial level it might not be possible for Mr. Howe to see Mr. Dulles, if he could stay over on Friday morning and if the Secretary of State were available. Clearly, such an arrangement could be made only with a certain amount of luck as well as good management. But it would have the advantage of putting our case quickly before Mr. Dulles and also of avoiding unwelcome publicity. Alternatively, of course, a meeting could be arranged at a somewhat later date between Mr. Dulles and a Canadian minister. Will you please let me know as quickly as possible if it is decided that Mr. Howe should try to see Mr. Dulles during his visit this week?

ST. LAWRENCE PROJECT

1. This morning we delivered by hand to Rankin at the Department of Justice a somewhat revised version of our Counsel's memorandum of recommendations on possible methods of expediting the legal proceedings. This was done with the full concurrence of Burling and Fisher.

2. This method of giving him the memorandum afforded us an opportunity to discuss more at leisure the nature of the new difficulty which has arisen. We said that we had been greatly disturbed by his news and had been discussing among ourselves what the exact nature of the difficulty could be. Rankin warned that we should regard as highly secret the information he had given us on Monday. But he was willing to go on to specify rather more precisely the problem with which he has been confronted. What he had to say was far from reassuring and confirms the uneasiness which I expressed in my previous telegram. The question that has been raised by the White House, Rankin explained, concerns the President's power to make an agreement with Canada in the form that has been contemplated. "The essential difficulty in this case," he said, "arises because there has been no congressional action." When we enquired whether he meant that the difficulty was located in the sensitive area of inflamed controversy that has come to a head in the Bricker amendment, he replied, "exactly so". There can now be no doubt, I think, that the new problem which is at present being considered at the Department of Justice is one with wide political as well as constitutional ramifications. Rankin seemed reasonably hopeful that the Department of Justice would be able to frame an opinion which would satisfy the desire of the White House that the construction of the power project by Ontario and New York should not be impeded. But he strongly urged that we should not press for a decision since, if a snap answer were required, it would almost certainly go against us. On this issue, moderate delay would be in our interest because it would provide officials in the Department of Justice with a chance to scratch their heads and produce an opinion that would satisfy the Canadian Government as well as President Eisenhower.

3. At his invitation we then summarized briefly our Counsel's recommendations for reducing to a minimum possible delays in the courts. We stressed the importance of initiating as quickly as possible after the 5th of November whatever action might be agreed on, so that it would not be possible for the courts to complain that those who were seeking to dispose of the appeals expeditiously had themselves been responsible for some unnecessary delay. He grasped this point very readily and, in general, seemed highly sympathetic with our desire to speed up the legal proceedings. For example, before we had got to that stage in our exposition, he himself suggested that it might be possible to take an appeal directly to the Supreme Court without waiting for the case to be heard in the Court of Appeals.

4. Since we gathered that Rankin will have a large share in deciding whether or not the Department of Justice should seek to have consideration of the appeals expedited, you may be interested in his preliminary reactions to our Counsel's proposals. He was not very enthusiastic about the suggestion that hearings before the Court of Appeals should be advanced, explaining that the opportunities for subsequent delaying tactics on the part of the appellants would still be numerous. On the other hand, he thought that it might well be possible and desirable for the Department of Justice to petition the Supreme Court for a writ of certiorari before judgment; and he indicated that if the Department of Justice decided to petition the Supreme Court in that sense, the chances of the Supreme Court accepting the case would be better than fifty-fifty. He gave us the impression that the Department of Justice's relations with the Supreme Court are particularly intimate — more intimate, it would seem, that its relations with other courts of inferior jurisdiction. The crucial question, he intimated, would be whether or not the Attorney General, in all conscience, would urge the Supreme Court to take this case directly and give it priority. We were pleased to find, however, that he seemed to think that such a decision by the Department of Justice was altogether within the bounds of possibility.

5. We then repeated to him some of the arguments which had led Canadian authorities to give favourable consideration to the proposal that high-level representations should be made to the State Department at an early date with a view to expediting the legal proceedings; and we enquired whether he would have any objections to such procedure. After some hesitation, he said that that would be agreeable to the Department of Justice. From further conversation it emerged that there may have been some misunderstanding in the course of our previous talk with him, and that he may have received the quite mistaken notion that we were intending to make representations at the State Department with a view to accelerating the establishment of the Board of Engineers. When we assured him that we regarded this as quite separate from the problem of expediting the legal processes and that we did not intend to raise it with the State Department at this time, the previous reserve he had shown about formal representations completely evaporated. We need, therefore, feel no inhibition about making representations to the Secretary of State because of nervousness concerning the wishes of the Department of Justice in this matter. No doubt you will be letting me know in due course what decision is reached in Ottawa about representations to the State Department.

6. Yesterday afternoon we took the preliminary step of telling Jack Tate, Deputy Legal Adviser in the State Department, that we were worried over the possibility that if appeals against the order of the Federal Power Commission were handled by the courts in a routine way, no final disposition of the case could be made until the whole of the construction season for 1954 had been lost. For that reason we had been giving some thought to possible methods of speeding up the legal processes and it might be that we would shortly be seeking to arrange an interview with the Secretary of State to impress on him the necessity for speed in reaching a final disposition of the case and also to discuss with him possible ways of accelerating the legal proceedings. Tate replied that such an interview would seem altogether proper. He asked us, however, to try to inform him rather more fully of what we had in mind before the interview took place. In Phleger's absence on leave he is at present acting as legal adviser in the State Department. For that — if for no other — reason, we feel it would be to our advantage to take him more fully into our confidence before our proposals are presented to Mr. Dulles.

Confirming the information given orally to you, Cabinet agreed that, if a meeting could be arranged for Friday, Mr. Howe would discuss with Mr. Dulles the desirability of the United States Administration taking what action is open to it to obtain a final legal decision at the earliest possible date when the opponents of the Power Project appeal in the courts (as they most certainly will) the granting by the Federal Power Commission of a licence to the New York State Power Authority.

2. We expect the appeal to be taken on November 4, at the expiration of the sixty-day period for appeal to the courts. The prospective defendant will be the FPC, represented by the Department of Justice. The plaintiffs will presumably consist of four parties, three of whom, according to the FPC's rulings, have not shown an "interest" on the merits. The fourth party, who has shown an "interest" on the merits (Spalinski),[66] failed to produce evidence of his ability to finance his proposals for the project. In the light of their past tactics, the prospective plaintiffs (who will have the initiative in these legal proceedings) will certainly seek to impose maximum delays. In the normal course of events we anticipate that the case would not be finally disposed of in the US Courts until at least the early part of 1955. With a power shortage threatened in Ontario in 1957-58, such delays would have very unfortunate repercussions in Canada and the United States which could be minimized, to some extent, if advantage could be taken of the 1954 construction season. We consider that if all aspects of this case were studied now and the legal papers, as far as possible, were drawn up in advance of November 5th (the day following the anticipated appeal by the plaintiffs), prompt action could be taken to minimize delay. The initiative in this matter lies entirely with the US Administration, but both Canada and the United States have, as reaffirmed by the President and the Prime Minister in May of this year, a not inconsiderable national interest in proceeding as rapidly as possible.

3. My immediately following telegram contains a draft memorandum which might be used by Mr. Howe.† As you will see, it is based mainly on Mr. Pierce's statement to the FPC as set out in your teletype WA-2855 of December 11, 1952. Mr. Howe might wish to leave a copy of such a memorandum with Mr. Dulles. For this reason, the last paragraph of the memorandum concerning the specific steps the latter might take has been left rather vague. As you know, these documents are sometimes made public and it would be unwise to have anything in the memorandum which might be considered by opponents of the Power Project as an unwarranted interference by a foreign state in the matter of the legal rights of United States citizens.

4. Mr. Howe might therefore wish to use orally, in addition to the material contained in the memorandum, the information contained in paragraph 2 of this telegram. He might also add that your Embassy and Counsel for Canada before the FPC hearings will be pleased to give to the State Department and to the Department of Justice all available information on the steps which commend themselves to Canada for ensuring a speedy legal determination of the issues involved. It would be a friendly and helpful gesture if Mr. Dulles were to ensure that everything possible is done by the United States authorities to secure, according to law, the beneficial use of the St. Lawrence power project by Canada and the United States at the earliest possible moment.

5. I would be grateful to have any comments you may wish to make on the memorandum and this approach. May I urge that you advise Goetz of Mr. Howe's démarche so that he can arrange for a similar approach by Governor Dewey with Mr. Brownell and the President if he is so minded.

6. In accordance with your suggestion in paragraph 6 of your message under reference, I assume that you will be briefing Tate fully.

ST. LAWRENCE PROJECT: INTERVIEW WITH US ATTORNEY GENERAL

Mr. Howe called on the US Attorney General this morning and I accompanied him. The St. Lawrence project was one of the two specific subjects discussed. (The other was aluminum, concerning which I am doing a separate memorandum.†)

2. Mr. Howe said that Canadian authorities were most anxious to get on with the power project. He thus gave me the opportunity of putting to Mr. Brownell our position with respect to the two aspects of the question which have been the subject of communications with the Department in the past few days, viz., the expedition of the legal proceedings connected with the issue of the license to the New York Power Authority and the constitutional issue, brought to our attention by Assistant Attorney General Rankin.

3. I said that these two issues were clearly separable. The former was urgent because, unless the legal delays were reduced to a minimum, the 1954 construction season would be lost and this would entail very serious consequences. As the Attorney General had given me the opportunity, I had put our position very frankly to Rankin. He knew of our anxiety to press the legal proceedings to as early a decision as possible; he was also aware of the steps which we thought might be taken to accomplish this end and had expressed interest especially in the possibility of bringing the issue before the US Supreme Court by means of certiorari before judgment.

4. On this problem of expediting the legal proceedings, the Canadian Government were considering a formal representation to the Secretary of State urging the US Government to instruct their counsel to take every legal means to minimize the delays. Such a representation would probably be made to Mr. Dulles by a Minister. I would keep Rankin informed of our intentions in this respect and would also put our position fully before the State Department Legal Adviser before the Canadian Minister saw the Secretary of State. Mr. Brownell agreed that this would be a satisfactory procedure from the point of view of the Department of Justice. He added that US authorities were also anxious to avoid unnecessary legal delays in the disposition of this question.

5. On the second question, I said that this was clearly of great importance. On the other hand, there was not the same urgency for its disposition. We had had no idea that there was any constitutional problem involved. It had come as a great shock to us. We earnestly hoped that the Department of Justice would be able to find a satisfactory solution and one which would not involve further action by Congress. Mr. Brownell indicated that it was his hope, too, that the Justice Department's examination of this question would not reveal any insuperable barrier to effective Executive action.

6. Mr. Howe said that the appointment of the Board of Engineers was not essential to going ahead with the power development. This had merely been a proposal of the International Joint Commission as a mechanism for joint action.

7. Throughout our conversation the Attorney General indicated full sympathy with the Canadian desire to press on with the project. He welcomed the Embassy's direct contact with the Justice Department in this matter and said that this would involve no difficulty with the legal authorities in the Department of State. We should, however, keep the latter fully informed of any steps that we might be contemplating. It was left that we should keep in touch with Rankin and Phleger on the procedural problem, but that for the present the constitutional issue should be regarded as private between Rankin and ourselves.

8. The way is now open for us to see the State Department and prepare the way for representations to the Secretary of State.

RE PROPOSED MEETING BETWEEN MR. HOWE AND MR. DULLES ON ST. LAWRENCE PROJECT

Our Embassy at Washington has informed us this morning that during the course of his talks with Mr. Brownell yesterday, Mr. Howe had an opportunity to raise the question of expediting the anticipated litigation on the St. Lawrence project in US courts.

It has not been possible, however, to arrange a meeting with Mr. Dulles as had been agreed in Cabinet last Wednesday. For one thing, the US Cabinet meets on Friday and, for another, Jack Tate and other officials of the State Department, with whom our proposals have already been discussed informally, felt rather strongly that they should have an opportunity to brief Mr. Dulles more fully before Mr. Howe or some other Minister speaks to him. All those concerned with this matter agree that it would be a good thing if a Canadian Minister could go down to Washington to discuss the problem with Mr. Dulles some time next week.

If you agree that Mr. Chevrier or Mr. Howe or Mr. Pearson should see Mr. Dulles about this, I shall notify the Embassy accordingly, in order that such a meet-

I think that the meeting should be held as soon as possible in view of the considerable amount of preparatory work yet to be done before the US Attorney General makes his move in the Court of Appeals on or about November 5th.

Attached is a copy of a telegram from Washington showing that Mr. Howe could not see Mr. Dulles on the St. Lawrence project and has returned to Ottawa.† The Embassy suggests that a Cabinet Minister should make representations to Mr. Dulles. This information was passed to Mr. Pelletier of the Privy Council Office who, because of the Prime Minister's desire to be kept informed, gave him the latest information.

2. Mr. St. Laurent, who was then leaving the city, suggested that Mr. Howe, as Acting Prime Minister, should decide what is advisable in view of his own visit to Mr. Brownell. Mr. Pelletier had a conversation with Mr. Howe, in the course of which Mr. Howe said that he had understood from Mr. Heeney that you would be going to Washington next week. Mr. Howe was therefore of the opinion that you ought to see Mr. Dulles.

3. Would you let me know what are your wishes in this matter? Mr. LePan at Washington has been fully informed and I think, in consultation with Mr. Heeney, will make a tentative appointment for you to see Mr. Dulles.[68] It has been suggested that the publicity about your visit will have to be thought out somewhat carefully, especially in the light of the Korean situation.

4. As regards the suggested action which the United States Government might take to expedite the legal proceedings, Mr. Howe reports that Mr. Brownell and his Department are "enamoured" with the proposed certiorari proceedings reported to Cabinet. It does not appear that there should be any objection from the Department of Justice as a result of the groundwork already laid by the Embassy.

ST. LAWRENCE POWER PROJECT: BOARD OF ENGINEERS

In the course of discussion at the International Joint Commission on October 9th concerning the establishment of a Board of Control in connection with the St. Lawrence Power Project, Counsel for the United States (W.R. Vallance) intimated that there was no necessity to establish the Board of Control at an early date because the United States Government, for its part, did not propose to establish the Board of Engineers until litigation was out of the way and it was clear that the construction of the project would commence. As Counsel for Canada, Côté enquired specifically whether, in the event the New York State Power Authority were to take up its license immediately, the State Department or the United States Government would be prepared to constitute a Board of Engineers. Vallance replied that there was no use setting up the Board of Engineers which had no work to do and that in the circumstances envisaged, the US Government would not establish the Board of Engineers until the litigation was out of the way.

2. The International Joint Commission, however, agreed to discuss and fix the Terms of Reference of the Board of Control by October 25 and to set it up and appoint its engineers the moment the New York State Power Authority takes its license.

3. We anticipate that the New York State Power Authority may well take up their license before November 4. The statement made by Vallance (which Commissioner Weber told Côté informally should not be taken too seriously) is one which, however, leaves us uneasy. We gained the impression that for budgetary reasons the establishment of a Board of Engineers would be delayed for quite some time. I should be grateful if you could ascertain at some convenient opportunity what are the true intentions of the United States Government. We hope that it will be prepared to establish the Board of Engineers once it has satisfied itself as to the legal position of the United States Government and as soon as possible after the prospective licensee accepts his license regardless of the course of litigation. We have learned from Mr. Howe that Mr. Brownell is uneasy about pressure from Canada for an early establishment of the Board of Engineers. We do not wish in any way to prejudice the Department of Justice's orderly consideration of the US constitutional position and are not pressing now for the constitution of the Board of Engineers. We should not wish to think, however, that for budgetary or other subordinate reasons the US government should have bound itself not to act until the litigation is out of the way.

Yesterday afternoon LePan and I called on Lee Rankin at the Department of Justice and told him that the government had decided to make representations to the Secretary of State urging that the legal proceedings should be expedited so that the construction season next year would not be lost. We explained that although we had some suggestions about how this might be done, we did not intend to teach our grandmother how to suck eggs; we would be content to leave it to the Department of Justice and the Department of State to decide on the best means of accomplishing the objective we all had in view. Rankin said that such representations to the Secretary of State would be entirely satisfactory to the Department of Justice.

2. He said that he had talked on two occasions to the Attorney General about our request and that Mr. Brownell had told him that everything possible should be done to accelerate the legal proceedings. The Attorney General had also discussed the matter with President Eisenhower, who had said that he believed it to be in the interests of the United States to expedite the proceedings.

3. Lawyers in the Department of Justice were already at work, Rankin said, to determine what would be the best means of securing an early and final disposition by the courts of the appeals that are to be expected against the order of the Federal Power Commission. The memorandum prepared by our Counsel had been of interest and value, and had been studied carefully. The ideas set out therein had also occurred to lawyers in the Department of Justice; they were giving consideration to other possibilities as well. We gained the distinct impression that the Department of Justice would prefer to continue to deal with us directly on this question without the intervention of Counsel.

4. The idea of seeking from the Supreme Court a writ of certiorari before judgment was still under study, Rankin said. But he gave us to understand that there might be difficulties in the way. It would be exceptional for the Supreme Court to agree to review the order of a commission without an appeal being heard by the Court of Appeals. An appellant from an order of the Federal Power Commission had the right to have the courts review the facts in the case as well as the law involved. Ordinarily, by accepting a case through a writ of certiorari the Supreme Court undertook to review only the legal issues; so that it might be difficult to leapfrog the intermediate court on an appeal from an order of the Federal Power Commission and take the case directly to the Court of Last Resort. However, it was possible that the Supreme Court might agree to accept a direct appeal, in which case they would review the facts as well as the law.

5. Rankin said that he had hoped that Burton, Chairman of the New York State Power Authority, could have been present in order to ensure that all of us were thinking and working along the same lines. Burton — and Governor Dewey as well, I gathered — have been in touch with the Attorney General to urge that the case should not be allowed to drag along.

6. All in all, I was encouraged by what Rankin had to tell us. Our request is clearly being studied closely and sympathetically, and the Department of Justice seems to be working strenuously to come up with a procedure which would dispose of appeals with all possible despatch. We are seeing Phleger and Tate at the State Department today so that when you see the Secretary next week the ball should be teed up and ready to be smitten.

We put our case this morning before Phleger, Legal Adviser in the State Department, and he saw very quickly what we wanted. After I had outlined the need to expedite the legal proceedings, he said that what seemed to be required was a letter from the Secretary of State to the Attorney General expressing the interest of the State Department in an early disposal of the appeals.

2. Phleger had not yet seen the memorandum which we left earlier in the week with Tate, his Deputy. We gave him a copy and he undertook to prepare, on the basis of our conversation with him and the suggestions made by our counsel, a brief for Mr. Dulles to see before your meeting with him next week.

ST. LAWRENCE POWER PROJECT

Following for the Acting Under-Secretary, Begins: The Minister, accompanied by LePan and myself, called this morning on Mr. Dulles to urge on him that everything possible should be done so that a start may be made during the next construction season in building the power project. Mr. Pearson outlined the repercussions that there would be on the Canadian economy and the Canadian defence effort if construction were delayed until 1955, and also stressed that Canadian public opinion would be dismayed if there were further delay. We will be sending you, in tomorrow's bag, copies of the brief from which the Minister spoke† and also copies of the memorandum which was left with Mr. Dulles.[69] The memorandum followed exactly the text contained in your telegram No. EX-1672 of the 8 of October.† Mr. Pearson also mentioned to Mr. Dulles the letter from Mr. Saunders to the Prime Minister dated the 15th of October,†[70] but did not leave a copy with him. We undertook, however, to provide officials in the State Department with the material contained in Mr. Saunders' letter.

2. Mr. Dulles had before him a brief on the subject which had been prepared, I imagine, by Phleger, his legal adviser, although Phleger unfortunately could not be present himself. The Secretary of State seemed adequately acquainted with the issues involved and readily promised that he would send a letter to the Attorney General stating that the State Department, responsible as it was for conducting the foreign relations of the United States, had an interest in seeing that the legal proceedings were expedited. Mr. Dulles also promised to take the matter up personally with Mr. Brownell on Friday, when the next Cabinet meeting is to be held.

3. The only question of much significance that Mr. Dulles raised concerned the effect on the level of Lake Ontario of the new power project in the International Rapids Section. He said that, when he had been at Duck Island the week-end before last, he had heard a good deal of gossip that the new dams would raise the level of Lake Ontario by as much as a foot. Our only answer to this query was that the International Joint Commission had considered this problem and that both the United States and Canadian Sections had come to the conclusion that the control mechanisms which would be installed as part of the project would ensure that there was no adverse effect on the levels of Lake Ontario. It occurs to me that it might be useful if you were to prepare a rather more complete answer to the Secretary of State's question. I could then take some casual opportunity to set his mind at rest that his island in the St. Lawrence and other land round-about will not be affected by the proposed power project.

ST. LAWRENCE POWER PROJECT

The need for additional supplies of low-cost hydro-electric power in the Province of Ontario is urgent and the last remaining sources of such power available to Ontario, the St. Lawrence project, must be developed immediately if a shortage of power, which is bound to affect the economy of Canada and to impair seriously the defence programmes of both Canada and the United States, is to be avoided. The seriousness of the situation was fully demonstrated by the chairman of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario in evidence and testimony presented to the Federal Power Commission during its hearings in December 1952. Mr. Saunders' exposition of the problem was based on the assumption that a start could be made on the construction of the St. Lawrence Project in 1953. It now appears that unless special steps are taken it may be impossible to begin work on the project until the spring of 1955. Since the Federal Power Commission hearing, the situation in Ontario has deteriorated, not only because of the delay in beginning the construction of the project but also because the power needs in Ontario have already increased beyond those forecast by the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario.

2. The industries and resources of Ontario are of vital importance to the civilian economy of Canada and to the defence programmes of both Canada and the United States. Nearly half of Canada's total manufacturing capacity is located in this part of Canada served by the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario. Nearly one-half of Canada's current production of defence goods comes from this region. From plants in Ontario the Canadian armed forces receive over 80 percent of their mechanical transport and about 60 percent of their electronic and communication equipment. Plants in the area produce the jet engine, the Orenda, for use in both the CF-100 and in the Canadian-built Sabre aircraft, the F86E. The all-weather night interceptor, the CF-100, which is planned to carry out Canada's role in the joint air defence of North America, is also built there.

3. Many of the plants in Ontario which rely on ample sources of hydro-electric power export a large percentage, in some cases 100 percent, of their output to the United States. From the area served by Ontario Hydro, the United States obtains aircraft, ammunition, explosives, air frame sub-assemblies and many other items important to the defence of the United States. Practically all the electronic gear and most of the building materials which will enter into the erection of the Canada-United States early warning radar screen come from Ontario. Ontario industries supply all the nickel mined and treated in Canada and over 90 percent of the supply available to the United States. They also account for all the cobalt, calcium and platinum group metals produced and exported from Canada. These are only some of the supplies on which the United States relies to a very great extent for its defence programme.

4. Of the many factors which have led to this high degree of industrial development in Ontario, one of the most important is an abundant supply of low-cost hydro-electric power. The rapid development of the last large source of low-cost hydro-electric power in the area, the St. Lawrence project, will help to avoid any serious disruption of the economic base upon which the industries in the area are founded. It will also help to strengthen them to the benefit of both our countries and of the nations with which we are joined in our common interest.

5. The Canadian Government strongly urges, therefore, that everything possible be done to expedite the clearing away of any impediments to an early commencement of the construction of the St. Lawrence project in the national interest of both our countries and the advisers to the Canadian Government in both Washington and Ottawa have been instructed to co-operate in every appropriate manner with United States officials to this end.

DESPATCH 2046 Washington, October 26, 1953

My dear Mr. Secretary,

You may remember that when Mr. Pearson and I saw you a week ago about the St. Lawrence Power Project, you expressed interest in what effect the proposed power installations in the International Rapids Section of the St. Lawrence would have on the levels of Lake Ontario. The best answer, I think, is contained in a press release of the International Joint Commission which was issued on the 31st of August after hearings held in Montreal. A copy of the release is attached.† I hope you will find it reassuring. As you will see, the United States and Canadian Sections jointly stated that, in their considered judgment, the proposed power installations not only will leave landowners on both sides of the border in no worse position than in the past, but will also hold out some hope — indeed, the only hope, it seems to me — of improving their position.

Yours very sincerely,

Good news this morning about the St. Lawrence. The Department of Justice have adopted as their own our counsel's proposals for accelerating the process of judicial review and are moving vigorously to put them into effect.

2. This morning John Burton, Chairman of the New York State Power Authority, and Charles Goetz, counsel for the Authority, met for two hours with the Attorney General and Robert Stern, the Acting Solicitor General, to discuss possible methods of expediting the legal proceedings. Brownell said that the Department of Justice had decided to petition the Court of Appeals in the District of Columbia to hold hearings on the 15th of December. During the meeting Stern telephoned to the clerk of the Court of Appeals and ascertained that, in his opinion, there was no reason why the Court should not accede to this request. Stern also telephoned to the lawyers in Washington for all the possible appellants to inquire whether their clients intended to appeal. Three of the possible appellants, including Spalinski, are planning to enter appeals. Only the St. Lawrence Project Conference has decided not to appeal. Stern told each of the appellants what tactics the Department of Justice had decided to follow in order to secure as early disposition of the appeals as possible. In addition, a letter has been drafted which is to go out today over the signature both of the Attorney General and of Gatchell, counsel for the Federal Power Commission, informing the lawyers for the three appellants of the intentions of the Department of Justice. In this way, they would be deprived of the opportunity of arguing before the Court of Appeals that the request for an accelerated hearing had taken them by surprise. Gatchell has been given the responsibility for preparing the papers that will be used to support the petition to be made in the Court of Appeals for accelerated hearings. If the Court of Appeals refuses this petition or decides to set the hearings for a date substantially later than the 15th of December, the Acting Solicitor General will then seek a writ of certiorari before judgment from the Supreme Court.

3. The counsel for the Central Pennsylvania Coal Producers Association, in conversation over the telephone with Stern, made an alternative proposal. He suggested that if the Department of Justice were willing to have oral hearings in the Court of Appeals set down for the 15th of January, instead of the 15 of December, the appellants, for their part, would promise to take only thirty days instead of ninety days to file a petition for certiorari in the event that the judgment of the Court of Appeals went against them. Although this proposal is superficially attractive, Stern was not disposed to accept it, since he was not at all certain that the appellants could be made to abide by such a promise.

4. Burling, who gleefully communicated all this news to us this morning, is inclined to think, after consulting with Goetz, that the information in the newspaper story referred to in your teletype No. EX-1811 of the 27 October† is badly garbled. What the Lake Ontario Landowners and Beach Protective Association must be planning to seek in the Court of Appeals in the District of Columbia, they both think, is not an injunction but a stay. If that is what they have in mind, Goetz and Burling will be delighted, since, once the appellants have asked for a stay, there will be greater reason for the Federal Power Commission and the Department of Justice to ask for accelerated hearings. At an earlier stage the group of lawyers representing those interests which want to see the appeals disposed of as quickly as possible had even given consideration to steps being taken which might panic the appellants into seeking a stay. If a stay is sought, our counsel will be inclined to exclaim: "The Lord has delivered them into our hands."

5. The State Department have not seen the newspaper story which you brought to our attention and could throw no light on it.

6. It would seem that the pincer movement, with the Canadian Government on one side and the State of New York on the other, designed to persuade the Department of Justice to take an active interest in expediting the legal proceedings, has been successful. Incidentally, I have just received a letter from Mr. Dulles' Special Assistant to say that the Secretary of State not only wrote to the Attorney General on this matter but also spoke to him personally about it on the 23rd of October. All this is highly satisfactory. But none of this good news should blind us to the fact that it is never easy to expedite legal proceedings and that many advantages always lie with the party opposed to despatch.

I telephoned to Lee Rankin yesterday to enquire whether any progress had been made in resolving the constitutional difficulty which had been referred to the Department of Justice by the White House. He told me that a way round, or out of, the constitutional difficulty had been found and that the White House had been so advised. He added that signature of the executive order appointing the United States members of the board of engineers might be expected at once. He thought that it would be signed either yesterday or today. With this news, the embargo on discussing the establishment of the board of engineers has been removed; and we intend to consult tomorrow with the State Department on their detailed plan regarding the Exchange of Notes.

2. I also took occasion to thank Rankin for his help in getting the Department of Justice deeply and quickly engaged in the task of expediting the process of judicial review of the Federal Power Commission's order. He said that the Department of Justice were optimistic that they would be successful in accelerating the legal proceedings and he expressed the opinion that there was not much substance in the contentions of the appellants.

NOTE NO. 820 Washington, November 12, 1953

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to the Order of Approval issued by the International Joint Commission on October 29, 1952, under authority of the Boundary Waters Treaty of January 11, 1909, in the matter of the applications of the Government of Canada and the Government of the United States of America for an Order of Approval for the construction of certain works for the development of power in the International Rapids Section of the St. Lawrence River.

The Government of Canada has designated the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario as the entity to construct, maintain and operate the proposed works in Canada and I have been informed that the Government of the United States, consistent with the action of the Federal Power Commission in licencing the Power Authority of the State of New York, has declared that authority to be the designee of the Government of the United States of America for the construction of the works referred to in the Order of Approval of the International Joint Commission of October 29, 1952. It would, therefore, be agreeable to the Canadian Government if the St. Lawrence River Joint Board of Engineers, proposed in the applications of both Governments to the International Joint Commission and approved in that Commission's Order, were now established so that the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario and the Power Authority of the State of New York may submit their plans and programmes of construction to the Board for its approval.

The Canadian Government suggests that the Board consist of four members, two to be designated by and to act on behalf of the Government of Canada and two to be designated by and to act on behalf of the Government of the United States of America, and that the Board should perform the duties specified in clause (g) of the Order of Approval, including the approval of the plans and specifications of the works and the programmes of construction thereof submitted for approval of the respective Governments as required by the Order of Approval, and assurance that the construction of the works is in accordance with such approval.

Reports shall be made by the Joint Board of Engineers to the respective governments to keep them currently informed of the progress of the construction of the works.

If the Government of the United States is agreeable to the foregoing proposals, I suggest that this note and your reply should constitute an agreement between our two governments establishing the St. Lawrence River Joint Board of Engineers.

Accept, etc.

Excellency,

I have the honor to refer to your Note No. 820 of November 12, 1953, in which you made proposals for the establishment of the St. Lawrence River Joint Board of Engineers.

I have the honor to inform you that the Government of the United States concurs in these proposals and agrees that your note and the present reply shall constitute an agreement between our two Governments establishing the St. Lawrence River Joint Board of Engineers, as proposed in the applications of each Government, dated June 30, 1952, to the International Joint Commission and approved in that Commission's Order of October 29, 1952.

Accept, etc.

16. St. Lawrence Power Project

American Division: On November 19, the United States Court of Appeals of the District Court of Columbia Circuit heard a motion made by the US Attorney General and Counsel for the Federal Power Commission to advance the hearing of the case brought against the Federal Power Commission by the Lake Ontario Land Development and Beach Protection Association Inc., the Public Power and Water Corporation and the Central Pennsylvania Coal Producers' Association. These three associations seek to upset a decision of the FPC granting a licence to the New York State Power Authority to develop with Ontario Hydro the power potential of the International Rapids Section of the St. Lawrence River. By the legal means at their disposal, these associations are also seeking to impose the maximum delays in reaching a decision, thus seriously retarding the day when the Power Project can be launched. The Attorney General's motion was substantially granted: the oral hearings will be held by the Court on December 23, 1953. . . .

US RESTRICTIONS ON DAIRY PRODUCTS

11. Mr. Ritchie. Acting under the provisions of Section 104 of the United States Defence Production Act the US Department of Agriculture announced on December 30 a number of changes in the Import controls on Dairy Products. It will be recalled that these restrictions were imposed as a protectionist measure and they have been considered in the GATT and found to be a violation of the General Agreement. From time to time as the situation in the US changes with respect to domestic production, marketing, storage or the related price support programs, the US Administration either is able to relax the restrictions or may be obliged to extend them if imports are having an adverse effect on the domestic market. Among the recent changes one establishes import quotas on dried whole milk, dried buttermilk and dried cream, which limit imports during the period ending March 31, 1953, to quantities approximately equal to the average quarterly imports during the first two quarters of 1952. US imports of dried whole milk and dried buttermilk sharply increased in 1952 and have recently tended to displace domestically produced butterfat and solids. The import quotas are therefore expected to reduce expenditures which might otherwise be necessary under the price support program. As the action taken was mandatory and as US government purchases of butter and cheese under the price support program have recently increased the action taken was not altogether unexpected. The Canadian dairy industry will be hurt by the action but probably not unduly so. Of more serious concern is the continued existence of this objectionable US legislation which impairs the trade of other countries and creates uncertainties about the possibility of obtaining and holding increased markets in the USA.

UNITED STATES IMPORT RESTRICTIONS ON DAIRY PRODUCTS

As the December 30th restrictions on dried milk products amount to an intensification of restrictions, it has occurred to us that this might be an appropriate time to remind the United States of our serious concern with this infringement of GATT and again to press for repeal of the legislation. Representations might be made to the State Department along the lines of our notes of August 27, 1951, and January 17, 1952.

We should be grateful to know whether you have any reasons either to recommend or counsel against such action. If further representations were made, do you think before or after the new Administration has taken office would be the more propitious time?

It is our opinion that further representations should be made to State Department but not until the new administration has taken over, and that the most appropriate time would be about January 27. Moreover we think it important that our note should be broad, dealing with the basic issues; and that it be self-contained, written on the assumption that many who will read it will be unaware of what has gone before and under such pressure that they will be unlikely to study the files.

2. If you wish a note presented presumably you will instruct us and send us its terms.

3. Have you thought about encouraging more or less simultaneous representations from other parties to GATT?

UNITED STATES IMPORT RESTRICTIONS — DAIRY PRODUCTS

1. Dr. R.L. Beukenkamp, Agricultural Attaché of The Netherlands Embassy, approached us today to enquire if we would be interested in meeting with representatives of that Embassy, and possibly representatives of embassies of other countries, to discuss the recently announced restrictions on United States imports of dried milk. The purpose of the meeting would be to consider what action the various countries affected by these restrictions intend to take to protest the import controls applied by the United States to dairy products and what, if any, retaliation is under consideration. Whether or not some joint action might be desirable, would also be considered.

2. We raised the question of the desirability of consultation with other countries on this subject in our teletype WA-48 of January 7, in reply to your EX-22 of January 6. We would, therefore, appreciate your views with reference to Dr. Beukenkamp's enquiry.

Consultation has been initiated with other departments and we hope to be able to send you instructions shortly. For your information, we in this department are in general agreement with your proposal that representations should be made about January 27th. With regard to consultation and possible simultaneous action with other interested countries, we would not wish to give the US the impression that organized pressure which went beyond the action envisaged at the Seventh Session of GATT was being brought to bear.

Pending receipt of formal instructions from here we see no reason why you should not attend a preliminary meeting at the Netherlands Embassy and inform representatives that consideration now is being given in Ottawa to the problem.

The text of a note to hand to the State Department follows at the end of this message. In accordance with your suggestion the note is drafted in order to deal primarily with the general issues involved. Unless you see any objections I should be grateful if you would arrange to have the note presented to the State Department as soon as possible.

2. In delivering the note you might wish to make some oral remarks designed to place this note in its proper context. You might point out that, while the restrictions on dairy imports provide the occasion for these representations, they are not necessarily the only or the most serious aspect of recent US commercial policy which troubles us. I should be grateful if in presenting the note you would consider referring, to the extent that you deem it appropriate at this stage, to other features of United States commercial policy which disturb us. Specifically, we have in mind the present limited scope for tariff negotiations, the width of the escape clause in the current Trade Agreements Extension Act, the increasing activities of the United States Tariff Commission with respect to applications for tariff protection, the delay in passing a satisfactory Customs Simplification Bill, etc.

3. As we propose to inform interested missions here of our protest, after the note has been presented to the State Department, I should also be grateful if you would advise us as soon as the note is delivered. You may wish similarly to inform the Dutch and other interested Embassies in Washington that we have lodged this protest.

4. Text begins:

The Canadian Ambassador presents his compliments to the Secretary of State and has the honour to refer to the Canadian Embassy's notes of August 27, 1951, and January 17, 1952, regarding the restrictions imposed upon imports of fats, oils and dairy products under Section 104 of the Defence Production Act of 1951.

The Secretary of State will be aware that these import restrictions were considered at the Sixth and Seventh Sessions of the Contracting Parties to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and that resolutions were adopted recognizing these measures to be contrary to the provisions of the Agreement.

On the occasion of the announcement on December 30th, 1952 of further import restrictions, relating to dried milk products, the Canadian Government re-examined the situation resulting from these restrictions. On the basis of this review the Canadian Government would again express its serious concern at this infringement of international Agreements to which the Governments of the United States and of Canada are parties. The Government of Canada wishes to call the attention of the Government of the United States to the effects of these measures not only on trade between the United States and Canada but also on the broad commercial policy interests of the two Governments.

The Government of Canada considers that such departures from accepted principles of commercial policy by the leading trading nation can hardly fail to weaken the force of those principles and to damage seriously the development of world trade on a constructive basis.

Both Canada and the United States, recognizing the weakening effect of continued reliance on import restrictions on economies of friendly countries, have frequently encouraged them to seek solutions to their balance of payment difficulties through increasing exports rather than curtailing imports. Actions by the United States Government such as that represented by these import restrictions tend to undermine the confidence of overseas deficit countries in their ability to approach a balance by increasing their dollar earnings. These measures may in consequence have the effect of discouraging attempts which might be made by such countries, in the face of great difficulties, to change the general direction of national policies away from reliance on discriminatory import restrictions as methods of achieving international balance.

The Government of Canada, accordingly, takes this opportunity to urge once more that the import restrictions imposed under Section 104 of the Defence Production Act of 1951 be removed as soon as possible. Text ends.

2. As Isbister has probably by now told A.E. Ritchie, the question of publicity arose. We know that some in the State Department would welcome it as helpful and it seemed to suit our interests as well. We did not want to take to the press with a protest in the immediate wake of the President's State of the Union message for reasons which will be obvious to you.

UNITED STATES IMPORT RESTRICTIONS ON DAIRY PRODUCTS

Reference: Your EX-163 of 29th January.

Our note on the new dairy restrictions was delivered this morning to Harold Linder, Assistant Secretary for Economic Affairs at the State Department.[72] It was presented by Pierce, who was accompanied by English and LePan.

2. We pointed out that the note had been deliberately cast in general terms to lay stress on the effect of these new restrictions on the broad commercial policy interests of Canada and the United States. If it had been framed more narrowly, reference might have been made, we explained, to the fact that for the five years before the war and also for the five years after the war, United States exports of agricultural products to Canada exceeded in value Canadian exports of agricultural products to the United States. Picking up this argument (which we suggested might be useful at least in dealing with Senators and representatives from agricultural areas), Linder said that he had always believed that Section 104 of the Defense Production Act was contrary even to the interests of United States agriculture.

3. This morning's radio carried a news report that the President was to meet this afternoon with Congressional leaders and members of his administration to consider extension of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act. Although we are not sure whether this report is accurate, we think it may be, since it has been announced by the White House that a group of Congressmen and officials (including Linder) is to see him this afternoon. In any event, we thought that this might be a propitious day on which to raise the other features of United States commercial policy which disturb us, in accordance with the permission given us by your telegram under reference.

4. We began by reporting that, so far as we could judge, the Canadian authorities had been encouraged by what President Eisenhower had said about foreign trade policy in his State of the Union message. On the other hand, we could not help wondering about the qualifying phrases which he had used in calling for customs simplification and also for extension of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act. Further, we wondered whether even more far-reaching action by the United States might not be required in the present circumstances. There had been a great secular change in the relative economic position of the United States. It would take time to make the adjustments which this new position required; and no doubt there would be a gap between what was ideally desirable — or even necessary — and what was within the boundaries of political possibility. This was all the more true since attention would have to be paid in the United States, as in other countries, to particular economic interests. Nevertheless, we would like to express the view that the strong creditor position of the United States made highly desirable a commercial policy going beyond the philosophy embodied in the present Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act. It was doubted in Ottawa whether the stress laid by that Act on reciprocity was entirely appropriate in present circumstances. Leaving that doubt aside, the Canadian authorities were concerned over the limitations of the Act in its present form; i.e.:

(a) Over the toughness of the present "peril points" provisions;

(b) Over the width of the escape clause; and

(c) Over the limited scope now left by the Act for further reductions in the United States tariff.

Linder said that he had no quarrel with any of these points, but that it was impossible to say at this stage whether or not the new administration would decide to support such an advance in the field of commercial policy as we had spoken of. For one thing the coming talks with the British and others might have an effect on United States policy. Parenthetically, we should perhaps explain, in making these informal representations, we were not under the illusion that any such advance is likely; but we thought that, by indicating the action which seemed to be required by the circumstances, particularly now that foreign economic assistance is probably to taper off, we would be doing whatever little we could to help some members of the administration in resisting Congressional pressure for regressive changes in the present Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act.

5. In discussing the general prospects with us, Linder said that there was yet no firm administration policy beyond that announced in the President's State of the Union message. In particular, he did not know whether the new administration would attempt to secure repeal of Section 104 of the Defense Production Act. This Act lapses, as you know, at the end of June of this year and is not to be renewed. An attempt might be made in Congress to continue Section 104 by separate legislation; but both Linder and the officials who were with him thought that a separate bill of this kind would have very little chance of being passed by Congress. A more dangerous possibility was that an attempt might be made to attach Section 104 as a rider to any bill extending the present Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act. Section 104 is reproduced in a bill which Senator Capehart has introduced, a bill calling for stand-by powers designed to replace the Defence Production Act. Linder said the administration was opposed to any legislation providing for stand-by powers.

6. Linder said that he expected the present Congress to pass both an extension of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act and a customs simplification bill. He took encouragement from the inclusion of both items, and the high priority given them, in the Congressional timetable announced yesterday by Senator Taft which we forwarded you in our today's teletype WA-359.† The important question in his mind was what would be the nature of the measures which Congress would approve. To attempt to answer that question would be very hazardous at this stage.

7. Before leaving, we pointed out the importance which we attached to the passage of a satisfactory customs simplification bill. Over and above the practical commercial advantages of such a measure, it would have an important psychological and symbolic effect as a pointer to the direction of United States commercial policy, and, as such, would do a great deal to encourage deficit countries in their efforts to increase dollar earnings. The same could be said of repeal of the "buy American" act.

8. We came away from the interview with the following main impressions:

(a) All of the most important issues of foreign trade policy are now under active consideration and probably at the highest level;

(b) Officials in the State Department with responsibilities in this field are convinced of the need for a further advance and have not yet come to the conclusion that it is out of the question;

(c) The State Department believes that the present Congress will both extend the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act and pass a customs simplification bill, although they are very uncertain what form these measures may take.

Agricultural Counsellor, Embassy in United States, to Director, International Trade Relations Branch, Department of Trade and Commerce

Washington, March 19, 1953

Dear Dr. Isbister:

US RESTRICTIONS ON IMPORTS OF DAIRY PRODUCTS

I was invited to meet, on March 18, along with representatives of Embassies of a number of other countries, Mr. Romeo E. Short, the new Director of the Foreign Agricultural Service of the US, who, I believe, is to be named an Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, to present our views with respect to Section 104 of the Defense Production Act. Besides Canada, representatives of the following countries were present, Denmark, Sweden, Netherlands, Belgium, Italy, Norway, Australia and New Zealand. Besides Mr. Short, the USDA was represented by Francis Wilcox, who has been Acting Director of FAS for the past few weeks and who will shortly return to his former position with the California Citrus Fruit organization, Rossiter, Schwenger and Floyd Davis, all of the Foreign Agricultural Service.

2. Each of us had an opportunity to say a few words but, unfortunately, Mr. Short only had one hour to listen to all of the statements. In the few minutes that were allotted to me, I emphasized in particular that, during the past number of years since the passage of the Trade Agreements Act of 1934, substantial progress has been made in the reduction of tariffs of various countries. This desirable development in the liberalization of trade has been of great advantage not only to agricultural producers of the world but to other people as well. When Section 104 was enacted, the progress towards improving trade relations between nations was halted and it has been particularly disturbing that the leading trading nation of the world should be the one which has adopted import restrictions and thereby retarded progress towards the expansion of world trade. We all spoke extemporaneously except the Netherlands representative who had a prepared statement.

3. I also pointed out that one of the results of the import restrictions was the pressures on governments to take counter measures. I said, for example, the Government of Canada has been asked to restrict the imports of cottonseed oil from the US, which is used for margarine, because Canada can produce her own butter. Apple and tomato producers have pointed out that large imports of citrus fruits are unnecessary because we can consume our own products, and so forth. I indicated that our government, as I am sure most other governments represented around the table, does not like restrictions and retaliation and it is this broad aspect of the problem that most concerned us.

4. I further indicated very briefly that Section 104 disturbed our trade with the US in cheese and manufactured milk and that, on the average of the five prewar and postwar years, Canada purchased agricultural commodities with a larger value from the US than were exported from Canada to the US. I also agreed with some of the other speakers who had spoken before me that we considered Section 104, as did the US State Department, an infringement of GATT. I stated also that Canada had presented three notes to the State Department with respect to the restrictions on dairy imports.

5. Mr. Short gave us a very sympathetic hearing. He is, by the way, a rice and cotton grower and mentioned the fact that commodities that he personally is producing find a market in Canada.

6. In concluding the short meeting, Mr. Short stated that Secretary Benson[73] is quite conscious of the problem and very sympathetic to the views of the countries concerned. He stated that on April 1st and 2nd representatives of the dairy industry have been called to a meeting in Washington by Secretary Benson to consider adjustments which must be made in the dairy industry of the US in order to avoid the purchase of great stocks of butter, cheese and manufactured milk by the US Government.

7. He, of course, stated that Section 104 is a law and the Department of Agriculture must carry out the intent of Congress. He would not predict what Congress will do with respect to the re-enactment of Section 104 but he thought the atmosphere in the US on international trade is more helpful than ever before. He is hopeful, he said, that the US Department of Agriculture will take an enlightened interest in the trade problems of other countries and the need for freer world trade. He thanked the speakers for their contributions which he said will guide himself and the USDA in respect to the matter under consideration and the whole future of trade.

8. Mr. Short also pointed out that the high price supports are giving Secretary Benson considerable concern and that changes in the agricultural programs, which are to be brought into operation by the Republican Administration, are now under very intensive study.[74]

Yours faithfully,

W.C. HOPPER

CONFIDENTIAL Washington, May 15, 1953

The Acting Secretary of State presents his compliments to His Excellency the Ambassador of Canada and has the honor to refer to his Note No. 83, dated February 10, 1953, expressing the concern of the Government of Canada regarding the intensification of import restrictions on dairy products under Section 104 of the Defense Production Act of 1950, as amended. In his note the Ambassador sets forth certain views of his Government regarding the adverse effects of these restrictions on the trade between the United States and Canada, the commercial policy interests of the two governments, the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, and on efforts of friendly countries to find solutions to their balance of payments difficulties. The Ambassador urges once more on behalf of his Government that the import restrictions imposed under Section 104 be removed as soon as possible.

The Department of State appreciates the concern expressed by the Government of Canada regarding import controls on dairy products under Section 104. The Executive Branch of this Government has opposed Section 104. In the most recent expression of its views on this subject, it was stated that Section 104 should be permitted to expire and that there should be no extension of this provision of the Defense Production Act beyond June 30, 1953, either in standby controls legislation or in other acts of Congress. However, given the standards established in Section 104 and the situation existing with respect to dairy and other products covered by the law, the Secretary of Agriculture has had no choice but to prohibit imports of some commodities entirely and to impose quota limitations on others.

There has been one other recent development regarding the matter of import controls on dairy and the other products specified by Section 104. On April 8, 1953, the President directed the Tariff Commission to institute an investigation under Section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, on dairy and the other commodities covered by Section 104 and to report by the first of June any measures which may be necessary to prevent interference with domestic agricultural programs upon the expiration of Section 104. A copy of the Ambassador's note has been transmitted to the interested officials of the Tariff Commission for their consideration in connection with this investigation.

PRESIDENT'S PROCLAMATION ON FINDINGS OF US TARIFF COMMISSION UNDER SECTION 22 RESPECTING IMPORTS OF DAIRY PRODUCTS, FATS AND OILS

Reference: My teletype No. 1157 of June 26.†

The text of a revised note to hand to the State Department follows, Text begins:

The Canadian Ambassador presents his compliments to the Secretary of State and has the honour to refer to the recent decision by the United States Government on the recommendation of the Tariff Commission to impose on July 1st severe import restrictions upon a list of important dairy products, fats and oils, under Section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act.

In this connection it will be recalled that the Secretary of State, in his note of May 15, 1953 in which he indicated appreciation of the concern of the Government of Canada regarding import controls on dairy products under Section 104 of the Defense Production Act of 1950, drew attention to the enquiry which the President had directed the Tariff Commission to undertake.

The measures which are now being introduced will involve the continuation and, in some respects, be an intensification of restrictions which have hitherto applied under Section 104 of the Defense Production Act. These import restrictions have been the subject of several communications from the Canadian Government and have been dealt with in substance at successive sessions of the Contracting Parties to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. The Canadian Government is concerned that there should be further impairment, by the Government of the United States, of the principles upon which trade between Canada and the United States has been built up to the high levels which prevail at present, to the benefit of both countries.

The Canadian Government takes note that the Presidential Proclamation of June 9 states that these new controls, under Section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, are less arbitrary than their predecessors and more in conformity with the requirements of United States foreign trade and economic policy and with the reciprocal trade agreements to which the United States is a party. The Canadian Government wishes to make clear that it does not regard these new import restrictions as any more in accordance with the Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States when they are imposed under Section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act than the restrictions imposed under Section 104 of the Defense Production Act. The Canadian Government notes that these new measures were proclaimed by the United States Government without advance consultation on the problems of joint concern which are thus created. In the view of the Canadian Government, international trade is of critical importance to the maintenance of prosperity in both countries. International trade is the essential basis also of the international co-operation which must be continued to secure our common defence. Agricultural policy has become a very sensitive matter in many countries in addition to the United States and trade in agricultural products constitutes a very important part of world trade. The Canadian Government is apprehensive, therefore, both at the spread of agricultural protectionism, and at the threat of dumping of agricultural products into the channels of world trade which is likely to accompany it.

The Canadian Government must refer in particular to the fact that these new measures have been proclaimed by the President of the United States under legislation which is permissive rather than mandatory in its terms and that this legislation has been amended since the date upon which the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade came into force. The consequences of unilateral resort to such practices, on the part of important countries, is bound to raise grave problems, not only for international trade but for the whole structure of international co-operation. Text ends.

The text of the note will be issued in a Press Release for use in all papers of Wednesday, July 1st. It will be distributed to correspondents shortly after 5.00 p.m. today.

PRESIDENT'S PROCLAMATION ON FINDINGS OF UNITED STATES TARIFF COMMISSION UNDER SECTION 22, IMPORTS OF DAIRY PRODUCTS, FATS AND OILS

Reference: Your EX-1170.

Following for Dr. C.N. Isbister, Director, International Trade Relations Branch, Dept. of Trade and Commerce, Begins: Late Tuesday afternoon, June 30th, the note, text of which was contained in your teletype EX-1170, was handed to John Leddy, Acting Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Economic Affairs.

2. Several points contained in the note were discussed. We made reference to the injurious effect of the new import restrictions on the dairy industry of Canada. We pointed out, for example, that production of Cheddar cheese available for export to the United States is confined mainly to Eastern Ontario and Western Quebec, and to the producers in these regions the import restrictions constitute a real hardship; that Canada's exports of cheese in the past have been made up largely of high quality mature long storage cheese, which sells at prices substantially above the United States support prices and the prevailing market prices of most of the United States production of Cheddar cheese; that the annual consumption of cheese in the United States is about 1.2 billion pounds and imports from Canada, even though they were as much as 12 million pounds annually, rather than about one half million pounds which is likely to be the Canadian proportion of the new import quotas under Section 22, would only represent about one percent of the total cheese consumption in the United States and, therefore, imports from Canada would have little, if any, effect on the price of United States Cheddar cheese and on the purchase of cheese by the United States Government. Leddy expressed interest in receiving factual information of this kind.

3. Leddy was not prepared to agree with the State that Section 22 is permissive legislation. The United States support price for butter, he said, is about 65 cents per pound, while outside the United States butter is selling much below this figure and, if imports were not controlled, the United States would be flooded with foreign butter. Under these circumstances, he said, it is mandatory on the President to regulate the imports of butter.

4. Leddy said further that it is believed that Section 22 is more flexible than Section 104. It is now possible for the President without asking Congress to request the Tariff Commission to review its findings under Section 22 and interested parties may make application for relief from the restrictions imposed. He expressed the hope that when Congress passes the bill to extend the Trade Agreements Act for another year something might be done to modify the restrictions under Section 22. However, his answer to a question as to how this might be accomplished was far from clear. On the matter of relaxation of import controls, he said the note appeared to say that in our opinion all restrictions were contrary to undertakings which had been entered into by our two governments.

5. Leddy disclosed that he had been surprised that the Tariff Commission had recommended such small imports of Cheddar cheese. He thought the "representative period" on which the import quotas were based did not reflect "normal" imports and in his opinion larger quotas would be justified.

6. As Leddy is interested in obtaining information on Canadian production and exports of dairy products to the United States in the past, on the injury to Canadian dairymen of the present restrictions, on the quality and price of Canadian cheese available for export to the United States, and on the relation of the volume of Canadian cheese exports to cheese consumption in the United States, it would appear desirable that a statement should be prepared which would set forth these and other relevant facts which we could hand to Leddy as a supplement to the note. Thought might also be given to the desirability of preparing another note to be presented at some later time containing such information. Ends.[75]

UNITED STATES IMPORT RESTRICTIONS ON DAIRY PRODUCTS

The plenary debate on this item took place on October 2nd. Some countries are anxious for the contracting parties to adopt a resolution on this subject. A draft has, therefore, been agreed to among all the delegations principally concerned, including the United States, and the text is contained in our immediately following telegram. Please let us know as soon as possible whether this resolution is acceptable.

2. The Americans explained the problems which have led them to the continuation of these import restrictions. Referring to studies of agricultural policies now being undertaken in the United States, they said that careful attention will be paid to the international responsibilities of the United States and they said that problems of trade in agricultural products must have an important place in reviewing session of GATT next year.

[75] Voir les documents 422, 423./See Documents 422-3.

3. A number of countries spoke in criticism of the United States, producing all the familiar arguments. By common agreement all participants avoided question whether United States is in contravention of GATT in imposing restrictions on dairy products under Section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act.

4. We participated in the debate mainly to emphasize the points which had already been made in the American statement. Our purpose was to keep this item alive but not to flog the Americans very hard at this time. Since import restrictions are still being applied, we suggested that this item be retained on the agenda for the United States Government to report again to the 9th Session of the Contracting Parties on the action which it has taken. We expressed regret that, in spite of modifications, import restrictions continue to be applied against Canadian dairy products at substantially the same level of severity as a year ago. We thanked the American delegate for his expression of regret that damage has been inflicted on other countries by the measures adopted by the United States to solve its problems. We referred to the fact that United States exports of farm products, and of dairy products in particular, have decreased drastically since they initiated these import controls. We drew the conclusion that there is a connection between this decrease in exports and the unwillingness of the United States to import since both result from the same basic agricultural policies. We concluded by referring to agricultural products as occupying a central place in world trade. Looking forward to reviewing session we said it would be difficult, if not impossible, to carry on GATT in the future unless firm understandings can be reached with respect to these questions of agricultural trade policies which are sensitive in all countries.

Following is draft resolution, Begins:

The contracting parties:

Having received the report of the United States Government requested by their resolution of November 8th, 1952, regarding certain import restrictions maintained by the United States Government;

Noting from this report that, although Section 104 of the Defence Production Act has been repealed, import restrictions of substantially the same severity continue to be applied under the United States Agricultural Adjustment Act;

Recognizing that a number of contracting parties have indicated that they continue to suffer serious damage;

Affirm the right of the affected contracting parties to have recourse to the appropriate provisions of Article XXIII while the restrictions remain in effect;

Authorize the Netherlands Government to suspend application to the United States of their obligations under the General Agreement to the extent necessary to allow them to apply a limit of sixty thousand metric tons on the import of wheat flour from the United States during the calendar year 1954;

Recommend to the United States Government that it have regard to the harmful effects on international trade relations of continued application of FAO[76] restrictions; and Request the United States Government to report, before the opening of the 9th Session, on the action it has taken.[77] Ends.

Following for GATT Delegation:

We gather from UN Press Release that this question may already have been decided. We were about to advise you that the draft resolution appeared to us to be rather weak. If most of the other delegations at Geneva shared this view, we would have been prepared to support a move to strengthen the text somewhat. One way of doing this would have been to amend the last phrase of the final paragraph to read: "On the action it has taken to alleviate the damage to other Contracting Parties".

While we would have been prepared to support a general move along these lines, we do not feel strongly about the matter, and were quite prepared to give you discretion in deciding on your course of action.

Le secrétaire d'État des États-Unis

Secretary of State of United States to Ambassador in United States

CONFIDENTIAL Washington, November 3, 1953

The Secretary of State presents his compliments to His Excellency the Ambassador of Canada and has the honor to refer to his Note No. 421, dated June 30, 1953, on the subject of the import restrictions imposed upon certain manufactured dairy and other products under Section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended.

The Ambassador refers to an earlier Exchange of Notes between our two governments with respect to the import restrictions previously in effect for these commodities under Section 104 of the Defense Production Act of 1950, as amended, and sets forth certain views of the Canadian Government regarding the continuation of these restrictions under Section 22. The Ambassador also expresses the apprehension of his Government over the possibility that surplus agricultural commodities may enter the channels of world trade in such a way as to disrupt Canada's export trade with other countries and impair her foreign exchange earnings.

The Government of the United States wishes to assure the Canadian Government that it fully recognizes the adverse effects which import restrictions may have on the high level of trade which prevails at present between the United States and Canada. This Government intends that these restrictions shall be maintained only for such time as is necessary.

A question was raised in the note of the Canadian Government with respect to the consistency of the new import restrictions imposed under Section 22 with the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. During the period that has elapsed since the note was received, the Contracting Parties have considered at their Eighth Session the import restrictions in question and have adopted a resolution on this subject. In accordance with this resolution, this Government will have regard for the harmful effect the continued application of these restrictions may have on international trade relations and will report on the action which it has taken regarding this matter before the opening of the Ninth Session.

As the Ambassador knows, the operation of our domestic agricultural programs is now under review in the United States. One of the most important issues in this field is the relationship between our domestic agricultural programs and the foreign trade objectives of the United States. It is hoped that some policy recommendations will be developed relating to this question as a result of this general review. In the case of dairy products, a special dairy industry advisory committee has been established by this Government for the purpose of considering the effects of the operation of the present price support program and to make recommendations for the solution of the surplus dairy products problem before the opening of the 1954-1955 marketing year.

With respect to the disposal of surplus agricultural products, this Government shares the concern of the Canadian Government that surplus agricultural products not be distributed in such a way as to injure the normal trade of friendly countries. It may be noted that Section 550 of the Mutual Security Act of 1953, which provides for the disposal of surplus agricultural products, specifies that special precautions shall be taken to insure against the substitution or displacement of commodities in the export trade of friendly countries through the operation of United States surplus disposal programs. It is the intention of this Government to prevent such disruption of normal trade not only with respect to surplus disposal operations under Section 550 but also under the Emergency Famine Relief Act. Moreover, the United States Government intends to consult with the Canadian or any other friendly Government whenever in doubtful cases such disposal programs might conflict with the usual trade of these countries.

UNITED STATES TARIFF QUOTAS ON CATTLE IMPORTS

Yesterday afternoon Messrs. Willoughby and Nyhus[78] of the US Embassy met in my office with a group of officials from the various departments concerned here to inform us of action which was being considered in Washington regarding the tariff quotas negotiated at Geneva.

2. As you will be aware, up to 200,000 head of cattle weighing under 200 pounds each and up to 400,000 of non-dairy cattle weighing 700 pounds each or more may be admitted into the United States during a 12-months period beginning on April 1 of any year at a duty rate of only 1½¢ per pound. This compares with the normal rate of 2½¢ per pound. In the case of the cattle weighing 700 pounds or more it is also stipulated in the concession negotiated at Geneva that, of the 400,000 admissible at the lower rate of duty, not more than 120,000 head can be admitted in any one quarter of the 12-month period. You will probably also recall that these quota limits were temporarily suspended until the termination of the unlimited national emergency proclaimed in 1941 and until the "abnormal situation" in respect of cattle and meats has also terminated.

3. Willoughby explained that the unlimited national emergency had been officially terminated about a year ago and that, in the view of US officials, the abnormal marketing situation envisaged in the original suspension had also come to an end. The general shortage of cattle and meat had now more or less disappeared as evidenced by the decline in beef prices in the United States. Accordingly, the International Trade Agreements Committee in Washington had come to the conclusion that the suspension of the quota limits could no longer be justified and they proposed to submit a recommendation to the President today (February 26) that he should declare the termination of the "abnormal situation" referred to in connection with this tariff item.

4. The point on which Willoughby and Nyhus particularly wished to consult us related to the timing of the announcement of any decision by the President on this matter. In certain quarters in Washington there is an inclination to have this announcement made at the same time as (or possibly a day or two before) the announcement regarding the opening of the US border to Canadian cattle (i.e. March 1 — or possibly February 28 or March 2 since the 1st of March is a Sunday). The termination of the suspension would then become effective 30 days thereafter which would come very near to the beginning of the quota year on April 1. Others in Washington feel that the coincidence of these two announcements might lead to misunderstandings and to charges that, while the US was opening the door with one hand, it was closing it with the other. It also seems to them to be unwise to associate an announcement concerning quarantine measures with an announcement relating to commercial policy. They consider that the US should get the full benefit from its decision to open the border before incurring criticism for reimposing tariff quotas. On balance, however, opinion in Washington appears to favour the issuance of the quota announcement separately from but simultaneously with — or shortly before — the other announcement. Those who have been concerned about the possible linking of these two actions, which might appear somewhat contradictory, are apparently coming around to the view that, while there may be some arguments against simultaneous announcements, a postponement of the quota announcement would be likely to have even more undesirable effects. The mere delay of the announcement would not really be successful in dissociating it from the opening of the border. In fact, if the quota announcement were to be made after the border had been opened, it would probably be represented by unfriendly critics as something done in response to pressure from US cattle interests who were beginning to feel the effects of the open border. If the two announcements were made about the same time the quota announcement would probably be overshadowed by the other.

[78] Paul O. Nyhus, attaché (Agriculture), ambassade des États-Unis.
Paul O. Nyhus, Agriculture Attaché, Embassy of United States.

5. The general feeling on the Canadian side was that the US would be justified by the facts of the situation and by the terms of the Geneva agreement in bringing the suspension of the tariff quotas to an end in present circumstances. It was also generally felt that it would be preferable to have the two announcements made on the same day but that it might be not too unsatisfactory if the quota announcement were to be made a day or so in advance. It was agreed that it would be most unfortunate to delay this announcement until after the border had been opened for some time (although we would certainly not wish to see the opening of the border postponed in order to allow time for the preparation of a simultaneous announcement regarding tariff quotas). The Canadian officials felt that in any explanation here of the US action on tariff quotas it would be desirable to point out that:

(a) These tariff quotas bear no resemblance to the import quotas applied by the US to dairy products, particularly since even after the limits of the quotas have been passed cattle would still be admissible at a rate of duty which would not be prohibitive.

(b) The right of the US to reimpose these tariff quotas in circumstances such as those which now existed was specifically recognized in the schedules to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

(c) The quota limits accepted by the US in the Geneva agreement are considerably more liberal than those in effect before that agreement was negotiated (in the case of heavy cattle some 400,000 head compared with 225,000 head previously).

(d) Quotas on the present scale are not likely to be exhausted by the limited volume of imports which can be expected for some time after the re-opening of the border; (the 400,000 head ceiling is likely to be adequate to accommodate normal sales to the US although in the latter part of the year some slight difficulty may result from the quarterly limit of 120,000 head).

(e) There is no tariff quota or other type of quota on imports of beef which are admissible at a moderate rate of duty. (Cattle can therefore be sold to the US freely as beef if they cannot all be sold on the hoof).

6. Willoughby undertook to give us as much advance notice as possible of the eventual timing of their announcement concerning the tariff quotas in order that steps may be taken to provide guidance to the press here. The Department of Agriculture, in consultation with Trade and Commerce, will prepare a statement or press release incorporating some of the points listed above.

7. Pearsall[79] asked whether the quotas would be divided among Canada, Mexico and other suppliers as they used to be. Willoughby said that, according to the information which he had, the quotas would be kept general for the first quarter and probably no attempt would be made to divide them by sources at least until the third quarter of the first 12-month period.

LIVESTOCK AND MEAT; REMOVAL OF IMPORT CONTROLS

1. The Minister of Trade and Commerce recommended that the control on the importation of livestock and meat into Canada, which had been provided following the imposition of the US embargo on livestock and meat from Canada, be removed at the time the US embargo was lifted.

It was pointed out that the US embargo would probably be lifted about March 3rd. The removal of the import control would not affect the prohibition on the importation of live hogs and pork which the Department of Agriculture maintained for health reasons.

2. The Cabinet approved the recommendation of the Minister of Trade and Commerce and agreed that Order-in-Council P.C. 2757 of May 30th, 1951, as amended, be further amended, effective on the date on which the US government removed the prohibition on imports of livestock and meat from Canada, by deleting the items concerning livestock and meat and meat products from the list of goods to which the Export and Import Permits Act applies; an Order-in-Council to be passed accordingly.

FOOT AND MOUTH DISEASE; LIFTING OF US EMBARGO ON CANADIAN MEAT

5. The Minister of Agriculture, referring to discussion at the meeting of February 26th, reported the US Government had removed the embargo which had been imposed against Canadian meat and meat products following the outbreak of foot and mouth disease early in 1952 in the Province of Saskatchewan; and stated that he proposed to make an appropriate announcement in the House of Commons that afternoon.

Note de la Direction économique
Memorandum by Economic Division

SALE OF NEW ZEALAND BEEF IN THE UNITED STATES FOR CANADIAN ACCOUNT

In May 1952 Canada entered into an arrangement with New Zealand and the United Kingdom whereby Canadian beef, which was bought by the Canadian Government at the price support level, was shipped to the United Kingdom in exchange for New Zealand beef which in turn was sold by Canada in the United States. Canada initiated the negotiations which led to this agreement because of rapidly accumulating stocks of beef owing to the embargo placed by the United States on imports of Canadian livestock and meat at the time of the outbreak of foot and mouth disease in Saskatchewan.

2. Under the Agreement the United Kingdom paid New Zealand in sterling at the existing New Zealand-United Kingdom contract rates, and Canada received the proceeds from the sale of the New Zealand product in the United States. As the New Zealand meat had to be exported frozen, it was evident that it would realize less in the United States than would have been received for the fresh Canadian product. However, as the normal plans of the United Kingdom and New Zealand for meat deliveries were upset by the arrangement, Canada undertook to recompense New Zealand for the trouble involved and to share with New Zealand half of the difference between the United Kingdom contract price for New Zealand beef and the price obtained in the United States market. All three countries benefited from the arrangement, Canada obtained an enlarged market for surplus beef and a difficult marketing problem was substantially eased; New Zealand received a higher return for her meat; and the United Kingdom benefited with an increased meat supply because the additional revenue which accrued to New Zealand was used to purchase more meat in Canada for the United Kingdom.

3. A number of difficulties in merchandising the beef in the United States resulted in sales being extended over a rather protracted period. In addition to the problem of marketing frozen carcass beef where consumers are used to fresh beef, the United States price level for beef was falling at this time. The Office of Price Stabilization grading requirements occasioned certain additional delays. During the period August to November 1952 some 59.5 million pounds of New Zealand beef was shipped to the United States under the scheme. In May 1953, 3 million pounds remained unsold in the United States. A final accounting on the financial loss to the Canadian Government from this arrangement therefore is not yet possible but it is evident that the whole operation was not particularly profitable although it probably cut our losses from what they would have been if no other marketing arrangement had been made. The Canadian Government and people have greatly appreciated the helpfulness of the United Kingdom and New Zealand Governments in making the arrangement.

EXPORT OF NATURAL GAS: WESTCOAST TRANSMISSION COMPANY: FPC PROCEEDINGS

2. Briefly, the background of the situation is as follows: The Westcoast Transmission Company Limited has obtained an Order from the Board of Transport Commissioners to construct a pipeline from the Northern Alberta and Northern British Columbia area to Vancouver and to the United States boundary, for the transmission and export of gas. The area of the source of this gas is the newly proven field straddling the Alberta-British Columbia boundary, stretching north of the Peace River almost to the Northern borders of the provinces. There is no market in Canada for the gas in this very extensive field as it would be more economical to supply the built-up areas of Alberta as well as other areas in Canada from the Southern Alberta gas fields. Moreover, the oil in the area could not be tapped without allowing the gas to escape in the process. In these circumstances, the gas must either be wasted or exported to the Northwestern United States and to the relatively small market in Vancouver.

3. The difficulty the Federal Power Commission is faced with in licencing the arrangements for importing this gas into the Northwestern United States arises from the provisions of the Electricity and Fluids Exportation Act and regulations which were drafted to meet entirely different situations but which require that export licences be issued on an annual renewable basis and which provide for the levying of an export tax at the discretion of the Minister of Trade and Commerce of up to one-third of the value of the commodity at the border. In these circumstances, it has been argued before the FPC that the Commission cannot be sure that Westcoast will be able to carry gas across the border beyond the end of each fiscal year in which the licence is issued and in view of the possible export tax, Westcoast cannot establish a firm price. The FPC, on the other hand, is required to find that gas will be available in sufficient quantities, for a sufficient period and at a price which will enable the company and the distribution agency to amortize its investment over a 20-year period.

4. It would appear that it is in the national interest of Canada to support Westcoast's application to the FPC and this has already been done to a limited extent when the Embassy in Washington, after discussions with Mr. Howe, sent a note to the State Department stating that the Canadian Government "regards favourably the proposal of the Westcoast Transmission Company" and that an export permit would be issued. However, it now appears that something more than this is required and the attached letter† suggests that we will co-operate with Trade and Commerce in this regard.

IMPORT OF NATURAL GAS TO CANADA

Reference: EX-539 of March 28.

Following for Mr. Howe from the Ambassador, Begins: The Federal Power Commission has before it an application by the Tennessee Gas Transmission Company and by the Niagara Gas Transmission Limited to export United States natural gas to Canada. However, the FPC has not yet taken any decision on the matter.

2. The Niagara Gas Transmission Limited is a Canadian concern with offices at 55 Adelaide Street, E., Toronto. The application before the FPC requests a permit for the exportation by the Tennessee Gas Transmission Company of natural gas from the Gulf Coast area to the Niagara Gas Transmission Limited in Canada, for the purpose of serving Toronto, Hamilton, Ottawa, Montreal, and other cities in Ontario and Quebec. This application was submitted in March 1952. A companion application requests authority to construct and operate facilities costing about $45 million at the International Boundary near Niagara for delivery of the natural gas to the Niagara Gas Transmission Limited.

3. These applications to export natural gas to Canada were initially consolidated for the purposes of the hearings with the Westcoast Transmission Company's application to import natural gas from Alberta and British Columbia to Washington and Oregon. Later in 1952 the two cases were severed for administrative convenience. They still remain separate, but the Tennessee Gas Transmission Company's application has been consolidated with other applications by the same company having to do with the transmission of natural gas to the New England States. In its application, the Tennessee Company has attempted to tie in its case with the Westcoast Transmission Company's application. It states:

"Even if it were feasible to build a pipeline from the Alberta fields across Canada to these markets in Ontario and Quebec, such a project would preclude the use of Alberta reserves to supply Pacific Coast markets which logically should be served from these reserves."

4. The TransCanada PipeLines Limited of Calgary, Alberta, has been an active intervenor in the Tennessee Company's application. It filed in 1952 a number of unsuccessful motions to dismiss the application, and stated that it intended to construct a 2100 mile pipeline from Alberta to Montreal and Ottawa at a cost of $253 million, thus serving the area in question.

5. Petitions to intervene were also filed by the Union Gas Company of Canada, the British Columbia Electric Company Limited, and the Quebec Hydro-Electric Power Commission. We have not yet been able to ascertain what attitude, if any, these concerns have taken in this case.

6. The present position of the Tennessee Company's application is as follows: Hearings in the FPC are presently continuing on the New England gas transmission cases with which the application to export gas to Canada has been consolidated. When these hearings are terminated, probably by April 6, or April 13, the hearings on the export of natural gas to Canada, will be commenced. Ends.

IMPORTANT

Following from C.D. Howe to Canadian Ambassador Washington, Begins: With reference to the application of Westcoast Transmission Company Limited, Calgary, first export licence issued by Federal Government called for a renewal annually. It is appreciated that this is causing difficulty in the case of export of natural gas, where a long-term investment by the purchaser is necessary.

2. The Canadian Electricity and Fluid Exportation Act regulations were designed to govern export of electricity and fluids such as oil or wood pulp in solution and it was appreciated that revision of the regulations was desirable to govern export of natural gas.

3. Consequently the regulations issued under authority of the Electricity and Fluid Exportation Act have been revised by Order-in-Council of fourteenth April to provide that every licence shall be valid for such period as may be specified by the licence.

4. A new export licence is being issued to Westcoast Transmission Company Limited under today's date in form similar to licence now in their possession except that term of the licence is for twenty-two (22) years. The effect will be that any purchaser will be guaranteed a firm contract covering supply of gas from Peace River area of British Columbia and Alberta for twenty-two (22) years.

5. Am mailing you today certified copy of following documents:

1. The FPC hearings of which we informed you are expected to begin on April 20 to consider the application by Tennessee Gas and by the Niagara Gas Transmission companies to export gas to Canada. The course of the hearings will probably be:— companies' testimony; consideration of the question of transmission to New England; a recess of about two weeks; cross-examination; rebuttal; and finally the Examiner's report or direct argument before the Commissioners probably some time in May.

2. We have not had a chance to oppose the application actively and I do not read your message as asking that of us. The situation is that a private United States company is asking the Federal Power Commission for the right to export natural gas from the United States. The FPC is likely to grant the right to export if they find that the gas is surplus to United States needs, much as the Westcoast Transmission Co. Ltd. has been licensed to export from Canada gas surplus to Canadian needs. In both countries, of course, the question of whether gas should be imported and who should distribute it is argued before the proper domestic authorities, taking into account the domestic supply and demand position and the merits of the competing claims for the market. This is the sort of battle in which Westcoast Transmission is now engaged before the FPC.

3. Open intervention by the Canadian Government against the Tennessee Company's attempt to get from its own government the right to export would not be likely to affect the issue much, and it might hurt the Westcoast Company in its fight to enter the United States market.

4. In any event, TransCanada PipeLines Ltd. is an active intervenor and it could put the facts before the FPC. Furthermore we are told the Tennessee Company has its hands full servicing areas in the United States, so that there is a good chance the FPC will decide there is nothing to spare for export.

Following for the Ambassador from Howe:

1. Thanks for your despatch of April 16th regarding hearings on application of Tennessee Gas to export gas to Canada.

2. While we hope that application will not be approved since it would tend to delay gas line from Alberta to Toronto I do not recommend any intervention on your part. I agree with your suggestion that intervention would be harmful to application of Westcoast Transmission Company Limited.

3. I am told that new appointment to FPC is favourable both to New York State application and to Westcoast Transmission Company Limited. Perhaps you will think it wise to call on him and discuss Canada's interest in these two applications.

We in Canada that are responsible for national policy on distribution of natural gas from Canadian sources are disturbed by possibility that Tennessee Transmission may receive authority from Federal Power Commission to deliver gas in Toronto. Premier Frost of Ontario and his officials have made representations to me but I have had to say that there is no federal law that justifies this Government in intervening at Washington hearings. If you can see your way to indicate informally to members of FPC the Canadian attitude it would be helpful. The Ontario Government requests that steps be taken to have the Federal Power Commission's decision on the application of the Tennessee Transmission Co. and the Niagara Pipe Lines Co. to bring natural gas to Ontario be postponed until it is finally determined whether it is economically feasible to bring Alberta gas to Ontario. Unquote.

Mr. Howe has asked that this message be forwarded to you immediately as Mr. Ross Tolmie of Ottawa, who will be in Washington today, would like to discuss the subject with you.

2. For your own information, Mr. Howe has given us the text of Mr. Frost's telegram under cover of a memorandum to the Under-Secretary as follows: Quote

Enclosed is a copy of a telegram from Premier Frost which should, in my opinion, be transmitted to the Federal Power Commission. Mr. Frost wrote an earlier letter which was too vague to be important, but now he seems to have made up his mind.

There is no doubt that service from the Tennessee Transmission Company to the City of Toronto would seriously interfere with the projected trans-Canada pipeline from Alberta. Any steps that External Affairs feels could be appropriately taken to delay the application by Tennessee Transmission Company would, in my opinion, be justified. Unquote.

NATURAL GAS — APPLICATION OF THE TENNESSEE TRANSMISSION COMPANY AND THE NIAGARA PIPE LINE LIMITED TO THE FEDERAL POWER COMMISSION

Reference: Our WA-1911 of August 6.

We received late yesterday copy of FPC's opinion No. 261 authorizing the Tennessee Gas Transmission Company and the Niagara Gas Transmission Limited to export natural gas from the United States to Canada and to construct and operate the necessary facilities in accordance with their amended joint application. The opinion was adopted on August 27 and issued September 1st. Commissioner Smith filed a dissenting opinion.

2. The FPC's opinion specifies among other conditions that the export authorization will not become effective "unless and until a Presidential Permit is issued".

3. Dean Brown from the State Department explained to us that this condition is "formal" one which is always included in FPC's approvals of international projects coming under the United States Natural Gas Act. The Presidential Permit is normally issued approximately at the same time as the FPC's order. In this case, however, it has not yet been issued and due to some minor changes suggested by the State Department [to] the draft Presidential Permit prepared by the FPC, it may take some time before the Permit is issued. Brown made clear that there is no doubt as to the issuance itself and that, further, the Permit will involve no substantial changes [to] the FPC's authorization.

4. Referring to contentions that such gas export might impair or destroy the economic feasibility of an all-Canadian pipeline across Canada from Alberta, the Commissioners state that "they have no jurisdiction or authority over such a pipeline" and that their "decisions under the Natural Gas Act obviously cannot extend to those essential determinations. . . ."

5. Mr. Howard, from Covington and Burling told us that although he is not particularly conversant with this gas export application he thinks the usual FPC rules of procedure will apply and that, therefore, opponents, if there are any, will have thirty days to file their petitions for rehearing. He could not say, however, if these thirty days would be counted as from the date of the issuance of the FPC's opinion or as from the date of the issuance of the Presidential Permit.

6. We have forwarded to you a copy of the FPC's opinion by bag to-day. We have also forwarded copies of letters and teletypes sent by Mr. N.R. Chappell to Dr. John Davis of Defence Production.

In accordance with a request made by Cox to LePan over the telephone yesterday, we are forwarding in our immediately following teletype the text of Executive Order No. 10485 of the 9th of September.† You will see that the effect of this order is to make it unnecessary for the President to issue permits for the export of electric power or natural gas and to vest final authority for issuing permits in the hands of the Federal Power Commission, provided that it has obtained favourable recommendations from the Secretary of State and the Secretary of Defense.

2. In the case of the application from the Tennessee Gas Transmission Company, concurrence in writing from the Departments of State and Defense to the issuance of a permit had been obtained before the FPC's order was issued on the first of September. (When we sent our previous telegram on this subject, the State Department did not know that the Department of Defense had already concurred.) Moreover, on the 11th of September the FPC under the enlarged authority granted it on the 9th of September issued a permit to the Tennessee Gas Transmission Company for the "construction, maintenance and connection of facilities at the United States-Canadian border for the export of natural gas to Canada". So far as the FPC and the Executive Branches of the United States Government are concerned, the matter is now concluded, except for consideration by the FPC of the application for rehearing which was filed by TransCanada PipeLines Limited on the 9th of September. It is expected that this application will be denied.

NATURAL GAS; DOMESTIC AND EXPORT POLICY

1. The Prime Minister said he had discussed with the Premier of Alberta the question of outlets for natural gas produced in that province.

The Petroleum and Natural Gas Conservation Board had concluded its hearings on the possible eastward movement of gas in Canada and its export to the United States. A report from the Board to the government of Alberta could be expected in a few weeks.

Mr. Manning agreed that it would be in the national interest for gas produced in Canada to be used, as far as possible, by Canadians but he doubted whether those concerned in the all-Canadian pipeline project could secure adequate financial backing for their enterprise. In the circumstances, it might be wise for the various potential operators to consider merging their activities. The market in southwestern Ontario, and particularly in the Toronto area, was a substantial factor in affecting any decision on the movement of gas from Alberta. Pending construction of an all-Canadian pipeline, the Premier thought a barter arrangement with United States interests might be considered. The Minneapolis area could take substantial quantities of gas from Canadian sources and, in return, the Toronto area might be supplied from the United States. In this connection, the Consumers Gas Company had bought gas in situ in the United States and were contemplating the employment of a Tennessee gas company to pipe it to the Toronto area. Meanwhile, as substantial quantities of gas were not being used, wells were being capped, exploration was slowing down and funds in the United States and Canada for investment in Alberta were not being employed. When the report of the Board was received, Mr. Manning would like to discuss the whole matter again with Federal authorities.

2. In the course of discussion, it was pointed out that the Consumers Gas Company of Toronto had only purchased an option on the gas in the United States. The proposal whereby the Minneapolis area would be temporarily provided with Canadian gas would involve construction of a pipeline some 400 miles in length. Such an investment would mean that gas would have to go to that market over a good many years in order to pay for it. For that and other reasons a gas supply on an uninterruptible basis for some years would have to be assured.

3. The Cabinet noted the report of the Prime Minister on discussions he had had with the Premier of Alberta concerning the possible movement of gas from Alberta to Eastern Canada and to the United States.

LEAD AND ZINC DUTIES

Following for Mr. Howe from the Ambassador, Begins: Acting on your letter of April 17, we called on the State Department and emphasized our great concern at the harm which measures now before Congress threatened generally to our trade and to our trade relations with the United States and specifically to producers of lead and zinc.

2. Pierce, LePan and Allen[80] saw Harold F. Linder, Assistant Secretary of State for Economic Affairs at the State Department on April 24. They did not have to convince Linder that the present measures would be harmful to us, to others and to the United States itself. Linder was a most vigorous, courageous and effective spokesman for freer trade in his recent appearances before Congressional Committees. Hence we did not have to repeat the general arguments against the Simpson and other measures or the specific arguments against the provisions relating to increasing the lead and zinc duties. We could and did associate ourselves with the arguments which Linder himself had ably advanced.

3. We did, in addition, point out to Linder that the proposals to increase lead and zinc duties were glaringly inconsistent as well with the accepted principles of the industrial defence of our two countries. We recalled that it was only a few months ago that Charles Wilson, Manly Fleischmann,[81] Samuel Anderson,[82] Joe Fowler[83] and many others concerned with the United States defence effort had urged Canada with great insistence to increase the supply of critical materials, including lead and zinc, to the United States; to remove all possible obstacles to the flow of these materials across the border; and to divert to the United States from established long-standing markets. Special meetings of the Joint Industrial Mobilization Committee had been held and special visits to Canada. We recalled to Linder that voicing the fears of our producers who were mindful of the past, we had questioned whether the United States interest was likely to persist beyond the most critical period. We were assured at that time that since the dependence of the United States upon outside sources for raw materials had now been recognized, its attitude had once and for all changed, and we could now reasonably count on the United States as a continuing market.

4. But Linder needed no convincing. He said he would, and we are sure he will, do everything he can to defeat the legislation. He assured us the entire administration is opposed to it in varying degrees.

5. In answer to our question, he thought it would not be helpful for us to make further or more formal protests at this time. He added, though, that the time might come when such protests would be useful. Nonetheless he considered that it would be timely and fitting if the Prime Minister mentioned Canada's concern to the President during his visit.

6. Linder asked us to give the State Department all the information we could on the effect of the increase of duties on Canadian exports and on the Canadian industry. Allen is handling this end of the question directly with Trade and Commerce.

7. While it is a help to have the administration with us, we cannot minimize the strength of the proponents. The father of the scheme is said to be Felix Wormser recently appointed Assistant Secretary of the Interior in charge of mineral resources. He is a former Vice President of the St. Joseph Lead Company and more recently was head of the United States Lead and Zinc Association. These proposals are a culmination of two years of lively lobbying in which Wormser played a major role. Further, the membership of the House Ways and Means Committee includes a majority of Republicans whose voting record is protectionist. And above all, the State Department confirms that the United States lead and zinc producers do seem to have been seriously hurt by falling prices.

8. The Australians, Yugoslavs, Mexicans and the United Kingdom also have expressed their fears in more or less similar representations to the State Department. Ends.

2. He is trying to gauge the impact on all supplying countries and urgently needs figures covering such aspects as employment, percentage dependency on the United States as an outlet and other details bearing on the subject. It occurs to me that some estimate of United States investment interest in the main supplies would also be useful, rough as it might have to be on such short notice. Following is text of Mr. Howe's letter of April 17 referred to in our above mentioned teletype, and copy of letter from Mr. Stavert to Mr. Howe, Begins:

Dear Mr. Wrong:

Enclosed is a copy of letter, addressed to myself, from Mr. R.E. Stavert, President of Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company Limited, regarding four bills introduced into Congress designed to raise the tariffs against Canadian lead and zinc.†

It would seem to me that any of these bills would represent a direct violation of the United States commitments under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, and that, therefore, the bills are not likely to succeed. I would, however, appreciate your own opinion, from information available to you.

As Canada is a major supplier to the United States of both metals, an increase in duty as drastic as that proposed would have serious repercussions in this country. I am receiving visits from labour delegations asking for Canadian intervention to prevent the passage of these bills. However, I am sure you will do anything that can be done in that connection.

Your early advice will enable me to reply to Mr. Stavert's letter.

LEAD AND ZINC DUTIES

Reference: Your WA-1024, April 27th — and Allen's same date.[85]

For J.H. English from C.M. Isbister, Begins: We are in complete agreement with the arguments given to the State Department on April 24th by Messrs. Pierce, Le-Pan and Allen.

2. An extract from Hansard containing Mr. Byrne's[86] speech and two newspaper commentaries have been forwarded by air. We are also sending by air an extract from "E & M J Metal & Mineral Markets" which argues strongly the case for not introducing higher tariffs on lead and zinc.

3. The information which follows provides specific answers to the questions asked in Allen's teletype of April 27th. The material is dealt with in the following order: 1) the proportion of the Canadian lead and zinc mining and refining industry engaged in exporting to the United States, 2) what effects the imposition of higher duties might have on the Canadian industry, 3) United States investment in lead and zinc mining in Canada and 4) United States dependence on foreign suppliers for defence and civilian requirements.

4. In 1952 Canada exported 60 percent of its entire lead output and 29 percent of its zinc output to the United States. Of the 10,600 persons employed by the industry nearly half are engaged in producing for export to that country.

5. Canadian lead and zinc producers have already been hard hit by the slump in prices. Some 1,500 employees have been discharged during recent months and a number of mines have suspended operations completely. Other mines and smelters are operating at greatly reduced levels.

6. If the proposed higher duties were applied many more mines would be forced to close and only the most efficient operations could continue. It is almost certain that the present number of workers unemployed would be increased by several thousand. Much of the 25 million dollars loaned by the Canadian government and the millions of private capital which have been invested in exploration and development would be largely lost. Many of the new developments, such as the 7 million dollar Barvue Mine at Chibougamau, Quebec which is heavily dependent on long term contracts with the American Smelting Company, would face extreme difficulties in continuing operations.

7. It is estimated that it would take at least 12 months to bring operations back to even their present levels following such a curtailment. Secondly, all exploration would cease. The Canadian industry would be placed in a most uncertain position and would seek markets elsewhere. Should a future emergency arise it would be most difficult to convince the industry that it should divert supplies to the United States. During the wartime emergency Canada did divert substantial quantities of lead and zinc from traditional markets so that it could make greater supplies available to the United States. As a result, exports to the United States increased from 8.2 million lbs. of lead in 1939 to 153 million lbs. in 1942. Zinc shipments increased from 14 million lbs. to 163 million lbs. during the same periods.

8. It is already known that United States interests wholly own stock in Canadian lead and zinc concerns which produce over 20 percent of total output in this country. There is probably substantial United States investment in other companies but it is not possible to obtain accurate data.

9. The United States is highly dependent on foreign supplies of both lead and zinc. Between 1948 and 1952 imports of lead ranged from 36 to 90 percent of United States consumption. Over the same period imports of zinc ranged from 44 to 63 percent of domestic consumption. Canada is one of the leading suppliers of both metals.

10. In 1951 the United States Bureau of Mines listed lead as one of the essential materials respecting which the United States was becoming progressively less self-sufficient. With respect to this situation the President's Materials Policy Commission (Paley Report) says "In view of the growing dependence of the United States on foreign sources of lead and the desirability of encouraging production abroad a reimposition of the tariff on lead seems unjustified for the long run."

11. The American Metal Co. points out, in the E & M J Metal & Mineral Markets article referred to above, that "The United States has been explored more thoroughly than other countries in the western hemisphere and we do not know of any large potential increase in the production of lead and zinc in the United States. Despite the incentives of war needs, including the premium price plan, and the period of high prices following the war, domestic production failed signally to supply full domestic needs." Ends.

SECRET [Ottawa], April 30, 1953

PROPOSED INCREASE IN US ZINC AND LEAD DUTIES

In a tactical move on behalf of protectionist-minded US interests, Rep. Simpson (R.-Pa.) introduced a Bill into the US Congress which, while providing for extension of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act for one year, contains a large number of restrictive features. Among these measures, some would strengthen the force of the "peril point" examinations of the US Tariff Commission (which are designed to prevent "excessive" reductions in tariffs) and others would limit certain specific imports. With respect to lead and zinc the bill prohibits further tariff concessions and imposes sliding-scale stabilization duties on imports. This formula ensures that domestic production will be sold at guaranteed prices before imports could come in on a competitive basis. Imports would thus be limited to times of shortage. The Simpson Bill is known to be opposed by the President (although possibly not by his Assistant Secretary of the Interior), in part because Eisenhower wants the RTAA prolonged without modification. However the lead and zinc interests have also introduced three separate bills all of which solely provide for these special provisions for lead and zinc.

2. The present duties on refined lead and zinc, in which we are primarily interested, are 1.06¼ cents and .70 cents per pound respectively, and the bills propose that, if the domestic price of either lead or zinc goes below 15½ cents per pound, then there shall be added to the present duty on such metal a duty of 1 cent per pound plus a sliding scale of duties which roughly provides that additional duty be added to the extent that the market price of each metal falls short of 15½ cents. At present market prices in the United States, this would mean that the duty would be about 5 cents per pound and 6 cents per pound on refined lead and zinc respectively, and at these prices would effectively bar shipment of these metals from Canada into the United States. The sliding scale of duties to be imposed would not be subject to modification or suspension by foreign trade agreements or otherwise.

3. As the US tariff on lead and zinc is bound under our trade negotiations with the US in the GATT, implementation of any of the bills would be a violation of the General Agreement. Moreover, an increase in duty as proposed in these bills would, as indicated above, have very serious repercussions on Canadian Industry.

4. Bearing in mind the success of the agricultural interests in obtaining protection and the apparent strength of the protection-minded faction in Congress, we cannot await the defeat of this effort with certainty. Mr. Howe is very concerned about the possibility of some measure of protection being instituted and the President of the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company has been in touch with him. Consideration has therefore been given to the possibility of taking some appropriate retaliatory action.

5. On April 27th Mr. V.A. Byrne (Kootenay East) spoke in the House on this problem. (Mr. Byrne's intervention was not without some encouragement from Trade and Commerce.) He vigorously protested against these efforts and introduced a resolution suggesting that more or less as retaliation the Canadian Government "should consider introducing legislation for the imposition of export duties on nickel and asbestos". Mr. Byrne also suggested that any duties should operate at a high level and should fluctuate upward whenever the escalator provisions of the United States tariff operate to increase their duties on lead and zinc.

6. From our point of view there is no harm and there might well be some benefit in airing this problem. Careful consideration would have to be given to the desirability of resorting to an export tax as a measure of retaliation. The provisions of the GATT provide for the withdrawal of equivalent concessions but whether an export tax could be justified and whether it could be applied in a discriminatory manner against the US without infringing the General Agreement would have to be examined before any such action were taken. The general implications for our trade relations with the US also would have to be considered.[87]

US TARIFF COMMISSION INVESTIGATION INTO LEAD AND ZINC IMPORTS

On the 27th of July the Senate Finance Committee approved a Committee resolution calling on the US Tariff Commission to investigate and submit a report by March 31st, 1954, on the effect of lead and zinc imports on the domestic mining industry.

2. The resolution is undoubtedly the result of the agitation of the domestic industry in connection with the provisions for sliding scale stabilization duties incorporated in the defeated Simpson Bill (HR 4294, subsequently re-numbered HR 5496 and 5894) as well as a number of individual bills introduced by various Western representatives and Senators similarly to amend Part I of Title III of the Tariff Act of 1930.[88]

The weekly meeting with Hayden Raynor which took place on Wednesday, May 13, covered the following subjects:

Prime Minister's Visit — Economic Committee

2. Raynor reverted to the question of the establishment of a joint Canada-United States economic board[89] and said that as a result of a perusal of the record of the White House talks, it was the State Department understanding that there were two problems which required following up:

(a) the establishment of the joint board as suggested by Mr. Pearson,

(b) the exploration of the possibility of free trade or a customs union — as suggested from the United States side.

There was also a question of procedure involved for it would have to be decided whether these two problems would be considered separately or together. If they were to be considered together, the exploration of the possibility of free trade or customs union could be made a major function of the new board. I made no comment on Raynor's remarks but merely said that we were seeking guidance from Ottawa on the question of establishing a board which had been raised by Mr. Pearson at the White House meeting. I passed this information on promptly to Mr. LePan.

PROPOSED JOINT ECONOMIC BOARD

When going over with Livingston Merchant the record of the meetings between the Prime Minister and President Eisenhower at the White House last week, I learned that the State Department would like to go ahead immediately with planning the setting up of the Joint Economic Board which was suggested at these meetings. In fact they regard the President's remarks as amounting to a directive to the State Department to explore this idea.

2. As a first step, the State Department have been thinking of setting up an interdepartmental committee in Washington to consider the possible functions and composition of such a board. This preliminary planning group would include, presumably, representatives from the Treasury, and the Departments of Agriculture and Commerce. The possibility was also mentioned to us of bringing Willoughby down from the United States Embassy in Ottawa to participate in the planning.

3. As it seemed to me undesirable to have this type of United States study proceed to the point where we might be faced with crystallized United States thinking before our own views were developed, I suggested that they should postpone the setting up of their group for at least two weeks to enable us to present some preliminary views on the functions and composition which might be contemplated. This was agreed, though with some reluctance, because the State Department naturally take very seriously the President's warm response to the idea when it was put forward.

4. I therefore regard it as a matter of importance to receive as quickly as possible an outline of your thinking on the possible functions and composition of the proposed board to give to the State Department. I should also be glad to know whether you think that we should try to arrange that someone from my staff should sit down with representatives of the State Department from the outset in considering plans for the proposed board.

PROPOSED JOINT ECONOMIC BOARD BETWEEN CANADA AND THE UNITED STATES

Following from the Minister.

1. I have discussed your message with the Prime Minister and we are both strongly of the view that the question of a free trade area is not one that should be pursued through the proposed Joint Economic Board or at this time through any other channel. You will recall that when this subject was mentioned in our conversations in Washington we made it clear that our interest was in promoting more liberal trade throughout the free world. In this connection you might refer to page 6 of the draft record of the first meeting which reports the Prime Minister as follows: "The Prime Minister, referring to the suggestion of a special tariff relationship with Canada, said that it was important to avoid doing anything which would keep others out. The problem, in his judgment, had to be viewed in the light of the needs of the whole free world, which should be constantly kept in mind." The record goes on to indicate that Mr. Humphrey agreed with these views of the Prime Minister. Our general views and the objectives which we had in mind were set forth at some length in the memorandum which the Prime Minister left with the President.

2. With reference to your paragraph 6 in which you make certain recommendations, we agree that you should at once remind the State Department that the somewhat casual way in which this matter was raised by Mr. Wilson did not constitute a discussion and therefore no public reference of any kind should in our opinion be made to this matter as one arising out of our visit to Washington.

3. As you will be aware, our general conception of any joint economic body is that it should be primarily concerned with ironing out difficulties and preventing actions which might give rise to irritations in trade matters between the two countries. We would hope to let you have within the next week further preliminary views on the possible nature and functions of any such body.

PROPOSED JOINT ECONOMIC BOARD BETWEEN CANADA AND THE UNITED STATES

Reference: Your teletype EX-853 of the 14th May.

In accordance with your instructions, Pierce and LePan called yesterday afternoon at the State Department on Livingston Merchant, Assistant Secretary for European Affairs, who, as you will remember, was present at the meeting in the White House on the 8 of May when Mr. Wilson referred to the possibility of a free trade area between Canada and the United States. We explained that, as you and the Prime Minister recalled the meeting at the White House, although there had been discussion of the proposal for a joint economic board between Canada and the United States, casual reference only had been made to the possibility of a free trade area or customs union between the two countries; no public mention, therefore, of any kind should be made of this matter as one arising out of the Prime Minister's visit to Washington. We also let Merchant read the full text of your message.

2. Merchant was most sympathetic and grasped our points very readily. He said that the United States record of the meeting at the White House had been marked secret, and he fully agreed that it should not be disclosed publicly that any reference had been made to the possibility of free trade between the two countries. On the other hand, he felt that what the President had said on the subject called for study of it within the United States Government. We replied that of course we could have no quarrel with that interpretation. But we pointed out that it would not be possible at this time for Canadian representatives to participate in any joint consideration of the possibility of a free trade area. Merchant said that he fully understood our position on that point.

3. Summing up, we said that we would like to stress three things:

(a) We wished it to be kept completely secret that there had been any reference made at the meeting at the White House on the 8 May to the possibility of a free trade area between Canada and the United States.

(b) The Canadian authorities could not for the present participate in any joint study of this possibility.

(c) In the interests of secrecy, we hoped that internal consideration within the United States Government of the proposal for a joint economic board should be kept separate from whatever consideration the United States authorities might wish to give to the possibility of a free trade area or customs union between Canada and the United States.

4. In outlining their tentative plans for considering the proposal for a joint economic board, Merchant said that, since you had informally put forward this proposal, they had decided not to arrange any inter-agency study of the issue until at least the preliminary views of the Canadian Government on the possible composition and functions of the proposed board had been received. At that stage it would probably be desirable to establish an inter-agency committee in Washington. The views of this committee as they were developed would be communicated to us, and Merchant expressed the hope that developing Canadian views would also be fed through the Embassy to the inter-agency committee.

5. We gathered that the State Department had not yet formulated even tentative views on how consideration should be given within their own governmental system to the possibility of a free trade area. However, Merchant indicated that, for the time being at least, there was no idea of submitting this subject to an inter-agency committee. We were also given to understand that study of this question would be part of wider investigations of how best to free trade and would not be made to appear as being carried out in pursuance of the reference made to it during the meeting between the Prime Minister and the President. Merchant also assured us that he did not think examination of the possibility of a free trade area between the two countries should be included in the mandate of the proposed joint economic board.

6. Before leaving, we said that we want it to be clearly understood that we were in no way passing judgment on the issue of free trade between Canada and the United States. But whatever merit the possibility might or might not have, it could not be the subject of joint consideration at the present time.

PROPOSED CANADIAN-US JOINT ECONOMIC BODY

1. Consideration has now been given to the views that might be expressed to the State Department on this subject. From the statement made by the Prime Minister in the House of Commons on May 9th[91] and from the record of the White House discussions, it would seem that the body, if it were set up, would be of a consultative character the purpose of which would be to exchange information and views for the benefit of the two governments. The body would be concerned primarily with avoiding, or ironing out, difficulties.

[91] Voir Canada, Débats de la Chambre des communes, session 1952-1953, volume V, 9 mai, pp. 5364-5367, 5372-5373.

2. We are suggesting below terms of reference which you might now discuss with the State Department. We recognize that these proposed terms of reference are limited in scope. Such limitations seem to us to be desirable since we are most anxious that the body should not be given functions which go beyond the effective powers of execution of either side.

3. In putting forward these suggestions we are not pre-judging whether in fact it will be found desirable to establish a joint body. You will recall that the understanding reached in the White House talks was that the question should be explored. We feel that a conclusion regarding the desirability of setting up any such body probably might best be reached after some consideration has been given to possible terms of reference. The following are the terms of reference which we would propose as a basis for discussion:

Name:

Joint United States-Canada Committee on Trade Questions.

Functions:

1. To exchange information and views on matters which might affect the operation of present trade agreements under which a high level of mutually profitable trade has been built up;

2. To consider other questions affecting harmonious trade relations between the two countries;

3. To report to their respective governments on such discussions in order that consideration might be given to appropriate measures to encourage the flow of trade.

Composition:

It is considered that representation should be by members of Cabinet. It would seem to us that the appropriate number might be four from each side. In the case of Canada the members would probably be: the Ministers of Trade and Commerce, of Finance, and of Agriculture, and the Secretary of State for External Affairs. If the designated Cabinet members were unable to attend they would appoint alternates. (In our view alternates should be at the Assistant Secretary level at least.)

Procedures:

Meetings would normally take place twice a year — alternately in Washington and Ottawa — but with the understanding that the timing and frequency of meetings would depend on whether conditions made it advisable for meetings to be held at any particular time. It is not envisaged that the Committee would require a separate or continuing secretariat. Each side would provide any secretarial assistance which may be required at the meetings. A Canadian member of the Committee would be chairman when meetings were held in Ottawa, and a United States member when meetings were held in Washington.

Any public announcement regarding the establishment of the Committee might usefully state that the activities of the Committee would of course be fully consistent with the interests of both countries in promoting satisfactory trade relations on a multilateral basis throughout the free world. Ends.

PROPOSED CANADIAN-UNITED STATES JOINT COMMITTEE ON TRADE QUESTIONS

Reference: Your teletype No. EX-998 of the 5th of June.

Yesterday afternoon I called at the State Department on Livingston Merchant, Assistant Secretary for European Affairs, to leave with him the terms of reference which you have proposed as a basis of discussion in considering whether or not a joint United States-Canada committee on trade questions should be established. Willoughby of the United States Embassy in Ottawa, Peterson, the Officer in Charge of Commonwealth Affairs in the State Department, and LePan of this office, were also present.

2. I began by saying that it seemed to me there were three questions which required some discussion in consequence of the meeting between the Prime Minister and the President at the White House on the 8th of May. First, there was the informal suggestion made on the Canadian side that a joint economic committee might be established. Second, there was the suggestion put forward by Secretary of Defence Wilson that the possibility of a free trade area between Canada and the United States should be explored. Third, the President had suggested that there should be a detailed discussion of each point in the memorandum on international economic problems left with him by the Prime Minister.

3. We had extracted from your message the draft terms of reference you proposed and we circulated copies. We made it clear that, in doing so, we were not in any way prejudging the issue of whether or not a joint committee on trade questions should be set up. But we thought that an answer to this question might more easily be reached by considering first what such a body might do. Merchant said that he quite agreed with this procedure and added that your draft terms of reference would be very useful to the State Department in considering whether such a body should be established. As was to be expected, the United States officials were not in a position to comment out of hand on the terms of reference. Perhaps I should report, however, that Peterson enquired whether there was any special significance to be attached to the choice of the word "report" instead of "recommend" in the third of the functions tentatively proposed for the committee. Merchant concluded this part of the conversation by saying that, after the State Department had studied the Canadian paper on the terms of reference that might be given to such a committee, a further meeting would be held. At this next meeting it might be possible to give some preliminary consideration to whether or not it would be advisable to establish a committee.

4. Earlier in the day Willoughby had telephoned me to say that he had been rather disturbed on coming to Washington to find that interest in the suggestion for a free trade area between the United States and Canada was still running high in the State Department. He had discussed this possibility in Ottawa both with the Under-Secretary and with John Deutsch and had gathered the impression that the Canadian Government would not be willing to consider such a possibility for very many months to come. He himself had been invited to remain in Washington and help in preparing a study of the economic effects of a free trade area between the two countries. But in view of what he believed to be the attitude of the Canadian Government on this subject, he was convinced that any such study would be a waste of time at this stage.

5. Taking my cue from what Willoughby had told me, I thought that I should try to put the proposal for a free trade area deeper into cold storage than apparently we had succeeded in doing in the representations which we made on the 15th of May and which we reported in our teletype No. WA-1215 of the following day. I therefore said that it seemed to me there were only two sets of circumstances in which the Canadian Government might be willing seriously to consider the possibility of creating a regime of complete free trade between Canada and the United States. This possibility might seem attractive to the Canadian Government in the event that world trade shrunk drastically and hope of restoring a multilateral system vanished; or, alternatively, in a happier situation where the United States was moving vigorously towards a more liberal commercial policy and was actively supporting a new attempt on a world-wide scale to achieve convertibility of currencies and remove quantitative restrictions. The present situation, on the other hand, in which the main lines of United States commercial policy were still undetermined, was not propitious for studying the possibility of a free trade area between the two countries. Serious trouble and embarrassment could be caused if it leaked out that this possibility was being considered. Free trade between Canada and the United States was a subject with a long political history and dangerous political ramifications in Canada; and it should also be remembered that Canada might be charged with bad faith by its partners in the Commonwealth if it came to be believed that the Canadian Government, which had supported the proposals elaborated at the Commonwealth Economic Conference last year, was abandoning that initiative and toying with the possibility of forming a free trade area with the United States.

6. There was then some discussion of how the State Department should discharge the responsibility which they believe has been laid on them by the President to investigate this possibility. After a number of suggestions had been briefly considered and rejected, Merchant said that he thought it would be enough for the State Department to report briefly to the President that, in their opinion, such a project would not be feasible at this time. I am now hopeful that we may have succeeded in freezing consideration of this possibility even within the United States Government. Willoughby had told me over the telephone that he thought, if this examination were allowed to go forward, it would soon have to be broadened to bring in other agencies; and in that case, it could hardly long be kept secret. I agree with him on both counts and therefore believe that our best course is to try to dissuade the State Department from going any further with this investigation.

7. I then drew attention to the sentence in my record of the meeting at the White House on the 8th of May in which the President, after accepting from the Prime Minister the memorandum on international economic problems, is reported to have "suggested that a detailed discussion of each point should take place later"; and I enquired where study of this document now stood. I did so, I explained, because the memorandum really contained the core of what the Prime Minister had come to Washington to say to the President on economic matters. The memorandum had been circulated at once, Merchant said, to all of the members of the Cabinet here who are concerned in any way with foreign economic policy; but it had not been subjected to detailed study, I gathered. Indeed, Peterson argued that it was hardly susceptible of joint discussion, point by point, by representatives of the Canadian and United States governments; and in this view he was supported by both Merchant and Willoughby. Its general thesis, that the unity and military strength of the free world would be endangered unless the United States moved quickly to implement a vigorous and expansive foreign economic policy designed to assist in getting rid of trade restrictions and in restoring convertibility of currencies was, they all agreed, of unimpeachable validity; and it had been very useful for the Prime Minister to make this case to the President. None of them, however, was inclined to think that the memorandum could profitably be discussed, point by point, although they promised to consider further that possibility. I did not press them to agree that the memorandum should be dealt with in that way, but merely left it that they would let me know later whether, on reflection, they thought that it should be discussed in detail by Canadian and United States representatives jointly. One suggestion that was casually and briefly considered was that sometime within the next month or two there might be an informal meeting, either in Washington or Ottawa, between Canadian and United States economic experts to discuss the memorandum and also perhaps to exchange views on the subject which are to be considered at the next session of GATT and at the next meeting of the Governors of the International Bank and Fund.

Unfortunately this message[92] deals with the proposed joint economic board and the free trade question together — which creates difficulties in referring it out of the department.

To get around the difficulty (though it creates others) we could write to the ICETP people saying that a message from Washington "dealing with other questions" had referred to the Joint Board as follows:

I have asked Miss Lonsdale to keep the circulating copy out.

Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Secretary of State for External Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL Ottawa, July 28, 1953

PROPOSED CANADIAN-US JOINT ECONOMIC BODY

During the recent visit of Canadian officials to Washington for informal discussions on various economic and commercial matters, US officials indicated that they had not yet been able to secure the views of Mr. Dulles on the proposals which we had made to them early in June. They indicated their own impression, however, that US Cabinet Members were unlikely to regard the proposed Committee as worthwhile, or to be prepared to attend meetings of the Committee themselves, unless the terms of reference were to be considerably broadened. The Canadian officials undertook to seek the views of Ministers concerned here and to let the State Department know informally whether we would be agreeable to some broadening of the functions of this proposed Committee.

Since a Committee which met at Cabinet level would obviously be free to discuss any suggestions at will, it would not seem to matter very much in practice whether the terms of reference are drawn narrowly or broadly. If a widening of the written terms of reference would help to attract US Cabinet Members there would seem to be no substantial reason for us to object to such a revision of our original proposal. A Committee which always met at a lower level would not seem to have a great deal of advantage over the present informal arrangements.

If it is your view in the present circumstances that the establishment of such a Cabinet level Committee is warranted, I should be grateful for your guidance on whether we should discuss with other Departments[93] the desirability of intimating to the State Department that we would be prepared to see our proposal altered along the following lines:

Name:

Joint US-Canadian Committee on Trade and Economic Affairs.

Functions:

2) In particular, to exchange information and views on matters which might substantially affect the operation of present trade agreements under which a high level of mutually profitable trade has been built up;

PROPOSED CANADA-US ECONOMIC BODY; TERMS OF REFERENCE

9. The Secretary of State for External Affairs said that, during the visit of the Prime Minister to Washington, it had been suggested in the course of discussions with the President that it might be useful to have a joint Canada-United States economic committee. Possible terms of reference limiting the committee to trade questions had been discussed informally, and the United States had now indicated that they thought the terms should be somewhat broadened. The proposal was that the committee be on a ministerial level with the Ministers of Trade and Commerce, Finance, External Affairs and Agriculture for the Canadian side, and the corresponding Secretaries for the United States. Meetings would normally take place not more than twice a year, alternately in Washington and Ottawa.

It was recommended that a formal proposal be made for the establishment of the committee as outlined and with terms of reference as submitted.

An explanatory memorandum had been circulated.

(Minister's memorandum, Sept. 5, 1953 — Cab. Doc. 187-53)†

10. In the course of discussion it was suggested that it would be desirable to have as the fourth Canadian representative either the Minister of Agriculture or the Minister of Fisheries, depending on the matters to be discussed at any particular time.

11. The Cabinet approved the recommendation of the Secretary of State for External Affairs and agreed:

(a) that it be proposed to the United States that a joint US-Canada Committee on Trade and Economic Affairs be established as recommended; the Canadian representation to be the Ministers of Trade and Commerce, Finance and External Affairs, and either the Minister of Agriculture or the Minister of Fisheries depending on matters to be discussed at any particular meeting; and

(b) that the terms of reference of the committee, as recommended, be:

(i) to consider questions affecting harmonious economic relations between the two countries;

(ii) in particular, to exchange information and views on matters which might substantially affect the operation of present trade agreements under which a high level of mutually profitable trade has been built up; and,

(iii) to report to their respective governments on such discussions in order that consideration might be given to any measures that might be appropriate and necessary to improve economic relations and to encourage the flow of trade.

PROPOSED JOINT UNITED STATES-CANADA COMMITTEE ON TRADE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS

47. The Prime Minister, referring to discussion at the meeting of September 9th, 1953, said that United States authorities had considered some further generalization desirable in the terms of reference of the proposed Joint United States-Canadian Committee on Trade and Economic Affairs. Certain revisions had been worked out and agreed to by Canadian and United States officials and it was proposed that the revised terms of reference be embodied in an Exchange of Notes between the Canadian Ambassador in Washington and the United States Secretary of State. The US State Department was hopeful that all the necessary concurrences could be obtained in time for the proposed notes to be exchanged in Washington before President Eisenhower left for Ottawa on November 13th. On this assumption, a reference to the establishment of the Joint Committee had been included in the draft of the speech which the President would deliver to Parliament.

An explanatory memorandum was circulated.

(Memorandum, Secretary of State for External Affairs, Nov. 3, 1953 — Cab. Doc. 276-53)†

48. In the course of discussion, it was pointed out that the text of the proposed Exchange of Notes seemed to be at variance with the previous decision taken by Cabinet that it would be desirable for the Canadian Section of the Committee to include either the Minister of Agriculture or the Minister of Fisheries, depending on the matters to be discussed at any particular meeting. This should be made clear in the Exchange of Notes. If such a change could not be agreed to in time, the point should be covered on the establishment of the Committee.

49. The Cabinet agreed:

(a) that the text of the proposed Exchange of Notes establishing the Joint United States-Canada Committee on Trade and Economic Affairs, as submitted by the Secretary of State for External Affairs be approved; subject to alteration of composition of the Canadian group on the Committee to include either the Minister of Agriculture or the Minister of Fisheries, in accordance with the decision of September 9th, 1953;

(b) that, subject to final confirmation of establishment of the Joint Committee being agreeable to the United States government, the Canadian Ambassador in Washington be authorized to complete the Exchange of Notes as soon as convenient;

(c) that arrangements be made for the simultaneous announcement of the establishment of the Committee in Ottawa and Washington; and,

(d) that, in order to allay any fears which might arise in other friendly countries that establishment of the Committee represented a move toward bilateral arrangements in the economic field between Canada and the United States, any public announcement in Ottawa regarding the establishment of the Committee would indicate that its work would constitute one aspect of the activities of the two countries in the economic field, which were directed towards promoting satisfactory trade relations on a multilateral basis throughout the free world.[94]

POSSIBLE US RESTRICTIONS ON OATS AND GROUNDFISH FILLETS

The US Tariff Commission has been receiving representations that restrictions should be imposed on the importation of oats and groundfish fillets. United States imports of oats come almost exclusively from Canada and we provide about 60 per cent of their imports of groundfish fillets. Restrictions in either case would be very serious.

No actual hearings have been held as yet in the case of groundfish fillets and it will not be finally dealt with until the end of the summer. Hearings have, however, been concluded with regard to oats and the Commission may make its recommendations within a few days. If it recommended restrictions, it would be for the President to decide whether to impose them or not. As there will be no advance knowledge of the nature of the recommendation or as to when it is made (although it now seems probable that it will not be before Wednesday) it is important that any representations from the Canadian Government should be sent in as soon as possible.

As this matter is of great importance and as the decision of the President is crucial, the most effective course appeared to be a letter from the Prime Minister to the President. The Prime Minister, after consultation with the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Secretary of State for External Affairs in Port Arthur and Sudbury, has signed a letter which was sent to Washington by air courier today. A copy is attached.

As the letter is of a personal character, it is desirable to have official representations made at the same time. For this purpose, a draft note from our Ambassador in Washington to the Secretary of State has been prepared to accompany a copy of the case on oats that was made by the Chief Commissioner of the Wheat Board at the hearings on July 8. A copy of the draft note is attached for consideration.†

The text of the draft note has been sent to the Embassy by teletype. When it has been approved or amended, a copy of it will be attached to the Prime Minister's letter and the letter will be delivered to the White House to-morrow. The note will be delivered to the State Department on Monday.

Le premier ministre au président des États-Unis

Prime Minister to President of United States

Ottawa, July 17, 1953

Dear Mr. President:

In our conversations during my visit to Washington in May we discussed the importance to the strength and security of the free world of maintaining and expanding world trade, including that very important fraction of total world trade which takes place between the United States and Canada.[95]

Mr. Pearson and I were gratified by the sympathetic understanding you and your colleagues showed for these objectives, and by your evident concern to avoid any sources of friction and misunderstanding between our two countries, which would be bound to result from new trade restrictions. On June 30th, our government felt obliged to make representations about the restrictions which had been announced to come into effect on July 1st, and since then we have been greatly disturbed by the fear of still further restrictions.

I am not, of course, referring in any way to emergency embargoes imposed as precautions against the spread of contagious diseases in plants or animals.

What has been so greatly disturbing to us recently is the reference to the United States Tariff Commission of several cases of major concern to Canada, particularly the cases of oats and groundfish fillets which are both of substantial and traditional importance in our trade with the United States.

In the case of oats, hearings were held last week and it is our understanding that a report will shortly be made to you. Since the interest of Canada and the livelihood of thousands of Canadian farmers would be seriously affected by a restriction on the import of oats, our government is sending a note to yours about this matter. I enclose a copy with this personal letter.

Because of the sympathetic understanding you showed for our position last May, I am venturing to tell you personally how serious I fear would be the effect on Canadian opinion if the United States were to impose new restrictions on imports from Canada of highly important commodities like oats and fish from which our people have derived a part of the income which enables us to make our huge purchases of commodities produced in the United States.

We appreciate that, in the United States, a section of farm opinion is strongly opposed to these imports from Canada and we have tried on that account to show the utmost forbearance in all our approaches to your government.

But we in Canada also have a public opinion which has to be considered, and it would be increasingly difficult for our public to understand or to accept without some form of counter-action on our part new restrictions on important Canadian exports to the United States, particularly when our total imports from your country are so much greater than your imports from Canada.

Harmonious trade relations in the past eighteen years have greatly increased the feeling of friendly neighbourliness between Canada and the United States and have, we think, added greatly to the economic strength of both countries.

The possibility of any action which would mar those harmonious relations is something our government would greatly deplore, and I am sure you and your administration would also deplore it.

And I would not be honest if I did not say frankly that the imposition of new restrictions which would affect only a small fraction of your total consumption of commodities like oats and fish, but which would jeopardize the livelihood of thousands of Canadians could not fail to create resentment and ill-will and consequential demands for action on our part.

It is for that reason that I feel justified in bringing this to your personal attention. Should we not both do our utmost to resist demands for action which could not fail to do harm to both countries?

Yours sincerely,

L.S. St-Laurent

CANADIAN EXPORTS TO THE UNITED STATES; POSSIBLE US RESTRICTIONS ON OATS AND GROUNDFISH FILLETS

5. The Secretary of State reported that the US Tariff Commission had received representations that restrictions should be imposed on the importation of oats and groundfish fillets. Canada provided about 60 percent of US imports of groundfish fillets and nearly 100 percent of their imports of oats. Restrictions in either case would be serious to Canada.

No hearings had yet been held in respect of groundfish fillets but it was understood that the Tariff Commission would shortly submit its recommendations on oats.

In view of the importance of this matter it was agreed, in the course of recent discussions between the Prime Minister, the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Secretary of State for External Affairs, that the most effective course might possibly be a letter from the Prime Minister to the President. Such a letter had been prepared by the departments most immediately concerned and revised by the Prime Minister. The letter had now been signed and despatched to Washington. Concurrently with submission of the Prime Minister's letter to the President it was felt that the Canadian Ambassador at Washington should forward a formal note to the US Secretary of State. It was intended that the note should be delivered to the State Department the following Monday.

An explanatory note was circulated.

(Memorandum, Privy Council Office and attachments, July 17, 1953 — Cab. Doc. 157-53)

6. During the course of discussion it was suggested that no reference should be made in the Ambassador's note to the personal letter from the Prime Minister to President Eisenhower. The note should stress as clearly and briefly as possible the great harm which would result for both countries if restrictive measures were now taken against the importation of Canadian oats into the United States.

7. The Cabinet:

(a) noted with approval the personal letter dated July 17th which the Prime Minister had sent to Washington for transmission to President Eisenhower with regard to possible US restrictions against the importation of Canadian oats and groundfish fillets; and,

(b) agreed that a note relating to this matter, in terms as agreed during the course of discussion, be delivered to the State Department by the Canadian Ambassador in Washington the following Monday.

NOTE NO. 470 Washington, July 18, 1953

The Canadian Ambassador presents his compliments to the Secretary of State and has the honour to refer to proposals which have been submitted to the United States Tariff Commission to restrict the trade in oats and groundfish fillets. Both of these commodities are of traditional importance in Canadian trade with the United States. This matter is of major concern to Canada and a decision by the United States Government to limit the imports of either of these commodities would have serious implications, not only for trade but for other aspects of relationships between our two countries.

The Chief Commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board had an opportunity to appear before the Tariff Commission on Wednesday, July 8th, when hearings were held on oats. I am enclosing herewith a copy of the brief presented at that time, which sets forth the principal elements of this problem. It is hoped that this statement will receive careful consideration.

The Canadian Government wishes to draw attention to this serious problem and to the great harm which would ensue for both countries if restrictive proposals of this kind were to become effective. It greatly hopes that the United States Government will be able to avoid actions which would impair the harmonious and mutually advantageous trade relationships which have been developed.

THE POSSIBLE RESTRICTIONS ON IMPORT OF CANADIAN OATS AND FISH

Reference: My Letter No. 1413 of July 20, 1953.

1. When I called on President Eisenhower this morning to say goodbye to him, he mentioned the Prime Minister's letter to him of July 17th. He asked me to assure the Prime Minister that his own convictions about the need for a liberal commercial policy were as strong as ever. He was sure that the Prime Minister appreciated his difficulties in dealing with pressure groups in Congress. He had had earlier this morning a meeting with some of the tougher Members of Congress, who were concerned, I gathered, particularly with agricultural protection, and has spoken to them firmly about the impossibility of treating particular commodities in isolation. He mentioned Senator Malone and remarked that he thought that if he asked the Senator whether he did not admire the green lawn of the White House, the Senator would answer, "Yes, but it would be much better if we had higher tariff protection".

He added that he hoped to send a reply very shortly to the Prime Minister's letter, which could not, of course, contain any specific promises of action that he would take. He has referred the letter to the State Department for the preparation of a draft, and we learn from the State Department that a draft has been prepared which will be submitted to the President within a day or two.

Le président des États-Unis au premier ministre
President of United States to Prime Minister

Washington, July 27, 1953

Dear Mr. Prime Minister:

I have read with great interest your letter of July seventeenth, referring to our conversations in May on the importance of expanding world trade to maintain the strength and security of the free world. I assure you that the sympathetic understanding on the part of United States officials of these objectives and our concern to avoid any sources of friction between our two countries are as strong as ever, despite the initiation of certain investigations by the Tariff Commission.

These two investigations concerning imports of oats and groundfish fillets were begun in accordance with the provisions of laws which have been in effect for some time. As long as they are in force, the Administration has no choice but to operate in accordance with them. However, such investigations do not necessarily lead to the application of import restrictions. On the contrary, many investigations, such as the earlier Tariff Commission investigation of groundfish fillets imports in 1951, are completed without the imposition of restrictions.

A basic question before this Administration is whether the laws relating to our foreign economic policies are appropriate to our national interest — which is inseparable from that of the other free nations of the world. Plans are nearly complete for the creation of a joint legislative-executive Commission to explore this problem thoroughly and make its recommendations early next year. During the intervening months, I intend to keep clearly in mind the fact that the free world cannot be strong without a high level of international trade.

I am aware of the feeling in Canada concerning these trade matters and am as anxious as you that they not be permitted to develop in a way which would cause mutual recriminations or otherwise affect the good relations between our countries.

Sincerely,

DWIGHT EISENHOWER

P.S. I am sending you a long letter just received from a member of the United States Senate. It gives you the arguments presented by the political leaders in the grain growing areas. You will be interested.†

HEARINGS BEFORE THE UNITED STATES TARIFF COMMISSION ON OATS AND GROUNDFISH FILLETS

Reference: Our teletype WA-1920 of August 7.†

Following is the text, which was delivered to us this evening at the State Department, of the reply to our Note No. 470 of the 18th of July on oats and groundfish fillets, Text begins:

The Acting Secretary of State presents his compliments to His Excellency the Ambassador of Canada and has the honor to refer to his Note No. 470, dated July 18, 1953, expressing the grave concern of the Government of Canada over the possibility that restrictions may be imposed on imports of oats and groundfish fillets as a result of the investigations now being conducted by the United States Tariff Commission. A copy of the statement presented by the Chief Commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board before the Tariff Commission during the course of the hearings held in connection with the investigation with respect to oats was enclosed with the Ambassador's note.

The Ambassador draws attention to the serious implications restrictions on imports of either of these commodities would have, not only for trade, but for other aspects of the relationships between our two countries, and expresses the hope that this government will avoid actions which would impair the harmonious and mutually advantageous trade relations which have been developed between the United States and Canada.

With respect to the two investigations now being conducted by the United States Tariff Commission to determine the effects of imports of oats and groundfish fillets, these actions were instituted in accordance with the provisions of laws which have been in effect in the United States for some time. Your government will appreciate that the executive branch of the United States Government is bound to administer these laws in accordance with their provisions.

The Tariff Commission's investigation concerning United States imports of oats is being undertaken under the provisions of Section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, to determine whether oats are being imported into the United States or are practically certain to be imported into the United States under such conditions and in such quantities as to render or tend to render ineffective or materially interfere with the price support operations with respect to oats.

The Commission's investigation of imports of groundfish fillets has been instituted under Section 7 of the Trade Agreements Extension Act of 1951, to determine whether certain groundfish products are being imported into the United States in such increased quantities as to cause or threaten serious injury to the domestic industry.

While it is not possible to predict what the outcome of those investigations may be, the fact that they have been instituted does not necessarily mean that restrictions will be imposed on imports. To the contrary, many such investigations, as, for example, the earlier Tariff Commission investigation of groundfish fillets instituted in 1951, are completed without the imposition of restrictions on imports.

This government fully appreciates the need of achieving an expanded volume of international trade and sound economic relations with friendly countries. It also recognizes the need of the free world to develop through cooperative action a strong and self-supporting economic system capable of providing both the military strength to deter aggression and the rising productivity that can improve living standards. For these reasons, a basic problem confronting this government is whether existing laws, regulations, and administrative procedures of the United States relating to international trade are appropriate in our national interest, having in mind the fact that our national interest is inseparable from that of the other nations of the free world.

The answer to this complex problem is not easy to frame. As the Ambassador may know, the Congress of the United States, at the request of the President, has authorized the establishment of a bipartisan commission, to be known as the Commission on Foreign Economic Policy, to explore this problem thoroughly and has directed the Commission to report, in the early part of 1954, its recommendations concerning policies, measures and practices that this government should follow to achieve an expanded volume of international trade. During the intervening months it is the intention of the United States Government to keep clearly in mind the fact that the free world cannot be strong without a high level of international trade. Text ends.

TARIFF COMMISSION FINDINGS ON OATS

Following for the Minister, Begins: On Saturday afternoon we spoke over the telephone to John Leddy, Director of the Office of Economic Defence and Trade Policy in the State Department, and asked whether he could confirm or deny the report which had reached Mr. Howe that the United States Tariff Commission had recommended to the President increased protection on oats. Leddy said that he was not yet in a position to do so, but hoped to be able to tell us today. He explained that, in the case of hearings held before the Tariff Commission under the escape clause of the Trade Agreements Act, there was an established administrative procedure whereby governments with a substantial interest in the commodity being investigated were informed of the Tariff Commission's findings as soon as they were made, so that there would be time for them to submit representations before the President took action. No such procedure had become established in the case of hearings before the Tariff Commission under Section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act — the Section under which the Commission had held its investigation on oats. However, the State Department had recommended to the White House that the same procedure should be followed in cases brought to the Commission under Section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act as in cases brought under the Trade Agreements Act. Leddy thought this recommendation would be accepted.

2. We will get in touch with Leddy later today and let you know whatever he is able to tell us. Ends.

TARIFF COMMISSION FINDINGS ON OATS

Reference: Our teletype WA-2485 of November 2.

The State Department have not yet been able to inform us officially of the substance of the Tariff Commission's recommendations on oats. However, in a private and confidential way, Schaetzel,[96] in Mr. Waugh's[97] office, has confirmed that the Tariff Commission has recommended a quota of 23 million bushels. He also said that there is every hope in the State Department that the President will reject this recommendation.

2. Yesterday Ray Vernon, Deputy Director of the Office of Economic Defence and Trade Policy in the State Department, who is now on loan to the Commission on Foreign Economic Policy, gave us in confidence some further information about the Tariff Commission's findings. He said that the Tariff Commission had not been able to discover that any injury was being done to the price support programme for oats by imports from Canada or elsewhere. In fact, there would be no difficulty this year in selling all the oats that would be produced in the United States; and normal imports from Canada could easily be absorbed. In order to reach their recommendation for a restrictive quota, the Commissioners had been forced to consider all feed grains instead of concentrating only on oats.

3. Vernon also let us know the gist of a letter which has been sent by the Secretary of State to the President commenting on the Tariff Commission's findings. In the first place, he said, the State Department had questioned the legality of the Tariff Commission widening the scope of the inquiry it had undertaken under Section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act. The State Department's letter had then gone on to argue that if the investigation was confined to oats, the facts were such that interference with the price support programme because of imports could not be shown. If, alternatively, the investigation were widened — with questionable legality — to include all feed grains, the State Department believed that a restrictive quota would worsen, rather than improve, the existing situation since it could be expected to result in sharper competitions from Canadian feed grains in third markets.

4. You will appreciate that since this information was given to us privately, it should be used with very considerable discretion.

VISIT OF PRESIDENT EISENHOWER TO OTTAWA — ECONOMIC DISCUSSIONS

Reference: Our teletype WA-2573 of November 10.

We assume that during the President's visit to Ottawa there may be some opportunity of discussing with him foreign economic policy. We also assume that any discussion that takes place on this subject will be both brief and informal. If that is the case, I imagine that some opportunity will be taken to express again to the President our hope that the work of the Commission on Foreign Economic Policy will lead to positive action by the United States Government to reduce present obstacles to trade in US tariff legislation and US customs procedures and so facilitate an expansion of trade on a world-wide basis.

2. So far as particular issues between Canada and the US are concerned, we think that the one which should be singled out for discussion with the President is the Tariff Commission's recent recommendation for a restrictive quota on oats. We understand from the State Department that the President will be considering this recommendation shortly after his return to Washington, so that it would seem opportune to remind him, while he is in Ottawa, of Canada's interest in seeing that increased protection against oats is avoided.

3. This recommendation is made in the knowledge that a corollary may well be that nothing can be said to the President about the Tariff Commission's hearings either on lead and zinc or on groundfish fillets. In our opinion, that consequence should be accepted since we are likely to defeat our own ends if we always press home with equal force the Canadian case on every economic problem at issue between our two countries. We are more likely to be successful if we pick and choose a little and modulate our representations as each occasion arises.

4. One reason for our recommendation that such time as may be available for economic discussion should be used to talk about oats (even to the possible exclusion of any discussion of other commodities in which we are interested) is that observers from this mission who have attended the Tariff Commission's hearings on lead and zinc have been moderately encouraged by the trend of the Commissioners' questions and think it is well within the bounds of possibility that the Commission may not recommend any increase in the protection now given to domestic producers of those commodities. This may prove to be an overly sanguine appreciation. But in any event, the Tariff Commission has not yet made any findings either on lead and zinc or on groundfish fillets. In the case of oats, on the other hand, we know that the Tariff Commission has submitted recommendations that are adverse to our interests. Moreover, since the Prime Minister has already written to the President on this issue, any further representations could most appropriately be made by Mr. St. Laurent personally.

5. So far as lead and zinc are concerned, you will remember that when Mr. Howe was in Washington last month, he discussed minerals and metals policy with members of the US Cabinet in the Joint Industrial Mobilization Committee, and urged that no action should be taken by the US Government which would interfere with these strategic materials being used on a continental basis. We think that the case presented by Mr. Howe has had a good effect here; and we doubt whether it would be necessary to reinforce it in the course of further discussions in Ottawa. There would also be advantage, in our opinion, in picking an example to discuss with the President which would enable us to vary our line of argument. In the case of lead and zinc, the most powerful argument available to us is that in time of war Canadian production of these metals could readily be made available to the US and their movement across the border would not be subject to interruption by enemy action. That is an argument which we should certainly not forego. On the other hand, if it were used too constantly with the US authorities, it might gradually lead them to the conclusion that the Canadian Government was comparatively indifferent to the volume of US trade with other countries, so long as trade barriers were not increased along the border between Canada and the US. As we all know, however, we must sell a very large portion of the goods we produce in over-seas markets and we can do so advantageously only if those third countries are put in possession of US dollars. To my mind, a further reason for singling out oats for discussion with the President is that the arguments which would naturally occur to any Canadian in urging that an increase in US protection on this commodity should be avoided, would lead inevitably to some mention of the importance, for the strength of the free world as a whole, of a more liberal US commercial policy. It would seem to us here to be all the more important to stress the validity of that general proposition at a time when a joint committee on economic and trade questions is being established between Canada and the US.

Note du ministre du Commerce pour le premier ministre

Memorandum from Minister of Trade and Commerce to Prime Minister

PERSONAL AND CONFIDENTIAL Ottawa, November 12, 1953

I have read teletype WA-2574 from Washington, which suggests that your discussion with President Eisenhower on economic matters be confined to the subject of oats.

I think this is a mistake, particularly as Ambassador Stuart has assured me that President Eisenhower will not sign the report of the Tariff Commission, and has expressed the view that we in Canada would do well to drop the matter. I informed Mr. Pearson of the Ambassador's view and I understand that he is acting accordingly.

I suggest your discussion should take the line that Canada and the United States should hold the line on tariff matters until the President has received the report of his Economic Commission. That was the position adopted by GATT, where all countries agreed to extend existing concessions for eighteen months.

You may wish to suggest to the President that any action taken in the meantime will have an adverse affect in all GATT countries and tend to create the impression that concessions made at GATT by the US cannot be relied upon.

While groundfish fillets and lead and zinc have both received the attention of the Tariff Commission, I am rather optimistic about the nature of the report that the Tariff Commission will make on both. It seems to me unwise to concentrate on any particular item in your discussions with the President, as this may possibly lead to his suggestion of a compromise that would allow him to take action against Canada on one of the items in which we are interested.[98]

Compte rendu des discussions au téléphone, 19 novembre 1953

Note on Telephone Discussions, November 19, 1953

UNITED STATES TARIFF COMMISSION FINDINGS ON OATS

On Thursday the 19th of November we learned from two sources in the State Department that a report was being put about by the United States Department of Agriculture that the Canadian authorities might not object to a modified scheme for a quota on oats that was under consideration within the United States Government. This claim was allegedly based on a telephone conversation that had taken place between Mr. Whipple, Director of the Office of Foreign Agricultural Relations in the Department of Agriculture and Mr. George McIvor, Chief Commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board. The State Department were very perturbed by the report since it was at variance with the information they had been giving to the White House and also since President Eisenhower was to hold a meeting at 2:00 o'clock that afternoon to consider the recommendation made by the United States Tariff Commission for a restrictive quota on oats.

2. The Commercial Counsellor, Mr. Guy Smith, at once got in touch over the telephone with Mr. Mitchell Sharp, Assistant Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce, and told him of the report that had been received from the State Department. Mr. Sharp said that it was quite contrary to the policy of the Canadian Government to accept a quota of any kind on oats and for that reason Mr. McIvor could not have agreed to the modified proposal. He undertook to try to have Mr. McIvor speak to the United States Department of Agriculture and set the matter straight. This information was passed on at once to the State Department. We understand that later in the afternoon Mr. W.C. McNamara, Assistant Chief Commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board, spoke to Mr. Whipple.

3. About noon we learned from Mr. Leonard Weiss, of the Office of Economic Defence and Trade Policy in the State Department, that the compromise proposal which was being considered within the United States Government was for a quota of 23 million bushels, which would run from whenever President Eisenhower issued a proclamation (say, on the 20th of November, 1953) through the 30th of September, 1954. Since it is estimated that since last July Canada's export of oats to the United States have amounted to some 30 million bushels, the Department of Agriculture here were arguing that this modified proposal would permit Canada to ship 53 million bushels by the end of next September, which they claim would be a not ungenerous amount. Mr. Weiss added, however, that according to the State Department's calculations such a proposal would tend to establish an annual quota of only some 34 million bushels. Mr. Weiss said that the information received from Mr. Sharp would be very helpful; but if it were possible to obtain from an even more authoritative source a denial of the report being circulated by the United States Department of Agriculture, that would probably be advisable.

4. Accordingly, Mr. LePan spoke over the telephone to the Minister of Trade and Commerce and reported to him the story which had reached us by way of the State Department. Mr. Howe said that he could not believe that Mr. McIvor had in any way indicated that a quota on oats might be acceptable to Canada. If he had done so, such a suggestion was completely unauthorized. The Canadian Government was definitely opposed to any quota on oats; and if one were imposed it would be necessary at once to examine United States exports of fruits and vegetables to Canada to see what action should be taken. We conveyed these remarks of Mr. Howe's to Mr. T.V. Kalijarvi, Deputy Assistant Secretary for Economic Affairs in the State Department, who was holding a meeting in his office over the lunch hour in preparation for the larger meeting to be held at 2:00 o'clock in the White House. Mr. Kalijarvi said that Mr. Howe's re-affirmation of the Canadian position on this issue would be extremely helpful to him at the meeting with President Eisenhower which was to take place in a few minutes.

5. We have not been able to ascertain what decision, if any, was reached at the meeting at the White House.

Mr. LePan telephoned from Washington this afternoon to report on some conversations which he and Mr. Heeney had had on this subject and to seek our advice.

2. From the various conversations which they have had, Mr. LePan and Mr. Heeney are quite certain that the US Administration will shortly announce that, on the basis of its consideration of the recommendations received from the Tariff Board, it will shortly be imposing quota limitations on imports of oats. They gather from "very reliable sources" that, prior to any such announcement, emissaries (including a member of the White House staff) will be sent up to Ottawa to explain the position. According to their information, the likelihood is that Mr. Sherman Adams will make the trip, possibly accompanied by the Chairman of the Commodity Credit Corporation (although Mr. Don Bliss has told Heeney and LePan that he has been trying to discourage the latter from going). They also understand that the visit is likely to take place over this weekend and that the US party expect to discuss the matter with Mr. Howe (with whom they appear to have been in touch informally).

3. The question which Mr. LePan wanted to raise was whether we felt that an attempt should be made even at this stage to bring any exchanges between Ottawa and Washington on this subject back into "official channels". He did not think that the making of formal representations to the State Department (which would have to be based on newspaper rumours of the impending announcement by the US Government since we have had no official indication of their intentions) would be likely to have any effect on the decision by the US Administration regarding the importation of oats. Nevertheless, he thought that we might consider it desirable to have some official record of representations made in Washington (subsequent to the note of last July) to which reference could be made when the US action is announced and becomes the subject of some controversy in our House of Commons. He appreciated that any suggestion which might cut across, or call in question, the exchanges which were now envisaged through informal channels would have to be handled very delicately — if at all — and Mr. Howe might have rather strong personal reactions to any such intervention by External Affairs. Nonetheless, he thought that we should know of the situation and should have an opportunity to consider whether or not something should be done.

4. My own feeling is that, as a practical matter, it would be difficult, to say the least, for us to suggest any procedure now which would appear to interfere with the conversations which Mr. Howe is expecting to have this weekend[99] (even though Mr. Howe presumably would not know that we were aware of the plans for any such conversations). I do not see on what basis it would be possible for us to propose to Trade and Commerce and other Departments that further representations should be made at this time concerning the action which the US Administration is likely to take when those representations would have to refer to only newspaper rumours. I am also not sure that, for the purpose of discussions in the House of Commons, another note on the record would be more satisfactory than a statement by Mr. Howe on any conversations which he might have had with Mr. Adams. I shall, however, attempt to find out discreetly what officials in Trade and Commerce may know about Mr. Howe's intentions, and I shall also ascertain (equally discreetly) John Deutsch's views concerning the possible basis on which we might make further representations to the State Department before the US Government's decision is announced.

UNITED STATES TARIFF COMMISSION RECOMMENDATION ON IMPORT OF OATS

Early this year when the price of oats in North Dakota fell to some 10¢ a bushel below the loan level under the US Price Support Programme, the United States authorities requested the cooperation of the Canadian authorities in seeing that oats did not move into the trouble areas and certain measures were taken informally and reluctantly to endeavour to avoid these shipments. However, the US Department of Agriculture remained under strong pressure to take action under Section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act to impose a quota on imports of Canadian oats. In due course the US Department of Agriculture submitted an application to the Tariff Commission for a hearing on oats and these hearings were held last July.

We were deeply disturbed at this application because restrictions on oats would very seriously affect certain Canadian interests and because the reference to the Tariff Commission was instituted by a US Government department. You will recall that pressure was brought to bear on the US in a number of forms. Mr. McIvor of the Wheat Board appeared before the Commission on July 8th and attempted to explain the position of Canadian producers. While observing that it was true that Canada had been selling large quantities of oats to the United States in recent years (something like 75 million bushels annually), nevertheless these sales represented only a very small fraction of total US consumption and therefore probably had a negligible effect on US price levels. It was therefore doubtful that it could be said that Canadian exports interfered significantly with the US Price Support Programme. He also pointed out that if the US market were restricted, there would have to be a readjustment of wheat acreage in Western Canada and this would mean a larger acreage devoted to wheat, aggravating the surplus problem for both the US and Canada. He reminded the Tariff Commission that the increase in US imports of Canadian oats was in line with the general increase in trade between Canada and the United States and had a counterpart in the present high level of Canadian purchases of significant US agricultural products.

I have now heard that in fact the conversations are likely to take place tomorrow (Thursday) — which makes it virtually impossible for anything to be done through diplomatic channels even if that otherwise seemed desirable.

On July 20th we presented a note to the State Department expressing concern about the hearings on oats and groundfish fillets. In addition, the Prime Minister sent a personal letter to President Eisenhower on July 17th in which he indicated in fairly strong terms that if our trade in oats were to be restricted it might well become impossible for Canada to avoid the adoption of retaliatory measures against the United States.

The possibility of retaliation has been given a good deal of attention here since it first became apparent that reference would be made to the US Tariff Commission. In April the Minister of Trade and Commerce indicated that if restrictions were imposed, it might be desirable for Canada to be in a position to take retaliatory action at once against certain United States exports such as citrus fruits. One problem was that, as the law stood, the Government had very limited powers of retaliation. It appears that the only way in which it might be possible to take retaliatory action under existing legislation may be to reimpose by Order-in-Council general tariff rates to replace existing most-favoured-nation rates in those cases where the latter rates are not incorporated in legislation.

For some time now there has been speculation on the nature of the Tariff Commission's Report to the President. There is an established administrative procedure in Washington whereby governments with a substantial interest in the commodity being investigated are informed of the Tariff Commission's findings as soon as they are made. While no direct consultation with us has yet taken place we have heard through reliable sources that the recommendation to the President does in fact recommend an import quota on Canadian oats and that a quota of 23 million bushels is under consideration. From our point of view calculations on what would be a reasonable quota are beside the point but it is useful to note that the thinking in Washington is said to be along the following lines. It is estimated that since last July Canadian exports of oats to the United States have amounted to some 30 million bushels. A quota of 23 million bushels for the current crop year would permit Canada to ship 53 million bushels by the end of September. The State Department calculate that such a proposal would tend to establish an annual quota of some 34 million bushels.

In a memorandum to you of July 14th it was pointed out that any retaliatory measures will undoubtedly have a great symbolic significance since they would substantially alter the generally cooperative basis on which the United States and Canada have dealt with their economic problems since the war and might be taken as heralding the beginning of a much more acrimonious phase in our commercial relations. Moreover, it would seem to be virtually impossible to choose any retaliatory measures which would not injure some Canadian interests, including Canadian consumers.

TELEGRAM EX-2088 Ottawa, December 6, 1953

TOP SECRET. IMPORTANT.

MEETING WITH US RE OATS

I am sending you herewith a Memorandum to the Prime Minister on this meeting, which was held last night at the American Embassy in a very friendly and informal atmosphere, Begins:

1. With Mr. Howe and Mr. George McIvor of the Wheat Board, I attended a meeting yesterday evening at the US Ambassador's residence at which we discussed the proposed US action on the import of oats from Canada with the following United States officials, who had, with the exception of Mr. Stuart and Mr. Bliss, flown up from Washington that afternoon for this purpose:

The US Ambassador, Mr. Stuart;
Mr. Sherman Adams, the Assistant to the President of the United States;
Mr. Gabriel Hauge, Administrative Assistant to the President;
Mr. Howard Gordon, Administrator of the Commodity Stabilization Service, US Department of Agriculture;
Mr. John Leddy, Director of Office of Economic Defense and Trade Policy, US Department of State;
Mr. Donald Bliss, US Embassy.

2. Mr. Adams and Mr. Gordon were very frank in outlining the difficulties, political and Congressional, which the President would have if he did not take some action in respect of the recommendation of the Tariff Board on oats and which has been on his desk now for some weeks. He asked for our sympathetic understanding of these difficulties.

3. Mr. Gordon and Mr. McIvor then exchanged views which were naturally not always identical on the effect of the proposed action on Canadian exports and on the statistical picture of the trade in this and other grains.

4. Mr. Howe said that the proposed action on oats was a violation of GATT and would have to be taken seriously by the Canadian Government as it affected agreements which had been made at GATT and which were now being modified by this proposed unilateral action on oats. We had done our best to avoid formal action at GATT in respect of a previous violation over dairy products, but as far as oats are concerned, if the action recommended by the Tariff Board in Washington was taken we would call a meeting of the GATT Contracting Parties, ask for a formal decision that a violation had taken place and then would have to take certain retaliatory action on things like fruits and vegetables, which might cause the Administration in Washington as much trouble as that which came from the pressure to which they had been subjected on oats and rye.

5. Mr. Howe asked John Leddy if, as a GATT expert, he did not think that such a course by the Canadian Government would be justifiable and indeed unavoidable. Mr. Leddy naturally demurred but did not put up a very strong defence of the American position, except to say that they could and would argue at GATT that a violation had not occurred and that he hoped that a dispute of this kind could be avoided.

6. I indicated that the action proposed by the United States would cause a strong negative reaction in Canada, especially at the present time, which was to be deplored. I also mentioned that if, on every occasion when the United States Government got into domestic difficulties over surpluses, which difficulties would be exploited by pressure groups, they tried to get out of them by taking action which violated an international agreement, we would be in continuous trouble.

7. Sherman Adams indicated he was very conscious of the complexity of the problem and the undesirability of allowing it to cause trouble between Canada and the United States. They must do everything possible to avoid this.

8. In the discussion which followed, Mr. Howe referred to the happy experience of the war when, in cases where Canadian exports were causing trouble to the United States authorities, the Canadian Government — through Mr. Howe — was able on its part to take the necessary remedial action without any regulation being required in Washington aimed against Canadian exports. He wondered whether the same procedure could not be adopted on this occasion.

9. This possibility was explored at considerable length. As a result, the following solution was agreed on.

10. President Eisenhower would send a memorandum to the Secretary of State referring to the Tariff Board recommendation on oats and asking him to explain the position to the Canadian Government in the hope that some action might be taken here which would be helpful in solving this problem. The Secretary of State would take the action requested, and the Canadian Government would reply to the effect that they would control the export of oats to the United States for the period from December 10 to October 1 so that only 23 million bushels would go to that country. This would be considered satisfactory by the American Government and the President therefore would not take any action on the Tariff Board recommendation. Next summer the position would be reviewed by the Canadian and American authorities.

11. In so far as rye was concerned, Mr. Howe did not feel that the situation would be quite so serious if restrictive action were taken in Washington, even though such action from our point of view was undesirable. It might be possible in such circumstances to avoid a formal appeal to GATT and retaliatory action. It was agreed, however, that every effort should be made to avoid any action on rye until after the US-Canadian Ministerial Committee had met. At that meeting, the rye situation might be looked into.

12. We can, I think, expect the note from the Secretary of State on oats referred to above, to be delivered to the Embassy in Washington towards the end of next week. It was hoped that a reply on our part could be made at once.

13. There was some discussion regarding the first meeting of the Joint Canadian-US Ministerial Committee. It was felt that this meeting might take place toward the end of February with a preliminary meeting of officials to be held a fortnight or so before. It was also felt that there should be a Canadian and American secretary appointed for the Committee.

14. There was general agreement that at the first meeting there should be a full discussion of agricultural and trade questions to see if something could not be done to prevent difficulties and problems that seemed to be accumulating. I suggested that the agenda item on this point might read, "Canadian-US agricultural policies and their relation to international trade". There was no demur at this.

15. In order to disguise (ineffectively as it has turned out) the true nature of our meeting, a press statement was issued last night in the following terms:

"Preliminary discussions were held today in Ottawa between officials of the United States and Canadian Governments looking toward the first meeting of the newly established Joint United States-Canadian Committee on Trade and Economic Affairs. Both President Eisenhower and Prime Minister St-Laurent have expressed the hope that the work of this Committee can get underway as soon as possible." Ends.

OATS; RESTRICTION ON SHIPMENTS TO THE UNITED STATES

1. The Prime Minister said the US Tariff Commission had recommended to the President, recently, that imports of Canadian oats should be limited by quota. In order to avoid the continuing ill effects of a US quota on Canadian exports, it would be desirable to deal with the problem by some alternative method.

Discussions had been held between the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Secretary of State for External Affairs and American officials concerned, as a result of which a tentative agreement had been reached whereby the Canadian government would voluntarily limit the export of oats to the United States to 23 million bushels from December 10th, 1953 to September 30th, 1954.

To implement this arrangement, an exchange of letters between the US Secretary of State and the Secretary of State for External Affairs for Canada was proposed, and drafts had been prepared which were understood to be acceptable to the United States Administration.

The letter from the US Secretary of State would explain that his government had been faced with problems of increasing seriousness in the accumulation of surplus agricultural products. These surpluses might threaten to disturb orderly marketing arrangements and, in particular, unless steps were taken to ensure that imports of oats would not interfere with orderly marketing of oats in the United States, a critical situation would develop which would be damaging to the farming industry of both countries. It would be suggested that shipments from Canada be limited to the amounts mentioned above.

In reply, it was proposed to state that the Canadian government, as a temporary measure and without obligation, would take all practical steps to limit shipments of oats to the United States to the extent and for the period suggested. It would be made clear that Canada would reconsider this decision in the event that substantial quantities of oats were imported into the United States from other countries.

(Draft exchange of letters between Acting US Secretary of State and Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs, Dec. 7, and Dec. 11, 1953)†

2. In the course of discussion, the following points emerged:

(a) If some arrangement as suggested in the draft Exchange of Notes were not agreed to, it was likely that the President would have to act upon the US Tariff Commission recommendation and impose a quota of 23 million bushels against Canada. It would be very difficult to revoke such a regulation in the future.

(b) If the United States actually applied the quota as recommended by the US Tariff Commission, Canada would appeal under the provisions of the GATT and most probably win its case. In the circumstances, reprisal action might be taken on US imports of fresh fruit, vegetables and cotton, but this would lead to serious consequences in both countries and it appeared desirable to deal with the problem as suggested.

(c) Canada had already shipped 48 million bushels of oats to the United States in the current crop year. Despite the proposed limitation on exports, it would be doubtful if, in fact, 23 million bushels would be available for export to the United States for the balance of the year.

(d) Canada was running a deficit with the United States in our ordinary trade to the extent of approximately $1 billion. In the light of the trade balance between the two countries the US suggestion was unfortunate but there appeared to be no alternative to the suggested solution.

3. The Cabinet agreed:

(a) that letters in the terms submitted providing for limitation of exports of oats to the United States, to the extent of 23 million bushels between December 11th, 1953 and September 30th, 1954, be exchanged between the Acting Secretary of State for the United States and the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs; and

(b) that the Minister of Trade and Commerce table the exchange of correspondence in the House of Commons on Monday, December 14th and, at the same time, make a statement explaining the arrangements that had been made.[100]

Memorandum from Minister of Fisheries to Cabinet

Ottawa, February 24, 1953

RE: CONVENTION BETWEEN CANADA AND THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA FOR THE PRESERVATION OF HALIBUT FISHERY OF THE NORTH PACIFIC OCEAN AND BERING SEA: PROPOSED REVISION

This treaty was negotiated between Canada and the United States in 1923. It provided a closed season for halibut and established a commission of four — two from each country — for investigating and recommending to the two governments measures for restoring the dwindling stocks of halibut.

The Convention was revised in 1930, when powers of making regulations subject to approval of the two governments were bestowed on the Commission. These powers were further extended in the 1937 revision of the Convention which is in effect today.

During the past three years negotiations took place on the official level for a further revision of the Convention.

After several drafts passed back and forth between us and the United States, the following new substantive provisions have met with general approval on both sides.

(1) The name of the Commission, now known as "The International Fisheries Commission" is to be changed to that of "The International Pacific Halibut Commission". The reason for the change is to enable ready identification and to distinguish the Commission from other fishery commissions which we now have.

Canada, House of Commons, Debates, Session 1953-1954, Volume I, December 14, pp. 861-2.

(2) The number of commissioners is to be increased from four to six — three from each country. This was a United States proposal. The reason for it is that in the United States, unlike in Canada, fishery jurisdiction is vested in each state and the federal government only acquires some jurisdiction by virtue of a treaty made with another country. In this case the United States government wanted to give Alaska representation on the Commission. The two commissioners now appointed represent the federal government and the industry at large.

(3) The Commission is to have power to establish more than one open season. There was some doubt as to the Commission's power to do this under the existing treaty. The granting of this power was considered necessary to allow the Commission to extend fishing over more than one period of time. The scientists of the Commission advanced the hypothesis that during a concentrated short season, some fishing grounds may be under-exploited. The experiment of dividing up the season would be useful to determine to some extent whether this hypothesis is correct.

(4) Power to limit or prohibit the incidental catch of halibut that may be taken by vessels fishing for other species. The Commission already has power to regulate the catch of halibut taken incidentally during the closed season by boats fishing for other species. The additional power would give the Commission the right to regulate such incidental catch also during the open season.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs concurs in this recommendation to Cabinet. It is our desire to have the treaty signed in Ottawa on March 2nd, that being the 30th anniversary of the signing of the first Halibut Convention. That was the first treaty to be signed by Canada in her own right and the Canadian signatory then was the father of the present Minister of Veterans' Affairs. I recommend therefore that the Canadian signatories on this occasion be the Honourable Hugues Lapointe and myself.

Respectfully submitted,
JAMES SINCLAIR

CANADA-UNITED STATES NORTH PACIFIC HALIBUT FISHERY CONVENTION; PROPOSED REVISION

30. The Minister of Fisheries reported that, following lengthy discussions, representatives of Canada and the United States had agreed on a revision of the North Pacific Halibut Fishery Convention which had originally been signed by Canada and the United States in 1923. The Canadian signatory at that time had been the late Right Honourable Ernest Lapointe. He recommended that authority be granted for himself and the Minister of Veterans Affairs, or either of them, to sign the revised Convention at Ottawa on March 2nd. The Secretary of State concurred in this recommendation.

GUT DAM; PROCEDURE FOR DISPOSAL OF US DAMAGE CLAIMS

7. The Secretary of State for External Affairs referring to discussion at the meeting of November 17th, 1952 said the US State Department had agreed to discuss with Canadian representatives the possibility of establishing some uniform procedure for the disposal of US claims for damages allegedly caused to Lake Ontario riparian owners as a result of the construction and operation of the Gut Dam. Preliminary discussions had taken place at Washington on December 17th, 1952. These discussions were to be continued during the week of January 26th and instructions were now sought as to the sort of proposals the Canadian negotiators might be authorized to approve on behalf of the government.

Canada, Treaty Series, 1953, No. 14.

An explanatory note had been circulated.

(Minister's memorandum, Jan. 19, 1953 — Cab. Doc. 16-53)†

8. The Minister of Finance thought it was perhaps unfortunate that Canada had, by its note of November 10th, 1952, to the US State Department, recognized in principle her obligation to pay damages to US citizens provided they were attributable to the construction and operation of the Gut Dam. After looking at the history of the Dam, he held the view that Canada had not in fact, waived her immunity in any respect and that the only legal obligation assumed by Canada was in respect of damages that might be caused to property owners on Les Galops Island in the St. Lawrence River. That obligation had been discharged when the Canadian government had purchased for the relatively large amount of $4,000 one acre of land from the US owner of the island. As a consequence, he felt Canadian representatives should make it quite clear that Canada had not waived her immunity in this matter. Furthermore, he did not think that it would be wise at this time to consider submitting to the jurisdiction of any domestic US court.

9. The Cabinet, after further discussion, noted the report of the Secretary of State for External Affairs and agreed that,—

(a) during the course of forthcoming talks with the US State Department on the procedure to be followed in the disposal of US claims for damages allegedly arising out of the construction and operation of the Gut Dam, the Canadian representatives attempt, as a first choice, to obtain agreement for the establishment of a mixed arbitral tribunal of three judicial members (Canada and the United States each to select one member and to agree on a third from a third country) or, as a second choice, to seek agreement for the establishment of an arbitral tribunal consisting of a single third national appointed by Canada and the United States from among the best qualified judicial or legal authorities of a third country;

(b) Canadian representatives should not agree to Canada submitting to the jurisdiction of any existing US court without first referring the question back to Cabinet for consideration; and,

(c) as a matter of general principle, Canadian representatives should reassert the position already taken that Canada had not, in fact, waived her sovereign immunity in respect of damages allegedly caused by the construction or operation of the Gut Dam.

GUT DAM CLAIMS

As you know, meetings were held in the State Department on January 27 and 28 on this matter. It may be useful for you to know more of what occurred. In the present state of negotiations, however, I believe that the less said in public about Gut Dam the better. Potential Canadian claimants would like to know more. We hope to have cut off some of the source of trouble in agreeing with the State Department on a brief press release, namely, that Canadian representatives had made concrete proposals to the State Department to adjudicate claims for damage attributed to Gut Dam (without specifying whose claims) and these proposals are being studied by the US Government.

2. In New York, Burbridge and Côté met Mr. Wyatt,[102] the attorney for Canada. He accompanied them to Washington for talks with the Ambassador, the attorneys for some of the US claimants against Canada, as well as with Burbridge and Côté. This was very useful both for our officers and Mr. Wyatt.

3. During the first meeting with Jack Tate, Yingling,[103] Vallance, Dean Brown[104] and a couple others of the State Department, the Canadian team propounded the thesis that no immunity had been waived. It was a theory quite as plausible as the US', namely that the immunity had been waived in 1903 and 1904. While Canada holds herself immune from the jurisdiction of US Courts, she is quite prepared to have a mixed arbitral tribunal of three persons examine whether Gut Dam caused damage. Canada is prepared to pay compensation if such a tribunal adjudged that the Dam caused damage. The State Department officials had not read their files and (apart from Vallance) knew little of the past history. Consequently, they had to take the Canadian thesis and offer for arbitration under advisement.

4. Next day, Burbridge and Côté saw Yingling and Vallance in order to give them, from Canadian files, such leads as would allow them to trace their own documents in the Public Archives. In return, Yingling promised to let us have some US documents of theirs to fill gaps in our history. Later that day Burbridge and Côté had a talk with Jack Tate and Yingling. Tate's argument is that it may prove impolitic for the State Department to alienate the goodwill of US citizens by depriving them of their alleged constitutional right of access to the Courts in favour of an international "one-shot" arbitration. All the more so that claimants are always dissatisfied, and, as they may never make a case now, it might be preferable for a US judge to say so. Should the State Department be unable to accept the Canadian proposal for arbitration, it will then make unofficially a detailed counter-proposal.

5. In brief, if the State Department accepts the Canadian proposal of a mixed arbitral tribunal (we did NOT put up the proposal of a one-man tribunal), we could, in about three weeks, get down to fixing terms of reference in a draft international agreement. If the State Department makes counter-proposals, they will have to be looked at by the inter-departmental committee and presumably fresh instructions would be asked from Cabinet. No further negotiations could be undertaken in much less than six weeks.

6. One should be mindful, throughout, of the possibility that the attorneys for the Oster's[105] will take the bit in their teeth and proceed to judgment. We would resist this through Wyatt, in New York. But our hand may be forced, all the more so that two further actions by William L. Clay and others were launched on January 20, 1953 in the Court of the District of Northern New York: Clay may either try to get his remedy before Oster or vice-versa!

7. In fine, we must, therefore, await State Department action on our proposals. Should the US claimants decide to force the pace before such action occurs, we may be obliged through a friend at Court to fight the issue of Canada's immunity in the New York Courts.

GUT DAM

You will have seen a telegram from Washington in which the State Department declared it was firmly of the view that Canada had waived its immunity in 1903 and that, accordingly, the case should be heard in the USA Courts. Mr. Burbridge and I have been asked to go to Washington to hear the State Department's thesis and the manner in which it suggests the cases could be disposed of.

2. While Mr. Burbridge and I resisted going to Washington without further information being made available, we understand the State Department is reluctant to discuss the case further prior to our visit. Mr. Burbridge and I have therefore taken steps to have Mr. Wyatt meet us in Washington for discussions with us possibly on April 9. Mr. Burbridge and I would then meet the State Department officials on April 10.

3. We propose to listen carefully to the proposals, to put forward any views we thought might be helpful to the Canadian case and to conclude by reiterating Canada's immunity. We shall then be in a position to report to you and to the Minister on the likely course of events and to make suggestions as to what should be the Canadian attitude.

4. Do you agree I should go to Washington (Mr. Burbridge is already there) and that we should take the general line indicated above?[106] You may wish to speak to the Minister about this before Thursday.

DESPATCH 748 Washington, April 10, 1953

CONFIDENTIAL

GUT DAM CLAIMS

Reference: Despatch 202 of January 30, 1953.†

The meeting today at the State Department on Gut Dam Claims was attended by Mr. Yingling and Mr. Griffin from the Legal Adviser's Office and by Messrs. Côté, Burbridge and Wallis[107] for the Department. (Dean Brown later attended.)

2. Mr. Yingling stated that the State Department had now made a thorough review of the documents on Gut Dam and had come to the conclusion that Canada had waived its sovereign immunity to suit in US courts for damages arising from Gut Dam and, as a consequence, had bound itself to submit to the jurisdiction of the courts in the case of claims against it by United States citizens. Mr. Yingling based his conclusion on the following arguments. First, the formal acknowledgement by the British Ambassador of receipt of the United States Secretary of War's permit to construct Gut Dam with the two conditions contained therein, together with the fact that the Canadian Government subsequently constructed the Gut Dam, indicated that Canada had accepted the two conditions of the permit. The acknowledgement of the Secretary of War's note by the British Ambassador had the binding effect of

[106] Note marginale:/Marginal note:

B.A. Wallis, Second Secretary, Embassy in United States.

an "Exchange of Notes", and the fact that the Canadian Government constructed the Dam without officially objecting to the two conditions indicated that it had accepted those conditions. Secondly, the Canadian Minister of Railways and Canals had been the first to offer to meet, in United States courts, claims for damages to the owner of Les Galops Island; subsequently this condition had been expanded by the Secretary of War to include any other US claimants. The fact that the proposal had first come from Canada (even if in a restricted sense) indicated that there had been "a meeting of minds" on the question of Canada's subjection to suit in United States courts.

3. In setting forth the Canadian Government's position, Mr. Burbridge pointed out that bringing a sovereign into a foreign court was a serious matter which required a formal, unequivocal statement of the sovereign's willingness at the time of the action. This was lacking in the Gut Dam case. It was also established in international law that a sovereign does not waive immunity in advance; that he waives it before a specific court and in a specific case. Also, if a sovereign should waive immunity in advance, he would have the right to withdraw his waiver in any specific case. It was, in fact, unprecedented for a sovereign to be brought into a foreign court without the sovereign's consent. This applied particularly in the Gut Dam case since construction of the dam was a public, and not a private, act of the Canadian Government which even the United States restrictive theory of sovereign immunity recognized as entitled to immunity.

4. After further discussion of sovereign immunity, Mr. Yingling gave the State Department's views on a number of points which had been discussed at the meeting of January 27:

(a) Mr. Yingling's position was that a government can waive sovereign immunity in advance and that the waiver need not necessarily be limited in application to any specific case.

(b) The question whether construction of the Gut Dam was a public or private act was moot because Canada had in any case in his opinion, waived its immunity.[108]

(c) The Canadian argument that the Secretary of War went beyond his terms of reference in imposing the two conditions could not be used by Canada, since no foreign government could argue that another government had acted illegally under its own domestic law. At any rate, Mr. Yingling believed that the Secretary of War was acting within the authority that Congress gave him, since the 1902 Act of Congress required him to ensure that United States interests would not be harmed and his imposition of the two conditions was in consonance with Congress' requirement.

(d) Mr. Yingling could not accept the argument that the Exchange of Notes with the British Ambassador did not constitute a formal agreement. He also did not believe that the Canadian Government would have constructed the Dam if it had had reservations about accepting these conditions at the time. But even if its subjective interpretation was different and it thought that the conditions would in fact apply

[108] Note marginale:/Marginal note:
completely relevant only to Les Galops Island, this would not change the objective meaning of the conditions with their application to any possible claimants.

(e) Mr. Yingling's position was that if the Canadian Government considered that it had waived immunity in the case of a suit brought by the owner of Les Galops Island, it had done this in advance of any specific suit in any specific court; moreover, it had thereby in principle forfeited the position that it had not waived immunity in any other cases.

5. In reply to our enquiry whether a United States court would consider itself bound by a State Department expression of opinion on the sovereign immunity of a foreign power, Mr. Yingling said that in principle a court would not be bound to a State Department determination but that in practice there was a hundred-to-one likelihood that it would accept the State Department's views without going into the merits of the case on its own. This would apply in the case both of a determination that a foreign power had sovereign immunity or that it did not. In the Gut Dam case, the United States Administration would probably tell the court, on its own initiative, that it considers that Canada had agreed to submit to United States courts and that it therefore had waived its immunity in this case. The State Department's position was that it was responsible for the protection of its citizens and that it could not agree to any arrangement which would waive the rights which United States citizens possessed or thought they possessed. In this case, Mr. Yingling believed that the United States claimants considered it to their advantage to take court action rather than accept a mixed arbitral tribunal. He could not recommend to them that they waive their rights in their own courts. On the other hand, the State Department also would not recommend to the claimants that they should go to court.

6. Speaking for himself, Mr. Yingling informally asked whether a plan to appoint a single United States arbitrator would be acceptable to Canada as an alternative to litigation in the courts. Mr. Côté replied that such a procedure would be unsatisfactory. The Canadian Government was firmly of the opinion that a mixed tribunal should be set up. He thought it possible, however, as an alternative, that the Government might consider the appointment of a single arbitrator from a third country. Mr. Côté made it clear that if the claimants insisted on taking the matter to court, the Canadian Government would maintain its claim to sovereign immunity through all the legal channels open to it. Such a course would therefore commit the claimants to a great deal of litigation, at great expense. He also believed that if the immunity question were taken to court and Canada won, no further proposals would be forthcoming from Canada on methods for settling claims for damage. Mr. Yingling thought such a course would force the US Government to present the claims to Canada through diplomatic channels.

7. Agreement was reached that the following steps should now be taken. The State Department would have a meeting with counsel for some of the claimants and lay before them the Canadian Government's position together with their own view that Canada had waived its sovereign immunity in this case. The claimants would then have the choice of either opposing Canada or of making suitable alternative proposals which the Canadian Government could consider. Mr. Yingling agreed to transmit to the Canadian Government any proposals which the claimants might make. In the meantime, it was agreed that no statement would be made to the press until the State Department's meeting with the claimants had taken place. Agreement would be reached between the State Department and the Embassy as to a "press line" which might be taken should questions then arise.

CLAIMS AGAINST CANADA IN RELATION TO GUT DAM

13. The Secretary of State for External Affairs, referring to discussion at the meeting of January 22nd, 1953, said there had been further discussion between Canadian and United States officials, on April 10th, relating to the claims by US property owners of damage resulting from the construction and operation of the Gut Dam. A press report of April 29th said the US claimants had rejected Canadian proposals for arbitration. Possible courses of action were: direct negotiations with the claimants to bring about a method of settlement outside the courts; further discussion with the State Department; and continuance of legal action in the courts. If the first were done, it should be entirely with regard to a method of settlement. Further discussions with the State Department were unlikely to be fruitful. If legal proceedings were pursued, the government should be prepared to fight the immunity issue. A number of recommendations were submitted, including one for the issuance of a press release on the government's position.

An explanatory memorandum was circulated.

(Minister's memorandum, May 13, 1953, and attached draft press release — Cab. Doc. 123-53)†

14. In the course of discussion it was suggested that:

(a) The government should continue to contend that Canada was immune from processes in the US courts and should be prepared to take the contention to the highest possible level.

(b) There might be argument that, apart altogether from the agreement of 1903, the government of Canada was liable for damage as an owner of property in the United States which had been used in such a fashion as to cause injury to other property owners.

15. The Cabinet approved the recommendations of the Secretary of State for External Affairs and agreed:

(a) that a press release be issued before May 15th, in accordance with the draft submitted, setting forth the Canadian position in relation to claims by United States

property owners of damage resulting from the construction and operation of the Gut Dam;[109]

(b) that, if the claimants wished to discuss matters with Canadian officials, the Department of External Affairs be authorized to enter into such discussions on the basis of seeking some agreed method of settlement, but precluding any reference to compensation the government might pay direct to claimants without an adjudication of claims;

(c) that the State Department be kept fully informed about the Canadian position and if it seemed desirable, the question of a reference to the International Court of Justice be explored; and,

(d) that, if legal action in the United States were pursued, counsel for Canada be authorized to defend Canadian interests by all legal means and, in particular, to contest the immunity issue in whatever courts the proceedings might make necessary.

US CLAIMS FOR DAMAGES ARISING FROM GUT DAM; RECENT DEVELOPMENTS

10. The Secretary of State for External Affairs, referring to discussion at the meeting of May 13th, 1953, reported that, at meetings held on June 10th, Canadian officials and counsel, representing a majority of US claimants for damages allegedly caused by Gut Dam, had tentatively agreed on the setting up of an international arbitral tribunal very similar to that originally proposed by Canada to the US State Department.

It was contemplated, under the new proposal, that a two-man tribunal, comprising one American and one Canadian judge, would be established under authority of an Exchange of Notes between Canada and the United States to determine liability and award of damages, if any, in respect of the claims of all the members, numbering approximately five thousand, of the Lake Ontario Land-Owners and Beach Protective Association [sic]. It was understood that this Association represented from 90 to 95 percent of all potential claimants in the United States. While the arrangement contemplated might not secure for the government of Canada absolute assurance that no further legal action against Canada would be commenced in the United States, it was likely that, during the course of negotiations, some practical means [109] Ministère des Affaires extérieures, communiqué de presse nº 34, 15 mai 1953.

Department of External Affairs, Press Release, No. 34, May 15, 1953.

might be found which would effectively protect Canada against such future claims or lawsuits.

It was accordingly recommended that authority be granted for negotiations to be continued along the lines suggested during the meetings between Canadian officials and representatives of US claimants.

An explanatory note was circulated.

(Minister's memorandum, undated, Cab. Doc. 141-53)†

11. The Cabinet agreed that officials of the Department of External Affairs and other departments concerned continue negotiations with representatives of the Lake Ontario Land-Owners and Beach Protective Association [sic] with a view to securing the establishment of an international arbitral tribunal along the lines suggested by the Secretary of State for External Affairs for the purpose of determining liability and awarding damages, if any, arising out of the construction and maintenance of Gut Dam; it being understood that any final agreement that might be reached in this matter would be submitted to Cabinet for approval before the question was taken up formally with the US State Department.

DESPATCH X-952 Ottawa, August 21, 1953

RESTRICTED

GUT DAM

Reference: Your despatches No. 203 of January 30† and No. 748 of April 10, 1953.

1. The central position taken by the State Department in advancing United States citizens' claims concerned with Gut Dam has been that, by building the Dam after the issuance on August 18, 1903 of Secretary of War Root's Instrument of Approval, Canada accepted the "Conditions" contained in the Instrument. As a consequence, the State Department argues that Canada must compensate — in the sum agreed with the claimants or determined by the US Courts — any United States citizen damaged through the operation of Gut Dam.

2. Without discussing the substance of the claims (the existence of which is denied) Canadian representatives have been unable so far to persuade the State Department that if an agreement to submit to the jurisdiction of the US Courts existed, it accrued only to the benefit of the owner of Les Galops Island. This view is based on the contemporary Canadian documents including the assurances given by the Hon. A.G. Blair and Mr. L.K. Jones in 1903 and was made abundantly clear in Côté's presentation of the case to the State Department on January 27, 1953. The State Department reaffirmed its contrary views on April 10, 1953 and claimed that Canada had waived its immunity — a claim which was again denied by the Canadian representatives.

3. We have been fortunate enough to secure from the Foreign Office in London photostatic copies of a letter addressed by Elihu Root on August 18, 1903 to the British Ambassador, Sir Michael Herbert, in which he said he had that day signed the Instrument of Approval with Conditions "which are in accord with" the assurances given by Messrs. Blair and Jones. These assurances were an undertaking by Canada to compensate only the "owner or occupant" of Les Galops Island for any damages attributable to Gut Dam. On October 26, 1903, Canada bought an acre of land from the owner's heirs for the sum of $4,000 and received a quit-claim for all future damage. From all the contemporary documents including, now, Secretary Root's own letter, it is abundantly clear that the Condition in Secretary Root's Instrument of Approval stipulating unilaterally that Canada would compensate the owner of Les Galops Island and "any other citizen of the United States" was meant by the United States and Canadian Governments to refer only to the "owner or occupant of Les Galops Island".

4. It follows from this meaning of Condition 2 and from Canada's subsequent actions that Canada has fully redeemed its assurances and that no other United States citizen has any rights arising out of the Instrument of Approval. United States citizens might have rights at international law should, for instance, a neighbouring riparian state negligently injure them but this is another point. Accordingly, Canada owes no duty — under the Instrument of Approval — to the United States claimants and has not waived its immunity vis-à-vis any United States citizen with regard to Gut Dam except, possibly, the owner or occupant of Les Galops Island. (That this is not admitted on other grounds is not here material.)

5. I believe, therefore, that the United States Government should be apprised of the newly-found evidence which confirms conclusively the Canadian thesis. We are fully entitled to ask the United States Government to withdraw from the consideration of the Courts of the District of Northern New York the notes of November 10 and 17, 1952, the more so that the Canadian note was submitted without Canada's consent.

6. I am preparing an aide-mémoire which I should like you personally to present to the Legal Adviser of the State Department, Mr. Phleger. Attached is a draft for your perusal and comments.† The purpose of this move is threefold. Firstly, to record formally our views on the subject. Second, to inform the United States claimants, through the State Department, of the strength of the Canadian position. Third, to have at hand a document which might be published if current negotiations for arbitration with the claimants should fail.

7. You may well ask, since I hold these views on the meaning of Condition 2, why the Department should continue negotiations for arbitration with the claimants. It is true that, in your predecessor's note of November 10, 1952, he affirmed that Canada is prepared to compensate United States citizens for damages attributable to Gut Dam "in the sense of" Condition 2 and that it now turns out that this "sense" is to compensate only the owner of Les Galops Island. In good logic, we should break off negotiations. It is preferable, however, that the claimants themselves should break off the negotiations and that Canada should not appear to be "welching" on what is generally thought to be an undertaking to compensate all-comers. It is also preferable to let the claimants find out for themselves through the State Department (or, alternatively and later, through us, if the need arises) of this new development; being prepared to arbitrate even now shows outwardly some magnanimity even at the expense of logic. Lastly, as there is a tendency in some sections of the USA to establish the principle that a riparian owner takes his land as he finds it and not as against a state of nature and that the establishment of such a principle will work against the interests of Canada and the United States in the long run, it is preferable to try to establish by international arbitration — if the claimants are prepared to accept arbitration on these terms when they find out how weak their position really is — the principle that man-made works in waters of this nature should be assessed, as to their potential injurious effect, against a state of nature and not as against the state of the shore, of the bed and of the body of water at the time when the claimant acquired the land.

8. Will you please telegraph your comments as soon as possible.

GUT DAM CLAIMS

Reference: Your despatch No. X-952 of the 21st of August.

We are grateful to you for giving us an opportunity to comment on the draft aide-mémoire you have prepared,[110] and also for the very helpful and comprehensive despatch which you sent with it.

2. We can see no objection to trying, in this way, to have the State Department withdraw from the consideration of the District Court of Northern New York the notes of the 10th and 17th of November exchanged between the Canadian and United States Governments, and thereby remove the implication that Canada had waived its sovereign immunity in the case before the Court. On the other hand, we are doubtful whether it will be possible, by the presentation of this aide-mémoire, [110] Pour le texte de l'aide-mémoire dans sa forme finale, voir le document suivant.

For the text of the aide-mémoire in its final form, see the following document.

to persuade the State Department to take such action, since, if they are beaten back from their present position, they can retire to other arguments and finally come to rest on their interpretation of sovereign immunity which, as you are aware, they maintain is more restricted than that entertained in Canada. However, this is perhaps of little importance since we notice that you do not include withdrawal of the notes among the purposes of the presentation of this aide-mémoire and, we take it, hardly expect that the State Department will agree to take such action.

3. Our comments on the draft are applicable to it chiefly as a document which might serve to convince the United States claimants, through the State Department, of the strength of the Canadian position and also as one which might provide additional justification for the line we have taken, should we ever decide to publish it. Our detailed comments might be listed as follows:

(a) We have refused to become a party to the case brought in the District Court of Northern New York on the grounds that Canada has not waived its sovereign immunity so far as this case is concerned. We should therefore be careful to avoid creating the impression that this recently discovered evidence is necessary in order to substantiate our claim to sovereign immunity in this case. The new evidence should be presented as merely additional material to buttress a case which, in our opinion, was already conclusive. With that end in view, we suggest that the last paragraph on Page 4 should be redrafted to give it a more affirmative tone. The first sentence might be altered to read, "in the Canadian view this recently discovered document provides additional confirmation of the position taken in the Canadian note. . . ." In general, it seems to us that all the text preceding the second paragraph on Page 4 should converge to demonstrate the self-sufficiency of our thesis even without the added confirmation provided by the newly discovered document.

(b) We also think that the final sentence of the first paragraph on Page 4 might well be strengthened. It might perhaps be changed to read: "this argument was contested and found unacceptable by the Canadian representatives".

(c) At that point, and perhaps at others in the argumentation contained in the draft aide-mémoire, you might consider it advisable to include some brief indication of why the Canadian authorities considered the United States position on immunity invalid even before this new evidence came to light.

(d) The link between the "assurances and statements filed with the War Department" by Mr. L.K. Jones and Mr. Andrew G. Blair, and the "stipulations made by the representatives of the Dominion Government" might be made more explicit in order to establish beyond a doubt that the assurances and stipulations were one and the same thing. One way of doing so might be to state, if this is possible, that no assurances were given to the United States Government by Jones or Blair, other than those contained in the letter of the 10th of February, 1903, from Jones to Major Symons of the United States Corps of Army Engineers and reiterated in the memorandum of the 10th of February, 1903, signed by Blair.

(e) To make the aide-mémoire carry conviction to those without legal training, it might be better, at the end of Paragraph 2 of Page 4, to draw explicitly the conclusion that is enforced by Root's letter. This might be done by adding a sentence along the following lines: "It is obvious that, if the conditions of the instrument of approval were in accord with the Canadian stipulations, as Secretary Root stated they were, those conditions could not go further than the Canadian stipulations and therefore the conditions must have referred exclusively to damage caused to the owners of Les Galops Islands".

(f) It might be psychologically preferable to begin the aide-mémoire with a reaffirmation of the principle of sovereign immunity (to be followed later by an explanation of why we believe it to be applicable in this case), rather than to mention first the claimants' contention.

GUT DAM CLAIMS

Reference· My immediately preceding telegram No. EX-1505 of September 4.†

The following is the final text of the Aide-Mémoire which you have been instructed to hand to Phleger:

Begins:

AIDE-MÉMOIRE

1. The Government of Canada wishes to refer again to the matter of claims arising out of the operation of Gut Dam in which it formally asserted to the State Department its immunity from the jurisdiction of the United States courts. As the State Department has not been prepared to accept the Canadian view on immunity, the Government of Canada now deems it important to review this matter, particularly in the light of a newly found document which has a significant bearing on the question of immunity from jurisdiction.

1A. United States citizens, many of whom are members of the Lake Ontario Land Development and Beach Protection Association, Inc., have claimed that their properties along the south shore of Lake Ontario have been damaged by the operation of Gut Dam constructed in the International Section of the St. Lawrence River by Canada in 1903 and 1904. In an effort to substantiate their claims these United States citizens have instituted in various courts of the United States a number of lawsuits, some of which they have directed against the Government of the United States while in others they have attempted to implead the Government of Canada.

2. One such lawsuit was commenced on October 23, 1952 in the United States District Court for the Northern District of New York by Arthur Oster and others against "Dominion of Canada". The statement of claim was founded in part on an Act of Congress, approved June 18, 1902, entitled "An Act allowing the construction of a Dam across the St. Lawrence River" and on an Instrument of Approval signed by the United States Secretary of War on August 18, 1903 (photostat copy attached) and alleges inter alia that the Government of Canada waived its sovereign immunity from the jurisdiction of the United States courts.

3. On November 10, 1952 the Canadian Ambassador to the United States presented a note to the State Department affirming Canada's immunity from jurisdiction in connection with this suit and asserting that Canada did not consent to be sued and had not waived its immunity from suit. The United States Secretary of State, in a note dated November 17, 1952, concluded that by accepting the Instrument of Approval with the conditions attached thereto, Canada "agreed to submit itself to the jurisdiction of the appropriate courts of the United States where a suit was instituted by an American citizen for damages arising from the construction or operation of the Dam". Without the consent of the Government of Canada and without informing the Government of Canada of the fact, the State Department on December 2, 1952 caused to be filed in the Clerk's Office of the United States District Court for the Northern District of New York a copy of the Canadian Ambassador's note dated November 10, 1952 and of the United States Secretary of State's note of November 17, 1952.

4. On January 27, 1953 a meeting of Canadian and United States representatives was held in the State Department to discuss this matter. The Canadian representatives there indicated that on February 6, 1903 the Canadian Government had concluded, in the light of discussions between Canadian and United States officials, that the construction of Gut Dam could, at worst, only damage the owner of Les Galops Island and that, in order to remove any objections that might possibly occur in the final consideration of the plans by the United States Secretary of War, the Minister of Railways and Canals should be authorized to give an assurance that should the dam cause "damage or detriment" and should the Department of Railways and Canals be unable to arrive at any satisfactory settlement with the party or parties owning the portion of the Island affected, the Government of Canada would pay compensation for the damage that might be done, as may be awarded the owner or occupant, in the proper court of the United States before whom his claims may be brought.

5. On February 10, 1903 the Hon. A.G. Blair gave this formal assurance which was transmitted to the United States Corps of Engineers on that date by Mr. L.K. Jones, Secretary of the Department of Railways and Canals. (Photostat copies of both documents are attached.)†

6. On August 11, 1903 public hearings, called by the United States Secretary of War, were held as a result of complaints made by the sole owner of Les Galops Island. At the hearing the owner did not substantiate his complaints; and, moreover, on the next day he agreed to release Canada from any future claims in consideration for the payment to him by the Government of Canada of the sum of $4,000. (On August 27, 1903 the Canadian Government sanctioned this transaction and the quit-claim was executed by the owner's heirs on October 26, 1903).

7. Having regard to the proposed settlement with the owners of Les Galops Island, the United States Secretary of War on August 18, 1903 approved the construction of the Dam subject to two Conditions, the second of which stipulated that should the construction and operation of the said Dam cause damage to the property owners of Les Galops Island "or to the property of any other citizens of the United States", the Government of Canada shall pay such amount as may be agreed between the parties or as may be awarded by the proper court of the United States before which claims for damages may be brought. On August 19, 1903 the Acting United States Secretary of State, in transmitting the Instrument of Approval to the British Ambassador referred to the Conditions and stated that the United States Secretary of War's action was taken pursuant to the United States Public Law approved on June 18, 1902 and "upon assurances and statements filed with the War Department from Mr. L.K. Jones and Mr. Andrew G. Blair, Minister of Railways and Canals in Canada".

8. At the meeting held on January 27, 1953 in the State Department, the Canadian representatives affirmed that the only person whom the United States Secretary of War had in mind when he attached the second Condition to the Instrument of Approval was the owner of Les Galops Island. The Canadian representatives argued that, according to international law, even if an agreement between Canada and United States could be implied, it could not be given a meaning greater than that which the Canadian and United States negotiators had agreed upon, namely, to compensate only the owner or occupant of Les Galops Island; and that this is the meaning which should be ascribed to the second condition of the Instrument of Approval. At a subsequent meeting of the Canadian and United States representatives held in the State Department on April 10, 1953 the United States representatives declared that, after examining all the correspondence fully, they had come to the conclusion that the language of the second condition must be deemed to apply to all or any citizens of the United States; that Canada must be deemed to have accepted the two conditions because at the time it did not refute or object to them; and that accordingly Canada had then waived its immunity. This argument was contested and found unacceptable by the Canadian representatives.

9. A further document which was not at hand at the time of these meetings but which provides additional confirmation of the Canadian interpretation of the intention of the United States Secretary of War when he gave his approval, has now been obtained from the United Kingdom Foreign Office which, in 1903, was conducting Canada's external relations. (photostat copy is attached hereto).† In this document Secretary Root, writing on August 18, 1903 to the Ambassador for Great Britain in Washington, informed him that he had that day approved the plans and details for the construction of the Dam subject to certain Conditions set forth in the Instrument of Approval "which are in accord with stipulations made by the representatives of the Dominion Government, Mr. L.K. Jones, Secretary, and Mr. Andrew G. Blair, Minister of Railways and Canals in Canada". These stipulations, as previously mentioned, related only to the "owner or occupant of Les Galops Island". It is obvious that, if the Conditions of the Instrument of Approval were "in accord" with the Canadian stipulations, those Conditions could not go further than the Canadian stipulations and therefore the Conditions must have referred exclusively to damage caused to the owners of Les Galops Island.

10. The Government of Canada has concluded and now wishes formally to place on record its view that when Secretary Root signed the Instrument of Approval on August 18, 1903, subject to certain Conditions, he clearly intended that the second Condition was to be more restrictive than appears prima facie from its language and that it was to apply only to the owner or occupant of Les Galops Island. This second Condition, in the light of Secretary Root's authoritative interpretation and as heretofore understood by the Canadian authorities, could give rise to claims only by the owner or occupant of Les Galops Island, whose heirs, on October 26, 1903 accepted $4,000 from the Canadian Government and gave it a full discharge for all further claims.

11. It follows that, even if it could be successfully maintained that by constructing Gut Dam pursuant to the approval of the United States Government Canada had waived its immunity, such waiver could accrue only to the benefit of the owner or owners of Les Galops Island. This conclusion has an all-important bearing on the wider question of Canada's general immunity from jurisdiction in the United States courts which the Canadian Ambassador asserted in his note of November 10, 1952 and which the Government of Canada wishes to re-affirm at this time.

12. The Government of Canada urges, therefore, upon the Secretary of State the desirability of withdrawing from the Clerk's Office of the United States District Court for the Northern District of New York the notes of November 10 and November 17, 1952 which were exchanged between the Canadian and United States Governments and which on December 2, 1952 the State Department had caused to be filed in the Clerk's Office. Ends.

We presented the aide-mémoire yesterday afternoon at the State Department to Phleger, the Legal Adviser. We were represented by LePan and Fortier.[111] Yingling was also present for the State Department.

[111] D'Iberville Fortier, troisième secrétaire, ambassade aux États-Unis.
D'Iberville Fortier, Third Secretary, Embassy in United States.

2. Since Phleger had never before been immersed in these issues, we decided to hold the aide-mémoire in reserve and to take the meeting as an opportunity for giving him a fairly full oral exposition of the problems involved and of the Canadian case. We began with a comparatively uncontroversial statement of the facts, bringing out that from 1903 to 1951 there had been no complaints about Gut Dam, although it had been there all that time and although there had been wide fluctuations in the level of Lake Ontario throughout that period. We also made it clear that the rise in the level of Lake Ontario which could by any calculation be attributed to Gut Dam was a very small fraction of the rise which had caused damage to property owners in 1951.

3. We then gave Phleger a somewhat more ex parte exposition of the Canadian case on the immunity issue. Here we followed very closely the facts as presented in the aide-mémoire which you had prepared, drawing particular attention to the new evidence which had come to light. In view of the additional document which had been discovered in the Foreign Office, we requested that the State Department withdraw from the Clerk's Office of the United States District Court of the Northern District of New York State the notes of the 10th and the 17th of November 1952, which had been exchanged between the Canadian and United States Governments.

4. Before concluding our representations and handing the aide-mémoire to Phleger, we endeavoured to impress on him the importance which the Canadian Government attached to this whole issue and particularly to the question of sovereign immunity. We told him that the Canadian Cabinet had considered the problem of how to deal with the Gut Dam claims on several occasions. We also emphasized that Canada was at least as jealous of its sovereignty as any other State and could not regard lightly any attempt to deny to it immunity from suit, which is an important attribute to sovereignty. In the recent past there had been a good number of issues between the two countries, particularly in the field of defence, in which various aspects of sovereignty had been involved; and it seemed virtually certain that other issues of a similar kind would arise in future as the requirements of continental defence were reassessed. In the past such issues had been resolved by the exercise of good sense and forbearance on both sides. However, it might prove rather more difficult to resolve satisfactorily similar issues which might have to be faced in the future if the United States Government in this case failed to show meticulous regard for Canadian sovereignty and continued to deny to us the immunity from suit which we believed we should enjoy.

5. Phleger listened courteously to our statement, which took the best part of half an hour. You will be interested, we think, in his reactions, which so far as we could judge showed a considerable measure of independence. He had no doubt been briefed, at least sketchily, by Yingling before we arrived; but his comments seemed to be the expression of his own preliminary judgment on what we had said. He first expressed some curiosity about how the summons had been served on the Canadian Government. When we explained that it had been left in the office of our Consul-General in New York, he evinced some personal doubt whether such a procedure was valid. He also seemed unhappy when we stated that, by submitting to the Office of the Clerk of the United States District Court in Northern New York the notes of the 10th and 17th of November, 1952, the State Department had by implication certified to the court that Canada was not entitled to immunity from this suit. He enquired of Yingling whether or not in his opinion the State Department had so certified; and Yingling replied that, at the instance of the State Department, the Attorney General of the United States had informed the court that Canada did not enjoy immunity.[112] Thinking aloud, Phleger then said that he wondered whether it might not have been better merely to convey to the court all the material bearing on the question of immunity and to make it clear that it was for the court to decide whether or not Canada was immune in this case. To this Yingling replied that the Supreme Court on a number of occasions had expressed the view that it was preferable for the State Department to tender clear advice to the courts on questions of immunity and for the courts, at the outset at least, to accept such advice. Phleger also expressed some curiosity about how it would be possible for the Canadian Government to fight the issue of immunity through to the United States Supreme Court if that should prove necessary. He personally was not quite clear how that could be done but supposed it might be possible. He also commented that it would surely be extremely difficult for a United States claimant to have a judgment of a United States court executed against the Canadian Government.

6. On the basis of our oral exposition, Phleger then expressed his preliminary view on the issue of whether or not Canada was bound by the second condition attached by the Secretary of War to the Instrument of Approval signed on the 18th of August, 1903. He could not see, he said, how it could be argued that this did not constitute an agreement between Canada and the United States. Canada had asked for cooperation from the United States in carrying out a project in which it was interested. The United States had granted its approval but had attached conditions. The document in which the approval and the conditions were formulated had been transmitted to the Government[113] of the United Kingdom, which was then responsible for Canada's foreign relations, for onward transmission to the Canadian authorities. No objection had ever been raised to the conditions either in 1903, when they were first laid down, or in 1904, when they were reiterated at the time the height of the dam was raised. Knowing the conditions which had been imposed, Canada had gone ahead and built the dam. If he had been presented with such a set of facts in his own private practice, Phleger said he certainly would have concluded that there had been an agreement and that Canada was bound by the conditions that had been imposed.

7. It seemed to him, he said, that this was essentially what had happened. Canada had asked for the consent of the United States that a dam should be built abutting on United States territory. Congress had passed an act saying that this could be done, provided it did not raise water levels in the Great Lakes and provided the Secretary of War approved. The Secretary of War may be assumed, he suggested, to have come to the conclusion that any obstruction to the flow of the St. Lawrence

[112] Note marginale:/Marginal note:
Did he?

[113] Note marginale:/Marginal note:
No[t?] as far as we can ascertain such as Gut Dam would almost certainly affect, however slightly, water levels in the Great Lakes. In any case, when granting his approval he had attached the condition that, if the property of the owners or occupants of Les Galops Island or of any other United States citizens were damaged as a result of the construction or operation of Gut Dam, such United States citizens should be compensated by the Canadian Government, which for this purpose would accept the judgment of the United States courts. If that was a fair, although rough, summary of what had happened in 1902 and 1903, he could not see why Canada should now object to being hauled into the United States courts.

8. There then followed a brief session of cross-examination, in which in retrospect we do not think we acquitted ourselves too adroitly. Putting the question of whether or not Canada would have been prepared to waive its immunity in the case of an action brought by the owners of Les Galops Island, he suggested

(a) That, if the answer to this question was "yes", it was then somewhat unreasonable for Canada to make such heavy weather about waiving its immunity in an action brought by property owners not very far away from Les Galops Island; and

(b) That, if the answer to that question was "no", then the whole of the second condition attached by the Secretary of War to his Instrument of Approval became meaningless.[114]

This question would seem to be a pretty shrewd "Morton's Fork". We take it that the proper answer is that the question is entirely hypothetical, since all possible claims of the owners or occupants of Les Galops Island were once and for all extinguished in 1903. If an answer is to be given, it presumably should be "no". We finally reached this two-fold answer, but only after some hesitation. You will appreciate, however, that we were confronted by someone with much longer experience in such legal issues than we could command and also that the Canadian case as it stands at present has so many different angles (which have been introduced at various stages in the consideration of the Gut Dam claims) that considerable skill is required to reconcile them and hold them in a single, solid structure. In part, our uneasiness in trying to answer Phleger's question was due to uncertainty whether our legal experts are now disposed to argue that the conditions attached to the Instrument of Approval by the Secretary of War were ultra vires.

9. The new document which we had to present did not make any deep immediate impression either on Phleger or Yingling. However that was hardly to be expected, since they will have to appraise it at leisure in conjunction with all the other evidence. Phleger promised that they would consider it closely and sympathetically, and reserved judgment on whether or not it would change the State Department's position on the immunity issue. Unlike Phleger, Yingling throughout had the air of a man whose mind is already made up. At this point in the discussion he said that he would not be frank if he did not say that, at first glance at least, he did not think the new evidence was adequate to prove that the words of the second condition of the Instrument of Approval meant something other than they said.

which is our position

10. In conclusion, you might like to have our appraisal of what has been accomplished. We still very much doubt whether the State Department will withdraw the notes of the 10th and 17th of November, 1952 from the Clerk's Office of the United States District Court for Northern New York, although that is perhaps just a bare possibility. The presentation of the aide-mémoire, however, as you intended, should

(a) Record formally our views on the immunity issue;

(b) Inform the United States claimants through the State Department of the strength of the Canadian position; and

(c) Make available a document which could be published in the event of failure of the negotiations with the claimants for arbitration.

We also think that our oral presentation may have had some usefulness in impressing on Phleger the importance which the Canadian Government attaches to the immunity issue and to the problem of the Gut Dam claims as a whole. We should add, however, that, in spite of the very patent good will and attentiveness he showed throughout the meeting, he still seemed when it was over a little mystified over why the Canadian Government should attach so much importance to this issue and should believe so strongly, on the basis of the available evidence, that it was entitled to immunity.

11. The only other point that is perhaps worth recording was a casual remark by Phleger that he assumed one reason we were now presenting this aide-mémoire was that we were having difficulty in our negotiations with the claimants. To that we merely replied that, so far as we knew, the negotiations had not been broken off. We did, however, explain why it is thought in Ottawa that the Oster motion for judgment by default may possibly be heard in the District Court at Syracuse on the 14th of September.

We have received today from the State Department the reply to our aide-mémoire which was handed to Phleger on the 8th of September. The text of the State Department's aide-mémoire is contained in my immediately following telegram. As you will see, it is a thorough-going rejection of the Canadian case on the issue of sovereign immunity.

GUT DAM CLAIMS

Reference: My immediately preceding teletype.

The following is the text of the aide-mémoire. Text begins:

The Canadian Government's aide-mémoire of September 8, 1953, relating to the claims arising out of the operation of Gut Dam states that the Government of Canada now deems it important to review this matter, particularly in the light of a newly found document which is considered to have a significant bearing on the question of immunity from jurisdiction.

The document is a letter of August 18, 1903, from the Secretary of War, Elihu Root, to the British Ambassador in Washington, informing him that "pursuant to the provisions of the act of June 18, 1902, I have this day approved the plans and details for the construction of the said (Gut) dam on the territory of the United States, subject to certain conditions set forth in the instrument, which are in accord with stipulations made by the representatives of the Dominion Government, Mr. L.K. Jones, Secretary, and Mr. Andrew G. Blair, Minister of Railways and Canals in Canada". The Canadian Government's aide-mémoire states that the Canadian Government had concluded on February 6, 1903, that the construction of Gut Dam could, at worst, only damage the owner of Les Galops Island, and that in order to remove any objections that might possibly occur in the final consideration of the plans by the Secretary of War, the Minister of Railways and Canals was authorized to give an assurance that should the dam cause damage and should the Canadian authorities be unable to arrive at any satisfactory settlement with the parties or party owning the portion of the island affected, the Government of Canada would pay such compensation for any damage that might be done as might be awarded the owner or occupant in the proper court of the United States before whom his claims might be brought, and that this formal assurance was transmitted to the United States Corps of Engineers by Mr. L.K. Jones, Secretary, Department of Railways and Canals. From these facts it is argued that the Secretary of War required only that claims of the owner or occupant of Les Galops should be taken care of.

Aside from the fact that it would be unusual if the Secretary of War had sought to protect only certain possible American claimants and had left others unprotected, the above view appears inconsistent with the clear language of the second condition attached to the Secretary of War's approval of the construction of the dam. That condition was that "if the construction and operation of the said dam shall cause damage or detriment to the property owners of Les Galops Island, or to the prop- erty of any other citizens of the United States, the Government of Canada shall pay such amount of compensation as may be agreed upon between the said government and the parties damaged, or as may be awarded the said parties in the proper court of the United States before which claims for damage may be brought." The Canadian interpretation would have the effect of nullifying the underscored words. Furthermore, it gives no effect to the statement in the Secretary of War's letter under reference that his action in approving construction of the dam was taken "pursuant to the provisions of the act of June 18, 1902". That act gave consent for the construction of the dam provided such construction would not, in the judgment of the Secretary of War, materially affect the water level of Lake Ontario or cause any other injury to the interest of the United States "or any citizen thereof", so that the Secretary of War was obligated to protect the interests of all American citizens and not just those on Les Galops Island. This is precisely what the second condition attached to the Secretary of War's approval did and was intended to do.

It should also be pointed out that the Secretary of War's approval for construction of the dam, transmitted to the British Ambassador by the Department of State, was not a negotiated agreement but a unilateral determination by the Government of the United States of the conditions under which it would consent that the dam be constructed on American territory. Acceptance of the approval by construction of the dam necessarily entailed acceptance of the conditions. As previously indicated the Department of State takes the view that acceptance of the condition to pay such amount of compensation for damage as might be awarded citizens of the United States by courts of the United States constituted a waiver of any immunity from suit to which the Government of Canada might otherwise have been entitled.

For the above reasons, the Department of State regrets that it feels unable to comply with the request of the Government of Canada that the Exchange of Notes of November 10 and November 17, 1952 (copies of which were filed with the United States District Court for the Northern District of New York) be withdrawn.

Department of State,
Washington, September 17, 1953.

THE AMERICAS

9. United States Claims Arising Out of the Construction and Operation of Gut Dam

Legal Division: Since July 15 the attorneys for the Lake Ontario Land Development and Beach Protection Association, Inc. (the Oster group of claimants) have had for examination a Canadian draft agreement for the establishment of an international arbitral tribunal for the investigation and adjudication of the Gut Dam claims. . . . On September 21 the Washington representatives of these claimants informed Mr. I.B. Wyatt, the New York attorney acting for Canada in this matter, that they wished to discuss this draft on October 6. The claimants' attorneys indicated at the same time that their lawsuit, pending in the District Court for the Northern District of New York, would be postponed while these negotiations on arbitration were continuing or until the claimants had given due notice that they wished to proceed in the court.

During the two-month interval a number of developments took place which did not alter the general position but which indicated some of the complexities of the Gut Dam affair. Early in August Mr. Wyatt came to Ottawa to discuss with the Canadian officials concerned the Canadian draft agreement on arbitration. During these discussions he was fully briefed on the Canadian position on the merits of the claims, which is: that in order to determine whether compensation should be paid, the appropriate tribunal should take into account all the improvements to navigation effected by the Government of Canada in the International Rapids Section of the St. Lawrence River, and should also consider all the factors affecting water levels in Lake Ontario. The Canadian engineering authorities emphasized that, in the assessment of damages, Gut Dam could not be considered merely as an isolated obstruction in the River. This view is at variance with the contentions of the claimants, who consider that once the effect of Gut Dam, taken by itself, on the said water levels has been determined by a simple formula, this effect can be translated into monetary damages to compensate for part of the injury suffered by the claimants. There is, therefore, likely to be a wide divergence of opinion on the terms of reference of the proposed arbitral tribunal.

Attorneys for the other claimants have been kept informed about the negotiations on arbitration. These claimants have instituted the two Clay lawsuits and the Ontario Refectories case, all in the District Court for the Northern District of New York. In addition, another group of claimants represented by William D. Kiley of Oneida has been making enquiries. Because diverse interests and competing attorneys are involved, there is a constant possibility that one or other of the lawsuits will be pressed in the court, in spite of the negotiations on arbitration. It has been necessary, therefore, to prepare the Canadian case on immunity and insufficiency of service for presentation to the court. On September 14, when it appeared that the Oster motion for judgment by default was actually to be proceeded with, Mr. Wyatt attended the District Court in Syracuse for the purpose of appearing amicus curiae. However, since the Oster attorney simply asked for a further postponement, Mr. Wyatt remained silent.

GUT DAM; SETTLEMENT OF CLAIMS AGAINST CANADA

12. The Secretary of State for External Affairs, referring to discussion at the meetings of May 13th and June 12th, 1953, reported on developments with respect to claims against Canada arising out of the operation of the Gut Dam.

The claimants' attorneys appeared anxious to drop the idea of the establishment of an international arbitral tribunal because this might involve Congressional approval, and, as alternatives, had suggested the creation by Canada and the United States of a fund against which claims for damages attributable to the Gut Dam could be prosecuted, or conclusion by Canada of an agreement with the Lake Ontario Land Development and Beach Protection Association, whereby an arbitral tribunal would be established with the approval of the US State Department, the expenses of arbitration to be met by the Government of Canada and the Association. Both alternatives appeared to be wholly unacceptable because, amongst other things, they were based on the assumption that Canada admitted some liability. The US State Department had not admitted the Canadian claim to immunity even though new evidence had been uncovered which supported the view that, in strict law, Canada had no undischarged obligation arising out of the construction and operation of the Gut Dam.

It was recommended that the attorneys for the claimants be informed that the alternative proposals were unacceptable, that the Canadian offer for arbitration was still open and that the US State Department be informed that the Government of Canada did not accept the United States position on immunity.

(Minister's memorandum and attached draft aide-mémoire Oct. 19, 1953 — Cab. Doc. 253-53)†

13. In the course of discussion it was pointed out that, in its proposals, Canada was not arbitrarily deciding that there was no liability. It was relevant that, although the Gut Dam had been out for nine months, there had been no appreciable effect on water levels.

14. The Cabinet agreed:

(a) that the attorneys for the Oster group of claimants (Lake Ontario Land Development and Beach Protection Association, Inc.) be informed that their alternative proposals, with regard to the settlement of claims against Canada as a result of the operation of Gut Dam were wholly unacceptable, and that the Canadian offer for arbitration, as embodied in the draft agreement, stood as the only appropriate and practical method of determining the claims; and,

(b) that the US State Department be advised, along the lines submitted in the draft aide-mémoire, that the Government of Canada did not accept the United States position on immunity in this matter and that, while reserving its rights, it was still prepared to consider arbitration.

DESPATCH L-1238 Ottawa, October 30, 1953

GUT DAM CLAIMS

Reference: Your telegram WA-2430 of Oct. 23/53.†

1. Perhaps I should explain more fully the reasons for the decision that the State Department should be informed that the Government of Canada adheres to its previous position on immunity in this matter and must, accordingly, reserve its rights. You will have seen the brief discussion on this point in the Memorandum to the Cabinet of October 19, 1953.†

2. After receiving the State Department's reply of September 18 to the Canadian Aide-Mémoire of September 8 on this subject and your comments thereon, I concluded that nothing would be accomplished by prolonging the debate. The legal advisers of the State Department apparently remained unshaken in their attitude which, in our view, is based more on policy than on legal considerations. The Legal Division disagrees with the State Department's conclusions about the events and documents of 1900-04 and considers that the divergence of opinion can be finally determined only after a full enquiry by a competent judicial authority. We are, however, not anxious at this stage to press the matter to its logical conclusion, that is, to admit that a dispute on the immunity issue exists between the two Governments and to suggest that this dispute be referred to an international judicial authority, perhaps to the International Court of Justice. This has always existed as a possible development but we see no advantage in taking the step at the present time. (At one stage during the discussions in January 1953 Tate suggested that the immunity issue be submitted to arbitration. Moreover, Cabinet on May 13, 1953 agreed in principle that the possibility of a reference to the International Court might be explored.) We do consider it important, however, to reserve our rights.

3. The Canadian concern over this issue would be less if (assuming that the lawsuits in the United States courts were to be pursued) the immunity issue could be left free for determination by the United States courts. As we have previously stated, there is an important line of precedents in United States law and practice which appear to establish the principle that the court should consider as a "conclusive determination" or an "instruction" any opinion on immunity appropriately rendered by the State Department. (Mr. A.B. Lyons' article in the British Year Book of International Law 1947, Vol. XXIV, is instructive on this point.) This line of precedents is not settled and the facts and legal circumstances therein differ widely from those in the Gut Dam proceedings. It is by no means certain that the United States courts would consider these precedents as binding in their consideration of Canada's sovereign immunity, as contended in the Gut Dam litigation, especially if Counsel for Canada were able to show significant distinctions between these cases and the facts before the court. Nevertheless, the existence of the precedents and the State Department's apparent determination, as a matter of policy, to have the Gut Dam proceedings brought within this category have made it necessary for us to take all steps, short of declaring a dispute between the two Governments, to protect the Canadian position. Unless we are now prepared to accept the State Department's position, we are obliged to continue this effort.

4. It is probably not necessary to emphasize that in pleading sovereign immunity in the present matter, the Government of Canada is not resorting to an unfair legal subterfuge, which is in any way unworthy of Canada in its dealings with the United States citizens. The doctrine of sovereign immunity is well established in international law and has been generally accepted by the governments and people in most countries. We believe that the Canadian interpretation of the events and documents leading to the construction of Gut Dam is sound in international law and practice; and that, given a proper hearing, it might well be accepted to the embarrassment of the State Department, even though the United States Government has not officially espoused the claims. We are, moreover, not satisfied that, in dealing with Canada's claim to immunity, the State Department has afforded the Government of Canada the protection which, in accordance with well established principles, it has reason to expect.

5. If Canada had submitted, or if it now agreed to submit to the jurisdiction of the United States court, it would run the grave risk of having a highly complex and technical matter decided by, at the worst, a jury of United States citizens, and at the best, a judge ill-equipped to assess and render judgment on the complicated mass of engineering and other evidence which these claims will involve. Moreover, the Government of Canada would in all probability be faced with a long, tedious and costly litigation which would be bedeviled by innumerable frivolous claims. As Canada has stated publicly, the United States courts are not appropriate (in every sense of the word) to investigate and determine claims of this kind which have customarily been submitted to international arbitration.

6. In addition to the foregoing — and perhaps more significant than any of the other factors — is the factual evidence that between 1900 and 1903 the Canadian Government of the day took the greatest pains to remove, in advance of the construction of Gut Dam, all foreseeable sources of grievance in the United States. It is clear from the record of the deliberations of the Cabinet at that time that the Government was most anxious to avoid injury to United States citizens. As a result of long and careful investigation, it was determined that one such citizen might suffer slight injury from the construction and operation of the Dam. This citizen, the owner and occupant of Les Galops Island, agreed to be compensated in advance for the injury he might suffer. The Government of Canada was determined and glad to clear away this sole encumbrance before proceeding with the construction. Moreover, the Instrument of Approval of the United States Secretary of War was not issued until after this agreement to compensate had been reached. In view of all these circumstances, the Canadian authorities concluded that it was safe to proceed with construction and never gave a second thought to the conditions of approval, which especially in the light of the Root letter of August 18, 1903, were regarded as a matter of form.

7. On the basis of these facts, and in the light of the legal considerations mentioned in the enclosed memorandum, strong and valid arguments in international law can be made to show (a) that there has never been any undischarged obligation, arising out of the events and documents leading to the construction of Gut Dam by Canada, to compensate United States citizens for injuries suffered; and (b) with greater certainty that there has never been any waiver of sovereign immunity in this regard. What the position in equity might be, based on the rights of riparian owners, is another matter and not one for consideration in this despatch. It might be sufficient to say, however, that it is in the interest of equity that Canada has made the offer of arbitration.

8. Since at this stage we are not anxious to prolong the debate or to cause unnecessary irritation over the immunity issue, the proposed aide-mémoire states simply that Canada adheres to its position and reserves its rights, including of course the right to raise the matter at a later stage, if developments make it necessary. The possibility exists, for example, that if the litigation in the United States courts proceeds against us, in spite of our best legal efforts, we might eventually be faced with a demand by the United States Government to satisfy a judgment in favour of the claimants which we would consider unreasonable and unjust. At that time we might wish to re-open the immunity issue, but particularly if our arguments thereon had not been accorded due consideration in the United States courts.

9. On balance, therefore, I can see no alternative to bringing the immunity issue once more to the attention of the State Department. I agree with your suggestion that the aide-mémoire (copy attached) be handed to Mr. Tate by Mr. LePan. I suggest that this be done as soon as a meeting can be conveniently arranged. I share your hope that a further discussion of the issue, particularly the legal complexities, can be avoided. If, however, some discussion does take place, Mr. LePan might use as background material the information in this despatch and its enclosure, suitably paraphrased. You will no doubt be reporting on this interview in due course.

Aide-Mémoire

The Government of Canada has reviewed the position as a result of the recent events in the matter of Gut Dam claims and has noted that, in reply to the Canadian Aide-Mémoire of September 8, 1953, the Department of State affirmed on September 18 that Canada must be considered to have waived its sovereign immunity. The Government of Canada adheres to its previous position that it has not at any time waived its immunity in this matter and must, accordingly, reserve its rights.

It might be remembered that Canada did undertake to compensate the owner or owners of Les Galops Island should any damage accrue as a result of the construction of Gut Dam. This undertaking was redeemed in 1903 when Canada obtained at the cost of $4,000 a release for any future damage from the then owners of Les Galops Island.

Notwithstanding Canada's rights in this matter, it has offered to the claimants to have the matter arbitrated before an international arbitral tribunal. This offer, made about July 15, 1953 through the New York attorneys acting for Canada, still remains open.

11. United States Claims Arising out of the Construction and Operation of Gut Dam[115]

Legal Division: On October 30 the Canadian Ambassador in Washington was instructed to deliver to the State Department an aide-mémoire stating that the Government of Canada, having reviewed the recent exchange of views on the immunity issue, adhered to its previous position that it had not at any time waived its immunity in this matter and must, accordingly, reserve its rights. The aide-mémoire added that, notwithstanding Canada's rights in this matter, it had offered to the claimants to have the claims arbitrated before an international arbitral tribunal and that this offer still remained open.

In the meantime Mr. Wyatt, the New York attorney acting for Canada, had informed the Washington attorneys of the Lake Ontario Land Development and Beach Protection Association Inc. (the Oster group of claimants) that their alternative proposals for determining the claims were unacceptable and that the Canadian offer of arbitration stood as the only appropriate and practicable method. The claimants' attorneys were apparently not surprised at the Canadian reaction which they undertook to bring to the attention of their principals in the Rochester area. The Oster motion for judgment by default, pending in the District Court for the Northern District of New York, has been postponed an additional 30 days while these consultations are taking place.

13. United States Claims Arising Out of the Construction and Operation of Gut Dam

Legal Division: Although it was clearly understood in advance that the public hearings of the International Joint Commission, at Rochester on November 17 and at Hamilton on November 18, were to be concerned with the cause and effects of high water levels in Lake Ontario with specific reference to the proposed power works in the International Rapids Section of the St. Lawrence River, there was every reason to believe that some reference would be made to Gut Dam and to the injury which property owners on the south shore have attributed to the Dam. At the hearing in Rochester, the references to Gut Dam were noisy and bitter; the Dam was represented as being the cause of all past troubles and as a warning against the future construction of works in the St. Lawrence without adequate assurance and protection against property damage.

Although most of what was said by spokesmen for the property owners — notably Representatives Keating and Ostertag, and Walter Forsyth, attorney for the Lake Ontario Land Development and Beach Protection Association Inc. — had been heard before, a number of interesting facts were revealed during the course of the public discussion and in private conversations between representatives of the Association and of the Department:

(a) The directors of the Association appeared to be not opposed to the Canadian proposals, as set forth in the draft of July 10, for arbitration by an international tribunal. The directors have been led to believe, however, that it will be difficult, if not impossible, to obtain the necessary Congressional action for the establishment of such a tribunal. The President of the Association, Mr. Norman Atterby, proposed to seek clarification on this point from the State Department.

(b) The directors of the Association appeared not anxious to pursue their lawsuits against Canada in the United States courts. Their reluctance stems from their opinion that Canadian legal arguments on sovereign immunity and on insufficiency of service are likely to prevail; and from a shortage of funds with which to finance protracted litigation. Nevertheless, in desperation and in order to satisfy the many disgruntled claimants, the directors might be tempted to pursue the litigation.

(c) The Association is receiving conflicting advice from its lawyers. There is also dissension among the ranks of the directors. It is therefore difficult to predict the future course of events.

(d) The spokesmen for the Association are still not aware of the complexities of the engineering evidence needed to substantiate their claims. They seem prepared to accept the "state of nature" as the basis for their rights with respect to water levels but, with respect to Gut Dam, they tend to oversimplify the casual connection between its effect on water levels and the injury sustained by the property owners.

(e) The Canadian contention of sovereign immunity has been misrepresented among the claimants. An attempt was made at the Rochester hearing to create the impression that Canada had refused to submit to the United States courts because "The King can do no wrong". These remarks were calculated to stir up the spirit of 1776 and to some extent this end was achieved. This indicates that in future public pronouncements on the immunity issue Canada should emphasize that the principle of sovereign immunity is well recognized by all sovereign states, republics and monarchies alike; and that the principle stems from the sovereignty of the state rather than from the status of the head of state.

The hearing in Hamilton was conducted in a much more dignified manner than the one in Rochester. There was very little talk of compensation for past injury and the references to Gut Dam were few and lacking in conviction.

HIGH WATER LEVELS — LONG LAC, OGOKI

The House Foreign Affairs Committee yesterday requested the State Department, in a letter addressed to Dulles, to act in ending the 1940 executive agreement with Canada that authorized diversions of the Long Lac and Ogoki Rivers from Hudson Bay into Lake Superior. Ostertag, who originated the June 25, 1952, reference to the IJC in this matter, contended that the IJC should be given jurisdiction over the flow of the two rivers.

2. Patterson and Hattaway of the Engineering Board on levels of Lake Ontario were scheduled to appear before the IJC later on during additional hearings. Brown and Vallance of the State Department told us today that the committee's letter has not yet reached their level but Vallance thinks, however, from what he has read about the letter, the State Department may have to take action at once before additional hearings are held by the IJC.

Reference: Your WA-1894 of August 4, 1953 and Our Despatch No. X-497 of March 10, 1952.

Thank you for your telegram forewarning that the State Department may find it necessary to take immediate action pursuant to the House Foreign Affairs Committee's request concerning the Exchange of Notes in 1940 on the above-mentioned subject.

2. For your background information, it has always been our position that the Exchange of Notes in 1940 authorized the use in Canada at Niagara Falls of a specific amount of water for power purposes and that this authorization was later confirmed in the Niagara Treaty of 1950. The notes did not purport to authorize the diversions themselves as such diversions — from a watershed wholly within one country — can be made by one country on its own authority.

3. The authorization of the use of a specific amount of water for power purposes by Canada at Niagara Falls is limited in the Exchange of Notes of 1940 and (by reference to the notes) by the Niagara Treaty of 1950 only by the phrase "pending the conclusion of a final Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Basin Agreement". At the time, this was intended to be the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Basin Agreement of 1941 (which met its end in our election-day note last year). If we now maintain our position rigidly, the State Department might suggest opening up the larger issue of a final Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Basin Agreement. Our preliminary view is that we would not welcome the opening up of this issue although we may have to come to it by gradual steps. We would certainly not welcome it at this time or at least until the question of possible United States participation in the Seaway can be dealt with as a tangible factor.

4. On the other hand, the matter of these diversions, insofar as it concerns the level of Lake Ontario, is before the IJC for study and recommendation. You should, therefore, advise the State Department informally that we consider it would be better to take the position that the matter is before the IJC, as it were sub judice, and that action should await the result of the Commission's investigation. It might be added that the diversions have been reduced on occasion as a gesture of goodwill when some benefit would result and that the general situation with regard to Great Lakes levels is gradually improving. If any different action is contemplated by the State Department, we would hope to be consulted informally in advance.

Reference: Your EX-1369 of August 6, 1953.

Following the telephone conversation of this morning between Cox[116] and Fortier, we saw Vallance and made clear our position with respect to the House Foreign Affairs Committee's request. We were assured that no direct action will be taken at this time by the State Department to end the executive agreement of 1940 or to suggest to Canada that the IJC should be given jurisdiction over the flow of the two rivers.

2. Vallance told us that, because of considerable congressional pressure and in view of the political implications of the committee's request, the State Department had, however, to take some immediate action. The United States Embassy in Ottawa will, therefore, be instructed today to make representations along the following lines:

(a) The United States Government suggests that Canada join with the United States in requesting the IJC to give top priority to the hearings on the high-water levels of the rivers and to report in October, if at all possible;

(b) The United States Government asks Canada to reduce again temporarily the Long Lac, Ogoki diversions in order to lower the Great Lakes level.

3. We asked whether the State Department were ready to withhold further action pending the completion of the IJC report. Vallance said that, although the State Department did not consider the matter to be subjudice while under consideration by the IJC, they would prefer to let the IJC complete its hearings and its report before taking any "drastic action". He could give no definite assurances that such a course will be followed but said that the agreement of Canada on proposal (a) (above) would help the State Department to withhold action on the committee's request. Vallance agreed that the State Department would consult with Canada before taking any further action in this matter.

4. In the course of the conversation Vallance made some rather unsuccessful attempts to prove that the Long Lac, Ogoki diversions, as well as the use at Niagara Falls of the additional water thereby provided, had been authorized by the 1940 executive agreement between Canada and the United States. He insisted that Long Lac, Ogoki diversions were closely linked with the ensuing additional diversion at Niagara Falls, we said that the two diversions (in and out) were certainly linked physically but that the 1940 executive agreement had by no means authorized the Long Lac, Ogoki diversions since such diversions were a matter of exclusive Canadian jurisdiction. Vallance said that it was inherent in the 1909 treaty that diversions of water in the Great Lakes were a matter to be submitted to the IJC, since they affected the level of boundary waters. We retorted that no such provision is included in the 1909 treaty implicitly or explicitly and that diversions from the watershed wholly within one country can be made by one country on its own authority. Our impression is that Vallance was not too much convinced of the point of view he had advanced and was rather trying to know what would be our reactions to such an unusual interpretation of the boundary waters treaty. In connection with the House Foreign Affairs Committee's request to give jurisdiction to the IJC over the flow of the two rivers, we stated firmly that we were not ready to accept such jurisdiction.

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures à l'ambassadeur des États-Unis

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Ambassador of United States

NOTE NO. X-259 Ottawa, September 29, 1953

The Secretary of State for External Affairs presents his compliments to His Excellency the Ambassador of the United States of America and has the honour to refer to the Ambassador's Note No. 32 of August 17, 1953, concerning the Long Lac and Ogoki diversions in Northern Ontario.

As stated in the Department of External Affairs' Notes No. X-125 of May 1, 1952 and No. X-133 of May 7, 1952, the diversions of these Canadian rivers are harnessed to important hydro-electric power developments serving communities and industries in the area which are consequently dependent on them. In a spirit of co-operation, however, the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario has on occasion made arrangements to reduce or stop the diversions temporarily when such action would serve a useful purpose without serious damage to the interests involved. The Long Lac diversion is directly harnessed to the Aguasabon power plant and continuous use of this water is necessary; but in order to ease the anxiety of interests directly affected by the out-flow from Lake Superior, the diversions have been reduced to a minimum by stopping, temporarily, the entire flow of the larger or Ogoki diversion to the Great Lakes basin.

With regard to the proposal that the International Joint Commission be requested to give priority to this aspect of the Reference of June 25, 1952, the Reference itself asks the Commission to make recommendations with a view to reducing the fluctuations and to bringing about a more beneficial range of stage of the water levels of Lake Ontario. These fluctuations vary in unpredictable irregular cycles. Changes in the diversions from the Hudson Bay watershed would be reflected in Lake Ontario levels only after a protracted period of time. It is therefore considered that the manipulation of these diversions would not constitute an effective means of reducing the fluctuations of the water levels of Lake Ontario. The Canadian Government considers that a significant measure of relief to those interests which may be affected by the fluctuations of the level of Lake Ontario can best be afforded by relating the out-flow of Lake Ontario as much as practicable to the amount of water flowing into the lake, as proposed in the operation of the control works which are an integral part of the St. Lawrence Power Project. The early commencement of this development would not only meet the urgent need for power in both countries but would also assist in dealing with the problems arising in both countries from the fluctuations of the level of Lake Ontario.

Accordingly, no useful purpose would seem to be served in requesting the Commission to digress from the orderly conduct of its work under the Reference of June 25, 1952.

4. Niagara Remedial Works

American Division: On July 21 President Eisenhower personally approved the International Joint Commission's recommendations concerning the remedial works for the preservation of the scenic beauty of Niagara Falls provided by the Niagara Treaty of 1950, and he sent a message to Congress asking for a supplementary appropriation of $1.5 million to cover part of the costs of the US works. On the same day the State Department and the Department of External Affairs informed the two sections of the International Joint Commission of the Government's approval of the recommendations and asked the International Joint Commission to supervise the construction of the remedial works. Mr. St. Laurent also sent a letter to Premier Frost, formally asking the Province of Ontario to undertake the works in this connection as provided for in the Treaty.

The Province of Ontario is now enabled to undertake, through the Ontario Hydro Electric Commission, the construction of the Canadian share of the works. Of a total of about $17.5 millions of works estimated in 1952, $16 millions are estimated to be on the Canadian side of the river and will be undertaken by the Ontario Hydro Electric Commission. Conversations are taking place between the Ontario and Federal authorities on July 27 to agree upon the financing of these works in advance of discussions which will be required with the United States authorities.

4. Appointment of Canadian Representative Pursuant to Article VII of the Niagara Treaty of 1950

American Division: The Niagara Treaty of 1950 provided for the preservation and enhancement of the scenic beauty of Niagara Falls and for more economical use for power production of all water not required for scenic purposes. Remedial works designed to provide an unbroken crestline on both the American and Horseshoe Falls are to be constructed and operated under the supervision of the International Niagara Board of Control appointed by the International Joint Commission. Article VII of the treaty provides that Canada and the United States will each designate a representative to ascertain and determine the amounts of water available for the purposes of the treaty and to record the amounts of water used for power. Mr. Thomas M. Patterson, Assistant Chief of the Water Resources Division, Department of Resources and Development, was appointed as Canadian representative by Order-in-Council of September 9, 1953. Pursuant to a recommendation of the International Joint Commission approved by the two governments, their representatives under Article VII will also serve on the International Niagara Board of Control to supervise the remedial works and arrangements are being made to appoint Mr. Patterson as Chairman of the Canadian Section of this Board.

CONFIDENTIAL Ottawa, March 24, 1953

LIAISON WITH THE ECSC

You will see from paragraph 8 of despatch No. 174 of January 21, 1953,† from London, that the High Commissioner believes that we should give some thought to what our attitude would be:

1. if the United States accredits a delegation to the High Authority and is invited to send (congressional) observers to the ECSC Assembly;

2. alternatively, if we were requested concurrently with the United States to send a delegation to the High Authority.

This problem is largely theoretical at the moment, but the High Commissioner suggests that we might later be faced with the necessity for a rapid decision.

2. Relations between the ECSC and non-member countries have recently become more clearly defined. The following appears to be the position at the moment:

(a) The United Kingdom has established a formal permanent delegation to the High Authority, and a Joint Committee, presided over by M. Monnet[1] himself, has been set up in Luxembourg to increase cooperation. The United Kingdom also wishes to have official parliamentary observers in the ECSC Assembly, with the right to speak. M. Schuman feels that such observers should only be allowed to speak when questions such as GATT, overseas trade, or the question of relationship between the High Authority and non-member countries are under consideration. M.

---

[1] Jean Monnet, président, Haute Autorité, Communauté européenne du charbon et de l'acier.
Jean Monnet, President, High Authority, European Coal and Steel Community.

Monnet, in contrast, views the ECSC Assembly as a sovereign federal parliament in which foreign observers would be quite out of place. At its recent meeting, the ECSC Assembly accordingly voted to exclude British and other foreign observers from any official part in its deliberations. M. Monnet stated that the opening of the common market (February 10) might provide the opportunity for a specific definition of the association between the United Kingdom and the ECSC, and indicated that this would open the way for fixing relations with countries that wanted association and with those that wanted observers. In this connection, you will remember that M. Spaak[2] earlier expressed his views that countries such as the United Kingdom who wished a close working relationship with the ECSC would have observers with the right to speak but not to vote; and purely consumer countries, such as Ireland and Iceland, would have non-speaking, non-voting observers.

(b) The United States has not yet clearly defined the nature of its representation to the High Authority. At present it has an "Acting Representative at the seat of the High Authority", who, however, is not permanently stationed there. More formal arrangements will be made in the near future; probably the delegation will have a status similar to that of the United Kingdom.

(c) Sweden has decided to appoint a delegation (of which one member will be permanently stationed in Luxembourg) "to make contact with the High Authority". The press release on the subject was rather vague on the precise nature of the relationship, but our Minister in Stockholm expects it to be of a rather informal character. The delegation was merely to hold a "watching brief" until the setting up of the common market. Sweden will maintain a cautious attitude towards the ECSC until it has proved itself capable of carrying out its functions; in the meantime Sweden will rely upon its normal competitive position in the market to dispose of Swedish products.

(d) Mr. Spierenburg, the Dutch member of the High Authority, expects shortly to conclude similar arrangements with Norway. The Danes have appointed their Permanent Delegate to the OEEC, as "Liaison Officer" to the ECSC. Denmark may conceivably join the Community as a full member later on. Norway has decided to send a permanent delegation to Luxembourg.

(e) Mr. Spierenburg also contemplates some kind of unpublicized representation from Austria.

(f) Switzerland has to be represented although there are indications that she views the Community with distinct mistrust.

(g) Turkey is not likely to establish liaison with the ECSC in the near future, despite the recent increases in production of crude steel and iron ore in that country. The MSA mission believes that Turkey is not yet an exporter of these commodities to an extent which would justify such a liaison.

(h) Mr. Spierenburg stated to the wife of the Canadian Minister in Stockholm, but not to the Minister himself, that he hoped Canada would at a later date become associated with the High Authority in some manner. It is only in this extremely devious manner that the question of Canada's relationship to the ECSC has come up at all as yet.

---

Paul-Henri Spaak, President, Common Assembly, European Coal and Steel Community.

3. You will remember that in a memorandum of November 20, you expressed the opinion that no decisions on strictly commercial aspects of the ECSC of interest to Canada would be taken in December in the United States or United Kingdom Joint Committees. Your opinion was fully justified by events, as in fact, the US-ECSC Joint Committee has not even been set up as yet. You also stated that Canada had some interest in the economic implications of the ECSC, and that some form of liaison in order to follow economic developments might be desirable in the future.

4. You will also observe from letter No. 1 of January 21, 1953, to Paris-NATO from the Ambassador in Bonn† that he believes the activities of the body should be of interest to Canada both from the political and economic points of view.

5. Our tentative view at present is that:

(a) The activities of the ECSC Assembly, as distinguished from those of the High Authority, are not for the present of sufficient importance politically[3] to justify our sending observers, parliamentary or otherwise. Moreover, it is liable to be some time before the twin sister of the ECSC Assembly, the "Ad-hoc" Political Assembly, is endowed with real powers. Until that time its constitution-making activities are liable to be conducted under conditions of intense publicity and public debate which would render an on-the-spot Canadian observer largely unnecessary, unless it was clear that secret negotiations were taking place there about which information could be obtained by an observer.

(b) We believe that the High Authority is not liable to carry on political activities of any importance until a European Political Community is on the point of coming into being. This does not seem likely for some time.

(c) Thus a formal Delegation to the High Authority would seem to be quite unnecessary from a political point of view. It would probably be quite easy to decline gracefully an invitation to accredit such a delegation, particularly in view of the smaller European countries who have resorted to more informal methods of association with the ECSC.

(d) A less formal type of representation at the seat of the High Authority could be considered, either on a basis of occasional visits or of permanent residence. Such representation would be useful but definitely not vital at present in gathering political information.

6. The problem of liaison with the ECSC, as far as this Division sees it, therefore, resolves itself almost exclusively into the question of Canada's long-range economic interest (e.g., Labrador iron ore, Canadian capital investment in Europe, etc.) in the Community. This Division believes, accordingly, that the decision whether or not to recommend the establishment of liaison with the ECSC is primarily the concern of your Division.

Note de la Direction économique pour la Direction européenne

Memorandum from Economic Division to European Division

CONFIDENTIAL Ottawa, April 25, 1953

CANADIAN LIAISON WITH ECSC

Reference: Your Memorandum of March 24.

In your memorandum you draw attention to the suggestion of our High Commissioner in London that some thought might be given to the possible desirability on some occasion of our accrediting a delegation to the High Authority and/or sending observers to the ECSC Assembly. You suggested that, at the present time, and particularly as long as the European Political Community has not been constituted, the political activities of the High Authority and of the Assembly are not such as to justify Canadian observers. You conclude that it is primarily the concern of this Division (insofar as this Department may wish to take a position on the question of possible Canadian representation at the seat of the ECSC) to consider whether or not a recommendation should be made that Canada should establish liaison with the ECSC. I take it that this conclusion of your Division relates only to present circumstances and that should the EDC be ratified and the EPC come into existence you might wish to re-examine this question from the political point of view.[4] The opinion given below relates to existing circumstances.

2. In our memorandum of November 20, 1952 it was indicated that at that time we considered, insofar as Canada might have either a direct commercial interest or a more general economic interest in ECSC, that it was sufficient to continue to receive periodic reports from our Missions. I find that, in the light of what has transpired in the last five months, the position of this Division remains the same.

3. Canada has the following commercial and economic interest in ECSC:

(1) As a consumer of European steel, we will wish to follow the Community's price policy (and its attitude towards export quotas in time of scarcity) and to watch any apparent tendencies to rig the market in a way which might adversely affect the interests of consumer countries.

(2) As an exporter of iron ore the possible effects on Canadian exports of the gradual rationalization of the European iron ore market would be of significance to Canada. I believe German imports of Wabana ore are on a long-term contract basis but there is a possibility that the long-term trend in the Community will be towards a greater use of French iron ore.

(3) It would also be desirable to watch the development of the Community and its general effects on the efficiency of European industry, — the iron and steel industry directly and the engineering and other industries indirectly.

[4] Note marginale:/Marginal note:
yes [L.B. Pearson]

4. To some extent our commercial and economic interests already are safeguarded and we are in a position to watch developments. As you know, when the Contracting Parties to GATT granted waivers to the Community from certain of the obligations under the General Agreement, these waivers were restricted to only those necessary for the operation of the single market. In view of this, and as the High Authority could be requested to consult with the Contracting Parties with respect to the exercise of these waivers, non-member countries have obtained some measure of protection from the possibility of the High Authority pursuing undue discriminatory policies. A similar arrangement exists with respect to the obligations under the OEEC Code of Liberalization.

5. Taking the introduction of the common market in coal, iron ore and scrap iron as a guide, it is evident that the process of establishing these common markets is going to be a very gradual one. It would seem, therefore, that it should be sufficient from the point of view of this Division to follow a policy of wait and see with respect to the desirability of Canadian representation at the seat of the High Authority. Moreover, it would seem that the possibility cannot yet be ruled out that ECSC may flounder at the first obstacles. It has avoided and has not yet come to grips with a number of important problems with respect to the introduction of the common market in iron ore. From both a political and economic point of view it would seem that we should re-examine the question of Canadian representation at a later date, possibly if and when EDC is ratified.[5]

6. With respect to the representation already established by the United Kingdom and the United States, both these countries of course have a much greater political and economic interest in the Community and I do not think we need to take their action as a guide. However, the form of their representation is of interest and, from the point of view of this Division, if Canadian representation were arranged in the near future, the procedure adopted by the United States, or possibly by Denmark probably would be satisfactory.

7. In conclusion, I see no need at the present time to consult with other Government departments or to take any other initiative with respect to Canadian representation; and I feel we should continue to rely on the reports of our Missions about the activities and the development of the Community. If we should receive an invitation to establish some form of representation, I do not consider that commercial and economic considerations alone would justify Canadian representation. (The question would have to be examined on political grounds as well.)

CONFÉRENCE EUROPÉENNE DES MINISTRES DES TRANSPORTS EUROPEAN CONFERENCE OF MINISTERS OF TRANSPORT

893. DEA/11143-B-40

Note du sous-secrétaire d'État adjoint aux Affaires extérieures pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum from Assistant Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Secretary of State for External Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL Ottawa, December 13, 1953

EUROPEAN CONFERENCE OF MINISTERS OF TRANSPORT

In a memorandum to you dated November 16, 1953,† we reported that Ministers of Transport from OEEC countries and from Spain had agreed to establish a permanent European Conference of Ministers of Transport and that it was open to Canada to become an associate member upon request. The Conference is to consist of a Council of Ministers of Transport and a Committee of Deputies. These two bodies are to be assisted by an administrative secretariat.

2. Article 4 of the Protocol concerning the European Conference of Ministers of Transport deals with membership and associate membership. The Article reads in part as follows:

"(2) The associate members of the Conference shall be the Government of the United States of America and the Government of Canada, if they so request, and any other Government, after its application for associate membership has received the unanimous approval of the Council".

"(3) Associate members may be represented at all meetings of the Council and of the Committee. All documents originating in the Conference shall be communicated to them".

3. Although there is some grammatical ambiguity in paragraph 2 of the English text, the interpretation has been checked with the State Department and with the Belgian Ministry of Communications. Moreover, the ambiguity does not exist in the French text, and it is clear that Canada, along with the United States, is in a preferred position in that the Council has agreed in advance that Canada will become an associate member ipso facto upon request.

4. So far as we can learn, associate membership would not carry formal duties or responsibilities, and in particular there would be no financial obligation upon an associate member, although there would undoubtedly be a moral duty to attend meetings and to show some interest in the activities of the organization. It would also appear that the only privileges would be the right to be represented by an observer at meetings of the Conference and the right to receive Conference documents.

5. The question arises whether Canada should request associate membership in the Conference. There are both political and technical considerations which we shall endeavour to set out below.

6. On the political side, we are interested in following the efforts of European countries towards integration. Further, both Spain and Yugoslavia were invited to participate in the organizational session of the Conference and we were curious to observe the manner in which those countries might cooperate with their neighbours; but Yugoslavia did not attend, and although a representative of Spain attended and signed the Protocol, State Department officials expect that Spain will only apply for associate membership and not full membership in the permanent Conference. We also have a political interest in the new organization because of its ties with OEEC, of which we are an associate member; but some OEEC countries, such as Ireland and Iceland, will not be members of the new organization so that there is scarcely likely to be pressure to have complete OEEC representation in the Transport Conference.

7. On the technical side, we have never considered that the work of the Conference would be of direct interest to Canada. It seems likely that the Conference, after technical discussions, will call on existing organizations such as OEEC and ECE to do the substantive work which the Ministers of Transport may recommend. In view of our association with OEEC and our satisfactory working relations with ECE, any possible Canadian interests in the technical work of the Transport Conference will probably be met without associate membership in the new organization.

8. The Conference of Transport Ministers will normally hold meetings in Paris and if a Canadian observer were to attend, it would fall upon our Delegation to NATO and OEEC to provide an officer for this purpose. Because of the small staff attached to our Paris Mission and the commitments of that Mission which deserve priority, it would be difficult to arrange for attendance at all meetings of the Transport Conference. Through OEEC it should, however, be possible to obtain documents relating to the Transport Conference even if Canada does not become an associate member and is not represented at meetings by observers. It should also be possible for our Delegation in Paris to obtain information from OEEC colleagues and to report on any significant developments which might arise in the Transport Conference even if Canada is not an associate member of that organization.

9. On balance, it does not appear to us that the political or technical advantages of association with the Transport Conference are important enough to justify a Canadian application for associate membership.[6] This is particularly true in the light of difficulties which might be encountered in providing observers for all meetings and in consideration of the fact that we shall presumably be able to obtain documents and information by virtue of our association with OEEC. The United States has not yet decided what attitude they will adopt, but if the United States should request associate membership, this should cause no misunderstanding with respect to the Canadian position for the United States has played a much more active role in post-war European reconstruction than has Canada, the United States is still an occupying power in Germany and Austria, and our personnel problems are not shared by the United States.

10. Do you agree that Canada should not at this time request associate membership in the European Conference of Ministers of Transport?[7]

11. We have been informed through the Belgian Embassy in Ottawa of our right to become associated with the new organization and recently the Embassy has reported that early in the New Year a meeting of the Transport Conference is likely to take place at which only members and associate members will be present. We have already acknowledged the information provided by the Belgians and are not called upon to respond to a formal invitation. If you agree that Canada should not request associate membership, do you also agree that the Belgians might be told informally that it is not our intention to request associate membership at this time because of personnel difficulties and the likelihood that the substantive work of the Conference will not be of direct concern to us?[8] We might add that we hope to follow the progress of the new organization through our association with OEEC and that should circumstances change, we would no doubt wish to reconsider our present decision.

12. If you agree with the above suggestions, we believe that it would be courteous to seek the concurrence of the Departments of Transport, Trade and Commerce and Finance before communicating with the Belgian authorities. The concurrence of the other Departments might be sought on the Deputy Minister level. Do you agree with this procedure?[9]

DISCUSSIONS IN OEEC ON PROPOSALS EMANATING FROM THE COMMONWEALTH ECONOMIC CONFERENCE[10]

Repeat London No. 81; Washington No. EX-107.

Thomson of the UK High Commissioner's Office has spoken to us about suggestions which have been made that they should divulge these proposals at this time to the Secretary-General and to the Delegations in Paris. He has left with us a memorandum requesting our support in resisting any such suggestions that may be made in the OEEC. This memorandum notes that a firm decision on the question of entering formal negotiations destined to give effect to a definitive plan on the lines discussed at the Conference can only be made in the light of exploratory discussion with the United States and later with European Governments. The memorandum continues:

"It would clearly be impossible at this stage to make any precise suggestion as to how such formal negotiations might eventually be conducted; but it is certainly the intention of the United Kingdom Government that they should be designed to secure international agreement and collective action in which European Governments would be associated together with the United States and the Commonwealth.

The United Kingdom Government believe that the wider exploratory discussions which they intend to have after the first informal approach to the United States may to a considerable extent have to be conducted on a bilateral and inter-governmental basis because of the nature and secrecy of the proposals. They wish to assure the Canadian Government that they fully recognise the special interests of the Canadian Government and that it is their firm intention when the time comes to consult the Canadian Government and to have a full exchange of views with them.

[10] La conférence eut lieu à Londres, du 27 novembre au 11 décembre 1952. Voir volume 18, documents 570-607.
The conference was held in London, November 27-December 11, 1952. See Volume 18, Documents 570-607.

At the same time, the United Kingdom Government realise that any proposals for moving towards freer trade and currencies must have important consequences for the work of the OEEC particularly in relation to the future of the European Payments Union and the liberalization of trade. They therefore intend that the organisation should be brought into these further exploratory discussions to the maximum possible extent and should be given adequate opportunity of examining the adjustments that might have to be made in the present arrangements.

For the time being, however, and until the exploratory discussions referred to above have indicated whether a satisfactory basis for international agreement is likely to be found, it appears to the United Kingdom Government that it would be unrealistic for the Organisation to attempt to take these longer term possibilities into account in its current programme of work. They consider therefore that the Organisation's work in regard to the continuation of the EPU after 30th January 1953, and to the liberalization of trade should be carried forward on the existing basis on the assumption that the EPU would continue until there was some change in existing international currency arrangements of such a broad character as to require major adjustments to be made to EPU. The Organisation would however be given ample time and opportunity for the study of those adjustments and their consequences.

The United Kingdom Government hope that in the light of the explanations given in this message the Canadian Government will feel able to instruct their representatives in the Organisation to support this line".

2. We agree that you should cooperate in helping to ease the pressure on the United Kingdom to inform the OEEC at this stage regarding the proposals discussed at the November Conference. Time should be allowed for the United Kingdom to complete the necessary soundings in Washington and to carry out the required bilateral exploratory conversations with the principal European Governments before this subject is thrown open for general discussion in the OEEC forum. Accordingly, it would not appear possible for the OEEC to make any allowance for the various longer term possibilities in any current discussion relating to the immediate future of the EPU.

3. It would not seem essential for us to support the view that the "existing basis" is necessarily the most suitable one for the continuation of the EPU or for carrying forward the liberalization of trade. Any improvements which can be made in the present basis, without involving assumptions concerning the "longer term possibilities", should presumably be considered.

DISCUSSION IN OEEC ON PROPOSALS OF COMMONWEALTH ECONOMIC CONFERENCE

Reference: Your telegram No. 54 of January 21, 1953.

We shall be glad, following your instructions, to "cooperate in helping to ease the pressure on United Kingdom to inform the OEEC at this stage regarding the proposals discussed at the November conference". However, it would help us to carry out your instructions if we could have some additional information and guidance. Our files contain the complete series of telegrams from London to Ottawa regarding the Prime Ministers' Conference and regarding the preceding official conference, but little else. These telegrams do not throw much light on some of the substantive and procedural issues now emerging. Only one telegram bears directly on the role of OEEC (No. 16 of October 6) and this does not distinguish at all clearly between the responsibilities of certain OEEC countries (members of the nuclear group) and the functions of OEEC as an organization. The particular points on which we would like guidance are as follows:

(a) Are we right in assuming that the United Kingdom, in its preliminary approach to Washington, will be raising for discussion all the main issues touched upon in the two series of telegrams from London mentioned above, except those issues on which the United Kingdom failed to obtain substantial support, e.g. the elimination of the "no new preferences" rule? Which of the issues would you expect the United Kingdom to press most strongly?

(b) How far can it be said that the United Kingdom will be approaching the United States merely on its own behalf after consulting other Commonwealth countries or how far on behalf of the other Commonwealth countries (or other sterling Commonwealth countries)? We have no doubt that many OEEC countries imagine that the United Kingdom approach to the United States is on behalf of the Commonwealth.

(c) Are we right in believing that, early in the Conference, the United Kingdom was inclined to take the line that, in putting forward and pressing the new Commonwealth proposals, it would necessarily have to be withdrawing support from OEEC and EPU; and are we further right in believing that it was partly because of Canadian initiative that the United Kingdom came around to the view that goals of convertibility and flexibility might be sought partly through the medium of OEEC and EPU broadened and extended as required?

(d) How far do you consider that continued membership of EPU would be incompatible with progress towards convertibility, assuming that such progress was made not by the United Kingdom alone but by all members of the "nuclear group" at the same time and at roughly the same speed? The recent OEEC study relating to convertibility (TP(52)36 of December 11, 1952) does not seem to come to grips with this particular problem. We were somewhat disturbed to learn (London's telegram to you No. 102 of January 22, paragraph 7†) that the United Kingdom propose to insert in the new EPU agreement a clause permitting any country which restores convertibility to withdraw from EPU. We would have thought that such a proposal coming from the United Kingdom at this time would have confirmed suspicions among the European countries that the United Kingdom was planning to abandon them in favour of some separate Commonwealth arrangement with the United States.

(e) How far do you wish us to go in supporting the United Kingdom along the lines of your instructions under reference? Do you merely wish us to make a short formal statement in the next meeting of the heads of OEEC delegations, or do you wish us in addition to talk privately to some of the leading delegations? The latter approach would, of course, carry a good deal more weight. On the other hand, such approaches on behalf of the United Kingdom would have to be carried out very delicately.

2. We do not find it easy to piece together from the two series of telegrams either the final conclusions of the conference (apart from those that could be touched upon in the communiqué) or the Canadian position relating to those conclusions. If a report on the conference has been prepared in Ottawa, we should be grateful to receive a copy.

3. The next meeting of OEEC on these matters is on Monday, February 2. Please send us such guidance as you can by that time.

DISCUSSION IN OEEC ON PROPOSALS OF COMMONWEALTH ECONOMIC CONFERENCE

Reference: Our telegram No. 55 of January 27 and your telegram No. 54 of January 21.

We have now had a talk with the United Kingdom representative on the OEEC, Ellis-Rees. He is, of course, following his instructions and disclosing nothing at this time of the nature of the Commonwealth proposals. Incidentally, he said that Marjolin when visiting London last week learned virtually nothing. However, Ellis-Rees is gloomy about the probable impact of the policy of silence on OEEC and EPU. It may be two or three months before the United Kingdom have satisfactory discussions, even on a very preliminary basis, with the new United States administration, and meanwhile, since the OEEC and EPU are to be kept in ignorance of the Commonwealth plans, they can do little serious planning themselves but must simply mark time. Ellis-Rees emphasized that it was the time factor that worried him; he felt continental countries would have willingly accepted the fact that the United Kingdom should make the first informal contact with the United States if it had not been for the long delay that this involved.

2. Ellis-Rees does not plan to make another statement in OEEC on February 2nd (the text of his statement made on January 19 was sent to you on January 20 under cover of letter No. 174†). However, it may be useful for us to intervene at that time following your instructions, and therefore we would appreciate the guidance requested in our telegram under reference. Ellis-Rees expects that the reports of the chairmen of the Managing Board and Steering Board will be of a pretty negative character indicating that, in the absence of knowledge of Commonwealth proposals or of plans for contacts with Washington, they cannot make much progress.

3. Ellis-Rees confirmed that in the EPU Managing Board the United Kingdom have now indicated their desire for an escape clause permitting a country to withdraw from EPU if it restores convertibility. According to Ellis-Rees the United Kingdom was forced to put forward this reservation because of pressure from the French to disclose their intentions.

4. Ellis-Rees expressed doubts about the practicability of restricting the "nuclear group"[11] to France, Belgium and Holland as far as the continent of Europe was concerned. He apparently felt that both Germany and Italy would have to be included as members of the "European community". As for the Scandinavian countries, he referred to meetings of "UNISCAN"[12] as a channel through which their views could be made known.

OEEC AND THE PROPOSALS OF THE COMMONWEALTH ECONOMIC CONFERENCE

Reference: Telegram No. 55 of January 27 from the Canadian delegation to OEEC. Repeat Canac.

The telegram under reference reflects the fact that the secret of the plan for a "collective approach" has been well kept, not only in all the Commonwealth countries but also within the Canadian Government service!

2. Clearly most of the questions contained in the telegram result from the fact that our OEEC mission have not seen the final reports from the Commonwealth Economic Conference. Nor have they seen the minutes of the Conference which would help to explain, at least partially and tentatively, certain of the more indefinite aspects of the plan for a "collective approach", e.g. the question of procedure and timing for consultations with the United States and European countries, the probable role of the OEEC as an organization, and the future of EPU. Although it was probably desirable two months ago to limit the distribution of documents to the essential minimum, I should think that we should now make these documents available to our OEEC mission. This does not mean, of course, that our people in Paris should reveal to their OEEC colleagues any information beyond what was contained in the communiqué issued at the end of the conference.

3. Couillard[13] will be going through Paris this week-end and, if you agree, he could take with him a selection of the basic documents. He would also be able at the same time to fill in some of the background and supplement the answers which you have supplied to the points raised in the telegram. If you wish this done, we would have to know by tomorrow, Thursday, night.

1. We are grateful for your message. By all means have Couillard take the necessary documentation in order to ensure that our NATO/OEEC Mission has sufficient background on the "collective approach". It should be emphasized to the delegation that any such documentation is solely for their own information and is not in any circumstances to be disclosed to other OEEC delegations. The circulation of these documents in Ottawa is being kept on a strict "need to know" basis.

2. We appreciate that the current United Kingdom surplus in EPU accompanied by continued import restrictions, and the general political background to United Kingdom-Continental relations tend to create special difficulties for the United Kingdom in the present situation. We recognize also that our own Delegation is in a somewhat embarrassing position since Canada is the only other country associated with the OEEC which is familiar with the UK proposals. We think, however, that it must be left pretty much to the UK to judge at what time, and in what manner, it would be desirable to take the OEEC countries into their confidence in the light of the discussions required with the United States.

3. In our earlier message we had intended that our Delegation should give general and friendly support to the UK in avoiding premature discussion of the proposals in the OEEC. We had not intended, and we do not now intend, that the Delegation should get involved at this stage in substantive discussion of the proposals, or of their possible relationship to the future of the OEEC and EPU. We would hope that the Delegation would do its best, within these limits, to allay the understandable fears and suspicions of the European representatives.

PROPOSALS OF COMMONWEALTH ECONOMIC CONFERENCE — POSITION OF OEEC

Reference: Your telegrams No. 55 of January 27, and No. 61 of January 28, London telegram No. 148 of January 28, and our reply No. 127 of January 29, repeated to you as No. 81.

Repeat (without priority) London No. 143; Washington No. EX-173.

The documents which Couillard is bringing over and the explanations he can supply should serve to clarify most of the questions you have raised, so far as answers can be given at the present time. His guidance and the views set out below should be regarded as for your own information. As indicated in our telegram No. 127, it is not considered advisable for you to discuss the substance of the proposals with other delegations and we are satisfied to leave the initiative with the United Kingdom at this stage.

2. The most pressing question you raise is what action you should take in supporting the United Kingdom in their unwillingness to disclose the details of the proposals to their OEEC partners. We consider that the United Kingdom is right in being unwilling to run the risk of leakage that would be involved. These risks relate less perhaps to the matter of exchange rate techniques which are contemplated, about which there has already been a good deal of rumour and discussion during the past year or so, than they do to the question of financial support through the Fund or otherwise. If a definite indication of what is planned comes out of Paris and the European countries start staking out their own claims, we think there is a real danger of adverse opinion becoming crystallized in the United States before the Administration has had an opportunity of hearing the whole story. This would obviously compromise the prospects for success of the Commonwealth plan.

3. Judging from WA-215 of January 28,† it may be some time before the extent of the United States willingness to participate in the scheme is known. In these circumstances it seems inevitable that the irritation of most Continental Authorities with the United Kingdom's apparent secretiveness will increase. While it would seem desirable for you to be as helpful as possible in easing the United Kingdom's embarrassment the effectiveness of any formal support we can give to the British, particularly in OEEC meetings, is of course limited by the fact that we took part in the London meetings and are fully familiar with the proposals. Knowing this the Europeans may look askance at counsels of patience coming from Canada. Moreover, European anxiety about the Commonwealth proposals no doubt reflects, in part, concern lest they have the effect of moving the United Kingdom away from tight and restrictive association with OEEC countries and towards closer collaboration with North America in a wider framework. A formal intervention in support of the United Kingdom's desire for secrecy at this stage might merely add fuel to the flames of suspicion.

4. While we see these objections to any formal statement on your part, or to an official approach to the Heads of the main European Delegations, we think that you can play a helpful and useful part in informal discussions, since you will at least be less suspect than the United Kingdom representatives. If you are approached by other delegations you might informally indicate your support for the United Kingdom position on the procedure to be followed and that you consider no real purpose would be served by discussing the proposals in OEEC until the reaction of the United States is known and until European governments have been consulted individually. It would be well to indicate our recognition that the delay is unfortunate and irritating but in this connection it might be pointed out that it is largely the product of the political timetable in the United States. You might give it as your opinion that the interests of all, including the OEEC countries, will best be served if the procedure suggested by the United Kingdom is followed. We think that your influence might be most effective if an opportunity presents itself to make these points with the representatives of Belgium, The Netherlands, Germany, the Scandinavian countries and possibly Italy and Switzerland. Our guess is that, for a variety of reasons not necessarily connected with finance and trade, the French Delegation will not be open to conviction at this stage.

5. The following are short answers to the other questions raised in your telegram:

Issues to be discussed with United States Authorities by United Kingdom Representatives

The "collective approach" to multilateral trade and payments will, we think, be presented in Washington as an integrated plan to be considered as a whole and it is likely that all the main issues touched on in the December series of telegrams from London will be brought up and related one to another. Although the approach to the Contracting Parties of the GATT fore-shadowed in paragraph 16 of the Communiqué, regarding certain possible increases in preferences, is not really a part of the "collective approach" as such, it will no doubt be discussed with the United States authorities. It is difficult to say which of the issues the United Kingdom will press most strongly but the matter of the exchange support fund is clearly an essential part of their proposals and they must also attach great importance to United States commercial policy. You will have seen from WA-215 of January 28, that a memorandum has been prepared by the United Kingdom and that Makins will probably be submitting it shortly to the US State Department and Treasury as an "advance informal indication" of the nature of the proposals. We have not seen this memorandum and, therefore, do not know in what precise terms the plan may be presented.

Extent to which the United Kingdom is acting for other Commonwealth Governments in approach to the United States.

The plan as a whole will be put forward as one which has commended itself to Commonwealth Countries as being worth discussion with the United States and other interested governments as a possible practical basis for a collective approach to a multilateral system of trade and payments. Commonwealth governments are to be kept informed of the course of the discussions and final decisions will be taken by individual governments only after the views of the United States, the main European governments, and the International Organizations concerned have been ascertained.

Effect of Proposals on United Kingdom's Support of OEEC

The United Kingdom did not put forward the view that the proposals would necessarily involve a withdrawal of support from OEEC and consequently there was no need for the Canadian Delegation to urge them to change any such view. Indeed in the original United Kingdom proposals the OEEC was to play an important role in the progressive removal of quantitative restrictions and apparently the United Kingdom still expects that there will be a good deal for the Organization to do in connection with the liberalization of trade.

Effect of Proposals on EPU

The effect of the introduction of convertibility for non-resident sterling on the position of EPU was not gone into thoroughly by the Conference. It would seem, however, that the proposals, if implemented, would require, at the very least, radical revision of the Payments Union, and if in fact the main participating countries were to join in the convertibility operation, the EPU would presumably become superfluous. If the other important countries now in EPU were not undertaking convertibility at about the same time as it was introduced for sterling it would seem necessary for the United Kingdom to withdraw because of the impractibility of operating with a convertible currency in a system of inconvertible currencies. It is difficult to see how the United Kingdom with its limited reserves, even with the assistance of any likely support fund, could accept the credit obligations of EPU once sterling had been made convertible. Pending clarification with the governments concerned on the possibility of implementing the "collective approach" there would seem therefore to be no alternative for the OEEC in planning its work but to assume a continuation of the EPU in more or less its present form.

6. I should be grateful if you would consider this telegram both as a reply to your telegram under reference and as our commentary on your letter to the High Commissioner in London of January 21st.

Pierre L. Calvet, Second Deputy-Governor, Bank of France.

to you in due course. Neither statement produced anything unexpected. In general they pointed up the difficulties of planning future work in the present uncertain situation. Both boards consider progress in liberalization to be at a standstill and Calvet considers a further retreat at least a possibility unless the two main countries, United Kingdom and France, withdraw restrictions.

2. Calvet reported that at the last meeting of the Managing Board, all members except Norway had expressed strong regret that the United Kingdom was not prepared immediately to disclose the main lines of its proposed approach to the United States. Many members had also expressed a hope that the approach would result in a strengthening of the union as a whole rather than an attempt by some countries to break away from it. Calvet expressed the view that the maintenance of EPU even as it exists today would be a real achievement. He suggested that a change in quotas and gold points might be required to prepare the way for the convertibility of the union as a whole.

3. A number of representatives commented on these two statements. On the whole the comments indicated a greater sympathy and understanding of the United Kingdom difficulties than were shown in previous meetings. Most of the countries have apparently accepted the fact that the United Kingdom will have to make the first approach to the United States but several expressed the hope that information on the approach would be given to the OEEC at the earliest possible date. The greater sympathy for the United Kingdom position probably reflects the success of the representations which the United Kingdom has made to the larger OEEC countries since Ellis-Rees' statement to council on January 21. We will send you a summary of the comments of individual representatives by air bag tomorrow.

4. After the other representatives had spoken Ellis-Rees made a very helpful statement which should serve to allay further the fears of the European countries. In part he said "I and my minister are firm believers in the organization. This is our (firm?) policy. Otherwise we would certainly not have undertaken to occupy this chair when council asked us to do so last June". He recalled the great success which was agreed in the formative stages of EPU when it was found possible to bring the sterling area into close association with the EPU. Now that there was a new suggestion that the sterling area might move toward a wider system of trade and payments, a procedural problem was raised by the fact that sterling was "owned" by a number of countries which were not members of the OEEC. He emphasized that the United Kingdom "was trying to do the best thing by everybody" and stated that the United Kingdom would "take the very earliest opportunity after exploratory talks in Washington to have full discussions here". He stated that the United Kingdom was firmly behind the policy of trade liberalization and that it is certainly not their intention to break down the European trading system which has been built up with so much difficulty.

5. On the question of the proposed OEEC mission to Washington a number of representatives expressed support of this proposal although the Danish representative felt that little could be expected from such a mission. Ellis-Rees will report to council tomorrow on his talks with Stassen on this subject.

1. Ellis-Rees informed heads of delegations yesterday afternoon that Mr. Eden wishes to initiate discussions in OEEC on the United Kingdom preliminary talks in Washington as soon as possible after his and Mr. Butler's return from the United States in March. He suggested that a Ministerial Council Meeting should be held on the 23 and 24 March for this purpose. Ellis-Rees will discuss a provisional agenda with Mr. Eden next week and this will be considered by heads of delegations soon after.

2. The Ministerial Council Meeting will delay the OEEC mission to Washington which Mr. Draper had suggested might arrive in the third week of March. The Secretary-General now considers the week of the 7 of April a probable date.

OEEC MINISTERIAL MEETING, MARCH 23-24, 1953

Reference: Our letter No. 616 of February 26.†

Following for Wilgress from Heeney, Begins: At yesterday's meeting of the OEEC Council, Ellis-Rees confirmed that the following items would be on the agenda for the Ministerial meeting:

(1) Questions arising from Commonwealth Economic Conference; report by United Kingdom Ministers.

(2) Future of EPU; report by Managing Board.

(3) Present position and prospects of liberalization; report by Steering Board.

In addition, the following items might be discussed:

(4) Relations between OEEC and the High Authority.

(5) Approval of establishment of Productivity Agency.

2. Both Mr. Eden and Mr. Butler expect to be present.

3. You will observe that the agenda contains items of considerable importance for us although we would expect the discussion to be preliminary rather than definitive and decisive. In these circumstances, it would not seem necessary for a Canadian Minister to make a special trip to Paris for this meeting and we suppose in any event that absence from Ottawa at that time would be exceptionally difficult if not impossible.

4. In view of the general nature of the agenda, and the steps you have already taken to inform us of Canadian views, I do not think that we need any background briefing. On the other hand, we should be well informed on the reception given by Washington to Messrs. Eden and Butler and the United Kingdom reaction to this reception. For this purpose, I am planning to let Plumptre go to London, if he can be spared from NATO annual review work, for a couple of days between the return of the Eden-Butler mission and the beginning of the OEEC Ministerial meeting. Ends.

OEEC MINISTERIAL MEETING, MARCH 23-24

Reference: Your telegram No. 176 of March 5.

Following for Heeney from Wilgress, Begins: I agree that it would be desirable for Plumptre to pay a short visit to London after the return of the Eden-Butler mission. In addition we shall, of course, continue to repeat the messages received from the Embassy concerning the Washington talks and we shall let you have a report on the conversations which Mr. Butler and his officials are expected to have here towards the end of next week. All of this should give you as much background information as possible on this subject.

2. Regarding the agenda for the Ministerial Meeting of the OEEC, I assume that the first item will be the one of principal interest to us. Even with respect to this item, however, I doubt that it will be necessary for you to take an active part in the discussion. Presumably attention will be concentrated on the report by UK Ministers (and possibly US representatives) on the Washington talks. You would probably not be expected to make any formal statement on this topic since, like the European countries, we are not taking part in those talks. There may, of course, be some further disclosures concerning the details of the proposals which emerged from the Commonwealth Economic Conference but even then I should not think that we would be expected to comment on them beyond indicating our general support in terms similar to those which I used in the first meeting of the OEEC after the Commonwealth Conference.

3. My own impression is that the report on the Washington talks will probably be quite general since the present indications are that these discussions will almost inevitably be inconclusive. The willingness of the United Kingdom to enter into a substantial discussion in the OEEC as early as March 23 will depend on the progress made in the Washington consultations and also in the bilateral discussions with the principal European countries up to that date. I can appreciate that the OEEC countries will probably be quite restless by that time and that this may be a very delicate meeting. Some of the European countries may recognize how difficult it is to move very far or very fast in consultations involving the new US administration and some of them may be content to await the outcome of the proposed visit of the OEEC mission to Washington before pressing for a full dress discussion in the OEEC Council. Others, however, may be inclined to urge fuller discussions in the OEEC now than the UK (and probably the US) would be prepared to contemplate.

4. We shall, of course, be sending further messages to you nearer the time of the meeting but we probably cannot provide very detailed guidance for the different kinds of situations which might develop at the meeting. Generally, I would hope that you will do what you can to convince the other delegations informally that they should not try to rush the discussions in the OEEC at a pace which might endanger the whole project. At the same time we should, of course, encourage the UK and US to be as forthcoming as possible in their presentations to the OEEC Council.

OEEC MISSION TO WASHINGTON

Repeat London No. 23; Washington No. 3.

1. The OEEC Mission will probably arrive in Washington on April 13 consisting of four Chairmen at official level (Council, Executive, Managing Board, and Steering Board), the Secretary-General, and an Assistant Secretary-General (Cahan).

2. Discussions are now taking place as to what should be discussed. Cahan tells us that Americans in Paris want the OEEC Mission to talk chiefly about European Plans of action, while Americans in Washington (contacted by telephone) urge concentration on recommendations for United States action. OEEC is inclined to follow advice from Washington. In any case, it would be difficult to talk very much about European plans since time would have been too short since the Ministerial meeting on March 23rd for these to have crystallized in relation to Commonwealth proposals. Unfortunately, as we remarked to Cahan, the degree to which European countries can influence American plans will depend to a considerable extent on the American appraisal of the nature of European plans and also of the determination of the European countries to carry them out.

3. Cahan enquired informally whether we thought that Canada would wish to be present at the meetings in Washington. If so, he suggested that initiative would have to lie with us but he felt sure that the OEEC would find such an arrangement acceptable. Incidentally, he added that arrangements would in any case be made to keep officials in Washington of every OEEC country informed of the course of the talks from day to day and that our officials would be included.

4. We replied that we would communicate the idea to you. However, our first reaction was that, despite Canada's deep interest in the Commonwealth proposals, you would be quite happy to play a background role in Washington. Further if anyone was to "invite" Canada to be present it should be the United States, first because they would be hosts and second because, if we appeared at all, it would be as an actively interested North American country rather than as a member of OEEC. Please let us know if you plan any initiative in this field.[15]

MANAGING AND STEERING BOARD REPORTS FOR OEEC MINISTERS

Repeat London No. 26.

Copies of the Managing and Steering Board reports C(53)71 and C(53)74 which will be on the agenda of the OEEC Ministerial meeting March 23 were sent to you under transmittal slip No. 735 of March 10† and 825 of March 16.† We have postponed commenting on these reports until they were discussed by the Joint Trade and Payments Committee last Saturday and on Monday and Tuesday of this week.

2. The Steering and Managing Board reports are carefully negotiated documents containing compromise recommendations and, on a number of issues, a presentation of views and a request for guidance from Council. There were occasional attempts to reopen discussion in the JTP Committee on unresolved points in the two reports but these were abortive. The United Kingdom representative continually stressed the desirability of not taking positions on many of these points of substance until after Mr. Eden's statement to Council on March 23.

3. The JTP Committee agreed unreservedly with the two general objectives of the two reports:

(i) To ensure the development of trade liberalization between member countries and associated monetary areas

(ii) To create the necessary conditions for a progressive relaxation of restrictions currently being applied by member countries on dollar imports.

4. The Committee, without rejecting the possibility that other and better systems might be possible following the Ministerial meeting, agreed with the Steering and Managing Boards recommendations that EPU should be prolonged and made its own recommendation that the period should be for one year from June 30, 1953. The majority felt there should be no additional withdrawal clause but the United Kingdom maintained its reserve on this point.

5. There was also unanimous agreement that if the union were prolonged, the "rallonges" or extensions to creditor quotas should be continued but renegotiated on an equitable basis for all creditors. There was no agreement on the percentage of gold payments and it was generally agreed that this would be a matter for bargaining at ministerial level following further consideration by the Managing Board after the March 23 meeting. There was unanimous agreement that the Managing Board should establish a close relationship with the Fund and should discuss the possibilities of arranging IMF financing of temporary EPU country deficits (see Paras. 56-69 of C(53)71).

6. On the subject of the immediate action required to offset the current trade crisis in EPU (see letter No. 583 of February 23†), the JTP Committee was able to make only a weak and delicately balanced recommendation. It felt that multilateral action was required. However, the creditor countries resisted any unduly strong recommendations that they should increase liberalization and made several statements suggesting that France in particular should set her own house in order instead of expecting countries with a high percentage of liberalization and stable internal economies to accept the main burden of re-establishing EPU equilibrium. The draft report contains only very modified references to France suggesting that she should take "all necessary measures to assure progressive liberalization of her imports". In response to a letter from the Chairman of the Steering Board requesting increased liberalization (our letter No. 583), the United Kingdom has undertaken a special study of possibilities for increased liberalization and will make an announcement of its intentions at the ministerial meeting.

OEEC MINISTERIAL MEETING ON MARCH 23-24

Reference: Our telegram No. 219 of March 7.
Repeat London No. 429; Washington EX-487.

During his visit to Ottawa Mr. Butler gave some indication of the line which he expects the UK representatives to take regarding the first item on the agenda for the OEEC Council meeting.[16] He warned that adoption of this line was dependent on the agreement of the Foreign Office which he hoped to secure on his return to London. He undertook to inform us of any changes before the meeting. The following is an outline of the tentative views expressed by Mr. Butler.

2. The report which the United Kingdom spokesmen will give to the Council on the Washington talks will probably be of a rather general character, although they may be willing to comment on certain specific points (e.g. convertibility support funds, European sterling balances, etc.) if that should prove necessary in order to allay the fears or suspicions of the European countries regarding their intentions. They will refer to the communiqué on the Washington talks which indicates that the examination and review initiated by those talks does not relate to any fixed plan but includes "possible alternative suggestions" as well as the "suggestions resulting from the Commonwealth Economic Conference". Accordingly, they will discourage any tendency to go into the details of the original Commonwealth proposals and will urge the OEEC and the member countries to consider instead the part which they should play in facilitating "progress towards a better balanced and growing world trade and towards the restoration of a multilateral system of trade and payments". They will emphasize the importance which they attach to the acceptance or reaffirmation of these objectives by the United States during the Washington talks and they will suggest that it is now up to the OEEC countries to show that they too adhere to these objectives which have been so often declared to be the purposes underlying the OEEC and the EPU.

[16] La visite de Butler eut lieu du 12 au 14 mars 1953.
Butler's visit took place March 12-14, 1953.

3. The UK representatives may indicate their readiness to see the EPU continued on something like the existing basis for a limited period (probably with special provisions for currencies which might become convertible) but they will make it clear that they are not prepared to accept the indefinite continuation of the EPU in its present restrictive form. They will press the OEEC to consider intensively the adjustments needed in national policies and the adaptations required in the EPU to promote the general objectives and to meet a situation in which one or more of the important European currencies had been made convertible. By the time of the OEEC Council meeting it may be possible for the United Kingdom to announce certain modifications in its policies towards European imports which might go some way to satisfy the French, Italians and others concerning the immediate future.

4. Generally Mr. Butler indicated that he thought the aims of the United Kingdom at the OEEC Council meeting would be:

(a) to secure the agreement of the European countries to the objectives set forth in the Washington communiqué;

(b) to enlist their help in developing constructive ideas which would promote these objectives, and

(c) to keep up the momentum which has been given by the Commonwealth Conference and by the Washington talks to the re-examination of commercial and financial policies.

5. Mr. Butler expressed the hope that the UK Delegation could count on Canadian support in attempting to influence the OEEC discussions along these lines.

6. The general view here is that the course proposed by Mr. Butler is reasonable and is likely to be more productive than an extensive enquiry into what happened in Washington or at the preceding Commonwealth Conference. Mr. Butler has been told that we share his views regarding the manner in which the discussions in the OEEC should proceed. Accordingly, you should give such support as you can to any efforts of the United Kingdom, and possibly the United States, Delegations to encourage the Council discussions to take the direction outlined above.

7. We shall, of course, advise you if we learn of any alterations in the United Kingdom position before the Council meeting.

Present position of trade liberalization

The Minister's discussions on the liberalization crisis (see our letter No. 538†) were sweetened considerably by Mr. Butler's Monday announcement that United Kingdom liberalization was being increased from 44 percent to 58 percent of imports on private account (21 to 65 percent in manufactured goods sector). He also announced that global quotas and items of special interest to France and Italy were to be increased in the second half of 1953. The liberalized items include some of considerable importance: textile yarns and piece goods, carpets, cheese, olive oil, peaches, etc. In addition the tourist allowance is increased from £25 to £40. Although it is difficult to estimate the payments effect of these changes, a figure of something under $10 million monthly has been mentioned. Mr. Butler emphasized that the measures taken involved a great sacrifice for the United Kingdom. It was quite wrong to assume that the United Kingdom difficulties were over, and it was essential that their cumulative deficit be removed over a reasonable period of time. However, the United Kingdom had made a special effort in view of the risk of the unravelling of European trade relationships and a return to bilateralism and also as an indication of the United Kingdom's firm support of European trade liberalization. He hoped that the United Kingdom initiative would be part of a joint effort to maintain the impetus of trade liberalization.

2. Mr. Blucher, followed Mr. Butler with an announcement of an increase in German liberalization from 84.4 percent to 90 percent involving both agricultural and industrial items. Also, tourist allowance will be increased from 500 to 800 marks.

3. These announcements were, of course, very well received particularly by France and Italy. Mr. Buron the French representative had a prepared statement announcing further import reductions. These were not announced, however, pending a re-examination of the French position in the light of the United Kingdom and German reliberalization. Mr. Hammarskjold mentioned the unfortunate tendency to increase discrimination if short-term EPU disequilibria were adjusted in this way. He felt that the burdens of adjustment were being shifted unduly to creditors. Normally, debtor countries should take remedial measures to solve their own positions.

4. The Ministers passed a resolution urging still further liberalization particularly by creditor countries. Tasca told us privately that they intend to urge the Netherlands and Belgium to increase their liberalization.

OEEC MINISTERIAL MEETING MARCH 23-24

Reference: Our immediately preceding telegram.
Repeat London No. 30.

1. Following is the text of statement made by Mr. Heeney at the morning meeting on March 24 on the general debate initiated by Mr. Eden and Mr. Butler, Text begins:

Mr. Chairman,

I am glad of an opportunity to make a few observations in the course of this interesting and important discussion. One of the goals of this organization, under its convention is the achievement "of a round and balanced multilateral trading system". If the OEEC had been entirely, or even largely, an inward-looking and narrowly European organization, I do not think that any Canadian would be in this room today. Happily we are all agreed that isolation, economic and political, is as bad for Western Europe as it is for North America. As you, Sir, so aptly pointed out: there is plenty of scope for regional co-operation — but it must be regional co-operation in a "One World" system.

Thus we warmly welcome the initiative which the Government of the United Kingdom has been taking — first in London, more recently in Washington, and now in Paris — to "bring about economic expansion and consolidate the Free World". Post-war experience in the fields of international trade and payments has been disappointing. The goals of free multilateral trade and convertibility, which we all accepted when joining new international institutions several years ago, are still far off. The Free World is still divided into currency blocs and trade blocs. Every year or two some major crisis seems to develop, liberalization arrangements have to be withdrawn, and one form of trade barrier replaces another. These barriers prevent us, individually and collectively, from developing our economic strength; and constant uncertainties in the whole situation make matters even worse.

Yesterday the representatives of the United Kingdom put before us a parcel of ideas about how to broaden our economies and strengthen the relationships between us. On that subject, there is really nothing that I can say that Mr. Eden and Mr. Butler have not already said quite clearly; but it might be helpful if I added, from the Canadian point of view, a word or two of affirmation.

To begin with, those of us who have worked over this parcel of ideas in the meetings of the Commonwealth countries, believe that the parcel is a good one. The general objectives, of broader economic freedom and solidarity, must, we believe, be accepted by all of us. As for the ways and means of achieving these objectives, we believe the parcel to contain a good mixture of good ingredients. That is not to say that further examination may not well lead to improvements. Here in Paris we must now undertake an intensive examination of the ideas put before us, with particular reference, as Mr. Butler has suggested, to trade and payments in Europe and to the problems of progress towards convertibility and non-discrimination. What we have already done in OEEC, and particularly our work in recent months on the fourth report, has laid a firm foundation for the task that lies ahead. Indeed that report might almost have been written as an introduction to the proposals put before us yesterday.

It might be suggested that the "Commonwealth Plan", about which there has been so much speculation in the press, turns out to be neither very precise nor very novel. However, on reflection, I am sure everyone will agree that the time has not yet come to be very precise; it would have been both fruitless and foolish to seek precision before full and mature discussions, both here and elsewhere. As for the suggestion that the parcel of ideas is not very novel, it is true that, individually, every one of the ideas has been considered and discussed in many quarters; it is a good omen that so many of them received favourable comment in our own fourth report. However, the significance of the parcel lies, I think not so much in the individual ideas that make it up but rather in the parcel taken as a whole, in what is left out as well as what is taken in, and, above all, in the initiative and the determination to press forward along these lines, or similar ones, towards the broad objectives of greater freedom of trade and payments.

If we are to move forward together we must do so in an orderly and considered fashion; if we try to run too fast we may stumble. Nevertheless, as we have agreed in our fourth report, we cannot afford to stand still. The climate for economic innovation today may not seem ideal; but there is no certainty that tomorrow the weather will be better. Mr. Chairman, you and your colleague the Chancellor of the Exchequer have put before us the views developed at the Commonwealth meeting before Christmas. You will recall Canadian participation at that meeting — and I know you appreciate the depth and sincerity of Canadian concern in these matters. The proceedings of yesterday morning round this table have given us all in OEEC a fresh impetus. It is now up to us all to maintain the momentum.

In conclusion I would like to quote a few sentences from the budget speech given last month by our Minister of Finance, Mr. Abbott. He spoke in part as follows:

"It is clear that the time has come for new initiatives.

"The Commonwealth Economic Conference which was held in London in December made a significant beginning. The conference decided 'that a more positive policy can now be adopted, both by the Commonwealth countries themselves and in concert with other friendly countries, to promote expansion of world production and trade'. The Commonwealth countries stated that it is their aim 'to secure international agreement on the adoption of policies by creditor and debtor countries which will restore balance in the world economy on the lines of trade not aid and will by progressive stages and within reasonable time, create an effective multilateral trade and payments system covering the widest possible area'."

If this beginning is to lead to concrete results, there must be close and continuing cooperation between the important trading nations . . . I need hardly add that we are prepared to play our full part in any common efforts which are designed to achieve a prosperous and expanding world trade.

OEEC MINISTERIAL MEETING MARCH 23-24

Reference: Our telegram No. 222 of March 18.
Repeat London No. 33.

Two sets of problems were considered by the Ministerial Council: the long term problems of convertibility and multilateral trade brought into focus by the Eden/Butler statements on the Commonwealth proposals and the short term problems of EPU extension and the European trade crisis. In addition Council took a decision setting up the European productivity agency.

The Eden/Butler Statements

2. Mr. Eden's introductory statement† (sent by airbag today) emphasized that the momentum of post-war recovery had been lost, that there was danger of stagnation and that present policies did not hold the solution to the free world's economic problems. He continued "in our judgement the only course is collective action by the United States, the Commonwealth and Western Europe. And the objects of that action are — to create the positive conditions for freer trade currencies over as much of the world as possible — and to provide the framework for expanding production and trade".

3. You will have received from London by telegram the text of Mr. Butler's statement setting out a framework of five points on which the Commonwealth and (he hoped) the OEEC would base plans for a return to convertibility and an extension of the multilateral trading area. These five points were picked up in the preamble to the decision quoted in paragraph 8 of this telegram. Butler stressed the fact that his proposals were not a plan but a framework within which OEEC might pursue its work. He was inviting discussion on a set of ideas rather than proposing a plan for negotiation.

4. The European ministers, as far as we know, had no advance indication of the content of Mr. Butler's proposals but were obliged to comment on them after an interval of 24 hours. On the other hand the Butler proposals as the Chancellor himself declared, contain nothing new — all his ideas are to be found in the OEEC Fourth Report and the main features have been widely discussed. Accordingly the European ministers' statements (many of which had apparently been largely prepared in advance) contained many restatements of well-known country positions and on the whole responded very cautiously to what Mr. Eden called "a great opportunity for statesmanship".

5. All the European reactions indicated general approval of the United Kingdom initiative and of the objectives of convertibility and extended multilateralism. However, considerable doubt was expressed whether significant advances toward these objectives should be contemplated in the near future. There was a feeling that the United Kingdom was underestimating the size of the dollar gap and there was an undercurrent of apprehension lest the "courageous action" proposed by Mr. Butler might in practice be feasible only at the expense of European trade. Mr. Butler did his utmost to allay these fears and indeed his announcement on Monday of substantial United Kingdom reliberalization reassured the Europeans regarding present intentions.

6. Several ministers stressed the importance of securing adequate reserves before launching even limited convertibility. Mr. Brofoss in particular felt that countries that might make their currencies convertible must be certain of the success of their policies. Premature convertibility ending in failure could have widespread consequences for both convertible and non-convertible currencies.

7. Some concern was expressed regarding the future of OEEC which many ministers consider a successful and efficient organization for dealing with trade and payments problems. A shift of focus to international organizations which have had unsuccessful postwar records seemed a doubtful expedient. Some speakers gave the impression that they would prefer to have OEEC take the main initiative in presenting concrete proposals to the United States administration later in the year.

8. Several ministers, after voicing their fears, nevertheless emphasized that their remarks should not be interpreted as indicating their disapproval of the objectives of the proposals, and there was no question of the general willingness to undertake a study of the proposals. A decision was taken of which the following are the paragraphs of substance. You will notice that Butler's five points are picked up in the preamble:

"Being agreed that cooperation among member and associated countries and the other countries of the British Commonwealth of Nations, would be required in order to create conditions for the establishment of freer trade and payments over as wide an area of the world as possible, and to provide the framework for expanding production and trade while preserving the advantages of the existing system of trade and payments;

Considering that such cooperation can be successful only if sound internal and development policies are adopted by all the countries concerned;

Considering that such policies should be consistent with the maintenance of a high level of production and employment;

Considering that progress towards the convertibility of currencies must be closely concerted with progress towards the reduction of restrictions on trade;

Considering that both creditor and debtor countries have a part to play in achieving a balanced trading pattern between the dollar area and the rest of the world;

Considering that action to eliminate their dollar deficit must be one of the principal aims of member countries;

Considering that means would have to be found to deal with the problem of inadequate monetary reserves of the non-dollar countries;

Considering that for the attainment of these ends there should be the closest collaboration with existing world-wide international "institutions";

In the light of the statements made by various delegates during the course of the meeting;

Welcomes the initiative taken by the United Kingdom Government in presenting their views on these matters for consideration in the organization;

Instructs the Executive Committee to make proposals to the Council regarding the procedure to be followed in order to study how and under what conditions an orderly transition from the present form of the union to a wider multilateral system of trade, payments and credit can be achieved."

Mr. Draper's remarks on Mr. Butler's statement were confirmatory but non-committal. At the instigation of Bissell and Southard[17] who attended the meetings, Mr. Draper asked that "collective action by member countries" in the draft text of the first paragraph quoted above be changed to "cooperation among". They would also have preferred omitting Mr. Butler's five points as they felt that these prejudged the OEEC study. However, all the other delegations preferred to keep them in since there was a feeling that they marked a step forward and would give direction to the OEEC studies.

9. Future of EPU

There was no separate discussion on this item. Mr. Butler's agreement to continue the union for a period of twelve months substantially in its present form was warmly welcomed by European ministers. Instead of the withdrawal clause on which the United Kingdom delegation has been insisting since December Mr. Butler proposed a renegotiation clause by which any contracting party could ask for a reexamination of its obligations in the union if in the opinion of that contracting party this is necessary to enable progress to be made toward a system of freer trade and payments, including convertibility of currencies.

10. Several ministers in their general remarks restated their country positions on quotas and gold ratios but these questions were left for negotiation in the Managing Board. Council took the decision to extend the union until June 30, 1954, and instructed the Managing Board

1. To submit proposals for extension by May 31.

2. To examine with representatives of IMF the possibilities of closer cooperation between that body and EPU on matters of mutual concern and make proposals to Council.

3. To examine with other organs of the organization ways and means of encouraging the further development of public and private international capital movements.

11. We shall be reporting in greater detail on this subject after the Managing Board meetings this week.

LIBERALIZATION OF TRADE AND PAYMENTS AND THE "COLLECTIVE APPROACH" — PROGRAMME OF WORK FOR OEEC

1. The Secretariat has prepared three basic papers and preliminary discussion took place in the Executive Committee on June 16. We made one of our rare interventions.

2. The three papers, which are on their way to you or have already arrived, may be very briefly summarized as follows:

(a) "Convertibility: the Problems of the Transition Period", CE(53)32, sent by airbag on May 30, under transmittal slip 1715.† This paper contains two main points. First, individual countries should choose their own time to go convertible (the strong need not wait for the weak), and in doing so should have the assistance and support of OEEC. Second, in the transitional period when some currencies have become convertible, there will be a continuing need for some system of European payments and the Managing Board of the EPU should be asked to study what form it should take and whether the convertible currencies can be associated with it.

(b) "Studies Related to Problems of Convertibility", CE(53)38, sent by airbag on June 17, under transmittal slip 1935.† This paper summarizes work that can be done in fields other than trade and payments. It mentions internal financial stability, expansion of production, changed pattern of trade, stimulation of exports to dollar areas and investment of dollar capital overseas.

(c) "Future of the Liberalization of Trade", CE(53)37, 6 copies sent by mistake by seabag on 12 June and 1 copy (since supply is exhausted) by airbag June 18 under transmittal slip No. 1951.† This paper breaks new ground in suggesting that the time has come when all European countries should raise their liberalization percentages to 100 with the exception, "at this stage", of certain agricultural products and motorcars. It is suggested that if all moved forward together (even including France) complete liberalization in the near future should not prove impractical and that immediate study should be given to the subject.

2. Much of the discussion in the Executive Committee related to procedure within the organization for dealing with the topics raised. However, there was quite a lot of discussion of the new liberalization proposals. We were the only delegation to comment at any length on the convertibility proposals but this may partly be explained by the fact that the subject has been discussed on previous occasions, notably in the ministerial meetings, and at the council meeting when the OEEC mission to Washington reported on its visit. All the representatives welcomed the new suggestions regarding liberalization but a number suggested that they were rather optimistic. Several emphasized that, if progress was to be made, all must move forward together. One or two regretted that substantial exceptions to further liberalization had to be made in the field of agriculture.

3. We began our remarks by welcoming the initiative which the three papers represented. We expressed the opinion that with one possible exception and with certain modification of emphasis they put forward a well-rounded programme of work. We then passed to the individual papers:

(a) We suggested that the paper on the transition period was a bit too cautious in suggesting (para 4) that nothing should be done in pursuit of convertibility which would conflict with other aims of the OEEC and again (paras 9 and 11) that none of the advantages of present trade and payments arrangements in Europe should be sacrificed. We noted that the paper assumed, without much argument, that a continuing system of European payments would be needed throughout the transition period and, while not wishing to challenge this as a possible conclusion, we hoped that work in this field would probe the basic needs and purposes of such a system. We wondered whether EPU, an interested party, was the right body to carry forward studies in this field. We went on to warn (in relation to para 8) that while there might be a danger of a shortage of international credits in the transition period, it would also be dangerous to convertibility if such credits were too easy to obtain. In concluding, we agreed that countries should choose their own time for going convertible and welcomed the indication that they would have the support of the organization in doing so.

(b) On the paper relating to supplementary studies, we made a few remarks. It seemed to us that the paper (in para 2) was a bit too complacent about the internal financial stability already achieved in Europe; constant vigilance was needed in this field. We noted that, while it was desirable for European countries to foster dollar-savings industries, this should not be done at costs so high as to impair efficiency and competitive positions. (We had intended to make some remarks about the derogatory references to United States policy in para 7 but the Secretary-General had withdrawn these references at the beginning of the meeting). Finally, we expressed the hope that follow-up work in this field would be conducted by the Executive Committee (where Canada was represented) rather than in some ad hoc body.

(c) As for the paper on 100 percent liberalization, we welcomed the strong optimistic initiative which the Secretariat had taken; however, we went on to suggest that liberalization should not be confined to intra-European arrangements; it was not too early to give thought to the problems raised by restrictions against dollar imports. We were not so naive as to think that the time had come when Europe could throw the doors open to dollar goods, but we raised the question whether existing systems of dollar import licencing and control were designed to promote the strengthening of European economies and would lead towards convertibility and freer trade. We suggested a qualitative review of such restrictions to ensure that European importers were in fact able to buy the right dollar goods to best advantage and in general to ensure that Europe was making the best use of whatever dollars were available.

4. We got a bit of rather general support from the United Kingdom representative (Ellis-Rees) with whom we had gone over the ground beforehand. He had been a little apprehensive of our proposed remarks relating to the first paper; it was a compromise document and he greatly treasured its emphasis on the point that the strong countries should be able to adopt convertibility without waiting for the weak. The United States representative (W.L. Batt) also said a few words in support of our position. He particularly referred to our proposals for review of dollar import restrictions. We learned afterwards from another member of the United States delegation that they, like ourselves, had considered the omission of any reference to dollar import restrictions as a serious gap in the programme of work laid down in the Secretariat papers.

5. The Secretary-General (Marjolin), in summing up the discussion, referred to our proposals for a review of dollar import restrictions. He claimed that the organization was not overlooking this matter. He said that a study was being undertaken by the Managing Board. Further the International Monetary Fund was studying dollar import restrictions; the OEEC would not wish to duplicate the work in the Fund but would pick up where the Fund left off. Neither we nor our American colleagues find his defence very convincing. It is true that the Ministerial Council of March 24 — Document C(53)90 — gave the following instruction:

"The Managing Board of the European Payments Union and the Steering Board for Trade are instructed to study the conditions likely to facilitate the progressive liberalization of dollar imports in member countries, in cooperation with the United States and Canada". However, neither of the two boards has yet taken any action. Nor does the instruction seem to envisage the particular type of review which we had proposed. As for the Fund, the Secretary-General's reference was apparently to the review of import restrictions under Article 14 and it is not at all clear to us that this review would be likely to serve the sort of purpose we had in mind. We would appreciate advice on this point.

6. One of the most significant points in the Secretariat papers is the assumption that throughout the transition period there will be need for some sort of special machinery for European payments; the only question at issue is how far it should and could resemble the present EPU and how far convertible currencies can be associated with it. We would judge that this is a point on which there is complete unanimity within the OEEC, including the United States if not ourselves. Whatever our basic convictions, there is no point in our opposing such machinery. The United Kingdom delegation here is fully behind it. Indeed, Ellis-Rees told us privately that, while "it might sound like heresy to Canadians", he was personally convinced that some sort of regional arrangements would have to continue beyond the transition period because it would never be possible to get effective discussion in a Fund-GATT body representing fifty to sixty countries.

7. There will be continuing discussion over a considerable period regarding the form, if not the fact, of continuing European payments mechanisms and of the other questions raised in the Secretariat papers. We should be told immediately if you are not in full agreement with the line which we have taken. Moreover, any continuing guidance you can give us over the whole field will be very welcome.

TELEGRAM 521 Paris, June 25, 1953

CONFIDENTIAL

LIBERALIZATION OF TRADE AND PAYMENTS AND THE "COLLECTIVE APPROACH" — PROGRAMME OF WORK FOR OEEC

Reference: Our telegram No. 493 of June 19.

Discussion of the Secretariat papers described in our telegram under reference has now moved forward in the Council on June 24 and again in the Executive Committee on June 25. No new point of substance has emerged.

2. Before the Executive Meeting we talked over with the Secretariat the omission of any reference to imports from dollar areas (para 3(c) of telegram under reference). We proposed that the following short para might be inserted under para 7 in document CE(53)38 (first revision) of June 17.

"Imports from dollar areas, as well as exports to those areas, have a bearing on convertibility". The Council at ministerial level, in document C(53)90 of March 24, 1953, has already directed the Managing Board and the Steering Board, in co-operation with the United States and Canada, "to study the conditions likely to facilitate the progressive liberalization of dollar imports. Other studies in this field may prove, in due course, to be desirable". The Secretariat accepted our proposal and put it, on their own initiative before the Executive Committee which in turn accepted it without change. This means that imports from dollar areas now become one of the subjects which are recognized as related to convertibility and which will be kept under review by the Executive Committee. This Committee has now been charged with the general work of co-ordination in the whole field.

3. The revised version of CE(53)38 differs from the original only at two points. In the first place the references to French conditions are strengthened. In the second place the derogatory references to United States policy have been removed.

LIBERALIZATION OF TRADE AND PAYMENTS AND THE COLLECTIVE APPROACH — PROGRAMME OF WORK FOR OEEC

Reference: Your Telegram No. 493 of June 19, 1953.

Your above referenced message has been discussed interdepartmentally. As indicated in our message No. 548 of June 19† your intervention in the discussion of these subjects in the Executive Committee was most useful and to the point. We agree that the three papers provide a useful programme of studies to be pursued by OEEC in preparation for a return to convertibility by the United Kingdom and other European countries; but we share your misgivings with respect to certain assumptions made by the Secretariat in the three papers mentioned. The observations made below represent our first reactions to your report of the discussion at the Executive meeting and constitute little more than a set of questions which you may wish to raise at the appropriate time, probably in private discussion with the Secretariat and with the principal delegations. You are the best judge of their suitability, if any, for use in more public discussion.

2. While recognizing that the most important tasks facing governments during and after convertibility relate to the establishment of the proper internal and external conditions, these observations are concerned with the rather interesting question as to the kind of trade and payments arrangements envisaged for the transition period. We note that the OEEC papers assume without much argument, as you say, that a continuing system of European payments of some kind will be needed. While agreeing that it would be rash to challenge the need for such arrangements, we agree that it would be interesting to discover in more specific terms the basic needs and purposes of such a system. We think we can see some desirability for a minor-league EPU to make provision for a multilateral system of settlements for those countries which are unable for the time being to go convertible (the problem is "solved" for the convertible countries, which will belong henceforth, of course, to the dollar area, so to speak) so as to avoid a return to bilateralism in their trade arrangements with the convertible currencies and with their inconvertible partners. We are less certain about the necessity of, or the possibility for, the maintenance of anything resembling the existing credit facilities. Indeed, one wonders what kind of arrangement is contemplated in the new circumstances, bearing in mind that the existing system of EPU credits can hardly fail to be curtailed or abandoned when the present group of persistent creditors, plus the United Kingdom, go convertible.

3. In other words, we think you are right in questioning whether it will be possible for the EPU countries to avoid losing some of the "advantages of present trade and payments arrangements" in the transition period. Whether countries that go convertible remain within the EPU or not, we take it that after the adoption of convertibility such countries will be unwilling to make credit available on the present scale to the debtor members of EPU through the EPU mechanism or in other ways. In short, since the countries likely to go convertible are those which are currently creditor countries we assume that the debtor countries will no longer be able to accumulate deficits with EPU on the former scale. It seems to us, therefore, that from the point of view of those countries which are usually debtors to the EPU, this development is bound to be somewhat "disadvantageous", and properly so.

4. We were slightly surprised at the suggestion from Ellis-Rees (your paragraph 6) that some sort of regional arrangement along the lines of the present EPU for the transition period is contemplated by him. The difficulty is that we are unable to visualize a situation in which the countries deciding to go convertible, when the time comes, can remain in the EPU since the essence of the system is the arrangement for the extension of credits, through EPU, to the debtor members. We take it that of all countries the United Kingdom in particular — as the only country operating an international currency — could hardly settle its accounts through EPU. Were it to do so, other European countries would convert their claims on the United Kingdom into dollars outside the Union, while the United Kingdom itself would be paid for the exports to other EPU countries ultimately in the form of credit balances with the EPU, at least up to the extent of the quota. The extension of credit on this scale would make the maintenance of convertibility impossible and it was for this reason, presumably, that the United Kingdom has always maintained to us that convertibility would mean the eventual withdrawal from EPU.

5. We are wondering if Ellis-Rees has in mind new arrangements involving just sufficient extension of credit to take care of accidental or seasonal swings or other minor credit arrangements designed to prevent the inconvertible countries from resorting to bilateral trading arrangements during the transition period. It is possible that the withdrawal of the United Kingdom and others from EPU might be accompanied by provision for some kind of credit assistance to the surviving members of EPU by those countries which have persistently run credits with EPU, to the extent that their overall balances permit. While this might lessen the shock of withdrawal we are unable to see that such arrangements could operate automatically as they do at present, or operate on the present scale. It is also conceivable that such countries as Belgium and Germany, which are more heavily integrated by trade with their EPU partners, might wish to make available credit in the transition period which could not be offered by the United Kingdom.

6. We can appreciate the point that a continuation of intra-European co-operation on trade and payments arrangements will be needed after some European countries have adopted convertibility. Convertibility, we hope, will be accompanied by the removal of quantitative import restrictions against dollar goods which may well give rise to difficulties in European countries. By the same token, it is possible that, with sterling as hard as the dollar, European countries may create trade problems for the United Kingdom. The need to prevent the adoption of additional quantitative restrictions, which would deprive convertibility of all its attractiveness and, indeed, the need for an advance towards freer trade with the dollar area, suggests the desirability of continued discussion of these problems among the newly convertible countries and in the wider OEEC context. It is possible that Ellis-Rees had this set of considerations in mind when suggesting some form of continuing organization. It may be that effective discussion of such proposals is more feasible within the OEEC-EPU than in a Fund-GATT body. On this we can only comment that the discussions in London envisaged a small Fund-GATT group (a nuclear group)[18] that would be representative of all the countries and groups concerned.

7. As to the proposals put forward by the Secretariat for the extension of liberalization in intra-European trade up to 100 per cent, we agree with your paragraph 3(c) that it is not too early to begin giving thought to a lifting of some of the present restrictions against dollar imports wherever possible. While it is for the European countries themselves to decide whether they are making the best disposition of their dollar resources, our feeling is that the removal of restrictions might usefully commence along the lines now being followed by the United Kingdom itself. This involves the granting of more open general licenses for the importation of foodstuffs and the raw materials of industry. The argument would be the familiar one that it is unwise to foster dollar-saving forms of production, or dollar-saving imports from the rest of the area, where such measures raise costs unduly and perpetuate the inability of the European countries to make their exports of manufactures more competitive with the dollar area.

8. In this connection we should perhaps put you on guard, in case the question is raised, against proposals for the liberalization of dollar trade in accordance with a common formula. We have in mind the suggestion, which we believe has been put forward in Washington, which would have all (convertible) countries move forward at the same pace on the basis of a common list of items suitable for liberalization. As to the question of the timing of convertibility itself, we feel that it is in the general interest, not to speak of our own, that each country should move ahead as fast as its own circumstances permit and should not be held back to the pace of the slowest member of the group.

9. As you will see, these comments do not pretend to suggest specific solutions to the payments problems likely to arise after the adoption of convertibility by the United Kingdom and, possibly, other European countries. We find it easier at this moment to be critical of some of the assumptions made in the Secretariat papers. We recognize that it will call for considerable ingenuity to maintain useful working arrangements between the present EPU members at a time when the more important of them will have dropped their full membership in the club. We should be interested to hear more of the proposals put forward to promote the continuance of such collaboration as and when you hear of them.

OEEC CONSIDERATION OF DOLLAR RESTRICTIONS

Reference: Our telegram No. 521 of June 25; doc. C(53)90†; doc. MBC(53)102 of July 17†.

The OEEC Council, at its last Ministerial Meeting in March, instructed the Managing Board and the Steering Board, inter alia, "to study the conditions likely to facilitate the progressive liberalization of dollar imports in member countries, in cooperation with the United States and Canada".

2. The first step taken by the Managing Board in carrying out these terms of reference was to instruct the Secretariat to assemble available factual data concerning the present system of dollar imports in member countries. We have managed to secure one copy of this study (MBC(53)102) which has recently been completed and are forwarding it to you with this letter. This document has not been considered by the Board and consequently has no status within the Organization. The Secretariat would welcome any comments you may wish to offer on their memorandum although, as it is merely a factual summary, it is doubtful whether it will give you much scope for comment.

3. We understand from conversations with the Secretariat that the Managing Board now considers that work in this field should be taken over by the Steering Board. If EPU had been hardened during 1953-54, there would have been more scope for a Managing Board study but now it appears more likely that the Steering Board will pick it up. Up to now, the Steering Board has not considered the question.

4. In our opinion, this study should not be allowed to lag. We have already questioned the Secretary-General in the Executive Committee concerning the work of the two Boards in connection with the relaxation of dollar restrictions (our tel. No. 521) and we intend to raise the matter again at an appropriate time. In addition, we have indicated our willingness to cooperate in the work of the two Boards when this subject comes up for discussion. So far an invitation to Canada to cooperate has been rather conspicuous by its absence, indeed we have even encountered some stickiness in getting certain documents which while relevant are narrowly circulated — (e.g. MBC(53)28 which we understand is a rather theoretic study of the impact of removal of dollar restrictions on balances of payments). On the other hand, we ourselves, largely preoccupied in other directions, have not taken any particular initiative.

5. However, the time may be coming when we should take some more positive steps — perhaps when the Managing Board discusses MBC(53)102 in September. We would be grateful to have your guidance.[19] You might like to consider two particular possibilities. Would you think that OEEC would be an appropriate forum to put forward and discuss a list of Canadian exports which we would like to see more freely imported into OEEC countries?[20] Or again, would you wish us to try to pursue, with examples, our earlier suggestion in the executive Committee, that OEEC countries might make better use of the dollars they are already earning?[21] We can see some merit in both lines of activity; on the other hand we are not sure about the question of timing in relation to other aspects of the "Collective Approach to Convertibility". Moreover, this delegation has not the personnel to carry on detailed trade discussions, let alone negotiations, and after we had gone a certain way either the negotiations would have to be transferred to national capitals or this delegation would have to be reinforced with experts.[22]

OEEC CONSIDERATION OF DOLLAR RESTRICTIONS

Reference: Your Letter No. 2547 of August 5th.

As indicated in paragraph 7 of our letter E-415 of July 24th, we agree that it is not too early for Member Countries to begin giving thought to lifting some of the present restrictions against dollar imports. We suggested that the granting of open general licences for the importation of foodstuffs and raw materials would be the most useful measures which Member Countries could take. We can see no objections to your suggesting specific items, for illustrative purposes, when discussions take place on this subject. I shall be writing again to give you guidance with regard to your question whether it would appear appropriate for you to go further and to suggest specific items which we are interested in seeing placed on open general licence.

With regard to the study on "conditions likely to facilitate the progressive liberalization of dollar imports", we certainly hope that it will not lag and that you will have an opportunity to take an effective part in it. If the occasion of the Managing Board's discussion on MBC(53)102 appears to be a useful occasion for you to cooperate in this work, we hope you will be able to do so.

As you indicated in message No. 521 of June 25th that the Executive Committee now is responsible for studies related to imports from dollar areas, I take it that you will have an opportunity to pursue in this forum the particular question of whether existing systems of dollar import licencing and control are appropriate. The record of the 241st meeting of the Executive Committee indicates that the Secretary-General will submit to Council "in due course proposals for the implementation of the suggestions" contained in paragraph 7 of CE(53)38. I take it that the "suggestions" include the "other studies" (i.e. existing systems of dollar import licencing) referred to in your amendment to paragraph 7. Has any progress been made in arranging these studies? If so, would not these discussions be the appropriate place to discuss the question of open general licences for foodstuffs and raw materials?

OEEC CONSIDERATION OF DOLLAR IMPORT RESTRICTIONS

Reference: Our Letter No. E-475, August 21.

We have now consulted the other interested departments on the question of whether it would be appropriate for you to suggest in the course of any discussions on this subject which may take place in the Managing Board or elsewhere in the OEEC specific items which Canada would be interested in seeing placed on open general licence.

2. The general view here is that it would not be desirable at this stage for us to suggest specific commodities. While we are in agreement with the suggestion that you should continue to put forward the view that European countries should consider the liberalization of dollar imports by means of a wider use of open general licences for foodstuffs and raw materials, we feel that it would not be appropriate to put forward a list of Canadian exports which we should like to see imported more freely into OEEC countries. It would seem to us that by suggesting any such list we would diminish the effectiveness of our essential argument that it is in the interests of the European countries themselves to liberalize their import restrictions in this manner, since such suggestions from us might imply that our advocacy was governed by our concern for our exports rather than by any genuine interest in the solution of the problems of the European countries themselves. Moreover, it would be our view that, if and when it becomes appropriate to encourage the inclusion of particular commodities in any liberalization scheme, representations could probably best be made in the national capitals rather than in the OEEC, especially since the situation will differ from one country to another. The best course would seem to be for the OEEC not to attempt to devise a "common import list", but for each country to relax its restrictions as rapidly, and along such lines, as its own circumstances permit. This conclusion would seem to be in accord with your view that detailed trade negotiations can more appropriately be carried out in national capitals than in the OEEC forum.

3. As you are aware, the United Kingdom is the country which during the recent past has gone furthest and shown the greatest enlightenment on the question of liberalizing dollar import restrictions. You will also appreciate that in our talks with the United Kingdom we have been most effective in helping them move towards their present policies when we were not attempting to sell them on any particular list of commodities. We have consistently avoided putting forward such lists to the United Kingdom and have instead emphasized the importance of achieving an expanded area of non-discrimination in their import controls on the basis of commodities which they would choose in their own interests.

4. In the light of the progress which the United Kingdom has made, it occurs to us that it might be useful for the OEEC Secretariat to undertake a thorough study of recent UK liberalization measures with respect to the importation of grain, timber, metals, etc. Such a study might bring out the advantages accruing to the OEEC countries in lowering their costs and reducing administrative overheads as a result of further liberalization of dollar imports, especially of essential foods and raw materials. It might also encourage a recognition of the fact that when domestic policies are kept reasonably well under control further measures of liberalization of dollar imports need not involve excessive financial risks. Whether or not it appears feasible for this kind of study to be undertaken, you will doubtless wish to stress these aspects of the experience of the United Kingdom and other countries which have relaxed their dollar import restrictions.

5. We need hardly say that, in advocating the desirability of more liberal treatment for raw materials and foodstuffs from the dollar area, we would expect that such measures, if adopted, would increase the demand for Canadian products. With this in mind, there would seem to be no need for us to blunt the edge of our advocacy by referring in the OEEC to specific commodities.

6. In addition to these general observations, the following comments have been made on certain portions of the OEEC Document (MBC(53)102):

(a) The authors of the Report apparently hold the view that the recent decline in Europe's dollar imports (nearly 40 per cent from the first quarter of 1952 to the first quarter of 1953) is not due to restrictive controls but to other factors. If they are right in this, then the financial risks involved in a liberalization of dollar import controls are not as great as they are generally claimed to be.

(b) The statement towards the end of paragraph 9 to the effect that it is the premium on dollars in retention quota schemes which results in the high prices of out-of-programme imports financed in this way strikes us as rather curious. Surely it works the other way round — it is the fact that the goods in question are otherwise prohibited imports which causes the small amounts made available through the retention schemes to sell for prices so high that the importer can bid the dollar exchange rate up to a premium. When import restrictions are liberalized the exchange premiums involved in retention quota schemes fall.

(c) Paragraph 7 of the OEEC document notes that "with the exception of Sweden, no country seems to give any publicity to this import programme". It might be useful to raise the question whether some publicity by OEEC countries of their dollar import estimates and allocations would not be desirable. From the point of view of the exporting countries, such advance data would, of course, be of interest, and it might also be helpful in facilitating the study of this problem by the OEEC.

OEEC CONSIDERATION OF DOLLAR IMPORT RESTRICTIONS

Reference: Your E.542 of September 21.

The arrival of your letter under reference was most timely. Just at the same time we heard that the Secretary-General, Mr. Marjolin, was planning to leave later in the week, accompanied by Mr. Cahan, on a series of visits to the capitals of most of the important OEEC countries where they were going to make soundings and suggestions regarding the Ministerial meeting on October 28 and 29. We were anxious that dollar import restrictions should be amongst the subjects discussed during these visits.

2. Accordingly, armed with your new guidance, we called on Messrs. Cahan and Marjolin. We said that we were concerned at the apparent failure of the Steering and Managing Boards to deal with their terms of reference in the field of dollar import restrictions. It was our feeling that European countries could go a bit farther and faster than heretofore in removing such restrictions, particularly those relating to foodstuffs and raw materials. We noted that one or two countries, especially the United Kingdom, had made great progress by the use of open general licences and it had been helped rather than harmed as a result. Other countries might profit by such examples. We suggested that OEEC might undertake a study of what had been done and what might be done.

3. We were very pleased to learn from Mr. Cahan, who had been attending a meeting of the Managing Board earlier in the day, that the Board had been discussing this very matter. He said he believed that the decision of the Board, to be embodied in their report on convertibility to the Ministerial meeting, was closely in line with our wishes. He then read us the following paragraph from the Board's report to which preliminary agreement had just been given:

"In addition, a further attention should also be given to the removal of restrictions on imports from the dollar area. The gradual removal of these restrictions would constitute concrete progress in the direction of removing disparities between the prices of similar goods in different markets, which is the ultimate aim of convertibility. In particular, greater freedom for imports of raw materials, basic foodstuffs, semi-manufactured goods, machinery and equipment, the cost of which enters into the cost of production of finished goods in Europe, would also assist the increase of productivity in European agriculture and industry. It is therefore suggested that all Member countries should be asked to examine the restrictions which they still maintain on imports of such goods from the dollar area, with a view to removing them insofar as this is compatible with their balance of payments positions. The Board also has noted with satisfaction that considerable progress in the removal of such restrictions has already been made in some countries. When individual Member countries have been able to make such an examination, it is suggested that they should be asked to report to the Organization on the nature of the restrictions on dollar imports which they have felt themselves unable to remove and to give an indication of the reasons for non-removal. The Board hopes that an examination in the Organization of this information might make it possible for the Council at a later date to formulate a coordinated policy for tackling the problems which arise in this respect."

4. Cahan said that the Board had discussed amongst other things, the question whether the elimination of dollar restrictions should be undertaken on a country-by-country basis, with each country moving as fast as it felt it could, or on the basis of a "common list" for all countries. While some of the members of the Board had favoured a common list, others, in particular the Norwegians, had been strongly opposed. In the end, as the above paragraph indicates, it had been agreed that the first attack on the problem should be on a country-by-country basis; Member countries should examine their positions and take action individually, after which they should report their position to the OEEC. Then, "at a later date", consideration would be given in the OEEC to the possibility of further action on a coordinated basis.

5. We had known beforehand that Mr. Cahan himself, and possibly Mr. Marjolin, favoured the common list, fearing that if one OEEC country allowed dollar imports in more freely than its neighbour, one of the two might feel that it had to put up trade barriers to prevent the dollar goods moving forward from the first to the second. During our conversation, Cahan had indeed noted the "mess" into which he felt the Netherlands government had got itself. It was allowing certain types of dollar imports, such as wheat, more freely than its neighbours. Hence, it was now attempting to retain this wheat by means of export restrictions. However, its customs officials were not able to distinguish between a bag of dollar wheat and a bag of OEEC wheat; such a programme was thus proving administratively impracticable.

6. As [to] the further type of restriction to be removed, we know that you will welcome the emphasis laid in the paragraph quoted above on the need for more imports of a type that will reduce costs and promote productivity. This, you will remember, is just the point that we stressed most strongly when we raised this subject in the Executive Committee last June. While your letter under reference refers to restrictions on foodstuffs and raw materials, the Managing Board refers also to semi-manufactured goods, machinery and equipment. Incidentally, Mr. Marjolin and Mr. Cahan share our feelings that continental countries are unduly frightened by the prospect of possible floods of dollar imports — even in the field of finished consumer goods. They remarked that as a matter of fact many North American goods, such as motorcars and refrigerators, are not really well adapted to European needs. There was a heavy demand for them not long ago when dollar goods were readily available and European production was lagging well behind European demand. Now that European production has caught up with demand, the preference is for the local and better adapted product.

7. Looking forward to the Ministerial meeting on October 28-29, we had thought of proposing to add to the agenda a special item for the discussion of dollar import restrictions. However, we decided against doing so. The main business of the meeting will be the discussion of reports by three bodies:

(a) Report by the Special Working Group on the general shape and coverage of the coming Fifth Report;

(b) Report by the Managing Board of the EPU on matters relating to convertibility;

(c) Report by the Steering Board for Trade on progress in the field of European trade liberalization.

Since we are now assured that (b) will contain a satisfactory proposal regarding dollar imports, a separate item on the agenda would seem unnecessary.

8. We are planning to make a statement on dollar restrictions and, if appropriate, on other matters relating to convertibility, at the meeting. We shall, of course, follow the guidance given in your letter under reference and the preceding correspondence. If you have any further suggestions to make, we should be glad to receive them.

9. We had thought of raising, either with Mr. Cahan and Mr. Marjolin, or just possibly in the Ministerial meeting, the question whether, when the Managing Board proceeds with its studies of dollar restrictions in the various countries, we should seek to attend its meetings. We would, of course, have some ground for doing so; when the Ministerial Council directed the Managing Board (and the Steering Board) "to study the conditions likely to facilitate the progressive liberalization of dollar imports in Member countries", it specified that this was to be done "in co-operation with the United States and Canada" (Council resolution C(53)90 of March 25, 1953). On the other hand, attendance at the Managing Board is a jealously guarded prerogative and there seems no point of trying to force ourselves in unless we feel we have a definite role to play, positive or negative. Hence, our present feeling is that we should await further developments and only take the initiative if it really seems worth while. We would appreciate your comments on this point.

RESTRICTED

OEEC CONSIDERATION OF DOLLAR IMPORT RESTRICTIONS; EC(53)250; C(53)253

Reference: Our letter No. 3151 of October 5.

The three principal reports which will be considered by Ministers on October 29-30 all contain references to policy on Dollar Import Restrictions. The purpose of this letter is to bring together all of these references and finally to sum up the discussion on them in the Joint Trade and Payments and Economic Committees.

I. Report of the Managing Board of EPU (C(53)253, Oct. 13)

In our letter No. 3151 of October 5, we included a preliminary text of the paragraph on dollar import restrictions which was to form part of the Managing Board's report. The final draft has been altered slightly; the most important change being the elimination of the recommendation that member countries should, in their reports on dollar restrictions which they have felt themselves unable to remove, give an indication of the reasons for non-removal. The final text (para. 12) reads as follows:

In addition, further attention should be given to removing restrictions on imports from the dollar area. The gradual removal of these restrictions would constitute concrete progress in the direction of removing disparities between the prices of similar goods in different markets, which is the ultimate aim of convertibility. In particular, greater freedom for imports of raw materials, basic foodstuffs, semi-manufactured goods, machinery and equipment, the cost of which enters into the cost of production of finished goods in Europe would also assist the increase of productivity in European agriculture and industry. It is therefore suggested that all Member countries should be asked to examine the restrictions which they still maintain on imports of such goods from the dollar area, with a view to removing them insofar as this is compatible with their balance of payments positions. (The Board has noted with satisfaction that progress in the removal of such restrictions has already been made in some countries.) When individual Member countries have been able to make such an examination, it is suggested that they should be asked to report to the Organization on the nature of the restrictions on dollar imports which they have felt themselves unable to remove. The Board hopes that an examination in the Organization of this information might make it possible for the Council, at a later date, to formulate a co-ordinated policy for tackling the problems which arise in this respect.

II. Report of the Steering Board for Trade (C(53)250, Oct. 12)

Chapter VII of the report is entitled: "Problems arising from Dollar Imports into Member countries". The text is as follows:

In accordance with the mandate given by the Council (C(53)90, para. 3), the Steering Board has considered the problem of quantitative restrictions on dollar imports into Member countries. Admittedly no solution has been found for Europe's dollar problem, but as a result of the increase in their current receipts and of the exceptional receipts from off-shore purchases and certain other expenditure by the United States, Member countries as a whole find their dollar reserves increasing although this may not be the case for certain individual countries. The question is whether Member countries which benefit from this improvement should not devote immediately some part, however small, of their increased earnings to obtaining more flexible supply facilities, either by increasing their import quotas of dollar goods or even by abolishing quantitative import restrictions on some of these goods.

The Board notes the encouraging fact that some Member countries have already taken action along these lines. It has found that in many cases where restrictions on dollar imports have been abolished, the volume of such imports has not substantially altered. For Member countries as a whole, dollar imports have declined quite considerably during recent months.

The gradual relaxation of restrictions on dollar imports should, by giving European industry a wider choice of supplies, help to reduce their production costs and accordingly improve their competitive capacity. In addition, it should enable certain sectors of European industry to compare their sales possibilities on their own markets with those of dollar goods which provide keen competition. It should also demonstrate clearly the resolve of Member countries to move towards a world system of trade on a non-discriminatory basis. It is evident that in this connection any existing artificial export aids must be taken into account.

The Board notes, nevertheless, that the liberalization of dollar imports by certain Member countries may raise problems both in relations between Member countries and in relations between Member and non-Member countries. On this last point, most Member countries, as they are members of the GATT, should extend to all the contracting parties to the GATT any liberalization measures taken in respect of certain dollar imports.

In view of these various factors, the question may arise whether Member countries should consider co-ordinating their policies for the gradual abolition of quantitative restrictions vis-à-vis non-Member countries. The Board hopes that the Council will consider these problems and provide it and the Managing Board of the European Payments Union with the necessary guidance for any work to be done by the two Boards on this matter. The Steering Board emphasizes the necessity of taking into consideration in this field the important problems of commercial policy arising in relations between Europe and the United States.

III. Report of the Experts on the Fifth Report (EC(53)48, Oct. 15)

The report of the Experts' Working Party of the Economic Committee contains the briefest and least encouraging reference to dollar imports. Paragraph 35 reads in part:

There is also some conflict in the short run between the objectives of expanding production and allowing freer entry to dollar goods. For it must be recognized that liberalization of dollar imports would imply an additional strain on reserves.

The report of the Experts emphasizes the need for expansion of production in Europe and, in a previous paragraph (32), points out that, "in general, greater expansion in Europe will adversely affect the balance of trade in the short-run by increasing imports." Later (paragraph 34) the report refers to, "increased European demand for dollar goods," thus indicating that an increase in production must necessarily go hand in hand with increased dollar imports.

The sentences in paragraph 35 quoted above appear to refer to autonomous increases in dollar goods not connected with the expansion. We are not convinced that any such division can in practice be made. We intend, at the Ministerial Council, to point out the apparent incompatibility of the references in the report and emphasize the desirability of reducing dollar restrictions and removing price disparities between EPU and other areas during the period of expansion in order to ensure that expansion takes place in directions compatible with the aims of convertibility and a widened trading area.

Different Views on Dollar Restrictions

Although the Managing and Steering Boards' Reports contain encouraging views on the reduction of dollar restrictions several countries have reserves about the substance of the problem and the manner in which it could be solved in and out of OEEC.

The major question is whether individual countries with relatively stronger payments and reserve positions should relax dollar restrictions more quickly than their less fortunate partners in EPU. The Steering Board "notes the encouraging fact that some Member countries have already taken action along these lines", but the question of co-ordinated policy is left open. viz: C(53)253, para. 12, "The Managing Board hopes that an examination in the organization of this information may make it possible for the Council, at a later date, to formulate a co-ordinated policy for tackling the problems in this respect". The Steering Board also indicates: "in view of these various factors, the question may arise whether Member countries should consider co-ordinating their policies for the gradual abolition of quantitative restrictions vis-à-vis non-Member countries". This "co-ordination" does not necessarily imply a common list, but there is likely to be strong pressure for "an area approach to the abolition of dollar restrictions" from the weaker members. We, of course, are keeping in mind your views on this subject (para 8 of your letter E-415, July 24).

A second question, raised by the Greek Delegation is whether European countries should liberalize products which are being subsidized outside the EPU area. The Greeks have in mind the subsidies on US tobacco and the possibility of losing their markets in EPU countries if the latter permit the entry of US subsidized tobacco. This question raises difficult issues of principle which can scarcely be resolved at the Ministerial Council, but the Greeks are certain to press for some satisfaction in the decision on this subject.

A third question, raised by the Germans, is concerned with the problem of discrimination. The Germans have indicated that they may wish to abolish restrictions for some countries which are not in a position to compete too strongly with German industry and maintain the restrictions with respect to more competitive countries. On this point the Steering Board Report states quite definitely: "Most Member countries, as they are members of GATT, should extend to all the contracting parties to the GATT any liberalization measures taken in respect of certain dollar imports".

The Germans, on the whole, seem to be anxious to remove as many restrictions as possible (though we understand there is a difference of view in the Cabinet between Blücher and Erhard). Their primary interest is in bringing about a reduction of the prices of raw materials in the soft currency areas tributary to the European Economy by permitting increased entry of dollar raw materials.

A final question is that pointed out in the Steering Board's report where it emphasizes the necessity of taking into consideration in this field, the important problems of commercial policy arising in relations between Europe and the United States. This sentence refers, of course, to the damage caused to some European countries by US quantitative restrictions and points up the wish of some European governments not to give up all their bargaining power by unilateral reduction of European QRs on dollar products.

TELEGRAM 788 Ottawa, October 27, 1953

CONFIDENTIAL. IMMEDIATE.

OEEC CONSIDERATIONS OF DOLLAR IMPORT RESTRICTIONS — PROPOSED STATEMENT ON CONVERTIBILITY

Reference: Your letter No. 3151 of October 5.

In general, we consider that the line advanced in our letter E-542 of September 21 would serve as an appropriate basis of your statement. It would be useful to point to the progress made in removing dollar import restrictions by the United Kingdom, the Netherlands and Germany (and South Africa) and to emphasize that, inasmuch as a relaxation on essential dollar imports by increasing productivity and lowering costs will tend to strengthen a country's balance of payments position, such action should not necessarily wait upon an improvement in the balance of payments position. In this regard, we are somewhat concerned about the implications of the statement in Report of Managing Board (para 3 of your telegram) that "all member countries should be asked to examine the restrictions which they still maintain. . . with a view to removing them insofar as this is compatible with their balance of payments positions."

2. On the question of the "common list" approach you might wish to urge that each country should relax restrictions as rapidly and over as wide an area as possible regardless of the extent of relaxation undertaken by other Member countries. It is obvious that the competitive position in world trade of those Members which lag behind in the process of general liberalization will be worsened in relation to those countries which move ahead more rapidly. The actions already taken by some Member countries should encourage others to move in the same direction in spite of certain administrative problems which may result from lack of uniformity in the degree of advance by different European countries. In this connection it might be appropriate for you to ask whether the loss of dollars through re-export was really likely to reach such proportions as to outweigh the benefits which would accrue from the relaxation of dollar imports.

3. We are pleased that the proposed Report of the Managing Board recognizes the importance of removing restrictions on dollar imports as a factor affecting convertibility. In particular we welcome the Report's reference to the relaxation of restrictions on semi-manufactured goods, machinery and equipment as well as foodstuffs and raw materials. This is fully in accord with our view that each country should decide for itself which relaxations of dollar import restrictions would be most beneficial.

4. The fear of recession in the United States may be used by some as an argument against pushing ahead with liberalization of dollar imports. Whatever views one may hold regarding the likelihood of some economic recession in the United States, there seems no doubt that the basic growth factors in the US economy are so strong that even if there is some temporary set-back the level of output, etc. in the United States will be higher in the future than it is at the present time. In other words, there will be greater opportunities to sell in the American[23]

OEEC MINISTERIAL COUNCIL — OCTOBER 29-30

Reference: Our letters Nos. 3302,† 3409,† 3387†.

The meeting of OEEC Ministers which took place last Thursday and Friday produced no startling or unexpected results. Indeed it might be described as an interim stock taking meeting at which all major decisions were postponed until early next spring.

2. Two, perhaps three circumstances overhung the discussions: first, the standstill in US economic policy, secondly, the possibility of a US recession and thirdly the unwillingness of the French Government to accept its commitment to liberalize 75% of French intra-European trade.

3. The only practical advance in European economic affairs which was recorded at the meeting was Mr. Butler's announcement of the UK's decision to increase intra-European liberalization to 75%. This decision was very well received by the Council as it brought the UK back to the liberalization percentage required under Article 2 of the Code. It was generally felt that this was as much as could be expected of the UK at this time. Shortly after the UK announcement, the French Minister M. Faure informed the Council of his Government's intention to liberalize 20% of French intra-European trade indicating that this might be considered a first cautious step. The reaction to M. Faure's announcement was critical though the criticism was thinly veiled with statements welcoming this first stage of the French return to liberalization. It was generally felt that there were no balance of payments reasons which would prevent France from returning to 60% or 75% liberalization. We shall report separately on the debate and decisions concerning liberalization. Suffice to say here that no definite decision on future liberalization was taken at the October 29/30 meeting.

4. Another issue which was brought into the open at the meeting was the old question of whether the European Payments Union should be "hardened" or "softened" when it is renewed next year. When announcing the UK's intention to liberalize to 75%, Mr. Butler stated that one of the conditions that would be required was that the Union should not be hardened. He was strongly supported by France and the other chronic debtors. Mr. Butler's statement forestalled two lengthy statements by Mr. Beyen of the Netherlands and Dr. Erhard who made strong interventions in favour of hardening the Union. In addition Erhard made a plea for a consideration of the adjustment of exchange rates as a means of balancing intra-European trade and of permitting a quick return to convertibility. We shall also be reporting separately on this debate and the resolutions which derived from it.

5. In the Debate on the Experts' Report on the Fifth Annual Review there was general agreement on the need for expansion in Western Europe and emphasis was laid on the need for close consultation with respect to expansionary policies. The Scandinavian countries were particularly anxious to ensure close consultation at the senior official level and proposed that experts should meet each quarter under the aegis of OEEC. Dr. Erhard proposed that a Ministerial working group might provide a useful vehicle for such co-operation. Neither of these suggestions were picked up in the resolution on this subject although the principle of consultation was reaffirmed. The way in which it will take place has been left to the official council.

6. Many of the Ministerial statements mentioned the problem of relaxing dollar import restrictions on which we shall report separately. I made two statements, copies of which are attached,† advocating strongly the removal of dollar discrimination in the interests of the European economy. My statements were strongly supported by Mr. Erhard and Mr. Stassen, but strongly rejected by M. Lafay, the French Minister. M. Lafay felt that a discussion of this subject was premature, that the problem of intra-European liberalization should take precedence over dollar liberalization. He said that the French Government could only agree to further study of the question in OEEC and could not agree to a resolution on the principles involved.

7. Perhaps one of the most interesting developments at the meeting was the strong support that was indicated by all speakers for the OEEC as an organization for consultation on European and transatlantic problems — even by those Ministers who would move more quickly than others toward full convertibility. Mr. Stassen made the point that the keystone of future economic relationships between Europe and the United States would be "close consultation and co-operation rather than dependence". He also "welcomed the suggestion that the facilities of OEEC can continue to provide an appropriate channel for close co-operation on our common problems".

CONFIDENTIAL

OEEC MINISTERIAL COUNCIL OCTOBER 29-30: DOLLAR IMPORT RESTRICTIONS

Reference: Our letter No. 3409 of October 26.

Several of the Ministers who spoke at the Ministerial Council touched on the subject of the relaxation of dollar import restrictions. Under cover of my letter No. 3512 of today's date, we sent you copies of two statements I made at the meetings. In both these statements I advanced arguments in favour of a progressive liberalization of dollar discrimination and laid emphasis on the advantages which would accrue to European countries if such a policy were strongly supported. In my statements I emphasized the importance of encouraging each country to proceed at its own best pace in the elimination of the restrictions.

2. The other Ministerial statements did not enter into the details of the problem set out in our letter under reference. Indeed there was no evidence that any of the Ministers had intended that any recommendation of substance should come out of the meeting.

3. Mr. Stassen noted that: "The conclusion of the Managing Board [is] that the road to convertibility lies through the gradual elimination of restrictions on trade with the outside world and particularly with the dollar area. This conclusion is combined with a Steering Board suggestion that a portion of the increase in dollar receipts be devoted to the progressive removal of quotas applied on dollar goods. If these recommendations can be put into effect, they should help to deepen and widen the channels of international trade between Europe and North America. Fewer restrictions on dollar imports would tend to reduce production costs in Europe, introduce the stimulus of new competitive pressure into the European market and thus promote a more efficient use of resources. The United States would welcome any sound move that may be possible to gradually reduce the present barriers to the free flow of American goods and capital to Europe."

4. Dr. Erhard (Germany) in discussing the connection between additional liberalization (intra-European) and the necessity of establishing economically realistic rates of exchange, drew attention to the consequences of increased liberalization. He favoured a tightening of the escape clause of the Liberalization code, a hardening of the Union, economically realistic rates of exchange — but above all, it was important that countries should indicate their determination to accept the consequences of the free play of economic forces, both internal and external on their economies. "For this reason", he said, "I likewise back the efforts to strengthen the economic relations between our countries and the United States by an increased liberalization with regard to the dollar area and to come to improved adaptation of costs and prices through more liberal competition. In this connection, however, I do not conceal that a more liberal policy directed to that aim might reduce or exhaust the gold and dollar reserves in EPU countries and that then the liberal policy might be charged with what is, in fact, the fault of those unrealistic exchange rates. If, in case of such a development, it should be inferred that a free convertibility is impracticable likewise in regard of the dollar, then, it seems to me, the confusion and tragic [sic] would be complete."

5. M. Beyen (Netherlands), who indicated general agreement with most of Dr. Erhard's remarks, also felt that OEEC should begin studying the possibilities for liberalizing dollar imports as soon as possible. As you are aware both the Netherlands and Germany are taking active measures to liberalize their own dollar restrictions.

6. M. Lafay spoke in strong terms against any Ministerial resolution requesting Member countries to liberalize dollar imports. Such a resolution would not be acceptable to his government. He felt it was premature to take any engagements to eliminate dollar restrictions and imprudent to take any decision until more extensive studies on the question were made by the Organization.

7. In view of the cleavage of opinion on this issue, the resolution on dollar import restrictions (C(53)274) contains no statement of principle or recommendation. The "decision" paragraph reads as follows:

The Executive Committee shall instruct the appropriate bodies of the Organization to propose to the Council the measures required in order to give effect to the proposals contained in paragraph 12 of the Report of the Managing Board of the European Payments Union referred to above.

8. We were concerned that the resolution did not contain any reference to the co-operation of the United States and Canada in the OEEC work on this problem. You will recall that the resolution of the last Ministerial meeting (C(53)90) contained such a phrase. Instead of altering the present decision, however, a statement was read into the minutes of the Council expressing the general agreement of the Ministers that any work on dollar restrictions carried out in bodies of the OEEC would be carried out with the co-operation and full participation of the United States and Canada.

9. This entry in the minutes may provide a hook on which we may hang our claim to be present at the Steering and Managing Boards when this matter is discussed. There is at least some support for more active Canadian participation in the Steering Board. M. Bauer and M. Bartels,[24] of their own accord, unofficially raised the

OEEC MINISTERIAL COUNCIL MEETING OCTOBER 29-30:
DOLLAR IMPORT RESTRICTIONS

Reference: Your Letter No. 3522 of Nov. 3, 1953.

We read with interest your account of the Council deliberations on dollar import restrictions and in particular your mention of the division of opinion at the meeting concerning the desirability of a resolution requesting member countries to liberalize dollar imports. Having in mind how OEEC countries have tended in the past to adopt a rather regional point of view, perhaps this division of opinion should be considered a healthy development. We do nevertheless find disappointing continued reflections of this regional attitude in some of the OEEC deliberations.

2. You discussed the comments of the EPU Managing Board and the Steering Board for Trade on dollar restrictions in your Letter 3409 of Oct. 26th. The concluding paragraphs of your letter explained the different views which obtain in OEEC circles. In your letter No. 3151 of October 25th (paragraph 3) you also indicated some of the apparent "difficulties" in dollar liberalization. However, the Department of Trade and Commerce have commented on the Joint Trade and Intra-European Payments Committee's document on the above mentioned two reports (see document C(53)258) and pointed out that paragraph 9 (a) and (b) is particularly disturbing from our point of view.

3. Para. 9 (a) seems to indicate that the Committee was of the unanimous opinion that no relaxations should be made with respect to any dollar goods the production or export of which may be subsidized. Para. 9 (b) states ". . . the liberalization of imports from the dollar area would raise controversial legal problems for those of the Member countries which are also Contracting Parties to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade". However, representatives of some countries did not consider these "legal problems" should create insuperable difficulties.

4. You will also note that the preamble of the Council Resolution on the relaxation of dollar restrictions gives particular attention to paragraph 9 of the Joint Trade and Payments Committee report. This indication of apparent doubts by the Council on relaxing dollar restrictions is especially disappointing to us (but see paragraph 7 below).

5. The issue in paragraph 9 (a) may raise problems for certain European countries (Turkey) but any such policy as has been suggested of course could not be squared with international trade obligations.

6. We are mystified by paragraph 9 (b). Paragraph 40 of the Steering Board's report and your letter No. 3409 cast some light on the problem, but do not appear to fully explain what the Joint Trade and Payments Committee had in mind.

7. While we would appreciate comments from you on these two points, it does appear to us that they were not endorsed at Council level and should not be considered as official OEEC views. With respect to the incorporation in the Council Resolution on dollar restrictions of the reference to paragraph 9 in the Joint Trade and Payments Committee's comments, Mr. Kilgour[25] has observed that the draft resolution which he obtained at the Council meeting and which was in fact approved by the Council (paper CES/276†) did not mention the comments of the Joint Trade and Payments Committee. The Secretariat were acting within their rights when they expanded the "having regard" clauses as the Council did agree on Cahan's suggestion that "amendments of (legal) form" could be made subsequently by the Secretariat. However, you may agree with us that this amendment may tend to be one of substance rather than form.

OEEC STUDY OF QUANTITATIVE RESTRICTIONS ON DOLLAR IMPORTS

You will recall that on October 30th the Ministerial Council of OEEC directed that the Executive Committee should assign further work in this field to the appropriate bodies of the Organization and take whatever further initiative was needed. The subject came before the Executive Committee on December 18th. The decision of the Executive contained in Document CE(53)60(Final) of December 24th, 1953, is as follows:

[25] A.R. Kilgour de la Direction économique.
A.R. Kilgour, Economic Division.

1. Member countries shall transmit to the Organization before 1st February, 1954, a list of commodities, the importation of which from the United States and Canada is not subject either to quantitative restrictions or exchange allocations, and in the case of other commodities shall indicate the actual degree of restriction of imports imposed under existing regulations and the methods of control which are used.

2. (a) The Joint Trade and Intra-European Payments Committee shall study what action the Organization might take in the matter of quantitative restrictions on imports from the United States and Canada, with particular reference to the information transmitted by Member countries in accordance with paragraph 1 and the proposals made by the Managing Board of the European Payments Union in paragraph 12 of its Report of 13th October, 1953, referred to above, and shall make a preliminary report to the Council before 1st March, 1954.

(b) That preliminary report shall be considered by the Economic Committee before being submitted to the Council.

2. The above text includes two amendments which were introduced by the Executive, both of them as a result of our intervention. We were worried by the earlier draft (dated December 16). It seemed to us that both the individual countries concerned and also the Joint Trade and Payments Committee would be too rushed. The earlier paper implied that every country was to file a report on every commodity with no guidance as to the form of their replies, and also that the Committee would be expected to produce a final (instead of a preliminary) report by March 1954. The revised text is a considerable improvement and we believe that the Secretariat are considering the possibility of sending out a supplementary letter of guidance indicating to the Member Countries that at this stage they are only expected to give a fairly general reply and that more detailed information may be requested when these replies have been considered by the Committee.

3. There was considerable discussion in the Executive regarding the bodies within the Organization that should be entrusted with the task of examining the replies from Member Countries and reporting on them and on further action. As you will see, the primary responsibility has now been given to the Joint Trade and Payments Committee with a secondary responsibility assigned to the Economic Committee.

4. Some members of the Executive felt that the work of the former Committee should be reviewed by the Managing Board and the Steering Board. However, this suggestion was opposed vigorously by other members and also by the Secretary-General who pointed out that it would be inappropriate to have the work, done by committees on which all Members were represented, reviewed by bodies, such as the Boards, with limited membership. Incidentally, we had let it be known in advance both to the Secretariat and to the United States Delegation that if the work were assigned to either or both of the Boards we would seek to be present because of our particular concern in European dollar imports; however, it did not become necessary to mention this in the Executive.

5. The Representative of Sweden expressed some doubts about the desirability and usefulness of the whole exercise, emphasizing that in his country at least the administration of restrictions on dollar imports was highly elastic and varied from time to time depending on the availability of dollars. However, it was pointed out that the basic decisions had been reached by Ministers and that the Executive was merely carrying out their instructions. Eventually, therefore, the Swedish Representative withdrew his reservations.

6. The reports from Member Countries are due by the first of February and hence this matter will become active in the Joint Trade and Payments Committee about that time. We would appreciate any further guidance and suggestions that you would like to send us beyond those you have already provided. In particular we would appreciate any remarks regarding the experience in the GATT and the Fund relating to examinations of discriminatory import restrictions; is there anything in that experience that we should particularly keep in mind?

EUROPEAN FLOOD DISASTERS

13. Mr. Berlis. Following an immediate offer of assistance made by the Canadian Ambassador in The Hague, efforts have been made to speed Canadian aid to Europe and to the Netherlands in particular. The two Houses of Parliament have passed motions offering sympathy and assistance, and the Prime Minister has proposed that the Red Cross set up a national flood relief committee to which a "substantial contribution" would be made by the Government. A troop of field engineers equipped with searchlights and amphibious vehicles was detached on February 3rd from the Canadian 27th Brigade for service in Holland. An RCAF North Star left in the middle of last week for Amsterdam with 1,500 Army blankets, half a ton of shoes and assorted Red Cross flood supplies. Canadian Red Cross representatives are now in the Netherlands, where they are supervising the allotment of further Canadian aid, in cooperation with the Ambassador. As another means of helping out in the present situation, the Government has broadened the assisted passage scheme for immigrants from Britain, Belgium and the Netherlands, formerly applicable to single workers and heads of families only, to include dependents. Other measures to be taken to speed up Netherlands immigration include: priority in immigration examination for inhabitants of the stricken areas, and in particular for farmers who wish to take up employment with Canadian farmers; and selection of non-agriculturalists from these areas according to their employability rather than on the basis of the present list of skills and trades. This latter concession will apply to about 1,000 immigrants. In addition, negotiations are proceeding in order to permit some 50 Dutch farming families to be placed on farms in Canada without requiring that they first be employed by Canadian farmers.

EUROPEAN FLOOD RELIEF

9. Mr. A.E. Ritchie. The Prime Minister has indicated his wish that the Department of External Affairs take over responsibility in the matter of relief to European flood victims. The question of the amount of the Government contribution will be handled by the Prime Minister but this Department will provide liaison with the Canadian Red Cross and Government departments concerned, will be the channel of communication and will co-operate in any way possible. In order to centralize this work in one division and since the Economic Division is in general responsible for questions of international emergency relief, it has been decided that all communications, whether they refer to the emergency in the United Kingdom or in the Low Countries, should be handled in the first instance by the Economic Division. That Division will, of course, keep in touch with the political divisions concerned and will consult with them whenever necessary. These arrangements do not affect the responsibility of the Consular Division for questions concerning immigration. The National European Flood Relief Committee, under the chairmanship of the Governor General, held its organizational meeting on Friday, February 13. This Committee, which includes the Prime Minister, the Heads of the other political Parties and the Premiers of all the Provinces, is sponsoring a campaign to collect funds for the relief of the flood victims. At Friday's meeting it was confirmed that the Canadian Red Cross would act as the administrative arm of the National Committee and would be solely responsible for the disposal of the fund, including the contribution of the Federal Government. In the course of his statement at the Government House meeting Dr. Stanbury, National Commissioner of the Canadian Red Cross, spoke in the highest terms of the co-operation which his Society and its representatives in the flood area were receiving from the Canadian Missions in The Hague, Brussels and London.

BELGIAN IMPORT RESTRICTIONS

Reference: Your Despatch No. 22 of January 28.†

At the meeting of the International Committee of GATT which was held in Geneva during the first two weeks of this month the Belgian Delegation informed the Contracting Parties that the following measures had been implemented with a view to carrying out the commitment entered into at the Seventh Session to relax substantially the restrictions on dollar imports:

"1. A list of items which are not restricted upon importation on account of the fact that they are payable in dollars, has been drawn up and published by the Belgian Office for Foreign Trade (Office Belge du Commerce Extérieur). The value of the goods included in this list represents from 65 to 70 per cent of the value of the dollar imports of the Belgian-Luxembourg Economic Union (on the basis of the first six months of 1951). Before such measures were initiated, 25 per cent only of the BLEU imports (first six months of 1951) came under this system.

"2. A list of items still submitted to prior approval (List B) has been drawn up. This list includes all the products which do not come under the List A system. Hence it incorporates items, importation of which was automatically denied under the previously existing system. The Belgian Government will issue licences for imports of items on List B in as liberal a spirit as possible.

"The measures referred to above entered into force on 1 February 1953 in conformity with the commitments undertaken by the Belgian Delegation at the Seventh Session of the Contracting Parties."

2. The measures taken by the Belgians have been examined here and it is noted that they take three forms. First, many commodities have been placed upon a free list of goods which may be imported into Belgium from the dollar area on the basis of bank declarations completely free from government control. Prior to the recent change, goods in this category have been restricted if originating in the dollar area, but not if coming from any other country. Moreover, a number of goods, while remaining subject to import licences regardless of origin, will be admitted from the dollar area as freely as from any other source. Dollar imports falling into this category have hitherto also been restricted on exchange considerations. Finally, certain imports from the dollar area, which remain subject to dollar import restrictions, are being imported under a monthly quota of 100 per cent by value of average monthly imports during the first six months of 1951, i.e., before the dollar restrictions came into force.

3. Most of the goods in which Canada is interested including the four items mentioned in our Despatch No. E-489 of December 3, 1952, are included in the first two lists. I think it would be appropriate, therefore, when you have an opportunity to conveniently do so, to informally advise the Belgians that we are gratified with this significant progress in returning to a free regime and we have noted that they have liberalized not only the commodities about which we were especially concerned but in addition a good many other commodities of interest to us. You might also state that we hope that the Belgian Government will liberalize before very long the remaining items subject to quota.

4. In any detailed conversations which you may have with Belgian officials you might mention our special interest in certain of the commodities excluded from the recent relaxations, including antibiotics, polystyrene, used jute bags for packing, typewriters, and calculating and accounting machines.

INTERNAL TAX ON IMPORTS

Repeat Canac No. 34; by bag The Hague No. 1.

1. Royal decree effective 16 March provides for increases of from 1 to 5 percent ad valorem in the rate of "taxe de transmission" on about 200 imported items but not, repeat not, on corresponding domestically produced items. This tax is an internal sales tax usually levied each time a product is sold i.e., it is usually paid successively by wholesaler, retailer and consumer. Prior to decree it did not have discriminatory effect against imports same tax scale being applied to imports and home produced goods.

2. It is not clear whether increase in tax ranges is contrary to Article III of GATT. Belgians will probably argue:

(a) Object of increases is to eliminate previous discrimination against home products in that: First, imported consumer goods pass through fewer intermediaries than similar goods manufactured in Belgium and thus cumulative effect of "taxe de transmission" has in the past been smaller for imports; second, many imported goods have been subject only to "taxe forfaitaire" a special "once and for all" kind of "taxe de transmission". Increased rates are therefore allegedly designed to equalize internal tax burden on home and imported goods.

(b) Increase in tax rates have been made under authorization of a pre-GATT law dated 16 June 1932.

(c) Increases are necessary as step towards equalizing rates of "taxe de transmission" on imports throughout Benelux, Dutch having increased rates about a year ago.

3. It appears probable that real reasons for increased rates on imports are:

(a) A source of revenue in present difficult budgetary situation.

(b) As means of protecting sectors of Belgian industry sensitive to overseas particularly Dutch competition. May be also a warning to Dutch in present Benelux impasse.

4. We understand Swedes and Italians and perhaps Swiss intend to protest though it is not clear whether here or in forum of GATT or OEEC.

INCREASE IN RATE OF BELGIAN "TAXE DE TRANSMISSION" ON CERTAIN IMPORTED GOODS

Reference: Your Despatch No. 232 of March 25.†

The new Belgian charges on imports have been discussed with interested Government departments. We are indeed troubled by the Belgian action, partly because it appears to be contrary to their obligations under GATT and partly because it seems to be another one in a number of recent cases of the Belgians' ignoring their GATT commitments.

2. Before lodging any formal representations, we think it would be well to request the Belgians to supply more information about the tax increases. I should therefore be grateful if you would submit the attached note to the Foreign Ministry.† When we have had an opportunity to examine their reply we will then consider what further action may appear advisable.

3. In drafting this note we have sought to raise this question on the basis of the principles involved and to place it within the GATT context. We note that the Belgians in announcing the additional charges apparently have not linked the question to GATT.

4. Your despatch and enclosures have been very useful in our examination of this problem and you might inform the officers on your staff who are concerned with this matter that their efforts have been greatly appreciated.

CONFIDENTIAL

INCREASE IN RATE OF BELGIAN "TAXE DE TRANSMISSION" ON CERTAIN IMPORTED GOODS

Reference: Your despatch E-184 of April 24, 1953.

A note on the discriminatory increases in the "taxe de transmission" for certain imported goods, translated from the draft enclosed with your despatch under reference, was handed to Mr. Gerard, the Director-General of External Commerce at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, by Mr. Arnold Smith on Saturday, 23rd May. Gerard had been out of Belgium for nearly a fortnight, but it seemed to us worth awaiting his return so as to take the matter up personally with him, rather than merely sending in the note, or discussing it with one of his subordinates. I attach two copies of the note, as handed in, in French.

2. Gerard said, in confidence, that the tax increases had been introduced without the consent of his Department and that he had protested them, and been trying to get the measure revised. The real background of the decree, he said, was the deterioration in trade relations with the Netherlands. As you know, friction regarding Benelux arrangements has been growing substantially during the past six months. The Belgians wished, for Benelux purposes, to act in order to adjust what they considered an unfair lack of balance regarding Dutch treatment of Belgian trade interests. However, it was not possible, Gerard said, to tax goods from the Netherlands without taxing those from other countries.

3. Gerard also said that the refusal of the French to renew an old economic agreement with Belgium, which expired this winter, was also a factor, though a minor one, in the Government's decision to increase the taxe de transmission on imports.

4. Mr. Smith commented that the considerations of political and commercial leverage regarding Netherlands and France, did not make the Belgian action any more palatable for other members of GATT. Gerard agreed wryly with this observation.

5. Gerard went on to say that the legal experts had advised the Government that the increase in the taxe de transmission on imports was not in fact incompatible with the terms of GATT, since the law authorizing the increase dates from 1932. This means that legally speaking, Gerard suggested, the Government is merely exercising a right which it possessed at the time of signing the GATT accords and which right was reserved under the terms of the agreement. Mr. Smith mentioned his skepticism about the compatibility of such a change with at least the spirit of GATT, and professed an inability to understand the legal argument involved. Gerard himself obviously regarded this legal argument as purely a technicality. However, he agreed to give us a written reply to our note, setting out the arguments of his legal adviser.

6. Mr. Smith stressed Canadian concern at tendencies to disregard the GATT obligations and expressed the fear that such tendencies, unless challenged, would spread among more than one member country, to everyone's disadvantage. Gerard said that he personally agreed with this; though he would not admit that this particular instance was in fact legally incompatible with GATT obligations.

7. Gerard went on to say that while he was trying to get the text of the decree revised, he was not too hopeful about getting it withdrawn entirely. What he might be able to do, he suggested, would be to have the tax increases adjusted downwards, or waived, in a few specific cases. He suggested that there might be a few commodities in which Canada was especially interested, and our trade in which was significantly harmed by the recent tax increases. He asked that we let him know what items we were most concerned about in this connection. Mr. Smith repeated that the Canadian authorities were above all concerned with the question of principle. However, he agreed to report this possibility of piece-meal adjustment.

8. (I might add at this juncture that Mr. Taylor, the financial attaché of the United States Embassy, said in a discussion a day or so later with Mr. Chapin, my assistant commercial secretary, that the expected yield on the recent increases in taxe de transmission on certain imported goods was almost exactly equal to the revenue lost by the abolition, at the end of February 1953, of the taxe de transmission on certain exports. This elimination of the tax on exports was made as the result of pressure from the Federation of Belgian Industries, and particularly in response to a campaign of criticism organized by the metallurgical industries.)

9. Gerard then raised the question of the family allowance law of August 1930, under which a 7½% [tax] is imposed on the export of goods manufactured in Belgium, when such goods are imported by Government or Municipal agencies from countries other than those operating family allowance schemes which the Belgians recognize to be approximately on a par with those existing here (my letter No. 425 of 17th June, 1952 and your letter E-315 of 10th July, 1952 refer to this matter). Gerard said that he also greatly disliked this tax, and that his Department has been trying, hitherto unsuccessfully, to have it lifted. He was not too optimistic about getting rid of it in the foreseeable future. It brings in, he said, some fifty million francs which go, not into general tax revenues, but into the social security fund. This is politically of some importance and he thought it would be difficult to suppress this contribution to the fund, without increasing a contribution from the general budget, which would be very complicated and would inevitably raise questions of political principle. He suggested however that if Canadian interests were affected adversely by this family allowances tax, we should officially request the Belgium Government to undertake a study of the equivalence of our family allowance scheme. He thought that it should probably be possible to have the Canadian scheme recognized and thus exempt us from this particular law.

10. On this subject Mr. Smith remarked that in general the Canadian concern was again focussed primarily on the question of principle and compatibility with GATT. The repercussions of repeated infringements of GATT principles might be very much more serious to the general fabric of international trade than the particular immediate advantages or disadvantages to individual countries of specific questionable measures.

11. You may nevertheless consider it worth while to ask the Belgian Government to exempt us from the family allowance tax by recognizing the equivalent value of our own scheme. (I should add that I have not myself studied technically the comparative benefits of the two systems; however presumably this should be examined before a formal request for recognition is submitted.)

12. During the discussions with Mr. Gerard the question of dollar import restrictions, and the extension of the free list was also mentioned. Following receipt of your numbered letter E-98 of 25th February 1953, the gratification of the Canadian authorities at the significant Belgian progress in returning to a free regime had been informally expressed, as well as our hopes that further progress would be made in due course, and the particular Canadian interest in the items mentioned in paragraph 4 of your letter. On this occasion also, however, it seemed worth while to reiterate the Canadian hope that the Belgian Government would before long be able to liberalize the remaining items subject to quota on a discriminatory basis if they came from the dollar zone, and to express once more our special interest in the possibility of getting relaxations on antibiotics, polystyrene, used jute bags for packing, typewriters, and calculating and accounting machines. Gerard promised to have the possibility of relaxation on these items examined carefully and sympathetically.

NOTE NO. 70 Bruxelles, le 15 mai 1953

L'Ambassade du Canada présente ses compliments au Ministère des Affaires Étrangères et a l'honneur de se référer à l'Arrêté Royal du 11 mars 1953, majorant la taxe de transmission à l'importation de certains produits.

L'Ambassade constate que les produits en question ont déjà été taxés à l'importation au titre de compensation pour des taxes intérieures perçues à la production de produits similaires. Puisqu'aucune taxe semblable n'est prélevée sur les produits fabriqués en Belgique, l'Arrêté a pour effet d'alourdir la charge fiscale qui pèse sur les importations.

L'Ambassade croit comprendre que le Gouvernement belge considère que les nouvelles taxes contribuent à mieux égaliser les charges fiscales s'appliquant aux produits locaux et aux produits importés. Cette nouvelle mesure cause quelque inquiétude à l'Ambassade car il est difficile de voir comment la nouvelle majoration peut se justifier en vertu des dispositions de l'Accord Général sur les Tarifs douaniers et le Commerce (GATT), vu que cette majoration semble élargir la marge de protection dont bénéficient cetains produits fabriqués en Belgique, lesquels sont tous, sauf un, liés par cet Accord.

Il serait dont hautement apprécié si le Ministère des Affaires Étrangères voudrait expliquer de façon plus précise en quoi ces nouvelles taxes font disparaître une discrimination qui existait jusqu'ici contre certains produits locaux. Il serait apprécié également si le Ministère pouvait démontrer comment la perception, à l'importation seulement, de telles taxes additionnelles est justifiée d'après les termes de l'Accord Général.

BELGIAN TAXE DE TRANSMISSION INCREASE ON CERTAIN IMPORTS

Reference: My despatch No. 410 of 27th May, 1953.

I have today received a note from the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and External Commerce, in response to the note which was handed to M. Gerard, the Director General of External Commerce, on 23rd May.

2. The Foreign Ministry's note is very brief and laconic. It seems to abandon the (to us unimpressive) legal argument, which had been put out informally prior to our inquiry and which also Gerard expressed to Mr. Smith, that the increase tax was permissible under the terms of GATT, since it was based on law dating from 1932, i.e. prior to the inception of GATT. In place of this argument, it is merely asserted that the purpose of the tax increase is to establish a balance between charges payable on foreign commodities and those payable on domestic commodities: and that such balance had not existed on semi-finished or finished products hitherto: and that "while the rules of GATT forbid, in the field of internal taxation, the institution of a regime which gives a preference to domestic production, it does not, to the knowledge of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, forbid equality of treatment for domestic and foreign production".

3. I attach a copy of the Ministry's note.† I have sent a routine reply stating that I have referred the note to my Government.

BELGIAN IMPORT RESTRICTIONS

Mr. Querton, an official on the Foreign Trade side of the Foreign Ministry (who, incidentally, was formerly Belgian Consul General in Montreal) phoned my Counsellor today. He referred to the hope which we had expressed in conversation with Mr. Gerard (reported in paragraph 12 of my despatch under reference) that the dollar import restrictions might be relaxed on antibiotics, polystyrene, used jute bags for packing, typewriters, calculating and accounting machines. Mr. Querton said that his Ministry naturally wished to do what it could to meet the Canadian request, but that it would greatly strengthen his hand if he could have instances in which licenses had in fact been refused.

2. Mr. Querton was told that these items had been mentioned to Mr. Gerard on specific instructions from Ottawa. Regarding the actual treatment to date of individual requests for licenses to import these commodities, our Commercial Section would look into the matter and get in touch with him. We added that our understanding was that Ottawa was particularly concerned with the principle of excluding these commodities from the free list, and the uncertainty thereby created by the need to obtain licenses in each case: an uncertainty which was naturally not calculated to encourage trade.

BELGIAN IMPORT RESTRICTIONS AND THE "ALLOCATIONS FAMILIALES"

Reference: Your despatches Nos. 410 of May 27 and 452 of June 10.

Import Restrictions

We were pleased to note that on the occasion of the interview with M. Gerard on May 23 you seized the opportunity to urge the liberalization of the remaining items subject to discrimination. It was also useful to remind M. Querton that we are particularly concerned with the principle of Belgian restrictions against dollar goods.

With regard to the request for information on instances in which licenses had been refused for the items on which we had indicated a particular interest, it is not considered desirable here to enter into discussions concerning individual items on the basis of technical details such as the granting of import licenses by Belgium. The items which we suggested for priority in liberalization are of current importance in our trade and in which Canadian interest is obvious. However, there are other items of potential importance which are at present restricted and we hope that they will also be freed before very long. You will recall that we did not press our complaint against Belgium at the Seventh session of GATT when Belgium indicated that it would soon introduce substantial relaxations in these restrictions as a first step in the direction of their complete removal. We hope that these restrictions will be terminated before the next session of GATT convenes. If you are in further consultation with M. Querton you might reiterate this point of view.

Allocations Familiales

M. Gerard's suggestion that we might request exemption from this import tax on the grounds of equivalence of the Canadian family allowance scheme is an interesting one. As you know the Contracting Parties to GATT at their Seventh Session adopted a recommendation to Belgium that it remove this discrimination and report to GATT not later than the Eighth Session. In these circumstances it would not of course be appropriate for us to endeavour to obtain a relaxation in our favour at the present time. In the light of the examination of the "Allocations Familiales" at the forthcoming session of GATT we will consider whether we wish to take any action to obtain relaxation in our favour. Should Belgium appear to be unwilling to remove the tax entirely it might be useful to attempt to have Canada exempted from the application of the tax on the grounds that our family allowance scheme imposes indirect costs equivalent to the Belgian family allowances scheme.

I shall be commenting separately on the "taxe de transmission".

"TAXE DE TRANSMISSION"

In the light of your recent reports on the increases in the "taxe de transmission", interdepartmental consideration has been given to what further action would appear appropriate for us to take. In doing so, we have taken note that the Belgian position with regard to any justification for these increases has perceptibly shifted from time to time.

2. In these circumstances, and in view of the unsatisfactory reply which the Belgians gave to us in their note, we think the most useful development would be for this question to be raised at the forthcoming session of GATT. As you know, the increases could be fully examined there and the Belgians would more or less be required to provide careful and detailed answers to all requests for information. We think it would be preferable if the question were raised by some other country. I should therefore be grateful if you would enquire of your colleagues in other missions whether they are aware if any arrangements are in hand for a complaint to be lodged at GATT.

3. We are also requesting our missions in London and Washington to endeavour to find out whether the UK or the USA propose to raise this issue at GATT. I attach for your information a copy of my letter to these missions† as it sets out in further detail our attitude towards the problem raised by the Belgian action.

4. As Appendix "A" I attach a list of items which are subject to the increase in taxation and in which we have a special commercial interest, according to the best of our knowledge. As we do not consider it appropriate to take up M. Gerard's proposal that we make representations on specific items, this list is forwarded only for your background information.

BELGIAN TAXE DE TRANSMISSION

Reference: Your letter No. E-365 of 11th August, 1953.

We have asked a number of our colleagues in Brussels whether they know of any preparations for a complaint at GATT against the recent increase of the 'taxe de transmission à l'importation' in Belgium.

2. Both the United States and the British here have expressed their view quite emphatically that their countries, at least, could not contemplate taking any such action. The British, with whom we have discussed this question at some length, believe that, if challenged, the Belgians would argue that the increases in 'taxe de transmission' simply equalize the tax burden within the country on imported and domestic goods and that, in support of this, they would cite the number of middlemen involved in the manufacture and sale of domestic products. They also think that this defence would be very difficult to challenge effectively in GATT. Apparently, however, they are prepared to consider any case which may be put forward by British manufacturers indicating that the burden on goods imported into Belgium is significantly heavier than that on comparable domestic products and, if a strong case were made, they might be prepared to put it forward. The burden of proof has thus been placed on British industry, so far I understand without result.

3. The Swedes, also, are inclined to think that the Belgian increase in the 'taxe de transmission' might be permissible under GATT and do not intend to protest it in that forum. They have, however, reason to believe that the Belgian authorities might consider granting relief to individual products imported into Belgium which have been badly hit by the increased rates of tax and they will probably use forthcoming trade negotiations with the Belgians in Stockholm to explore this possibility.

4. On the other hand, the Italians have protested in Brussels against the increased rates of the tax on several occasions and the Finns have done so once. The Italian Commercial Counsellor has told us that the replies made to his Embassy's protests have all been confined to the claim that the tax increases were designed to equalize the burden of the transmission tax in Belgium on imported and domestically produced goods. He added that he did not believe that this was more than an excuse and that his government was seriously considering protesting in GATT, although a final decision had not yet been taken. We have not learned whether the Finns intend to follow up their protest here with action in GATT itself. We are, however, seeking further information and will inform you if we learn anything worth reporting.

5. In paragraph 3 of your letter No. E-320 of 14th July, you mentioned that you were enclosing a copy of a letter sent to London and Washington on this subject. This was, in fact, not received here and I should be very glad if you would send us a copy. BELGIAN TAXE DE TRANSMISSION

Reference: My letter No. 634 of August 24.

One of my officers was chatting to Mr. Dierckx, Inspecteur Général des Finances at the Belgian Ministry of Finance, at a reception yesterday when the subject of the Belgian "taxe de transmission" arose.

2. Mr. Dierckx, referring to the law of August 16 by which the regulations governing the administration and collection of this tax were tightened up, said that he agreed with the more optimistic forecasts that revenues from this source would be increased by between one and two milliard francs per annum. He went on to say, however, that in his experience, Belgians were the greatest "fraudeurs" in Europe and much remained to be done to improve the effectiveness of the "taxe de transmission" system. To this end he had been asked to review the system and to propose alterations; he was at the moment engaged in doing so.

3. In previous correspondence I have described the nature of the "taxe de transmission" (see my telegram number 104 of March 23 and enclosures to my despatch number 232 of March 25).† To all intents and purposes it is a sales tax levied on each occasion that a product is sold from the time it enters commerce as a raw material until it reaches the final consumer. In Mr. Dierckx's opinion it is the complexity of this system which encourages evasion and he has been working on the assumption that a drastic simplification is essential. In brief, he proposes that the "taxe de transmission" should not in future be levied every time a product changes hands but only when the seller has effected a major change in its nature. The idea is that the tax should fall only once on any given article. For example, the "taxe de transmission" would be levied on lumber imported into this country; presuming then that the lumber passed through several hands in the process of cutting and refining until it reached the manufacturer who was to make furniture out of it, no tax would be levied until the furniture had been made and sold to a wholesaler. At that stage, the lumber having undergone a complete transformation into a new article, the "taxe de transmission" would be levied for a second and last time.

4. Mr. Dierckx thought that this system would greatly increase the effectiveness of the "taxe de transmission" and facilitate the task of its collection; in fact an increase in revenues might be secured with fewer tax collectors. He stressed, however, that he was only just engaged in elaborating his plan which would not be submitted to his Minister until some time early in the new year. He was certain that, even if approved at that level, there would be considerable opposition in Cabinet. His ideas are, therefore, no more than preliminary thinking at the official level.

5. We had time to question Mr. Dierckx only on three points, namely:

a) whether it was not difficult to define "article" in a satisfactory way for purpose of determining at what stages in the production of a product the transmission tax should be levied;

b) whether, if the "taxe de transmission" were to be levied at fewer stages in the production and sale of a product and yet greater revenues were to be produced, it would not be necessary to increase the rate of the tax;

c) whether, if this occurred, the effect from the point of view of importers would not be to increase the effective level of tariff barriers.

6. Mr. Dierckx said frankly that, although some thought had been given to these problems, he could not yet give a precise answer to them. He thought, however, that it would not be too difficult to decide at what stage a product should be taxed. He agreed that it might be necessary to take a purely arbitrary decision in some cases but the situation would be an improvement over the present one. On our last two questions, Mr. Dierckx admitted that it might be necessary to raise the rate of "taxe de transmission" on certain products but added that he was not yet at all certain about this and that, in any case, the competitive position of importers in the Belgian domestic market would not be affected since the tax would be raised to an equal extent on identical imported and domestically-produced products. The latter is, of course, a favourite argument with the Belgians when challenged on the "taxe de transmission à l'importation". In the absence of greater detail about Mr. Dierckx's proposals, its justification here cannot be judged.

7. We have given some thought to the possible effects of these proposals but any speculation at this stage would be purely academic as the information given above is based on Mr. Dierckx's present personal thinking and should probably be regarded merely as an indication that the Belgian Government is contemplating changes in the "taxe de transmission" system. Mr. Dierckx's proposals appear to require much elaboration and there is no certainty that he will maintain them in their present form or, in fact, that they will ultimately be accepted by the Belgian Cabinet. The general election scheduled to take place in the spring adds a further element of uncertainty. We will, however, keep an eye on developments and report anything of interest which we may learn.

8. This information has been given to us by Mr. Dierckx on a personal basis as a result of the close working relations which have been established during the negotiations for accommodation for the 27th Brigade Administrative Tail in Antwerp. It would be appreciated, therefore, if particular care were taken not to divulge its source.

CONFIDENTIAL Ottawa, December 30, 1952

A representative of the French Embassy has enquired of us informally whether we would be agreeable to holding a fourth round of trade talks in February or March, 1953. I understand that a similar enquiry also has been addressed to you.

The position of this Department remains as heretofore, that is, that if there are any useful questions which can be discussed we will be glad to hold these meetings. Moreover, we consider it useful to take as sympathetic an attitude as possible toward the French initiative in view of the persistent nature of the French balance of payments difficulties and the attendant internal and external pressures which tend to make a solution of France's difficulties peculiarly complex. I should be grateful if you would indicate whether you wish to recommend that we accept this French proposal and, if so, any dates for the meetings which would be suitable to you.

It has occurred to us that the French may seek to widen the scope of these talks from a purely trade point of view. They might raise, among other subjects, the question of establishing a dollar-franc board, further negotiations within the GATT, the possibility of off-shore procurement by Canada in France, and our reactions to the plan submitted by the French at the last session of the GATT for a general reduction of tariff levels. On these questions we are prepared, of course, to hear what the French have to say but there is little likelihood that useful results could come out of talks on these subjects and we would be unable to make any commitments. All these topics can be pursued through normal diplomatic contacts and within the forum of OEEC, GATT, or NATO. If a fourth round of trade talks with the French are held, I think it would be useful, in order to head off any undesirable subjects and to keep the talks within proper limits, to obtain an agreed agenda beforehand. I should be glad also to have your views on this aspect of the proposed talks.

Dear Mr. Macdonnell,

This is in reply to your letter of December 30 containing the suggestion that a fourth round of trade talks be arranged with representatives of the French Government.[26]

The French have taken the initiative on each occasion in suggesting these meetings. We have acquiesced for exactly the reasons stated in your letter, namely that we consider it useful to respond sympathetically whenever possible to suggestions made by the French in this field. We have felt, in addition, that there is a good deal in general to be said for having joint meetings from time to time with French officials, to discuss current trends in trade and current difficulties.

On the earlier occasions, we have had no important issues of substance on our side which required us to seek these joint meetings. Indeed, we have been somewhat apprehensive lest other countries be moved, by the force of example, to suggest similar meetings with us. We do not believe there is much to be gained for Canadian trade in present circumstances by encouraging an increased number of international conferences of officials.

In our view, we should again accept the French suggestion of joint trade discussions. It might be well to remind them of our desire to avoid the sort of publicity which might encourage other countries in turn to initiate bilateral official trade discussions with us at regular intervals.

We agree with your general remarks about the subject matter of these talks and we agree, in particular, that it would be a good idea to obtain an agenda in advance. We do not necessarily wish to exclude any subject of discussion which the French may wish to raise, but it would be useful to have some idea in advance of the subjects to which they intend to refer.

Our Commercial Counsellor in Paris received a hint from the French some months ago that they would be prepared to come to Canada for these meetings if they are invited to come. I feel sure that it would be easier and more convenient from our point of view to hold these meetings in Ottawa. It is appropriate to hold these meetings here whenever possible, because the principal problem is to familiarize the French with opportunities which exist in the Canadian market.

As far as the date is concerned, sometime in March would be more convenient for us than February. I understand that Dr. Isbister has discussed this matter with Mr. Deutsch of the Department of Finance and the latter has suggested also that sometime in March would be more convenient for him.

Yours faithfully,

MEETING OF VISITING FRENCH MINISTERS WITH CANADIAN MINISTERS

At 10:40 a.m. on Monday, March 30th, Mr. René Mayer, the Prime Minister of France, called on Mr. St. Laurent. The two Prime Ministers had an informal talk of about half an hour after which Mr. Georges Bidault, the Foreign Minister of France, and Mr. Maurice Bourgès-Maunoury, the Finance Minister of France, came to the Prime Minister's room. They were accompanied by Mr. Guérin, the French Ambassador, and by Mr. de Laboulaye, of the French Embassy.

2. On the Canadian side, Mr. Howe, Mr. Abbott and Mr. Claxton, joined the group and Mr. Wilgress, the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs, was also present. There then followed a discussion of about an hour and a half during which the French ministers outlined the problems which were of most concern to them. These were chiefly the relationship of the Saar question to the ratification of the EDC treaty, the determination of the amount of American aid over a longer period than one year and the situation in the Middle East.

3. Mr. St. Laurent opened the discussion by stating that he had had a very interesting and frank talk with Mr. Mayer who had outlined the principal problems confronting the French Government. He said that Mr. Mayer had particularly emphasized the difficulties with which France was faced through having to carry the burden of the war in Indo-China. He then asked Mr. Mayer what points he would like taken up with the other Ministers present. Mr. Mayer said that there was no need to go over again the situation arising out of the war in Indo-China but he would like Mr. Bidault to explain the situation confronting the French Government in respect of ratification of the EDC treaties and more particularly the relationship of the Saar question to ratification of these treaties.

4. Mr. Bidault then spoke at length and with considerable force. He outlined the history of the negotiations with Germany concerning the Saar. He said that what France wanted was an assurance of the continuance of the present situation under which the currency of the Saar territory was that of France and the territory constituted a customs union with France. Internationalization of the Saar would not be a substitute for an assurance on these economic aspects of the question. He then outlined how control over the coal resources of the Saar was essential if France was to be an equal partner with Germany in respect of both the Coal and Steel Community and the European Defence Community. He said that the French Government was fearful that Chancellor Adenauer would take advantage of the provision that had been agreed upon to the effect that the existing arrangements in the Saar were subject to confirmation by the peace treaty. In the view of the French Government the contractual agreements constituted all that could be expected in the way of a peace treaty for some time to come.

5. Mr. St. Laurent observed how unfortunate it would be if France failed to ratify the EDC treaty in the near future. He hoped that what France was insisting upon was not an agreement in detail with the Germans but simply a recognition by the German Government of the principle involved. To this Mr. Bidault replied very emphatically that it would be impossible to ratify the EDC treaty in the absence of firm assurances from the German Government respecting the economic factors in the Saar question because French public opinion would not tolerate France being placed in an inferior position economically to that of Germany.

6. After Mr. Bidault had held forth at length on the Saar question, Mr. Mayer changed the topic of discussion to that of the NATO Annual Review. He said that they feared the coming meeting of the North Atlantic Council on the ministerial level would be similar to that which had taken place in Rome in that it would be unproductive of results. This would be largely on account of the uncertainty about American aid. He then referred to the discussion which they had had in Washington regarding the desirability of the total amount of American aid being fixed for a period of years and not simply annually as is now the case. Mr. St. Laurent commented upon the legislative difficulties of the United States administration and the necessity of Congress proceeding on the basis of an annual budget. He mentioned that the same would be the case in Canada. Mr. Bourgès-Maunoury then outlined the difficulties from the point of view of the French Government. He referred to the blocking in the current defence budget of a defence appropriation which had been made contingent on American aid. This was due to the fact that the expenditures contemplated would have led to further heavy expenditures in subsequent years. France in its present straightened circumstances could not contemplate embarking on such commitments unless they had some indication as to the amount of American aid which would be forthcoming over a period of years. Mr. Mayer said he thought that the arguments they had advanced in Washington on this point had made some impression and that the United States administration were thinking what could be done to meet the difficulties confronting the French Government.

7. Mr. Bidault then took over the discussion once more and outlined at length the French attitude toward the recent Balkan treaty and the negotiations looking toward the setting up of the Middle East Defence Organization. He started off by saying that they had had a visit in Paris of the Prime Minister and Foreign Minister of Turkey, both of whom had impressed them as being singularly able and well-informed. They said that the Turks had outlined the circumstances leading up to the conclusion of the Balkan pact with Yugoslavia and the care they had taken to conform to Turkish obligations under NATO. The Turks were realistic and realized that they would need all the help they could get if their territory was to be defended in the event of a war. The Balkan pact had reserved the position as regards Italy which in turn depended upon the settlement of the Trieste problem. Mr. Bidault outlined the history of the Trieste question and said that he did not see how a solution could be reached in the near future. He then turned to the Middle East and again referred to the talks that they had had with the Turks. He said that the Turks had agreed with them that it had been a mistake to contemplate an approach to the Arab states collectively and that the only way in which to secure the co-operation of the Arab states in the Middle East Defence Organization was to approach each government individually. They would not favour an approach through the medium of the Arab League. Finally he concluded by stating that France attached the greatest importance to the defence of the Suez Canal on account of its importance as an international artery. He did not think that the defence of the canal could be assured if it was left entirely to Egypt. France, therefore, supported the position taken by the United Kingdom government and would not like to contemplate the defence of the Suez Canal being entrusted to anything less than an international force.

8. The meeting then broke up as it was already time for the French ministers to go to Government House for luncheon.

SECRET Ottawa, April 2, 1953

I attach for your information a summary (probably incomplete) of the discussions held by the French with the Department of Finance and with Mr. Howe. This information has been obtained from conversations with officials of the other Departments who were present.

There has been a good deal of curiosity about the significance of the last paragraph of the communiqué issued at the conclusion of the discussions.[29] We have had calls from the US Embassy and Earnscliffe. It has apparently come as a surprise to some that emphasis should have been placed on the objective of "a satisfactory balance of Franco-Canadian trade". We have been taking the line, which we hope is satisfactory, that while the sentence, of course, does not mean that we are aiming at a bilateral trade balance with France, we are sympathetic to the French desire to bring the value of their sales to Canada more into line with Canadian sales to France, and that we would therefore welcome any efforts they may make to increase their exports to Canada.

It seems clear that the French mean rather different things than we do when speaking of "informal talks". In future when visits of this kind are arranged, it might be useful to make rather tighter arrangements with respect to any financial and economic discussions which may be planned. Our immediate suggestions are as follows:—

(1) A suitably qualified officer of this Department should be present at all general talks between the visiting delegation and the other Departments concerned on economic and financial matters (except of course conversations on a Minister to Minister basis).[30]

(2) There should be an opportunity before the arrival of the visitors to concert the line which it is proposed to take on the Canadian side so as to avoid the possibility of the visitors playing off one Department against the other or getting different answers from different authorities.[31]

(3) That a decision should be taken as soon as possible after the arrival of a visiting delegation as to whether or not a communiqué is to be issued at the end of

FRENCH MINISTERIAL VISIT
TALKS ON ECONOMIC AND FINANCIAL QUESTION

The main discussions on economic and financial matters took place in two meetings — one with Mr. Howe, at which officials of the Department of Defence Production were present, and one in the Department of Finance. I understand that the two main problems discussed with Finance were "burden-sharing" and the French reaction to the proposals of the Commonwealth Economic Conference. The French Ministers apparently explained their dissatisfaction with the present distribution of the common defence effort amongst NATO countries and emphasized the need to give more concrete expression to the concept of burden sharing. Finance officials apparently agreed that it would be desirable to find some more equitable way of sharing the defence burden but warned the French representatives of the impracticability of statistical approaches to this problem, which experience had shown to be quite unrealistic.

On the Commonwealth Economic Conference proposals the French apparently indicated satisfaction with Mr. Butler's forthright statement in the March 23 Ministerial meeting of the OEEC, which had cleared the air considerably and removed many uncertainties. They indicated, however, their anxiety to know more about how the proposals would be worked out in practice and the procedure now to be followed. Finance officials took the line that implementation of the collective approach to freer world trade and payments would depend on agreement being reached on objectives and would have to be worked out carefully in cooperation with the main countries concerned. For these reasons it was too early to expect anything definite at the present time. The French took the view that convertibility would not be achieved quickly. Their caution no doubt reflects the weak French payments position and the fear that they will be left behind by the economically stronger countries.

Discussions with Mr. Howe covered quite a number of subjects, as follows:—

and this Department sh[oul]d have a draft communiqué prepared in advance. This will be done in the case of Adenauer and sh[oul]d be the rule hereafter. C. R[itchie]

Imbalance of Trade

The French side explained their concern about the continuing and growing imbalance of their trade with Canada. Mr. Howe apparently agreed that a better balance would be desirable and suggested that the French could do a great deal to rectify the position by more active efforts to develop the Canadian market. He pointed out that the French had not followed up their participation in the Toronto Trade Fair in an active way and that they should pay more attention to servicing arrangements, maintenance of contacts, etc. Special attention should be paid to the question of sales and service of machine tools. The French brought up the question of Canadian tariffs and the help which some adjustments might give to French exports. They were careful to say that they were not seeking to attack the preferential system and they indicated their awareness of the problem presented to Canada by the obligation to extend any tariff concessions on a most-favoured-nation-basis, and of the fact that there would be general tariff negotiations in the GATT next Fall. Nevertheless, the French representatives thought that there were some parts of the Canadian tariff which would merit close technical examination on a bilateral basis and it was agreed by Mr. Howe that this question might be taken up in the Joint Committee.[33] Trade and Commerce officials anticipate that the French will produce lists of items, at the Committee Meeting, on which concessions would be of interest to them.

Investment

There was a general exchange of views on the desirability of increasing investment both ways. The French side explained some recent French regulations designed to facilitate foreign investment in France and its overseas territories. In the context of investment some consideration was given to the problem of housing the dependants of Canadian servicemen stationed in France. Mr. Howe apparently suggested that, if France provided the housing, Canada might be prepared to consider renting the accommodation at a rate which would amortize the French investment in a relatively short period. The payment of rent would represent an indirect investment in France.

Tourism

The French side brought up the desirability of increased Canadian tourist expenditure in France. Mr. Howe pointed out that there was a natural inclination amongst Canadians to travel in France and mentioned that Canada already had airlines operating to France and that it would be for the French to consider whether arrangements to have French shipping lines call at Canadian ports would be a worthwhile step to encourage Canadians to visit France.

Off-shore procurement

This question was discussed along the lines foreshadowed in the brief prepared for the French visit. The arrangements made during the course of M. Thomas'[34] visit were reviewed. The French, for their part, considered that the two week period in which French firms were expected to submit bids for defence contracts for "off the shelf" items was impossibly short and they expressed the hope that some leaway could be granted. Mr. Howe apparently undertook to have this proposal examined sympathetically and, I believe, made reference to the possibility of further conversations in the Joint Committee.

FRANCO-CANADIAN TRADE TALKS

You may recall that, following the French ministerial visit to Ottawa last March, it was agreed to hold another round of trade talks this autumn. The way the matter stands at present is that, after consulting other interested Departments, we agreed to a French proposal to hold a fourth round of talks in Ottawa, commencing on October 15. In view of the relatively short period of time before the meeting, I thought it might be useful to review briefly the nature and scope of the earlier meetings and to summarize the information we have available concerning the agenda for the meeting next month.

2. The French, as you may remember, have continually taken the initiative with respect to these meetings. Their original proposal early in 1950, which we resisted, was that a Franco-Canadian Continuing Committee should be set up along the lines of the Canada-United Kingdom Continuing Committee on Trade and Economic Affairs. The forthcoming round of talks is the fourth of a series which began in Paris early in 1950, following Franco-Canadian agreement to hold informal economic talks from time to time. French delegations to these meetings have been headed by the Director-General of Economic Affairs in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and have included officials from other Government departments and from the French Embassy in Ottawa. The Canadian delegations to these meetings have been headed by a senior official from the Department of Trade and Commerce (the Canadian delegation to the last meeting was headed by Mr. Bull of Trade and Commerce) and have included senior officials from Finance, Department of Defence Production, External Affairs and the Tariff Board. In addition, at the last meeting Mr. Rasminsky from the Bank of Canada and Mr. Stein, the Under-Secretary of State, were present for some of the talks. By mutual agreement, the senior French representative acted as chairman during the first two meetings which were held in Paris, while the senior Canadian representative chaired the last round of talks which were held in Ottawa in May, 1951. I assume that all parties will be agreeable to a similar arrangement at the forthcoming meeting.

3. In general, previous talks covered a variety of subjects such as tariff adjustments, French sales in Canada, the release of French assets, etc., and, although from our point of view there have been no important substantive issues, we have felt it wise to respond sympathetically whenever possible to suggestions made by the French in these fields. In addition, we felt there was some merit in having joint meetings from time to time to discuss trends in trade and current difficulties although we have always been apprehensive lest other countries suggest similar meetings with us.

4. With respect to the agenda of the forthcoming meeting, an extremely meagre supply of information has been received from French sources, but we have been somewhat hesitant to press the French lest we should appear unduly interested in the meetings. However, on the basis of information obtained during and since the French Premier's visit, it appears that the French will wish to discuss the following items:

(1) French trade balance with Canada. It was agreed during M. Mayer's visit that this question should be discussed at future trade talks. I think the French understand that this is essentially a problem for them to attack and that our willingness to discuss the question does not imply any commitment on our part to obtain a better bilateral balance of trade.

(2) Tariffs. At the last meeting in 1951 the French indicated that experts might usefully examine the Canadian tariff structure in order to see whether or not further specific reductions might be advantageous to France. In this connection, M. Cailleteau of the French Embassy recently asked Dr. Isbister of Trade and Commerce whether we would have a list of tariff requests to submit to the French corresponding to the list which they propose to submit to us. We have, of course, no intention to submit such a list and, although we are prepared to discuss any items in our tariff which the French may propose for consideration, it is difficult to see how such discussions could be but a preliminary examination prior to general negotiations in GATT.

(3) An exploration of the Canadian market.

(4) Investment. Canadian investment in the French Union and possible French investment in Canada.

(5) DND Housing in France.

(6) Off-shore procurement — with Mutual Aid funds and for ordinary defence contracts.

(7) Visits of Canadian Tourists to France.

5. The question of a press release is also important. I suggest that as soon as possible after the arrival of the visitors, a decision should be taken as to the desirability of issuing a press release at the conclusion of the talks. An early decision on this score would permit careful consideration of the text of any communiqué. In this connection, it would be well to remind the French of our desire to avoid publicity which might encourage other countries in turn to ask for bilateral official trade discussions with us at regular intervals.

6. In the light of the above, I suggest that you might usefully discuss with Mr. Bull the following matters:

(a) Canadian representation.

(b) Chairmanship of the Committee.

(c) Scope of the meeting.

(d) Press Release.

(e) Possibility of a preliminary meeting of Canadian representatives to concert a "Canadian line".

With respect to (b), you may wish to suggest to Mr. Bull that in view of his Department's interest in the meeting he might be willing to act as chairman of the discussions.

J.H. WARREN

Note du sous-secrétaire d'État adjoint aux Affaires extérieures pour la Direction économique

Memorandum from Assistant Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Economic Division

Ottawa, September 24, 1953

FRANCO-CANADIAN TRADE TALKS

I spoke to Mr. Bull today and we agreed that arrangements should be made along the following lines:

(a) Canadian Representation —

The lion's share will fall to Trade and Commerce but Finance and the Bank should be on hand to discuss balance of payments questions and investment. Defence Production should be brought in for off-shore procurement and housing in France together with National Defence. This Department will be represented by the Economic Division and that seems to take care of the topics that are likely to arise. Mr. Bull does not know of any subjects coming up which would require representatives from the Secretary of State Department.

(b) Chairmanship of the Committee —

Mr. Bull is willing to act. October 15 is satisfactory to him although he has an impression that the French may not be ready by that time. In connection with hospitality, he mentioned that he will be tied up on October 16 at a lunch with the Chamber of Commerce as will a number of other officials. That date is therefore eliminated from any programme of official hospitality.

(c) Scope of the Meeting —

This will presumably follow past precedents. The French will presumably wish to raise a number of points and it may turn out that the Canadian side will have to explain why various proposals are not acceptable.

(d) Press Release —

The French are likely to want one and it would probably be a mistake to have them here without saying something official. It should be vague and innocuous and a draft prepared in advance.

(e) Preliminary Meeting of Canadian Representatives —

Mr. Bull agrees that this would be advisable.

2. I think that this will give you what you need to begin making arrangements.

FRANCO-CANADIAN TRADE TALKS

14. Economic Division: On October 15 and 16 talks will be held with a French trade delegation led by M. Clappier, the Director of External Relations of the Ministry of Economic Affairs. The Canadian Delegation will be headed by the Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce, Mr. Bull, and will be composed of representatives from his Department, the Departments of Finance, National Revenue, Defence Production, and External Affairs, and the Bank of Canada. This Department will be represented by Economic Division.

The discussion will be devoted largely to subjects which have been suggested by the French. These include balance of payments questions, Canadian tariff regulations, export problems of a technical character, trade promotion, double taxation arrangements, defence contracts and off-shore procurement. Our delegation has suggested French import restrictions and French regulations on wheat imports for re-exportation as flour, as items for discussion.

This is the fourth of a series of informal trade talks which have been convened during the last three years at the suggestion of the French.

Communiqué de presse du ministère du Commerce

Press Release by Department of Trade and Commerce

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE [Ottawa], October 19, 1953

The Minister of Trade and Commerce announced to-day the successful conclusion of two-day talks in Ottawa between French and Canadian officials on trade and financial matters.

This meeting was decided upon last March following on the conversations which took place in Ottawa at that time between members of the Canadian Government, the French Prime Minister and the French Ministers of Foreign Affairs and Finance.

The officials examined recent developments in trade and payments between the two countries, and gave particular attention to ways and means of bringing the exchange of goods and services to the highest possible level.

A thorough examination of the potential expansion of traditional French exports was made. Amongst the new possibilities of developing French exports to Canada, emphasis was placed on possible Canadian imports from the French overseas territories, as well as of French capital goods. The prospects for French investment in Canada as well as Canadian investment in the French Union were examined, and it was recognized that such developments in the investment field would have desirable effects both on the balance of payments and the exchange of goods between the two countries. The examination of Canadian and French administrative procedures and commercial practices brought out various means of facilitating trade.

The representatives surveyed the measures taken by the two countries to make their respective products better known, especially through trade fairs. The French officials reviewed their increasing participation in the Canadian International Trade Fair in Toronto, and the steps they are taking to organize a major French trade exhibition in Montreal in 1954.

In the discussions of general economic matters, it was recognized that the removal of existing obstacles to the expansion of international trade and payments is of vital importance to the strength and security of all countries of the free world.

The conversations took place in the most cordial atmosphere. The French Delegation was led by M. Bernard Clappier, Director of External Relations of the French Ministry of Economic Affairs. The Chairman of the Canadian Delegation was Mr. W. Frederick Bull, Deputy Minister, Department of Trade and Commerce.

DESPATCH 1695 Paris, October 27, 1953

CONFIDENTIAL

CANADA-FRANCE TRADE TALKS

In Weekly Divisional Notes No. 41 of October 13 it was reported that a new round of Canada-France trade talks would get under way in Ottawa on October 15. In our last communication on this subject from the Department (Letter No. E.636 of June 8†) it was stated that the French Embassy in Ottawa had suggested that the talks should take place in Canada on October 15, but no other details were given. Since that letter we have had no further information from the Department. Mr. Campeau, Acting Commercial Counsellor, has been in contact on occasion with the Department of Trade and Commerce concerning these talks, but the information generally available to the Embassy has been sparse.

2. The lack of information available to us on this particular aspect of Canada-France relations raises, I believe, the whole question of economic reporting, since a number of the items listed as being on the agenda for the talks are those on which the Embassy reports from time to time. Economic reporting, as you are aware, is divided between the Chancery and the Commercial Office, with the latter limiting itself largely to the preparation of reports on commodities, on technicalities of new or renewed trade agreements, and to agricultural reports. The Chancery assumes responsibility for preparing other reports concerning general aspects of the economy, and in particular questions of budget and fiscal policy, which are extremely alive in France to-day. Our reporting in this respect has not been as extensive as we would wish, in part due to the limitation of time and in part due to the fact that we were not sure how interesting or useful our reports were proving to the Department. Through our close contacts with the OEEC Mission, we are now better able to assess the importance of the various possible types of economic reports, but it is still quite difficult to take well-informed guesses as to the Canadian Government's interest in French economic problems. Our ignorance of the development and the preparation for the Canada-France trade talks regrettably emphasizes the feeling that missions sometimes get that they are working in a void in the writing of some of their reports.

3. In our Despatch No. 928 of June 26[35] we made some comments on the subject of Departmental guidance to missions on reporting, and emphasized at that time that the Department's decision to provide more extensive and frequent comment and instruction on reporting from missions abroad was warmly welcomed by this Embassy. We appreciate that, particularly in the economic field, the pressure of work in the Department makes extensive comment and guidance an almost impossible burden. But where the subject is one, like the Canada-France trade talks, which is obviously of major concern to the mission, it would be most helpful to have as much information and guidance as the Department is able to supply. This will also help the Embassy to ensure that the subjects selected for reporting, and the treatment given to these subjects, correspond with the needs of the Department.

[35] Non trouvée./Not located.

CANADA-FRANCE TRADE TALKS

Reference: Your Despatch No. 1695 of Oct. 27.

I regret that we did not send you immediately any information concerning the round of trade talks which were held in Ottawa on October 15-16. At the time we felt that the communiqué which was issued simultaneously in Paris and Ottawa at the conclusion of the meetings[36] would serve to provide you with a brief interim report pending the completion of the minutes, which as it turned out, took a long time to prepare. In fact, they were only completed on November 30.

2. As you will appreciate from your knowledge of similar talks which were held during recent years, the subjects dealt with at the meetings mainly concerned technical and administrative difficulties which stand in the way of increased trade between our two countries. A good deal of time was taken up with questions by the French officials and detailed answers which were provided by senior representatives from the Departments of Trade and Commerce, Finance, National Revenue, Defence Production, and the Bank of Canada. You will note from the attached minutes that Canadian officials indicated that the Departments concerned would examine sympathetically any cases where Canadian administrative procedures or regulations are standing in the way of French exports to Canada. In this connection, I understand that officials in the Department of National Revenue are currently examining a list of French exports submitted by the French Commercial Counsellor in order to determine whether it may be possible to make, within existing regulations, any concessions which would facilitate the entry of such products into Canada.

GERMAN EXTERNAL DEBTS

Note du ministre des Finances pour le Cabinet

Memorandum from Minister of Finance to Cabinet

CONFIDENTIAL Ottawa, February 20, 1953

RE: AGREEMENT ON GERMAN EXTERNAL DEBTS

The Canadian Government has been invited by the United Kingdom Government acting in conjunction with the Governments of the French Republic, of the United States of America, and of the Federal Republic of Germany to designate a representative with the necessary full powers to sign the Agreement on German External Debts on its behalf on Friday, February 27, 1953, in London, England. Should the Canadian Government not wish to become an original party to the Agreement it may accede to the Agreement at a later date.

The terms and conditions embodied in this Agreement arose out of the Conference on German External Debts which was held in London from February 28th until August 8th, 1952. They cover the settlement of Reich debts, such as the Dawes Loan of 1924 and the Young Loan of 1930, as well as the debts of other public authorities. Provision is also made for the settlement of medium and long-term debts resulting from private capital transactions, the Standstill Debts, claims arising out of goods and services transactions and a variety of other claims. It should be noted that debts solely of East German origin are excluded.

The terms proposed for the settlement of the German debts covered by the Settlement Plan have been worked out in negotiations between representatives of the creditors and the debtors so that the Governments of the various countries concerned are in a sense endorsing the settlement reached by the private interests. Three members of the Canadian Delegation were representatives of private creditors and were able to enter into the negotiations.

The terms conform as closely as possible to the existing contracts but certain adjustments have been made in the rates of interest allowed. Except in some special cases no repayment in foreign exchange of the principal of any debt will be made during the first five years. Interest, however, will be payable as early as April 1, 1953, on some categories of debts. Commencing in 1958 the principal would be repaid on an amortized basis.

The principles of the settlement are that Germany will ensure that the debts owing to residents of any country which does not sign the Agreement will not be paid until the debts owing to residents of countries who are party to the Agreement have been paid. The one exception to this general rule is that holders of marketable securities will be eligible to receive payments no matter where they reside. A large number of the debts owing to Canadians fall in this category but a still larger number of Canadians would not benefit from the settlement if Canada did not become a party. Any creditor may refuse to accept the terms of the settlement and if he does so his legal rights within Germany are protected but he cannot be paid until all obligations covered by the Agreement have been fulfilled.

There is no reason to believe that Canada could later secure more favourable terms of settlement than those secured by the major creditor interests at the Conference with whom the West German Government would be more anxious to restore its credit. The Canadian interest of approximately $1,725,000 is only about one-quarter of one per cent of all Germany's external pre-war debts.

Canada took an active part among the countries with smaller interests in seeing that the Conference on German Debts adopted the policy of "no discrimination or preferential treatment in the fulfilment of the terms agreed on as among categories of debts or currencies in which payable, or in any other respects, should be permitted by the West German Government or sought by the creditor countries". In this connection I should point out that payment in Canadian dollars would be facilitated in certain instances if Canada were to enter into a payments agreement with Germany. I would not propose however that we enter into a payments agreement for this reason alone.

I therefore recommend with the concurrence of the Secretary of State and the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs that Canada should be an original party to this Agreement and that the High Commissioner for Canada, London, be given the necessary full powers to sign the Agreement on behalf of the Canadian Government.

GERMAN EXTERNAL DEBTS; ACCESSION TO THE AGREEMENT

3. The Minister of Finance said the Canadian government had been invited by the UK government, acting in conjunction with the governments of France, the United States and the Federal Republic of Germany, to accede to an agreement on German external debts to be signed on February 27th. The terms and conditions of the agreement arose out of a conference in London from February 28th to August 8th, 1952. Three members of the Canadian delegation had been representatives of private creditors and were able to enter into the negotiations.

The terms of the agreement conformed as closely as possible to the existing contracts but certain adjustments had been made in the rates of interest allowed. Delay in repayment of capital amounts was provided for. Under the agreement Germany would ensure that debts owing to residents of any country which did not sign the agreement would not be paid until debts owing to residents of countries party to the agreement had been paid. Any creditor could refuse to accept the terms of the settlement. His legal rights would be protected but he could not be paid until all obligations covered by the agreement had been fulfilled. It was recommended, with the concurrence of the Secretary of State and the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs, that the High Commissioner in London be given power to sign the agreement.

An explanatory memorandum was circulated.

AGREEMENT ON GERMAN EXTERNAL DEBTS

39. The Prime Minister, referring to discussion at the meeting of February 23rd, 1953, said Cabinet had approved the recommendation of the Minister of Finance that the High Commissioner for Canada in London be given power to sign, on behalf of the government of Canada, the Agreement on German External Debts. It was provided that the Agreement should enter into force upon the deposit of instruments of ratification with the government of the United Kingdom by the governments of the Federal Republic of Germany, France, United Kingdom and the United States. Such entry into force would be effective as to all governments signatory to the Agreement which by that time had deposited the required instruments for ratification. The Agreement came into force on September 16th, 1953. In order that it would be effective as to the government of Canada, it was recommended by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, with the concurrence of the Minister of Finance and the Secretary of State, that an instrument of notification specifying that the agreement has been approved by the Canadian government be deposited with the government of the United Kingdom.

An explanatory memorandum had been circulated.

INVITATION TO DR. ADENAUER TO VISIT OTTAWA

Dr. Adenauer, probably accompanied by Professor Hallstein, the State Secretary for Foreign Affairs, is expected to arrive in Washington on April 7 and to remain there until April 9. There is a possibility that he may not arrive until April 8, in which case he will stay through April 10.

2. As you know, we are to be visited this spring by Mr. Butler, MM. Mayer and Bidault and Mr. Köprülü.[37] You may, therefore, think it advisable to extend an invitation to the Federal German Chancellor to come to Ottawa at the close of his Washington stay. Last year when he visited Dr. Adenauer, Mr. Abbott made the suggestion, quite informally, that should the Chancellor ever be going to our side of the world he would be a welcome visitor to Canada. Our Ambassador to the Federal Republic reported Mr. Abbott's suggestion and as a result consideration was given to the question of inviting Dr. Adenauer to Ottawa. It was decided to let the matter ride for the time being as we were not convinced that public opinion in Canada was quite ready to welcome a visit from the German Chancellor.

3. Since then, however, Dr. Adenauer has played an increasingly important role on the international scene. Moreover, Canada's relations with the Federal Republic have been closer and, on the whole, more cordial. The visit to Ottawa last September of Dr. Erhard, the West German Minister for Economic Affairs, passed off well and aroused no adverse comment in the press or public.

It is agreed by the members of NATO that a German contribution to Western defence is indispensable and it is clear that Dr. Adenauer shares this view and that his political opponents question it. The problem of ratification of the EDC Treaty by Germany is a crucial one and any evidence of friendship and solidarity which we can show the Federal Chancellor will, I think, be welcome to him and helpful to our common cause.

5. I would, therefore, suggest that we instruct the Canadian Ambassador in Bonn to convey an invitation from the Canadian Government to Chancellor Adenauer to visit Ottawa immediately following his Washington visit. If you agree, I shall take the necessary steps to see that the invitation is sent and a suitable programme arranged.

War Criminals

1. Dr. Adenauer introduced the topic of war criminals which had been brought up at his press conference immediately before the meeting. Both he and the Prime Minister agreed that the solution by which a Canadian would sit as the United Kingdom representative on the Mixed Clemency Board when the cases of Meyer and Neitz were to be considered was a happy one.[40] There had been talk by President Eisenhower in Washington of setting up this Board before final ratification of the contractual agreements, and Dr. Adenauer would appreciate Canadian help in hastening this process. The Prime Minister said that Canada would not find it difficult to associate herself with this but would not take the first step.

Refugees

2. Dr. Adenauer referred to the plight of the some 200,000 farmers who had fled from Eastern Germany and wondered whether Canada could not take some of them for four or five years as farm workers. He admitted that the question of the transfer of funds for these men and their families would be difficult because Germany already has an unfavourable balance of trade with Canada. Perhaps, however, the five million dollars worth of German assets which had been retained by Canada might be used to finance the settlement. In reply the Prime Minister said that such a question would have to be referred for detailed study to the German Ambassador and to the competent Canadian officials. It would, however, be contrary to Canadian policy to accept immigrants for a definite period, although we would not prevent them from leaving should they so decide.

Trade Questions

3. Dr. Adenauer regretted that Canada did not buy more goods from Western Germany. The Prime Minister, referring to our belief that trade must flow in two directions, added that we are free-traders and the Canadian market is open to suitable German products. The German Ambassador put in a word about preferential tariffs which made it difficult for Germans to compete with British and American goods. It was agreed that these and similar economic questions would be best dealt with by Canadian and German experts who were in fact meeting that morning to consider them.

The International Political Scene

4. Dr. Adenauer expressed his thanks that Canada had adopted so open and welcoming an attitude towards European integration. Germany greatly appreciated Canada's interest in Europe and particularly the sending of Canadian troops to Europe as part of the integrated force. He added that he also thought the UK attitude towards the EDC went as far as could reasonably be expected.

Dr. Adenauer saw two reasons for Russia's present policy. The Russians wanted:

(a) to make the USA resort to peripheral defence; and

(b) to win Germany, France, Italy and the Benelux countries without resorting to war so that in time the war-potential which they controlled would be greater than that of the USA. It was always necessary to remind ourselves that the rulers of Soviet Russia took a very long view and were content to wait.

The Prime Minister pointed out that Canada, as well as the US, was defending her own interests. Canadians did, however, feel that they understood Europe perhaps better than the Americans since they had been in longer and closer contact with European conditions. He added that we also knew the Americans pretty well and were convinced that they did not seek to dominate other countries. In his view the age of nationalism was in any case over. Dr. Adenauer assured the Prime Minister that there was no need to fear a resurgence of National-Socialism in Germany.

Otto Strasser

5. Dr. Adenauer expressed his thanks to Canada for keeping Otto Strasser here. He did not seem to regard Strasser as a real danger but rather as a nuisance whose return would be unwelcome. The Prime Minister made it quite clear that we were not preventing Strasser from leaving, but merely not facilitating his departure.[41]

Closing Remarks

6. The Prime Minister assured Dr. Adenauer that we regarded his visit as an aid to our political situation since it was evidence to our people that we are part of an effective alliance. Dr. Adenauer said how happy he was to have been so cordially received and expressed the hope that he might soon be able to welcome Mr. St. Laurent in Bonn.

Mr. Claxton introduced the subject of UK association with the EDC and Dr. Adenauer was of the opinion that this association would help the French Socialists to vote for the Treaty when the time came. In answer to a question put by Mr. Claxton, Dr. Adenauer said that he missed M. Schuman and wished him back at the Quai d'Orsay.

[41] Otto Strasser entra au Canada en qualité de réfugié politique en 1941. Après la fin de la Deuxième Guerre mondiale, il présenta plusieurs demandes pour obtenir un certificat canadien d'identité qui aurait facilité son départ du Canada, mais le gouvernement refusa d'émettre le document parce que le gouvernement allemand était peu disposé à le laiser revenir en Allemagne. En décembre 1953, le gouvernement canadien décida que les raisons qui militaient en faveur de ne pas émettre le document n'étaient plus valides et il délivra le document.

2. Mr. Claxton announced that an air wing of three squadrons of Sabre jets had landed at Zweibrücken and would probably be turned over officially to SHAPE on April 26. There followed a general discussion on Canadian soldiers in Europe.

3. At noon Mr. Harris, accompanied by Mr. Laval Fortier joined the group and Dr. Adenauer returned to the topic of the possible temporary settlement in Canada of farmers from the East Zone of Germany, the cost of such an operation to be covered by the use of the five million dollars worth of German assets in Canada. Both Mr. Harris and Mr. Abbott promised to look into the question and to remain in touch over it with the German Ambassador.

4. Mr. Claxton mentioned the possibility of young Germans being employed by the Canadian Brigade for some two years and then being allowed to emigrate to Canada permanently. Dr. Adenauer seemed pleased with this scheme.[44]

5. In connection with this question of emigration, Dr. Adenauer described the way in which the East Zone was deteriorating and how badly in particular the land was being treated. This led Mr. Claxton to ask whether Dr. Adenauer expected new proposals in German unification from the Russians. In reply the Chancellor said that the last Allied Note (September 23, 1952) remains unanswered. He did not expect that there would be any new and acceptable proposals put forward by the Soviet Union. In his view, the Russians have realized that they cannot communize the East Zone and are, therefore, hoping to use it as a pawn in the East-West game of chess. No Russian propaganda move would succeed in either part of Germany. After the elections, which Dr. Adenauer confidently expected to win, even the Social-Democratic Party would turn out to be more pro-Western than at present. They still lived in the shadow of the late Dr. Schumacher and could hardly change his policy in an election year.

discussed. On the first subject Baron von Maltzan stated that Germany was not yet in a position to supply any Canadian requirements. With respect to German exports Mr. Howe suggested that the volume could be increased if the Germans set up branch plants and if they established their own agencies for engineering products.

The talks with officials of the department related for the most part to possible German-Canadian trade talks. Baron von Maltzan noted that we had the UK-Canada Continuing Committee, and that we engaged in trade talks from time to time with France. He declared that he thought there would be some use in a similar arrangement with Germany. While the idea of a Committee as such was discouraged it was suggested that if German trade officials had specific matters which could usefully be raised with the Department of Trade and Commerce — the questions might be submitted in Bonn or in Ottawa — a meeting might be arranged.

OFF-PROGRAMME IMPORT DECISIONS OF THE GREEK GOVERNMENT

On February 6th, I signed a note to the Foreign Minister on this subject, and we delivered it by hand to the appropriate official of his Ministry. During the past month, I raised the question several times with the Ministry and so did other officers of the Embassy. I was assured, from time to time, that Canada had not intentionally been omitted from the list of countries to be permitted to export to Greece selected items not included in the official import programme. Nevertheless, on March 10th, I received a reply from the Foreign Minister which states that, for various reasons, Canada cannot be listed as a source of supply for these particular products. A copy of my note of February 6th was referred to the Department under cover of our transmittal slip dated February 10th. For convenience, a further copy is now attached, together with a copy of the Foreign Minister's reply dated March 5th.†

2. Richardson[46] has sent a full report to his Department on this subject. A copy of his letter dated March 12th is attached.† I think that, if our experts are convinced that the Greek Government is violating its GATT obligations by discriminating in this manner, it would be a pity if we let them get away with it. As Richardson has suggested, the subject might well be raised in Ottawa if Mr. Markezinis[47] decides to go there in April or May. At the same time, we could, if you agree after consultation with the appropriate Departments in Ottawa, send a further note to the Foreign Minister. An alternative is to raise the subject at the next GATT meetings. I might mention that the official of the Foreign Ministry with whom we have been dealing, was quite convinced that this had nothing to do with GATT which had to do "only with import duties".

OFF-PROGRAMME IMPORT DECISIONS OF THE GREEK GOVERNMENT

Reference: Your Despatch No. 132 of March 16.

The schedule for off-programme imports has been discussed with other interested Departments and it is considered that this question should be raised again with the Greek Government, indicating that we consider these arrangements a breach of their obligations under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. I should be grateful, therefore, if you would send a further Note requesting that this discrimination against Canadian goods be removed by including Canada in the off-programme import schedule.

2. As the drachma has been devalued since this question was examined here, it may be that some adjustments have been, or will be made in the Greek import arrangements and that the question no longer arises. A preliminary report from the International Monetary Fund indicates that some import restrictions will be removed. I assume therefore that you will review this problem in the light of any changes and, if it appears desirable, consult further with us before submitting the note to the Foreign Ministry.

3. In forwarding a further note, I think the argument might be developed along the following lines. We are aware, of course, that Greece is experiencing serious balance of payments difficulties and that energetic measures are being taken to correct the situation. Under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, Greece is entitled to impose discriminatory import restrictions for the purpose of protecting its balance of payments and exchange reserve position. However, we find it difficult to understand why discrimination should take place against Canada in favour of the United States if the purpose of the Greek import restrictions is to deal with exchange difficulties. The currencies of both Canada and the United States are fully convertible and imports from both countries have to be paid for in gold or dollars. Importation from Canada, therefore, is not a greater burden on the exchange position of Greece than imports from the United States. Moreover, with respect to GATT, import restrictions against Canadian goods which are not equally applied to imports from the United States cannot be justified under the balance of payments escape clause. We therefore hope that the Greek Government will review their arrangements and remove the discrimination against Canadian goods in order to keep their import regime in accordance with their obligations under GATT.

4. For your own information, we consider that an important principle has been raised by this particular measure of Greek discrimination which could have serious implications for our exports to other countries which are also experiencing balance of payments difficulties. As far as we know, no other GATT country discriminates between the United States and Canada as sources of supply when imposing import restrictions for balance of payments reasons.

5. In the light of any reply from the Greek Government, we will consider whether it appears desirable to lodge a formal complaint under GATT. In this connection, I should be grateful if you would forward to us a copy of your note for our records as it would probably be desirable to provide GATT with a copy of this note if a formal complaint were lodged.

DESPATCH 189 Athens, April 23, 1953

RESTRICTED

OFF-PROGRAMME IMPORT DECISIONS OF THE GREEK GOVERNMENT

Reference: Our despatch No. 132 of March 16, 1953.

During a recent conversation which I had with Mr. Markezinis, the Minister of Coordination, I raised this subject and expressed my disappointment that Canadian firms were not even being allowed to bid on a wide range of goods. Mr. Markezinis appeared to be sympathetic and promised to have Mr. Kapsalis, the Minister of Commerce, discuss this question with me.

2. The 100%[48] devaluation of the Greek drachma was announced shortly after my conversation with Mr. Kapsalis. Then, on Saturday, April 18th, the Minister of Commerce telephoned me to say that Canada had now been "added to the list" and thus Canadian firms would be able to bid on certain off-programme imports. Mr. Kapsalis seemed to interpret this move as quite a concession to Canada. It does in fact give a new opportunity to Canadian exporters to try to get their goods into the Greek market, and I thanked Mr. Kapsalis for his action. In my experience, this is the first time a Greek government has moved towards a liberalization of trade, and the first time Canada has been specifically mentioned in a FTB decision.

3. The next day our Commercial Section obtained the details of the new import regulations, which are embodied in the attached Foreign Trade Board Protocol No. 29268.† I am also attaching a copy of Mr. Kniewasser's[49] report of April 19th to the Department of Trade and Commerce, which recommends that interested Canadian firms act quickly to take advantage of this new policy before the Government finds it necessary to take other steps to reduce the flow of dollar imports.†

4. We have just received your despatch No. E-123 of April 14, 1953. In view of the developments mentioned above and in the Commercial Secretary's report, the situation has now changed and the question no longer arises. I do not propose, therefore, to take any further action unless I hear from you to the contrary.

EARTHQUAKE DISASTER IN GREECE

I attach for your consideration the messages which have come in from Athens about the situation in the Ionian Islands.† It is clear from these reports and from information received from the Red Cross that the disaster is of major proportions; the dead are estimated at over a 1,000 and the entire population of the Islands is homeless. Greek officials have estimated that homes for 120,000 persons will be required.

Yesterday, the Greek Ambassador called to inform me of the needs of the situation and to enquire about the possibility of Canadian aid. I was able to show him the attached press release which had just been issued, covering the flight of an RCAF North Star to Athens carrying a cargo of Red Cross emergency supplies.[50] The Ambassador expressed his gratitude for this initiative with respect to the immediate needs, but his main concern was with the requirements for rehabilitation and reconstruction. He seemed confident that, as in the past, Canada and the Canadians would be sympathetic to Greek needs.

The Embassy in Athens has made two suggestions. First, that emergency supplies should be despatched by air from our forces in Germany. Secondly, that an immediate offer of aid be made preferably as a credit for the purchase of construction material. From press reports and from what the Ambassador said, I am of the opinion that the emergency situation is pretty well in hand. Having sent an aircraft from here, I doubt the necessity of flying supplies from the Brigade in Germany. The question of what further needs to be done for reconstruction and rehabilitation does, however, arise, and, if we are eventually to do something in this regard, there is much to be said for making an announcement now while the critical nature of the situation is fresh in peoples' minds.

The following factors would appear to be relevant in considering this question.

(a) The Greek Government is well aware of the aid given by Canada in connection with the floods in the United Kingdom and the Low Countries earlier this year.

(b) Publicity will shortly be given to the provision of canned pork and powdered milk for the flood relief in Japan.

(c) Greece is a NATO country which has successfully resisted communist aggression.

(d) In the past, Canada has been generous in providing aid to Greece, and we enjoy a considerable measure of good will there. Failure to help in the present situation might be misunderstood.

(e) The Governments of the United Kingdom, United States, France, Italy, the Netherlands, Yugoslavia and Israel are sending, or have offered, aid.

Against these factors is the consideration that our resources are not unlimited, and that it would be undesirable to get into the position where a disaster anywhere in the world is automatically regarded as a Canadian responsibility.

I understand that funds for Greek relief are being opened in Montreal and Toronto, at least, by private persons and agencies, and that an arrangement may eventually be worked out whereby funds collected would be turned over to the Red Cross for expenditure in accordance with their regulations and procedures. The position in this regard is not yet clear. Premier Frost yesterday telephoned your office to enquire what, if anything, was being done by the Government, and whether, as in the case of the European flood disaster, a national committee was to be established. It would be useful to have your views on the reply to be given to Premier Frost.

In the absence from Ottawa of Mr. Pearson and other Ministers, I would very much appreciate your guidance on the course of action which should be followed. On balance, I am inclined to recommend that the Ambassador in Greece be authorized at once to make an offer of Canadian assistance in general terms for rehabilitation and reconstruction. At the same time, the Greek authorities might be asked to inform us as the situation clarifies of the reconstruction needs which might most appropriately be met from Canada. If this procedure were followed, some time would presumably be gained, and a final decision as to the amount and character of Canadian assistance could probably be left until Cabinet meets early in September.

I am sending a copy of this memorandum to Mr. Pearson in New York. I have spoken with him about the situation and he is of the opinion that it would be appropriate to make some offer of assistance.

RELIEF ASSISTANCE TO GREECE

I received a telephone call on Saturday, August 22 from the Prime Minister concerning relief to Greece.

The Prime Minister thought it would be desirable to have an announcement made by Dr. McCann, as Acting Prime Minister, to the effect that the Prime Minister would recommend to his colleagues at the meeting of the Cabinet on September 9 that a contribution be made by the Canadian government for relief of the disaster in Greece. He said that Mr. Pearson and Mr. Abbott should be informed of this plan to see whether either of them had any objection to it. If so, the announcement should not be made and everything held in abeyance until the meeting of the Cabinet. The announcement should contain no suggestion of what the total amount of assistance might be. If it is desired to state anything as to the character of the assistance, the announcement should say that it would probably take the form of food supplies as well as other materials which the Greek government indicated would be most urgently required.

I told the Prime Minister about the suggestion in Mr. Magann's telegram No. 23 of August 19 that Canadian aid should "begin with" $500,000.† He reiterated that nothing could be said as to amount before the Cabinet meeting.

The Prime Minister added that the suggestion had been made to him that a useful form of assistance might be the contribution of wheat. He had been told that if wheat were given the Greek government might be able to sell it or otherwise set aside counterpart funds which could be used for construction materials or other direct forms of assistance. He thought that such a possibility might be mentioned to the Ministers most directly concerned before the Cabinet meeting if it appeared to be a likely arrangement.

The above information was given by telephone to Mr. Ritchie, the Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs this morning. He will have arrangements made to clear the Prime Minister's proposed announcement with Mr. Pearson and, if he can be reached, with Mr. Abbott. If the latter cannot be reached, he will have it taken up with the officials in the Department of Finance.

Following is text of announcement being made today by Acting Prime Minister:

"The Acting Prime Minister, Dr. McCann, announced today that following on consideration of reports received from the Canadian Embassy in Athens on the recent disastrous earthquakes in the Ionian Islands, the Prime Minister has decided to recommend to his colleagues at the first meeting of the Cabinet in September, the provision of appropriate Canadian assistance to help Greece in the work of rehabilitation and reconstruction.

"The Canadian Ambassador to Greece is today informing the Greek Government of the action proposed by the Prime Minister. The amount and character of any Canadian assistance will be considered in the light of the needs of the situation, as indicated by the Greek authorities, and the supply position in Canada.

"In order to help meet the immediate emergency situation in the Islands, it will be recalled that an RCAF plane loaded with supplies provided by the Canadian Red Cross Society flew to Greece on Monday, August 17."

2. Would be grateful if you would advise Greek Government as above. Presumably you will arrange suitable publicity.

3. Please send us as soon as possible an up-to-date list of the high priority needs which the Greek authorities consider might most appropriately be met from Canada. There is some feeling here that Canadian aid, or at least a good part of it, might appropriately be provided in the form of wheat. This possibility might be discussed informally with the Greek authorities in connection with the requested list of requirements. You will appreciate that gift wheat from Canada would relieve the Greek balance of payments and so free the scarce foreign exchange resources for the purchase of reconstruction materials. In addition, the proceeds of the sale of this wheat to the Greek population would provide the Government with local currency to meet internal costs of rehabilitation. Please advise soonest.

EARTHQUAKE RELIEF

7. The Secretary of State for External Affairs, referring to the statement by the Acting Prime Minister on August 28th, concerning relief assistance in respect of the recent earthquakes in the Ionian Islands of Greece, recommended, with the concurrence of the Minister of Finance, that $500,000 be made available for aid to Greece.

(Memorandum, Sept. 8, 1953, Secretary of State for External Affairs to Prime Minister)†

8. The Cabinet agreed,—

(a) that the Greek government be informed that Canada was prepared to provide aid to Greece up to a value of $500,000;

(b) that the assistance take the form of,

(i) construction materials to a value of $250,000 to whatever specifications were required by the Greek authorities;

(ii) salt cod to a value of $200,000; and,

(iii) evaporated or powdered milk to a value of $50,000;

(c) that the Greek government be asked to assume responsibility for transportation of the supplies from the Canadian seaboard, or, alternatively, that freight costs be met from the $500,000 recommended for relief and the amount of supplies be adjusted accordingly; and,

(d) that a statement be issued to the press on the amount and character of Canadian aid being made available to Greece.

ITALY

In a conversation today about other matters with Hayden Raynor at the State Department, we were told that the State Department is already giving thought to the question of how to influence the forthcoming elections in Italy in favour of Premier de Gasperi. They regard the elections, which are due in the latter part of May or early June, as very important, not only for the future of Italy, but also in the context of the cold war. The prospects they fear are that the extremists on the right as well as on the left wing may gain at the expense of the moderates. Thus the State Department are casting about for any gestures, or specific forms of assistance which might strengthen the position of Premier de Gasperi, and they would certainly welcome anything that we can do or suggest.

2. One matter which is regarded as of particular political importance in Italy is the pressure of excess population. The United States officials recognize the legislative handicaps placed upon United States action by the McCarran Act. However, they are exploring the possibilities of doing something that might have a favourable political effect in Italy. In this connection the State Department recognize what an important contribution Canada has made in accepting nearly 25,000 Italian immigrants in 1951 (State Department figure) and in continuing to admit a substantial number of Italians last year also. Since this form of help has a very direct political impact upon Italian public opinion, the State Department wondered, Raynor said, whether it might be possible for the Canadian Government at an appropriate time to issue some statement which would hold out continuing hopes for Italian immigration into Canada in the future.

3. We hope to be able to furnish you shortly with the background of the State Department's appreciation of the political situation and prospects in Italy.

ELECTIONS IN ITALY — IMMIGRATION ASPECT

Reference: Your WA-695 of March 19.

1. The questions raised by Raynor have been under consideration for some time and have been the subject of an exchange of correspondence between Mr. Harris and myself. Our general view is that, having admitted about 24,000 and 21,000 Italians in 1951 and 1952 respectively (latest available United States figure nearly 9,000 for the year ended June 1951), and having relaxed our regulations to process larger groups of Italian close relatives, we are doing our full share in this matter. I feel, however, that more might be done in the way of public relations to make it clear to the Italians that, as an ally and partner we are showing a practical and sympathetic interest in their problems. Public relations work in this field is extremely delicate, however, as it obviously must be conducted in such a way as to avoid raising false hopes or causing an impossible avalanche of applications to our Immigration offices in Italy. A basic working document has been sent to Mr. Harris, and it is hoped that an agreed information programme will be worked out shortly following discussions at the official level.

2. We would see no objection to your telling Raynor that, while we do not see our way clear to make future commitments with respect to Italian immigration, we have been giving careful consideration for some time to the question of undertaking a more active information programme designed to make more widely known the extent of our immigration activities and, more broadly, to attempt to leave the impression that our co-operation under NATO is a real and beneficial partnership.

PRE-ELECTION INFORMATION WORK

1. I have been considering what we might do indirectly to help the moderate parties in the forthcoming Italian elections. While it would not seem desirable to attempt any specific official gesture, I consider that you might give special emphasis to your information activities for the next few weeks. It would be my hope that we might to some extent counter the Communist and Nenni-Socialist propaganda that Italy is the unloved and neglected child of NATO by emphasizing Canadian friendship with Italy and illustrating how NATO is developing into a true partnership involving a community of shared interests.

Substance of Information Programme

2. It is suggested that your information activities should cover the broad field of Italo-Canadian co-operation. Reference might, for instance, be made to the proposed cultural agreement and establishment of an Italian-Canadian foundation; the growing and mutually beneficial trade relations between Italy and Canada; and our co-operation within the framework of NATO, including, perhaps, appropriate allusions to the Italian pilots training in Canada, and Canadian mutual aid to Italy. None of these questions, I think, presents any particular difficulty, and you are no doubt making use of these points in your day-to-day information activities.

3. In the period immediately prior to the election, however, we think it might be desirable as well to broach in a cautious way the delicate question of Italian emigration to Canada, since this is a subject in which many Italians are interested and, in our view, is one of the best ways to give the lie to Communist charges that Italy's allies have no sympathetic interest in her problem of overpopulation. We realize that it will be difficult to speak on this subject without awakening false hope among Italians or causing embarrassment to our Immigration authorities in Italy. Care should therefore be taken to present this question in a realistic way, without painting an overly optimistic picture either of conditions here or of the prospects open to individual Italians to come forward to this country. The following suggestions have been worked out in co-operation with Immigration authorities here:

(a) Of 260,000 persons in Canada of Italian origin 69,000 have come forward since the end of World War II, including some 24,000 in 1951 and 21,000 in 1952. Canada is also continuing to take Italian immigrants steadily.

(b) Nevertheless, there is already a backlog of 19,000 applicants from Italy, so that it is doubtful if an Italian applying today could hope to come forward to Canada for some months in the future. It is the policy of the Canadian Government to give priority to the reunion of families, and most Italians now coming forward to Canada are close relatives of Italians or Italo-Canadians here for whom application has been made.

(c) Italians, on the whole, have fared well in Canada and have contributed to the economic and social enrichment of Canadian life. Nevertheless, the severe climate perhaps makes this country less attractive than other parts of the American continent, especially to Southern Italians. The Italian immigrant coming to Canada faces hard work — Canada is a country of hard work — and also probably has to combat language difficulties and certain feelings of loneliness for Italy. The Canadian Government as well as the Canadian people as a whole are anxious however that the Italian immigrant, like other immigrants to this country, should feel at home here and become happily adjusted to our way of life.

(d) Conclusion. Italians have been the third largest group of immigrants coming to Canada since World War II. As a percentage of the 1945 Italo-Canadian population Italian immigration to Canada has been greater than that of any other country. The movement of Italians to Canada is a good example of the close co-operation of our two countries within the NATO framework. Canada can only absorb a certain number of new people annually, and it is our policy to be fair to all those in need of the opportunities which our country offers, including refugees and those made homeless by storm or flood.

Form of Presentation

4. I leave to your best judgment the approach to be taken in the presentation of the suggested information programme. Because of its delicate nature, you may wish to discuss the matter with de Gasperi or perhaps another Minister. Both Immigration and ourselves consider it important to give a fundamentally honest presentation of the immigration problem according to the above-suggested formula if this subject is tackled at all. Should you think this approach will not in fact help to discredit Communist propaganda, please let us know. Immigration is informing Knowles[51] through its own channels, but you may wish to discuss the question with him. We had thought that a ceremony, with press and radio coverage on the occasion of the sailing of a ship to Canada with Italian immigrants might be a suitable occasion for a speech on the above lines, although Immigration authorities here fear that this might appear promotional. In any case we would be glad if occasions could be found in the next few weeks before the elections for you to speak on Italo-Canadian co-operation. Press and radio coverage would of course be highly desirable. We are making available a copy of this telegram to CBC-IS[52] for their broadcasts from here.

PRE-ELECTION ACTIVITIES

Reference: Your telegram No. 68 of May 6th.

1. Have given careful thought to important suggestions made in your telegram. I think it must have been based primarily on State Department's appreciation of election prospects here. In my report† I have, I trust, shown that I believe centre group of parties has a fair chance of obtaining a majority. Under the electoral system any majority, however small, is sufficient for the Chamber; this is not, repeat not, so for the Senate, where the outlook for the Government is less certain.

2. It has not, repeat not, seemed to me that the left wing has mainly contended that Italy is an "unloved and neglected child of NATO". Rather, it has concentrated on the old Communist charges that NATO is preparing for aggressive war and that Italy is too much wrapped-up in it, which is a different thing.

3. I would hesitate to discuss anything that I might do to help with de Gasperi or other Ministers. I am sure, for one thing, that they would let me know in one way or another that they were quite capable of handling the situation and that even subtle form of Canadian "intervention" would not be desirable and indeed might prove double edged.

4. Because of the enormous flood of political oratory and make-up of Italian daily papers, it would be difficult to secure any significant reporting of speech by me on Italo-Canadian relations unless it contained some real news. A few nice things can always be said about our mutual aid, but this does not assist in dealing with the left wing. The Americans, I observe, do not publicize much their gifts of military equipment but emphasize their off-shore purchases which assist Italian industry and labour. Nothing of substance can be said on a cultural agreement since we have not been ready yet to put forward the proposal. In any event, this is primarily in Canada's interest and being paid for by Italy. The unbalance of trade is such that it is difficult to say anything encouraging on the subject. The most interesting but difficult and delicate topic remains immigration. Any balanced statement on this, such as you suggest, can contain nothing very new or encouraging to the Italians. If at some point I should say something encouraging and worthwhile, this would very likely be torn out of the context and be source of embarrassment to our Immigration Office here and possibly even to the Italian authorities, particularly after the elections. Immigration, as such, has not, repeat not, so far been an issue in the elections. Unemployment is, of course, a major issue and thus the possible means of solving it. In dealing with the left wing on this the government must concentrate on domestic economic policy as its main measure to reduce unemployment.

5. Before receiving your telegram we had in fact been discussing the immigration aspect of it with United States Embassy and an officer of the United States Delegation to NATO who is concerned with labour and manpower questions. They told us they were giving much thought to the possibility of their new Ambassador or Italian authorities saying something further, prior to the elections, on Eisenhower's message to Congress, released April 22, for an emergency immigration programme. They have not, repeat not, yet reached any decision on this. They admitted the Eisenhower message had not, repeat not, been taken up by the Italian authorities. We have noted that it was covered fairly well in overseas despatches but has not been the subject of editorials or any campaign speeches. Indirectly we learn that Parliamentary Under-Secretary for Emigration explained they would not, repeat not, use the Eisenhower proposal because of the great uncertainty of Congressional action and because government here is confident of election outcome.

6. In preparing this reply I have consulted my Commercial, Military and Immigration Officers, who are generally agreed.

PAYS-BAS : PRÊT À L'INDONÉSIE
THE NETHERLANDS: LOAN TO INDONESIA

971. DEA/8638-40

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au ministre des Finances

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Minister of Finance

Ottawa, February 18, 1953

My dear Colleague,

You will recall that consideration was given at the meeting of Cabinet on January 22nd to a Review of Canadian Government External Loans, Credits, Claims and Guarantees; and that with respect to the loan to Indonesia, it was decided that the Netherlands should be informed that a request for release from their guarantee would not be granted.[53]

Since then I have examined the circumstances in which we originally obtained this commitment from the Netherlands. After receiving their assurance that they were prepared to assume this obligation, a formal request was made for the guarantee. Throughout the preliminary discussions, and also in the formal request, we did not avoid the implication that if we got a guarantee that was legally sound from a successor government which was constitutionally established and reasonably settled, we should find it acceptable. We did have in mind political and economic considerations about the situation in Indonesia, but it would be difficult, of course, to raise such considerations in replying to the Dutch. Moreover, in view of our recent proposal to Indonesia for the exchange of diplomatic missions, to question the good faith and capacity of the Indonesian Government to repay a small short-term loan would, I feel, be most unfortunate.

We should also consider how a refusal on our part to release the Netherlands from the guarantee would react on the Dutch Government. In the face of the current crisis in the Netherlands occasioned by the disastrous floods, such Canadian assistance as seemed appropriate was offered by the Prime Minister in a statement in the House of Commons the other day. To now inform the Netherlands Government that we are obliged to hold them to this guarantee, for which there is no longer a constitutional justification, might seem somewhat inconsistent with this policy of aid to one of our NATO allies. I feel that the Dutch Government, though they might well accept without comment our refusal to release them from the guarantee, might read into this action an unwarranted indication of a lack of understanding on our part. Considering the apparent willingness of the United States to meet a Dutch request which is rather similar in certain respects although it may differ in others, our action would tend to be put further in an unfavourable light.

I am writing this letter to suggest that it would be advisable to bring these considerations to the attention of Cabinet before a final decision is made whether to release the Netherlands from their guarantee. I should be very pleased, therefore, if you would consider the possibility of re-opening this question in Cabinet.

Yours sincerely,

L.B. PEARSON

Le ministre des Finances au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Minister of Finance to Secretary of State for External Affairs

Ottawa, February 24, 1953

My dear Colleague,

I have your letter of February 18th in which you suggest that the possibility be considered of reopening in Cabinet the question of the release of the Netherlands from its guarantee of the loan to the Bank for the Netherlands Indies.

The joint request of the Governments of the Netherlands and Indonesia that the Netherlands be released from its guarantee has been made on the grounds that the guarantee no longer fits in with the present relationship between these two countries. I have to point out that the guarantee was in fact requested by us in anticipation of the changed relationship between the two countries. This was, I feel, fully understood at the time by all concerned. While we on our part did not entirely avoid the implication that if we got a satisfactory guarantee from a new government we should accept it in lieu of the Netherlands' guarantee, it was made clear to Netherlands representatives that acceptability did not refer to mere technical legal acceptability, but was intended to have regard to political and economic considerations as well.

I do not feel that an undertaking by the Government of Indonesia alone could at present be considered wholly satisfactory from the financial point of view, and one which would be consistent with the circumstances and terms under which continuation of the loan was authorized. Furthermore, the guarantee given by the Netherlands Government was subsequently taken into account in certain intergovernmental settlements with that government and in the final determination of the terms of the loan to Indonesia.

It was with these important circumstances in mind that the request for release of the guarantee has been carefully reviewed by this Department. In taking into consideration those factors bearing directly on the nature and security of the loan, I can only come to the conclusion indicated in the recent memorandum to Cabinet that it would not be prudent from a financial point of view to relieve the Netherlands of its guarantee.

It may be, however, that there are in our general relations with the Netherlands and Indonesia some broader and overriding considerations, or that the relationship between the Netherlands and Indonesia is in some important respects substantially different from what could have been anticipated at the time the guarantee was given. If you feel that there are important considerations of this nature, I agree that they should be brought to the attention of Cabinet and would, of course, have no objections to your doing so before you reply to the request of the Governments of the Netherlands and Indonesia.

Yours very truly,

Note du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures pour le Cabinet

Memorandum from Secretary of State for External Affairs to Cabinet

SECRET Ottawa, April 11, 1953

NETHERLANDS GUARANTEE OF INDONESIAN LOAN

At the meeting of Cabinet on January 22 the position with respect to outstanding external loans, credits, claims and guarantees was reviewed and, in the case of the Indonesian loan, the conclusion was reached that the Netherlands Government should not be released from the guarantee obligation assumed in 1945. Particularly in view of the situation created by the floods in the Netherlands, a reply to the Netherlands on these lines was deferred. It is the purpose of this memorandum to suggest that, before the Netherlands authorities are informed of the Canadian Government's attitude, Cabinet might wish to reconsider the question in the light of certain important political considerations.

2. It will be recalled that, according to the information received from the Netherlands Embassy, any formal request for a release would be made jointly by the Netherlands and Indonesia and that such a request would be based on the fact that Indonesia had become a sovereign state. In this connection it will be appreciated that, whatever the history of this particular loan, the guaranteeing by one independent country of the financial obligations of another independent state creates an unusual, if not unique, situation. It is this situation, with its serious political implications, which presumably accounts for the proposed joint request and which gives rise to the considerations set forth in this memorandum.

3. If the Netherlands guarantee were to be retained and if difficulties were to arise over payment by Indonesia, consideration would have to be given by the Canadian Government to invoking the guarantee. Should the guarantee be enforced, the Netherlands would be faced with the alternative of either endeavouring to bring pressure to bear on Indonesia to make the payment or of itself meeting the financial obligation.

4. It is doubtful whether the first alternative would in fact be politically practicable. Indonesia, possessing the normal sensitivities of a new nation-state, would clearly resent the Dutch being used as our bailiff. Our new diplomatic mission in Djakarta would be off on the wrong foot, and the diplomatic opportunities open to us as a "non-colonial" Western power might thereby be prejudiced. On the other hand, tangible evidence of Canada's faith in the integrity of the Indonesian Government might greatly strengthen Canada's prestige in Indonesia and put our new Ambassador in a favourable position to carry out his duties on both the trade and political side. In any event, the mere application of such pressure by the Dutch would exacerbate the already uncertain relations between Holland and Indonesia, to the detriment of the broader political interests of Canada and of the West in the Southeast Asian theatre.

5. The second alternative would likewise appear unsatisfactory to all concerned. The exaction of payment from the Netherlands in its present financial condition would be inconsistent with our emphasis on economic co-operation in NATO, our generosity in connection with the recent floods, our continuing contributions of mutual aid and our financial assistance to Holland immediately following the war. Such a policy would be embarrassing to the Netherlands authorities, who doubtless would be hard put to explain why they were making payment for a country that had secured its independence some time before. Finally, even the Indonesians would probably not wish to see their debt taken over, as this would appear to cast doubt on their sovereign status.

6. If neither of these alternative courses is envisaged, and if in fact it is not intended that the Netherlands Government be required to implement the guarantee, it would seem desirable to release that Government from its obligation. Such a release would be a gesture of goodwill consistent with our present policy towards Holland and unlikely to increase the risks to the Canadian Government beyond those already existing in any event. On the other hand, a refusal to grant such a release would be embarrassing to the Dutch, and would unnecessarily offend the Indonesian Government in as much as it would doubtless be interpreted as reflecting on their capacity and even on their good faith. Such an attitude on our part might appear particularly unwarranted to the Indonesians in view of their satisfactory record to date in the payment of instalments on the loan. Finally, in view of the peculiar aspects of this case, it would not appear that a release of the Netherlands Government from its obligation would create a precedent which could have implications for any other outstanding loans, credits, claims or guarantees.

Recommendation

The Secretary of State for External Affairs recommends that, in the light of the additional considerations outlined above, the Cabinet reconsider its earlier conclusion and approve the granting to the Netherlands Government of a release from its guarantee obligation in the event that a joint request is received from it and the Indonesian Government the terms of which would specify that the Government of Indonesia assumed full responsibility for the loan and for the schedule of payments on interest and capital as outlined in the agreement of October 9, 1945.

CANADIAN LOAN TO INDONESIA; RELEASE OF NETHERLANDS GUARANTEE

17. The Secretary of State for External Affairs, referring to discussion at the meeting of January 22nd, 1953, submitted a recommendation that, in view of recent developments, the Cabinet reconsider its earlier decision and approve the granting to the Netherlands government of a release of the guarantee it assumed in 1945 on a Canadian loan to Indonesia in the event that a joint request was received from the Netherlands and Indonesian governments, the terms of which would specify that the government of Indonesia assumed full responsibility for the loan and for the schedule of payments on interest and capital as outlined in the agreement of October 9th, 1945.

An explanatory memorandum had been circulated.

(Minister's memorandum, April 11, 1953 — Cab. Doc. 110-53)

18. In the course of discussion it was argued, on the one hand,—

(a) that, since its establishment as an independent state, Indonesia had given encouraging signs of continuing stability and had, in any event, paid all the installments on the loan, both on capital and on interest;

(b) that, in view of the independent status now enjoyed by Indonesia, it would be politically difficult for the Netherlands government to exert any pressure on Indonesia if the latter should, at any time, default on its payments; and,

(c) that, if the Netherlands government were now to be released from its guarantee, this would be evidence of Canada's faith in the integrity of the Indonesian government and would greatly strengthen Canada's prestige in Indonesia and place our recently appointed Ambassador in a better position to carry out his duties on both the trade and political side.

On the other hand it was argued,—

(a) that the fact that Indonesia would not wish to be placed in the humiliating position of having the Netherlands make good any Indonesian default was perhaps the best guarantee Canada had that all the installments would in fact continue to be met on time by the Indonesian government; and,

(b) that, if the Netherlands government were now to be released from its guarantee, the Canadian public would presumably react unfavourably if at some future date there was in fact default on any installment due.

19. The Cabinet agreed that no steps be taken at this time to release the Netherlands government from its October, 1945, guarantee of the Canadian loan to Indonesia, on the understanding that if the Canadian Ambassador to Indonesia found, after experience, that such a release would be beneficial to Canadian interests, the matter would be reconsidered by Cabinet.

NETHERLANDS GUARANTEE ON INDONESIAN LOAN

On May 13, I asked Mr. van Schreven[54] to call and told him that the Cabinet had reviewed this question and felt unable to release the Netherlands Government from its guarantee.

He asked at once whether the Government, in reaching this decision, had been aware that the United States Government had adopted a different policy. I told him that the Government had been aware of the United States decision but felt that, as [54] M.J. van Schreven, conseiller, ambassade des Pays-Bas.

M.J. van Schreven, Counsellor, Embassy of the Netherlands.

the United States Surplus Property Agreement was made some time before the Canadian Loan Agreement, the two situations were not entirely parallel.

I said that I assumed that since the approach of the Netherlands Embassy had been informal they would not wish to have a formal reply. Mr. van Schreven said that this raised the question of what they should do about the letter signed by Netherlands and Indonesian Ministers, copies of which had been given to us informally; his Government might wish to present this formally. I said that while of course it was for the Netherlands Government to decide what action it should take, it was my own view that a formal request and a formal refusal now might make it more difficult to have the question reconsidered at a later date. While I was not in a position to hold out any hope of later reconsideration, the possibility ought not to be ruled out entirely. Speaking purely personally I said that if the Indonesians felt strongly on the question, the presence of a Canadian Embassy in Djakarta might lead them to make representations at some stage.

Mr. van Schreven did not indicate what action he would recommend but I had the impression that he accepted the view that an exchange of documents at this stage would not be in the interests of his Government.

INDONESIAN LOAN

A few days after my talk with Mr. van Schreven, I think on May 20, the Netherlands Ambassador called on the Acting Under-Secretary and I took part in the discussion. The Ambassador was at pains to point out that he was in a very difficult position. His Government attached considerable importance to the matter and he was under firm instructions to present the letter signed by Netherlands and Indonesian Ministers. He was not at all sure that he could get these instructions changed.

2. Mr. Ritchie and I repeated that while this was a matter on which the Netherlands Government would have to make its own decision, we felt that a formal presentation of the letter and a formal rejection might make it more difficult to have the question reconsidered at a later date. I think Mr. Lovink was a trifle reluctant to let us off this hook since he imagined (without realizing the drafting capabilities of this Department) that in a written reply we would have to spell out the reasons for rejection.

3. It was intimated to the Ambassador as it had been to Mr. van Schreven that while officials had no authority to hold out hope of reconsideration, it nevertheless seemed possible that this might occur if the Indonesians felt sufficiently strongly. Mr. Lovink reacted unfavourably to this idea at first. He seemed to feel that this was a reflection on him and his Government since we might be prepared to do something for the Indonesians which we were not prepared to do for the Netherlands. In fact, it took some time to calm him down. Mr. Ritchie pacified him by saying that while this approach might not be altogether logical we were faced with a practical situation and had to think in terms of practical solutions. After a rather tedious series of circular explorations we attempted to sum up the position by pointing out to the Ambassador that:

(a) no reconsideration seemed at all likely for some months at least;

(b) the only new factor which might cause favourable reconsideration would be an indication of strong feeling on the part of the Indonesians.

4. We politely declined a suggestion of the Ambassador's that we might like to help him draft a report of this interview to his Government. I think he was in the end convinced that it would do no good to present the letter and that his Government should consider favourably the possibility of the Indonesians making representations to the Canadian Ambassador. What the Netherlands Government will think is another matter.

TURKISH COMMERCIAL REPRESENTATION IN CANADA

We learned informally during a conversation with Munis Ozansöy, Deputy Minister of Economy and Commerce and former Director of Foreign Trade, that it is the Turkish Government's intention to reopen its Commercial Attaché's office in Canada in the spring of 1954. Mr. Ozansöy added that he hoped that Canada would find it possible to reopen its trade office in Turkey simultaneously.

2. You will recall that the Commercial representatives on the staff of the Turkish Embassy in Ottawa were withdrawn in the spring of 1952 and not replaced. Although the closing of our Commercial Secretary's office in Istanbul was not related to the Turkish action in Ottawa, I believe the Turkish Government have always regarded our action as partly retaliatory.

3. Actually, stories have reached me to the effect that the reappointment of a Canadian Commercial Secretary to Turkey is already being considered in Ottawa, but I am treating these stories as rumours only, as I am sure I would have been informed if the question was under discussion.

CANADA-TURKEY TRADE RELATIONS

Reference: Your letter No. 433 of August 12† and your letter No. 505 of October 5.

The Department of Trade and Commerce have re-examined the situation with respect to the possibility of an increase in Turkish imports into Canada. In doing so, they have commented that, although previous studies on the promotion of Turkish imports have not produced important results, they will be glad to lend any possible departmental support to new Turkish trade promotional efforts. As you are aware, the limited range of Turkish products available and their inability to compete in the Canadian market have prevented any substantial increase in Turkish exports to Canada. You will appreciate that the Department of Trade and Commerce have been in touch with the trade here on previous occasions and that they must avoid exhorting the trade to embark on ventures of doubtful utility.

2. I attach a commentary prepared by the Department of Trade and Commerce on several of the principal Turkish exports of interest to Canadian importers which may be of some assistance to you in your conversations with Turkish officials and businessmen.†

3. The Department of Trade and Commerce have also reviewed the circumstances leading up to the withdrawal of our Trade Commissioner from Istanbul, and I am quoting below from their letter. You will note their observations about re-opening a trade office in Turkey:

"It may be useful also to review the reason leading up to the withdrawal of our Trade Commissioner from Istanbul.[55] At the time of the opening of our office in Turkey, it was felt that Turkey would, in the post-war years, prove a good market for industrial, mining and transportation equipment, agricultural implements, chemical and pharmaceutical products, which formerly came from Europe but which during 1946-47 were being ordered from the United Kingdom and the North American Continent. Our own exports in 1947 had not only shown a substantial increase over pre-war years but also showed a great variety, covering a large range of items which had not previously been exported to Turkey. All these factors seemed to indicate that the time was ripe to open an office in Istanbul, where it appeared that there would be a potential market for many lines of Canadian manufactured goods. Furthermore, there had been a substantial increase in enquiries from Turkish importers, both through our Athens office and through the Canadian Embassy which had been established recently in Ankara. Finally, we had just signed a most-favoured-nation trade agreement. On the basis of this hopeful situation, an office was opened in January 1949. Unfortunately, our hopes have not been borne out.

"True enough in 1951 our exports reached $2,900,000. and rose to $4,800,000 in 1952 based to quite a substantial extent on Mutual Security funds diverted to Canada. It seemed evident, however, that commencing in 1952 and for succeeding years there would be a substantial decline in US economic aid to Turkey. This indeed has proved to be correct. Whereas in 1947 there was a wide range of Canadian goods for which Turkey appeared to be a promising potential market as for example, newsprint, motor cars, livestock, packinghouse products, construction materials, woodpulp, chemicals, railway equipment, mining machinery, etc. this trade, because of lack of funds and Turkey's lack of dollar earning ability never materialized to any important extent. We, therefore, reluctantly came to the conclusion that the outlook for any substantial development of Canadian exports to Turkey held out little promise and that as a result the personnel we had in Turkey could be put to much more effective use in another area. The continued shortage of dollars in Turkey as well as the effective work which our Trade Commissioner has been able to do in Beirut has confirmed our views. It may be, of course, that the situation will again change in Turkey and warrant our re-opening our office there. As you have already been informed, when that time arrives, we will always be prepared to re-examine the situation and if we can be convinced of the importance and usefulness of having once again an office in Turkey we will not hesitate to take that step."

CANADA-TURKEY TRADE RELATIONS

Reference: Your letter No. E-398 dated November 19, 1953.

I was pleased to receive your letter No. E-398 dated November 19 containing information relating to some of the questions which I raised in my despatch No. 233 of April 11, 1953.† While its enclosure, a memorandum prepared by the Department of Trade and Commerce, provides little information on which any positive advance in Canadian-Turkish trade relations could be based, it does make available to us background material which may enable us in our discussions with the Turkish authorities to create the impression that some thought is being given to the Turkish position and that the prospects for revival of trade between our two countries at some future date has not been completely abandoned on our side. I gather from the memorandum on most of the items which represent principal Turkish exports no market soundings or general surveys have been carried out by the Department of Trade and Commerce in recent years. For example, under the heading "Turkish Tobacco," the memorandum states: "Several years ago, the Department of Trade and Commerce wrote to all the cigarette manufacturers" and it then summarizes the answers which were received to that enquiry. I know that in October 1952 Rudolf Van der Walde of Montreal was in Ottawa for a two-day visit and raised with the Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce the question of the importation of Turkish tobacco. As I was about to leave for Turkey, Mr. Bull tried to arrange a meeting between Van der Walde and me, but our respective schedules did not make it possible for us to get together at that time. Whether Van der Walde made any examination of the Canadian market in respect of Turkish tobacco following his Ottawa visit I do not know.

2. Perhaps it would be appropriate if I said another word concerning commercial representation in Turkey. The excerpt which you have passed to me on this subject from the letter directed to you by the Department of Trade and Commerce explains in some detail the reasons why the Istanbul office was closed and ends with the statement that the Department of Trade and Commerce will be prepared to re-examine the situation when they are convinced of the importance and usefulness of having once again an office in this country. This indicates that the impression persists that I have been proposing a trade representative be permanently stationed in this country. In this connection I will quote the following passage from my letter No. 38 of January 15, 1953:

"I had suggested to the Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce that there would be advantages in continuing the accreditation of G.F.G. Hughes, who was recently moved from Istanbul to Beirut. He has had four years' experience of Turkey, has the necessary contacts in both Ankara and Istanbul, is well-known and respected by those businessmen and officials here who are of importance to Canada, and he is not substantially farther away from this country than are the two officials in Athens. Certainly, the accreditation of an official stationed in Beirut would be less offensive to the Turks than one resident in Athens."

Thus you will see that I accept fully the practice of double accreditation in the case of a trade representative for Turkey, and I am only suggesting that, in order to avoid injuring Turkish susceptibilities, the base of operations for the individual who is to be accredited to this country should not be in Greece. I suggested that the Trade and Commerce man resident in Beirut be their representative in Turkey partly because he possesses a background knowledge of the trading principles and personalities of Turkey and partly because he is conveniently located — Beirut being less than three hours by air from Ankara.

3. In my opinion, it would not be easy to defend the appointment of a Commercial Secretary whose responsibility was exclusively Turkey. In a personal letter to Mr. Hughes dated December 1, I said:

"As long as the present dollar deficiency continues, I do not think that the potential volume of trade between our two countries would justify the expense of a commercial representative stationed in this country."

It seems evident from your letter under reply that I have not made my attitude clear on this subject, and I would be grateful if, on some opportunity, you could explain to Mr. English in the Department of Trade and Commerce that I am not advocating the appointment of a Trade and Commerce man solely for Turkey — in fact, in present circumstances I would oppose such a proposal — but I do think that for political reasons, which are well-known to you, we have not adopted the wisest course in selecting for accreditation to the Turkish Government a commercial representative who is resident in Athens, Greece. That represented my view before I came here, and my 12 months in Turkey have served only to reinforce it.

4. A further conclusion which I have reached during this past year is that, if we hope to keep fully abreast of commercial events or to participate even in a small way in the economic development of this country, there must be more frequent visits to Ankara by our commercial representative and closer contacts must be developed between him and Turkish businessmen and trade authorities. I have now been in Turkey for 12 months and during that time our accredited commercial representative has spent five working days in Ankara and two at the Izmir Trade Fair. This situation is due entirely to the heavy burden of work which he is attempting to carry at the present time, and perhaps if our commercial representative in Beirut was accredited to Ankara, there might be a more equitable distribution of the workload. In any event, we will continue to do our best here in the economic and commercial field and, while we fall far short of being experts, we have devoted a considerable amount of time to these problems in past months, and I think I can assert with appropriate modesty that there have been some useful results to show for it.

EXPORT OF ARMS TO THE MIDDLE EAST

In discussing with you today the export of arms to the Middle East the deputation from the United Zionist Council of Canada is likely to follow the general line taken by Mr. Sharett on December 28 in a statement to press representatives in Israel and by the American Zionist Council on December 31 in a letter to Mr. Acheson. We have not seen the text of the Israeli note delivered to the United Kingdom Government on January 7 or the text of remarks to newspaper men in Washington said to have been made by Ambassador Eban on January 14, but we understand the arguments put forward have been as follows:

(a) Although equal numbers of jet aircraft have been offered by the United Kingdom Government to Israel and the Arab states, Israel will have to plan to build up its air strength to meet the combined strength of the Arab states.

(b) An arms race provoked in this way would defeat one of the purposes of the three-power declaration of May 25, 1950 (see para. 3 below) and would play directly into the hands of the Soviet Union by delaying economic and social development of the Middle East.

(c) If Arab armaments are unduly increased before the Arab states make peace with Israel, open warfare may be substituted for the present economic boycott, which already involves interference with the delivery of oil to Israel by pipeline or tanker and underlies the efforts of the Arab states to prevent the Bonn government from making material reparation to Israel.

(d) Arms should be denied to the Arab states until they undertake to cooperate in the defence of the Middle East as a whole and show a greater disposition to make peace with Israel, as suggested in the eight-power draft resolution approved by the Ad Hoc Political Committee of the General Assembly on December 11, 1952.

Attitudes of the United States and United Kingdom

2. After the Security Council lifted its ban on arms shipments to the Middle East in August 1949, the United Kingdom, United States and France discussed their responsibilities in this connection and on May 25, 1950 issued a joint declaration that they opposed the development of an arms race, that export of arms to the area would nevertheless be permitted where it was designed to assure the internal security and legitimate self-defence of the importing state or to enable it to play its part in the defence of the Middle East as a whole. The three governments would take immediate action if they found any state preparing to violate frontiers or armistice lines. Subsequently they secured guarantees from Israel and all the Arab states that imported arms would not be used for aggressive purposes.

3. Public opinion at home forced the United Kingdom to discontinue in November 1950 the supply of tanks and other heavy armour to Egypt, which was making difficulties about extending or revising the 1936 treaty. The ban on arms shipments to Egypt became complete in October 1951, when Egypt unilaterally abrogated the treaty. Shortly afterward the United Kingdom asked its NATO partners also to refrain from exporting arms to Egypt.

4. Relaxation of the ban was permitted on a moderate scale shortly after General Naguib came to power in July 1952. In September General Naguib asked for the release of 65 jet fighters ordered and partly paid for before the embargo began. Of these the United Kingdom decided to release 15 in order to build up the prestige of the new Egyptian government by enabling it to announce a tangible success in its negotiations with the United Kingdom Ambassador. Since the Egyptian air force is ineffective in equipment and training the decision was considered to involve little risk. The United Kingdom Government has asked its Western partners, however, not to regard this decision as a signal for general release of weapons to Egypt, since the latter has not yet promised to associate itself with the Middle East Defence Organization. Meanwhile Israel, Syria, Lebanon and Iraq were informed in October that they might purchase up to 14 jet aircraft each from the United Kingdom. This offer was designed to create an atmosphere favourable to cooperation in regional defence planning.

5. When Israel's formal protest was delivered to the United Kingdom Government the latter reminded the Israeli Chargé on January 7 that no objection had been raised when the matter was first broached three months ago. Strang[56] expressed surprise, moreover, that Israeli officials had complained to the press before taking the matter up through diplomatic channels, the original offers to export jet aircraft having been given no publicity.

6. It so happens that the issue began to be publicly discussed in Israel at the time when secret discussions were about to begin between United Kingdom and United States officials on possible arms shipments to Egypt from the United States. Both The Times of London and the New York Herald Tribune intimated that the purpose of the protests was to dissuade the incoming administration in Washington from giving Egypt military aid. The Herald Tribune thought the protests had had no effect.

7. The United States has concluded agreements with Egypt, Saudi Arabia, Syria and Israel permitting the purchase of arms under the reimbursable aid clause of the Mutual Security Act. Mr. Sharett takes the view that Israel will have to be given the arms it cannot afford to buy if the Arab states continue to arm, and last August the American Zionist Council urged Mr. Acheson to give Israel a direct grant of $49,900,000 in military assistance, to be diverted from funds for aid to Greece and Turkey. The State Department and the Pentagon are giving priority, however, to planning a modest programme of arms export and economic aid to Egypt for the approval of the incoming administration. The State Department apparently feels even more strongly than the Foreign Office that Western support for General Naguib at this critical juncture may be the means of winning Arab cooperation and increasing the stability of the area.

Canadian policy

8. Canada has not been under much pressure to export arms or military equipment to the Middle East, and it receives fewer applications for arms from all the Arab states combined than from Israel. In 1951 and the first nine months of 1952 applications on Israel's behalf had a total value of $986,830, while applications on behalf of all Arab states reached a total of only $349,267. This is explained by the fact that Lebanon and Syria are supplied chiefly by France, and Jordan, Iraq and Egypt by the United Kingdom, while Israel and Saudi Arabia purchase from the United States and occasionally from the United Kingdom. Sweden, Italy, Belgium and Switzerland are also selling to the area.

9. After the publication of the tripartite declaration of May 25, 1950, Canada arranged to exchange information with the United States and United Kingdom on arms sales to the Middle East and to consult both governments whenever requests might be received for heavy armour or unusually large supplies of "routine" equipment. This policy was adopted because the Canadian Government wished to avoid any action which might adversely affect the efforts of the three responsible powers to maintain stability in the area. A number of applications for export of arms have had to be refused on grounds of non-availability, but few cases have occurred where Canada has refused an application because of its informal understanding with the United Kingdom and United States.

[56] Sir William Strang, sous-secrétaire d'État permanent, Foreign Office du Royaume-Uni, (à partir de novembre).
Sir William Strang, Permanent Under-Secretary of State, Foreign Office of United Kingdom, (-November).

10. Meanwhile at the United Nations Canada has cooperated with the United States and United Kingdom in trying to encourage Israel and the Arab states to compose their differences. At the recent session of the General Assembly efforts to secure direct negotiations between the parties broke down over the unwillingness of Israel to consider boundary adjustments which would enable a certain proportion of the refugees to return to their homes and the unwillingness of the Arabs to negotiate on any other basis. In the circumstances the United States and United Kingdom are now concentrating their efforts on securing Arab participation in the Middle East Defence Organization, assuming that an easing of their relations with Israel is more likely within that framework than outside it. They see no likelihood either of an early peace settlement or of a resumption of military attacks by the Arabs against Israel. For the moment both powers would probably appreciate the use of Canadian influence to discourage the psychological warfare in which both Arabs and Israelis are engaged.

EXPORT OF ARMS TO ISRAEL

Reference: Teletype WA-1171 of May 12 (attached).†

You asked me to let you have a memorandum after looking into the question of whether the United States authorities may have been misleading us in what they have told us about their policy on this subject. In particular, you drew attention to Mr. Elliott's[57] comments that the State Department would not object to the export to Israel of:

(a) 12 90-mm. anti-aircraft guns;

(b) M-4 tank and M-10 gun carrier spare parts;

(c) .50 calibre ammunition in an unspecified quantity.

[57] Il s'agit probablement du maréchal en chef de l'air sir William Elliot, chef de la Mission interarmes du Royaume-Uni aux États-Unis; représentant du Royaume-Uni au Groupe permanent du Comité militaire de l'OTAN.
Possibly Air Chief Marshal Sir William Elliot, Chairman, Joint Services Mission of United Kingdom in United States; Representative of United Kingdom on Standing Group of Military Committee of NATO.

2. I appreciate that, on the surface, there is an appearance that the quantities involved, especially of the machine gun ammunition, are excessive, and that the United States Government has abandoned its policy as spelled out in the Tripartite Declaration of May 25, 1950, of limiting shipments to those required to maintain Israel's armaments at levels adequate for internal security and self-defence needs. However, after reviewing the file I have concluded that shipments of the armaments listed above would not constitute sufficient evidence to warrant an assumption that the United States authorities have modified their policy without warning us, or that they have misled us.

3. It might be helpful if I were to set out below the relevant developments of the past few months which, I think, will be found to support my foregoing conclusion.

4. No applications to export arms to Israel were refused by this Department for political reasons during 1952. However, in January 1953 the situation on the Jordan-Israel border deteriorated to such an extent that the United Kingdom Government intervened in an attempt to reduce the mounting tension in the area. About that time we were asked by the Canadian Commercial Corporation to approve a shipment of 500 tons of RDX/TNT to Israel, and, later, another order of $110,160 worth of anti-tank ammunition. You approved the second order on February 19. Shortly afterwards, Mr. Eban of the Israeli Embassy in Washington wrote to you and called on our Delegation to the United Nations in New York, seeking support for an order for 12 jet aircraft, 40 anti-aircraft guns, and 40 25-pounder guns (they now have only 100), complete with ammunition for two years. Mr. Eban argued that the recent acquisition of a large number of jet aircraft (120 either purchased or on order) by the Arab States had upset the balance of armaments in the Near East and had made it necessary for Israel to increase its level of "defensive" armaments.

5. We had in the meantime consulted the State Department and the Commonwealth Relations Office about the shipment of 500 tons of RDX/TNT. By teletype WA-465 of February 20† we were told that the State and Defense Departments both disapproved of any shipments to Israel of RDX/TNT over 50 to 100 tons. We were also told that the Defense Department, which generally seems to hold less liberal views than the State Department on these matters, considered that Israel's armed forces were the best equipped and the most effective fighting units in the Middle East. They had, therefore, steadfastly refused to agree to the export of significant amounts of military equipment to Israel. Nevertheless, it was revealed, a review of the United States policy was in progress (this has not yet been concluded) and a possible relaxation was foreshadowed which might result in increased military and technical assistance to Israel.

6. The views of the Commonwealth Relations Office on the proposed shipment of RDX/TNT were similar to those of the United States authorities. From telegram No. 372 of February 25† we learned that, in their opinion, the Arab States would look upon a shipment of 500 tons as being a threat to their security. As it happened, the order was reduced to 200 tons, but even so the United States and United Kingdom authorities objected to it.

7. In a memorandum dated March 10† the Acting Minister was asked to consider that order, as well as one for $950,000 worth of 25-pounder ammunition. On my recommendation he agreed to the export of the RDX/TNT, partly in order to avoid cancellation charges totalling $50,000 having to be absorbed by the CIL. A decision on the 25-pounder ammunition was deferred pending clarification of the United States Government's policy.

8. Upon your return from New York you were informed of what had happened by a memorandum dated March 21.† You also agreed to defer a decision on about $36,000 worth of propellant powder, but you indicated that the matter should be reviewed when the United States had clarified its policy.

9. We asked the State Department, accordingly, what their views were concerning the two orders on which decisions had been deferred. In their interim reply (reported in WA-719 of March 21†) they emphasized what they had already told our Embassy previously, namely, that the State and Defense Departments were only approving shipments of arms necessary to maintain the existing level of Israel's defensive armament. Earlier in March, however, Israel had approached the United States Government formally with a view to purchasing, on a reimburseable basis, a long list of armaments and ammunition. Of all those, the only ones considered by the State Department were maintenance parts for military vehicles (M-4 tanks and M-10 gun carriers already owned by the Israeli Government) and a number of 90 mm. anti-aircraft guns of limited trajectory, all under the so-called "existing levels" principle.

10. In our reply, EX-517 of March 25, † we said we were somewhat concerned at the apparent fluidity of United States policy, and pointed out that if it were unpredictable or indefinite, our difficulties would be increased. We asked for an assurance that, if the United States policy were to be changed, we would be advised promptly.

11. On March 27 our Embassy again raised these matters with the State Department, where the term "apparent fluidity" was contested. It was felt by the State Department officials that their Government's policy had been firm and consistent for the past 2 years and, moreover, that they had applied a much more restrictive interpretation to the term "defensive levels" than had the United Kingdom. We were given the assurance we sought, that we would receive early warning of any change in United States policy that might be contemplated.

12. On that basis matters have since rested. On May 4 we wrote to the Canadian Commercial Corporation saying we were unable to estimate when this Department would be in a position to agree to the submission of quotations on 25-pounder ammunition (the $950,000 order).

13. While my review led me to conclude that we have not been misled by the United States authorities, I should mention that Mr. Dulles will undoubtedly wish to re-examine his Department's policy upon returning from his trip to the Middle East. Moreover, it is possible that if conditions on the frontier between Israel and Jordan improve, the United States Government may review its present policy in the light of any progress that may be made towards a solution of the political difficulties in the area and the establishment of a Middle Eastern Defence Organization.

14. There is one further point which I should like to bring out. It is that it would have been difficult for the United States authorities to have misled us about their past policy in any case, because ever since early 1950 we have been freely exchanging with them, on a bi-monthly basis, information on all exports of arms to the Middle East. You may be interested to see the latest American list of arms shipments to that area. It was sent to us from the Embassy in Washington under cover of their letter No. 1003 of May 14.† This information is normally circulated to the Chairman, Chiefs of Staff, the Joint Intelligence Bureau, the Department of Trade and Commerce, the Permanent Delegation in New York, and to Canada House.[58]

Memorandum from European Division to Economic Division

(Attention: Mr. Wilson)[59]

EXPORT OF ARMS TO ISRAEL

The European Division agrees that it would be contrary to established Canadian policy to authorize the export of $950,000 worth of 25-pounder ammunition to Israel at the present time.

2. In preparing a memorandum for the Minister, after making the point that the CIL will suffer no setback if the export of the 25-pounder ammunition is refused, possibly you might find it useful to continue the argument along the following lines:

3. Both the United States and the United Kingdom have been consistent in their attitude toward the export of .50 calibre and 25-pounder ammunition to countries of the Middle East.

(a) They have never made any objection to the export of large quantities of .50 calibre ammunition. It falls within the category of "routine" equipment, may be and often is used for maintaining internal security and is, moreover, rapidly expendable. In August 1950 the United Kingdom told us that the export to Israel of even 2½ million rounds of .50 calibre ammunition would be considered reasonable in relation to the size of Israeli forces, taking into account the vintage of weapons which require this type of ammunition. (See Ex. 1381 of August 22, 1950.) In the same month the United States approved the export of 2 million rounds of .50 calibre

[58] Note marginale:/Marginal note:
I think that in a week or so we should consider again the 25 pounder ammunition order. I am not convinced we should not fill this order — one that CIL [Canadian Industries Limited] are anxious to have — if the USA are sending an "unspecified" quantity of .50 calibre ammunition to Israel. ammunition to Israel, the latter having turned to Washington as a source of supply on being told that the desired quantities of this ammunition were not available in Canada.

(b) The case has been different with 25-pounder ammunition which is used for field artillery having a range of eight to ten miles. Field guns and ammunition have always been excluded from the categories of "routine" material whose export to Israel or the Arab states is considered to be normally compatible with the policy announced in the tripartite declaration of May 25, 1950. That declaration indicated that arms sales would be considered in relation to the needs of Middle Eastern states to "maintain" levels of armed forces to ensure their internal security and legitimate self-defence and to permit them to play their part in the defence of the area as a whole. The export of 25-pounder ammunition would thus be permitted only to replace exhausted supplies with a view to maintaining stores at a steady level. This class of ammunition is not required for the maintenance of internal order and we have been informed that very little of it is ever used in Israel for training purposes.

4. The United Kingdom and United States Governments would not export to Israel at the present time 24,000 rounds of 25-pounder ammunition, a quantity which appears far in excess of the legitimate needs of Israel to maintain existing levels of defensive armament.

5. To disregard the advice of the powers which have guaranteed existing boundaries and armistice demarcation lines in the Middle East might be considered particularly inopportune at the present moment, since the United States and United Kingdom are now trying to reduce the dangerous state of tension which exists on the boundary between Israel and Jordan. Three times this year (in February, April and May) intervention has been considered necessary by one or more of the powers which issued the tripartite declaration of May 25, 1950. In February all three intervened. The United States and United Kingdom Governments told Israel they considered it to be primarily responsible for the tension. The United States is believed to have mentioned particularly the raids into Jordanian territory recently conducted by Israeli armed forces up to battalion strength. In April, after the incidents in Jerusalem which led to General Riley's resignation, Israel was spoken to not only about its failure to restrain its own armed forces but also about its uncooperative attitude in the Mixed Armistice Commission. Representations to Jordan in February and April were much milder in tone, since it was recognized that infiltrators into Israel did not have the support of the Jordanian Government. Jordan was asked, however, to do what it could to curb infiltrators and to avoid action which would increase tension. It was commended in April for expressing a desire for a final settlement with Israel, and was asked to cooperate fully with the Mixed Armistice Commission.

6. On May 27 the Minister of State in London spoke to the Israeli Ambassador about renewed attacks into Jordanian territory by Israeli forces apparently acting under instructions, in reprisal for the infiltration of Arabs. This time the representations had some effect, for on June 8 Israel consented to revive for three months the Local Commanders' Agreement which it had denounced on January 15. This enables Jordanian and Israeli personnel along the frontier to cooperate in detecting and apprehending persons crossing or attempting to cross the line. Incidents continue, however, and a high-level talk is to be held soon between Israeli and Jordanian officials to see what else can be done. With the arrival in Jerusalem of General Bennike on June 17 to assume the post of Chief of the United Nations Truce Supervision Staff, more effective means of preventing boundary incidents may be worked out.

7. In these circumstances it might be difficult for us to justify a decision at the present moment to permit the export to Israel of ammunition for weapons classified as highly offensive.[60]

NOTE ON CONDITIONS IN THE MIDDLE EAST IN RELATION TO ARMS EXPORTS FROM CANADA

In considering arms exports to Israel we have been examining the possibility of meeting as far as possible the requests of a young state in whose welfare Canada takes a continuing interest, against the background of the gentleman's agreement with states which have assumed special responsibility for protecting existing boundaries between Arab states and the armistice lines between Israel and its neighbours. Presumably a final decision should not be reached without considering also the situation which exists at present in the area itself.

2. Unfortunately the present year has been one of increasing tension. Threats to the armistice line between Jordan and Israel have been so serious that the United States and United Kingdom have had to intervene four times since January under the Tripartite Declaration of May 1950 in attempts to restore some degree of security. Both states considered Israel to be principally responsible for the deterioration. They asked Israel (a) to desist from ordering raids by its armed forces into Jordanian territory in reprisal for infiltration by Arabs who succeeded in escaping the vigilance of Jordanian and Israeli guards, and (b) to cooperate with the United Nations Truce Supervision Staff. They advised Jordan, meanwhile, to continue to follow the advice of United Nations Supervision Officers. The Israeli reprisal raids have greatly increased the difficulties experienced by Jordanian officials in controlling their own displaced border populations.

3. The last intervention by the United States and United Kingdom occurred at the end of August. On September 24 new tension developed when Israel refused to comply with a request of General Bennike, the new Chief of the United Nations Truce Supervision Staff, relating to a demilitarized zone on the boundary between Israel and Syria close to the boundary between Syria and Jordan. General Bennike wished Israel to conform with a Security Council resolution of May 18, 1951, the purpose of which was to obtain Israel's co-operation in carrying out the provisions of the armistice agreement in this zone. Israel has disregarded both the terms of the armistice agreement and the directives of the Security Council, has excluded United Nations personnel from the zone where they were to have exercised an exceptional degree of authority and has continued with drainage operations which will affect the supply of water to Syria and Jordan.

4. Intelligence reports from the area indicate (a) that Israel is likely to provoke boundary incidents in a manner designed to reinforce its demands for increased armaments, and (b) that in the present highly charged atmosphere war could break out again as the result of an accident.

5. General Bennike has been trying actively to reorganize the work of the Truce Supervision Staff on an effective basis. An influential Israeli daily newspaper, Haboker, suggested in the second week of September that the present methods of armistice supervision may have to be replaced by a system of security zones under the direct control of United Nations observers before security can be restored.

6. In view of the reports which have been reaching us that the representatives of the Security Council and of the Governments of the United States and the United Kingdom have been finding Israel unco-operative in the matter of restoring even the degree of security which existed along its frontiers in 1952, this may not be considered the best moment for Canada to modify its policy on the export of offensive weapons in response to requests from the party to the Palestine dispute whose policy is chiefly blamed for the recent deterioration of security in the area. If our export policy were modified now it would encourage Israel to suppose that Canada has begun to lose the interest it formerly showed in the success of the Security Council in making the armistice agreements work. If after some hesitation we agreed to modify our policy slightly, there is no doubt that pressure would be redoubled to secure still greater concessions. If we do not consider it desirable to meet in full Israel's request for highly offensive weapons, certainly the most effective way of convincing Israel that we wish to keep in line with the United States and the United Kingdom would be to press for the early clarification of the policy of these two states before entertaining any requests from the Middle East for the export from Canada of highly offensive weapons. In this way we should ensure that would-be exporting countries keep in line with one another and at the same time we should protect ourselves against possible charges that we are uninterested in furthering Canadian trade.

CONFIDENTIAL Ottawa, October 26, 1953

VISIT OF MR. COMAY

In accordance with your instructions I asked the Minister of Israel to come to see me today, on his return from his trip to the West, in order to raise with him the Qibya incident. I told Mr. Comay that as you were away you had asked me to see him to tell him, on your behalf, how very gravely concerned you were to learn of the attack on Qibya. I said that as a friend of Israel you wished to express this concern, particularly in view of the subject of your recent discussions with Mr. Comay, i.e., the sale of arms to Israel.

2. Mr. Comay, while not expressing regret for the Qibya incident, made no attempt to defend or explain it, but instead said that it was necessary to consider it within the context of the whole situation along the demarcation line. He then proceeded to a fairly lengthy exposition of the situation on the Israel-Jordan frontier, along familiar lines. He emphasized that the raids from Jordan into Israeli territory were of various kinds, some could hardly be called raids at all, but were more in the nature of illegal entry — often for smuggling purposes; others were organized by gangs of marauders and cattle thieves. There was a quite extensive smuggling trade in hasheesh operating along the caravan routes from Egypt. Apart from these activities, however, there were what he described as more sinister raids which showed signs of being tolerated or encouraged by the Jordan authorities for military purposes. These were raids conducted by groups of a para-military character and in company size formations. They were often armed with machine guns. They attacked Jewish settlements, dynamiting the houses and murdering the inhabitants for the deliberate purpose of inducing unrest along the frontier. Similarly the mining of roads and bridges in Israel which had been undertaken on an increased scale during the past year, was a military operation designed to cut Israeli communications. It was a dangerous and technical job done for no purposes of gain by individuals, but as part of a plan.

3. The Israeli Government, for their part, had settled ex-soldiers in the farms and settlements along the border and had given them arms so that they would be able to defend themselves. This was necessary as the character of the long drawn-out border made it impossible for them to defend it with regular forces of the Israeli Army, or to build any kind of "Maginot Line". As long ago as last June, before Mr. Comay had left Israel, he had been present when Mr. Sharett had summoned the American and British Ambassadors to Israel and had warned them that continued incursions from the Jordan side of the demarcation line into Israel might well provoke reprisals on the part of the armed Israeli settlers in the neighbourhood. It was impossible for the settlers to deal with raids of this kind effectively without counter-attacks on the villages across the border on the Jordan side where the raids were being organized. I asked Mr. Comay whether he was referring to reprisals by the armed forces of Israel, or by the settlers. He replied that he was referring to the settlers. Mr. Comay said that it was a pity that the United Kingdom and the United States Governments had not taken more notice of Mr. Sharett's warning that the situation along the demarcation line was deteriorating in this way.

4. I asked Mr. Comay whether the demarcation line itself cutting off as it does refugees from their former properties was not responsible for a great deal of the trouble. Mr. Comay readily agreed that the line was a very bad one and said that he did not think that the Government of Israel would exclude modifications in the present demarcation line, so long as these changes did not have the effect of making the border indefensible from the strategic point of view. Minor modifications could probably be arranged. He thought that changes in the demarcation line should form part of a general settlement.

5. Mr. Comay then turned to the question of the canal project on the Jordan. He said that the suggestion of the Chairman of the Mixed Armistice Commission that the Israeli Government should suspend work on the canal as long as they had not reached agreement with the Syrian Government on it, would have the effect of giving Syria a veto over the entire project and was therefore unacceptable to the Israeli Government. In this connection he mentioned the United States Government's decision to suspend the grant-in-aid from the United States to Israel. He said that this was an unfortunate decision, not only as it affected Israel but also in terms of United States global policies. The United States had frequently indicated that aid of this kind had no political strings attached to it. The present decision to hold up aid for political reasons would not be good for United States prestige, either in Israel or in other recipient countries. He told me, on a confidential basis, that he had been having a telephone conversation today with Mr. Eban, Israeli Ambassador in Washington and Representative to the United Nations, on this subject. He gathered from Mr. Eban that in official quarters in Washington there was a feeling that the United States Government had gone too far too fast in suspending the grant-in-aid. He added that he thought it might be possible to work out an arrangement with the United States whereby the Israeli Government would consent to suspend work on the Jordan canal project while the subject was subjudice in the Security Council and that on this condition the United States would be willing to restore the grant-in-aid.

6. Mr. Comay then asked me whether I had seen the statement (a copy of which is attached hereto†) issued by the Israeli Delegation to the United Nations, in connection with regional waters development. He thought the United States Government's behaviour over this matter had been most extraordinary. Although the Israeli Government had repeatedly endeavoured to secure from the authorities in Washington, and from the United Nations the text of this United Nations project for inter-state agreement on the use of Jordan waters, they had never been able to do so, when finally last week the text had been made available to them. It had been given simultaneously to the press and statements had been issued in Washington to the effect that this plan was being sabotaged by the Israeli Government. Mr. Comay said that the timing of this publicity showed that it had been devised to bring political pressure on the Government of Israel at the time when it was embarrassed by the Qibya incident.

7. Finally, Mr. Comay referred to Mr. Eric Johnson's visit to Israel and the Arab countries. He said that although this was described in the press as a goodwill mission to these countries, it struck him as peculiar that no official communication had ever been made to the Government of Israel regarding this visit and that the first they had heard about it was in the press.

8. So far as the Security Council's discussions of the Qibya incident were concerned Mr. Comay said that if the Security Council limited itself to a simple condemnation of Israel for one particular episode this would serve no purpose and would ignore the real underlying problems. On the other hand Israel would welcome a more far-reaching examination by the Security Council of the issues involved in the Jordan-Israel frontier troubles, in the hope that this might lead towards a settlement.

9. Mr. Comay stayed with me for more than an hour. He plainly felt that in default of any explanation of the Qibya incident his best line was to broaden the subject matter of our talk to include a number of criticisms of United States policy.

ARMS EXPORTS TO THE MIDDLE EAST

Yesterday General Vagn Bennike, Chief of Staff of the Palestine Truce Supervision Organization, reported to the Security Council that tension between Israel and Jordan has reached the "breaking point". As Canadian policy has in the past been to prohibit the export of arms to states which are, or appear to be, on the verge of war with each other, is it your wish that we should now:

(a) delay the approval of requests for permits to export arms to Israel and the Arab states for the time being;

(b) arrange, administratively, for delay in the shipment of M-4 tank parts to Israel under the authorization already granted?

2. It may be expected that the Government of Israel would protest any delay in the shipment of military equipment. On balance, however, it is thought that the present considerations justify the temporary imposition of an arms embargo (not called so in so many words) pending the outcome of the discussions in the Security Council.

THE CHARGE AGAINST ISRAEL IN THE SECURITY COUNCIL

It seems to me that if the Security Council goes ahead with its apparent intention to denounce Israel for the attack on Kibya, and to make little if any reference to Arab offences, it will contribute not to pacification in the Middle East but to its permanent unsettlement. There is no doubt that the attack on Kibya was a despicable business and merits severe condemnation. To ignore however the Arab provocations and Arab brutality which, if not in quite so dramatic a form, seem to have been equally bloodthirsty would quite literally leave the Arabs with the impression that they can get away with murder. There is a great deal of talk about the Conciliation Commission's finding that the Kibya affair was something with which the Israelis should be charged, but the British and Americans seem to be ignoring entirely the reports from the same source on previous Arab activities.

It seems to me that the British are mainly responsible for this lack of objectivity. The pro-Arab bias is so deep-rooted in the Foreign Office and the Conservative Party, with the honourable exception of the Prime Minister, that it has never been possible for them to look at Arab-Israeli questions fairly. This bias is constantly fed no doubt by reports from Glubb and his associates in Amman, whose bland ignoring of the facts of Arab-Jewish relations in Palestine during the past decade or so must be heard to be believed. This bias is also fed by the British press, in which the Israeli point of view is practically never mentioned.

Much has been said about the alleged pro-Israeli attitude for political reasons of the United States, but the American press, though on the whole unfair to the British during the Palestine troubles, was certainly no less objective during that period than the British press. There seemed to be some reason to hope in the past few years that the admirable reporting of Sir Knox Helm from Tel-Aviv, and the generally improved relations between Israel and the United Kingdom, not to mention the deterioration between the UK and most of the Arab countries, would have corrected this bias. Unfortunately, however, it now appears that everyone from the Archbishop of York down is enjoying another orgy of Israelophobia.

The United States attitude has of course been equally lacking in objectivity. Unfortunately in the past its bias was somewhat on the other side and served therefore as a corrective to the British attitude. It appears now, however, that the military arguments for keeping the Arabs sweet have proved stronger than the domestic arguments for keeping the New York voters happy, and action of the Security Council will be determined, not by a fair study of the facts, but, by the military exigencies. (It seems to me incidentally that the Archbishop of York's references to the influence of the New York voter on American policy might well be classed with Senator McCarthy's egregious references to the springs of British policy.)

We have had a long and I think honourable history of endeavouring to approach the problems of this area in full recognition of the fact that, as between the Jews and the Arabs, one is dealing not with those in the right and those in the wrong but with two sides, both of whom have a great deal of right on their side. In this case we seem to be dealing with a situation in which both sides have done wrong, and I wish that we could somehow use our influence to secure a resolution which would cry "a plague on both your houses", and not encourage one side by denouncing the other.

ARMS EXPORTS TO THE MIDDLE EAST

You will recall that you agreed to the suggestion contained in a memorandum of October 28 to the effect that an administrative delay should be imposed upon the shipment of military equipment to Israel pending the outcome of the discussions in the Security Council on the Israel-Jordan situation.

In view of the adoption by the Security Council at its meeting yesterday of a resolution condemning Israel but not calling for the imposition of an arms embargo, I would now recommend that the temporary suspension of the export permit for M-4 tank parts be withdrawn, and the shipment permitted to go forward. If you agree, I will inform the Department of Trade and Commerce without delay.[61]

IMMIGRATION POLICY; ISRAEL

29. The Minister of Citizenship and Immigration reported that there had been increasing pressure from the Jewish population in Canada for immigration from Israel, and 2,000 applications were now pending, involving over 6,000 persons alleged to be close relatives of the applicants, mainly from citizens of Montreal and Toronto. Up to the present time, the Department of Citizenship and Immigration had been processing only those cases where security clearance was normally waived. Investigation had revealed that security arrangements in Israel were extremely bad and that proper security clearances could not be obtained. The problem had been considered by an interdepartmental committee which recommended:

(a) that provision be made for dealing with applications submitted by permanent residents of Canada for admission from Israel of parents, whether coming within the categories normally eligible for waiver of security clearance or not;

(b) that, subject to the establishment of a Canadian mission in Israel, an officer from the Department of External Affairs or the Department of Citizenship and Immigration be appointed to a consular position to deal with immigration matters;

(c) that applications for the admission of residents of Israel which may be dealt with, be processed on the following basis:

(i) the application be referred to the Canadian post in Israel only after security clearance of the sponsor in Canada had been obtained;

(ii) upon receipt of an approved application from Canada, the Canadian official in Israel interview the prospective immigrant with a view to establishing definite identity and relationship to the sponsor and to developing any derogatory information;

(iii) all existing facilities for checking a prospective immigrant's background be thoroughly utilized;

(iv) where derogatory information of material significance was discovered, a visa to be refused and the interested parties advised only that the prospective immigrant was unable to meet immigration requirements;

and,

(d) consideration be given to the posting of an RCM Police officer to the Canadian post in Israel at least for an initial period. Such officer not to be known as a security officer but to fill a consular or other position and to secure all possible information about prospective immigrants.

An explanatory note was circulated.

ISRAEL; IMMIGRATION TO CANADA

12. The Minister of Citizenship and Immigration referred to discussion at the meeting of September 24th, when he had submitted recommendations on steps which might now be taken to allow certain relatives of Jewish residents of Canada to move from Israel to Canada.

An explanatory note had been re-circulated.

(Minister's memorandum, Sept. 24, 1953 — Cab. Doc. 221-53) †

13. During the course of discussion the following points emerged:

(a) Although there should be no discrimination against the admission to Canada from Israel of relatives of Jewish residents of Canada under the criteria suggested by the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, precautions should be taken against fraud in claims of family relationship.

(b) As security arrangements for the clearance of prospective immigrants were poor in Israel, it was not unlikely that a certain number of Communists might gain access to Canada. Any such cases that were discovered after admission to Canada could be deported to their country of origin.

14. The Cabinet approved the recommendations of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration regarding the admission of immigrants from Israel and agreed,—

(a) that, despite the fact that security clearance could not be obtained, provision be made for dealing with applications submitted by permanent residents of Canada for the admission from Israel of parents, whether coming within the categories normally eligible for waiver of security clearance or not, provided such parents had at least two years residence in Israel if not eligible for waiver and that the Minister be authorized, in his discretion, to admit relatives of other degrees where he thought it desirable, on the understanding that such extension of admissible groups would be kept to the minimum he considered practicable;

(b) that, subject to the establishment of a Canadian legation or other post of the Department of External Affairs in Israel, there be appointed an officer in a consular position at that post to deal with immigration matters in Israel;

(c) that all applications for the admission of residents of Israel be processed on the following basis:

(i) the application to be referred to the Canadian post in Israel only after security clearance of the sponsor in Canada had been obtained;

(ii) upon receipt of an approved application from Canada, the consular officer to interview the prospective immigrant and subject him to a thorough interrogation, with a view to establishing identity and relationship to the sponsor and to reveal, if possible, any derogatory information;

(iii) such facilities as did exist for checking a prospective immigrant's background to be thoroughly utilized before a visa was granted; and,

(iv) where derogatory information of material significance was discovered, a visa to be refused and the interested parties advised only that the prospective immigrant was unable to meet immigration requirements;

(d) that consideration be given to the posting of an RCM Police officer to the Canadian post in Israel, at least for an initial period.

RECOGNITION OF SYRIAN GOVERNMENT

Our Washington Embassy hopes that it may have from us this week instructions enabling it to hold normal communications with the Syrian Embassy.

2. On July 13 Mr. Wrong was asked by the Syrian Embassy to inform the Canadian Government that in a referendum held on July 10 the Syrian people had approved a new constitution and that Mr. Adib Shishakly had been elected President. Although this note was given interim acknowledgment, our Embassy is waiting to learn whether Canada now recognizes the Shishakly Government.

3. Canada recognized the Syrian Republic early in 1946 but it took no steps to recognize any of the four governments which came to power by coup d'état in Damascus between March 1949 and November 1951. In the present case, however, the conditions for recognition seem to be fulfilled. The Shishakly administration has been in full control of Syria since November 1951, it recognizes the validity of treaty engagements and has now been confirmed in office by an overwhelming popular vote.

4. If you agree, I shall telegraph our Ambassador in Washington today to instruct him to acknowledge the Syrian Ambassador's note of July 13 on behalf of the Canadian Government, the intention being that this official acknowledgement should constitute an act of recognition.

5. Our Embassy in Washington is anxious to have the matter cleared up as the Syrian Ambassador asked several days ago for an interview and is being kept waiting. Notes, moreover, have been sent by our Embassy to other Missions in Washington to inform them of the presentation of Letters of Credence by the new Canadian Ambassador and the Syrian Embassy is not likely to understand why it received no similar communication.

Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures pour le premier ministre

Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Prime Minister

Ottawa, March 4, 1953

In a telephone call from New York, this morning, Mr. Pearson gave us his views on what action might appropriately be taken in the event that an official announcement is made of the death of Prime Minister Stalin. He suggested that you, together with the Acting Minister, if he is in town, might wish to call in the Soviet Chargé d'Affaires and express the sympathy of the Canadian people with the peoples of the Soviet Union in the loss of Prime Minister Stalin, who led them so gallantly during our common struggle in the Second World War. Mr. Teplov[1] might also be informed that instructions had been given to the Canadian Chargé d'Affaires in Moscow to inform the Soviet Government officially of the regrets of the Canadian Government.

2. If you agree with this suggestion, I shall cable appropriate instructions to our Chargé d'Affaires in Moscow, and inform him of the action planned here.

3. After seeing Mr. Teplov, you might wish to make a statement, either in the House or to the Press,[2] reporting the action which had been taken by you in Ottawa and by our Embassy in Moscow.

4. The Department of External Affairs will, of course, receive many questions from the Press concerning the significance of Prime Minister Stalin's illness and the probable repercussions of his death. It is not proposed to make any statement for attribution. Off the record, the Department is discounting the possibility of a "palace revolution" or dramatic struggle for the succession, on the grounds that the Soviet Government has been in undisputed power for many years and must be assumed to have made adequate preparation for the orderly transfer of power. The intention is to discourage excited speculation on a startling change in Soviet policy, either in the form of alarmist views that Stalin's death may lead to war, or undue optimism that his disappearance from the scene may pave the way to a general settlement.

RECENT INTERNAL DEVELOPMENTS IN THE USSR

Reference: My Despatch No. 266 of March 27, 1953† and other Despatches.

In this despatch I shall try to draw together the various reports I have already submitted about the death of Stalin and the transfer of power, and make an estimate of what has happened. This I must qualify from the beginning as very much guesswork, and some new evidence may come to light next week which may modify my present conclusions.

2. While my analysis of developments over the past six or eight months, contained in my despatch No. 195 of February 28,† was written before the death of Stalin, I do not think anything has happened since then which would necessitate changing my thesis. It is clear that something has been going on inside the Party and Government, and possibly the Army, over the past few years, which came closer to the surface in recent months. I thought so first about a year ago when the Soviet authorities developed a propaganda campaign of unprecedented violence against the Americans concerning germ warfare and the Korean prisoners of war. It seemed to me that it was primarily directed towards the Soviet people and was a manifestation of some malaise of which we had no inkling.

3. The announcement in August that the 19th Party Congress would be held in October[3] seemed to indicate that whatever was going on under the surface had been resolved, as it seemed unlikely the hierarchy would confront the Party mass after an interval of thirteen years if there were still any important differences of opinion at the top. The Congress itself seemed to justify this thesis since it showed no cracks in the walls of the Party, and was the focal point for a tremendous display of the power and unity not only of the Soviet Union but of the whole Soviet bloc.

4. Nevertheless it now seems possible that there were some disagreements which the Congress carefully concealed. Perhaps whatever differences and whatever doubts did exist in the minds of the top Party men in recent years were subordinated to the really important task of creating the impression of unity behind Stalin which the Congress did do. Presumably also it was becoming increasingly difficult to postpone holding the Congress much longer, and it was decided that it was better to hold it while Stalin's health was good and things were going well than to put it off indefinitely. In any case no chances were taken; the Congress was prepared very carefully, and local and republican Parties were purged well in advance.

5. The Congress was Stalin's swan song. It was prefaced by his Bolshevik article "Economic Problems of Socialism in the USSR", which set the ideological tone for the Congress. If he left any testament to posterity then this is it, and its essential message is that practical Communism is a long way off. Apart from the redrafting of some of the Party by-laws the only other important act of the Congress was to abolish the Politburo and the practically defunct Orgburo, replacing them by a Praesidium of 36 members and candidates and enlarging the Secretariat to 10 members. No one man emerged from the Congress as the heir apparent. Malenkov seemed to be number two in power, but his position was confirmed rather than increased. In general these two changes seemed to diffuse the power of those under Stalin and increase relatively his supreme position.

6. Between the Congress in October and the beginning of January something happened to change the situation again. In my opinion the Soviet leaders were alarmed at the prospects of a serious deterioration in the international situation resulting from the Republican victory in the United States, and the growth of some internal difficulties. It is possible that the enlargement of the governing body of the Party annoyed the original members of the Politburo and Secretariat who disliked the idea of their power being shared by newcomers. They may also have believed that this was not the time to diffuse power and tamper with time-tested people and organs.

7. Whatever the causes, the public manifestation was the arrest of the Kremlin doctors on January 13[4] followed by a wide-spread campaign against corruption, gullibility and lack of vigilance in the Party and State apparatus. A number of arrests were made but most of them were for relatively minor offences and no attempt was made to link them directly with the doctors in a nation-wide plot. That there was a connection on a theoretical level at any rate was however shown by [4] On avait accusé neuf médecins d'être responsables de la mort de nombreux dirigeants militaires soviétiques et d'avoir agi comme agents des États-Unis et du Royaume-Uni en utilisant des intermédiaires sionistes.

Nine doctors were accused of causing the deaths of several Soviet military officials and of acting as American and British agents through Zionist intermediaries.

articles in Pravda and Communist linking the doctors, the "rotten" theories of bourgeois nationalists, Zionism, the mistakes of the Voznesensky economists, corruption and inefficiency, lack of vigilance, Mensheviks, Trotskyite remnants, and so on. At the same time the theme of capitalist encirclement and the military threat from the West was revived.

8. It was clear something was certainly the matter, though I took from the start the line that it was less likely to be due to a struggle for power at the top, than a desire to clear out all possible discontents, particularly among the intelligentsia (see my despatch No. 195 of February 28), and to strengthen a body politic which was apparently suffering from certain diseases, especially corruption and inefficiency. I would not entirely eliminate the possibility that the Doctor's plot was the beginning of a new, but minor, purge engineered by Stalin to get rid of the people who had held views opposite to them, the nature of which I outlined in my despatch under reference. In any case something exceptionally important was happening which kept Stalin in Moscow all winter, for the first time since the war.

9. This proved too much for him and resulted in his sudden death on March 5 after four days' illness, and, I am inclined to believe, before the job which had kept him in Moscow was completed. The take-over was remarkably smooth. The reorganization of the Government, the nomination of the principal ministers, the appointment of the new head of State, and a change in the top governing body of the Communist Party was announced within 24 hours of the Generalissimo's death and there was, so far as we know, no opposition or disorder throughout the country. Apart from an early appeal to avoid disunity and panic, which the new leaders may have genuinely feared, the Party, the Police, the Army and the people in general appear to have heeded the call to close ranks and rally round the Central Committee.

10. The Vozhd was laid beside Lenin in Red Square on March 9; and on March 15 the Supreme Soviet met, having been called originally to meet on the 14th, in order to ratify the decrees, some of them clearly unconstitutional, of the Council of Ministers. At the brief session approval was given to all the changes, including several in the Constitution itself, as well as to the reorganization of the remaining ministries. On March 21 Pravda announced that the Central Committee of the Party, meeting a week before, that is on the day the Supreme Soviet should have met, had approved the reduction of the Secretariat to five members and Malenkov's relinquishment of his position in it.

11. I have already analysed in some detail in my despatches No. 214 of March 13† and No. 242 of March 20† the nature of the reorganization of the Government, and in my despatch No. 266 of March 27 the changes in the Party. The rapid and smooth transfer of power could hardly have taken place without at least some advance planning. My theory, for what it is worth, is that as a result of the more serious estimate of the international and domestic situation after the Congress, the Soviet leaders began working out a plan for the more efficient administration of the Government involving a reduction in the number of ministries from 51 to 25, and the stepping-down again of the leaders into the arena. Perhaps this reorganization was being prepared to be put into effect fairly shortly, or it may have been intended simply as an emergency plan, for use in the event of war or some crisis such as Stalin's death. This may have been one of the reasons for Stalin's prolonged stay in Moscow. Another bit of evidence is the failure to convoke the Supreme Soviet to discuss the budget, since, if the Government was to be so radically changed, a budget drawn up on the old plan would be useless.

12. I do not believe, however, that the changes in the Party organization were planned in advance. In the first place, it seems unlikely that Stalin would approve a scheme which runs entirely counter to the reform of the Party he had just made at the 19th Party Congress. I think that Stalin may not have been entirely satisfied with his old Politburo and widened it in order to try out new men. This would naturally cause dissatisfaction among the older members, who took the first opportunity to revert to the Politburo idea. They may also have genuinely believed that in an emergency a handful of trusted men could run things better than an unwieldy Praesidium of 36 members.

13. I also find it difficult to believe that Stalin had actually named his successor, or successors. In the first place it does not seem to accord with his personality, or his ancient tactic of playing one man off against another. He must also have feared that the one sure way to shorten his life would be to proclaim his successor. And if he had made a political testament I think we can be sure that it would have been produced and waved in triumph by the heir.

14. I think what may have happened is that Malenkov and Beria working together staged a minor coup. Certainly the quick demotion of Molotov from number 2 man to Stalin to number 3 in the new set up, his emotional behaviour at the funeral, and the fact that he alone of the top four did not speak at the Supreme Soviet would lend countenance to the belief that he was superseded, though it is possible that when the time came for action he had neither the physical strength, leadership or ambition to insist on his rights. It would be in accordance with his character as a good Bolshevik, however, to accept personal demotion for the good of the Party.

15. At first it appeared that Malenkov had stepped right into Stalin's shoes. He occupied precisely the same three key positions as the Generalissimo — Chairman of the Praesidium of the Council of Ministers, member of the Praesidium of the Central Committee of the Party, and member of the Secretariat, and was the only member of the new regime who sat in all three bodies. At the funeral Malenkov acted and spoke like the boss, and from the first moment of the proclamation of the new Government, the press began quoting from Malenkov's report to the 19th Party Congress, and his photo was prominently displayed, in particular one of him delivering his report with Stalin peering over his shoulder, and another (faked) of him, Stalin and Mao Tse-tung. Beria referred to him as the talented disciple of Lenin and faithful comrade in arms of Stalin.

16. Then something happened. The photographs disappeared from the press and quotations from both his Congress report and his speeches in Red Square and at the Supreme Soviet. Even references to the peace policy of the new Government no longer quoted Malenkov by name, except Dr. Endicott[5] in his speech accepting a Stalin Peace Prize, but that is not significant. At the same time articles in the leading papers began to refer to the necessity of "firm and consistent observance of the principles of collective leadership, of the collegiate principle in work" (Pravda, March 27).

17. It is in the context of this decided change of emphasis that we must look at the announcement of the Central Committee on March 24, published a week later, that Malenkov had relinquished his post as a member of the Secretariat, and that this body had been reduced to five members, Khrushchev, Suslov,[6] Pospelov,[7] Ignatiev[8] and Shatalin.[9] As I said in my despatch No. 266 of March 27, no matter what the immediate effect on the power position of Malenkov, it looks as if his personal influence is being cut down, and a halt has been called to the first attempt to build him up as the undisputed successor of Stalin. The result looks more like government by committee than the legalized dictatorship of one man as it existed under Stalin. In Appendix A I have listed the members of the main governing bodies so that it can be seen that essential power is more dispersed than it was in Stalin's time. Certainly what evidence we have shows that Stalin preferred to keep a system of many small ministries so that he could keep an eye on them personally to prevent any one person building up too much influence. The present governmental change and the greater division of administrative responsibility among the Soviet leaders means it will be more difficult for one man to control absolutely the whole apparatus of government.

18. Again we can only speculate on what happened. I suggest that the evidence strongly points to an attempt by Malenkov, supported by Beria, to use the confusion occasioned by Stalin's death to usurp more power than whatever plans had been laid in advance contemplated. Then came a reaction and either Malenkov was forced to relinquish the Secretariat or he gave up in advance realizing that the opposition at the moment was too great. If, as we suspect, the Secretariat is no longer so important as it once was, then this may not in the long run matter so much. It does, however, mean that three men — Malenkov, Beria and Khrushchev — share power in a way that is strongly reminiscent of the troika of Stalin, Kamenev[10] and Zinoviev[11] at the time of Lenin's death. Perhaps, incidentally, I am wrong to put Khrushchev as one of the trio, rather than Molotov or Bulganin, but it is my personal hunch that he is now in a stronger position than the other two, not only because of the position he holds, but because of the way he acted at the funeral of Stalin, and the fact that the only three important speeches made at the session of the Supreme Soviet were by Malenkov, Beria and Khrushchev.

[11] G.E. Zinoviev.

19. I do not want to imply that these three are engaged in an out and out struggle for power, and so long as they co-operate the system will continue to work smoothly. But it is obvious that a Directorate is not so efficient as the dictatorship of one overwhelmingly powerful man. It is also improbable that committee Government will continue indefinitely in a country where tradition and sentiment is in favour of personal rule. The situation is therefore pregnant with many possibilities.

20. The present rulers undoubtedly realize this and for the moment it seems probable they will consolidate their power jointly. From their many acts in the field of both foreign and internal affairs one can adduce a feeling of uneasiness. The insistence on peaceful intentions and the various gestures towards the Western Powers, which I am analysing in a subsequent despatch, are clearly intended to reduce the pressure from abroad in order that they may concentrate on internal affairs. They have undoubtedly read their Kennan[12] and therefore think that they must avoid the danger of the double pressure at the same time, from abroad and from inside the country.

21. In internal affairs they have taken a number of steps the effect of which is to increase the popularity of the new regime. Malenkov's speeches in Red Square and in the Supreme Soviet were, as I have already reported, in my opinion "election" speeches, in the sense that they appealed to the Soviet people for support, and in order to secure this promised four things which must have been very popular — the stress on the multi-national state, the statement that the Government leaders are the servants of the people, the stress on hatred of war and the conviction that all international problems can be worked out peacefully, and the promise to work for the greater material and cultural requirements of the population. These four points have since been developed in the press.

22. Then on March 28 came the edict, the first signed by Voroshilov, declaring an amnesty for certain types of prisoners (see my despatch No. 271 of April 2, 1953†). Whatever the practical results, it undoubtedly will increase the popularity of the regime. The next step logically would be another reduction of prices.

23. The mystery of the Kremlin doctors continues. There has been practically no mention of them since Stalin's death, though the campaign for greater vigilance has flared up and down in the press. Whatever the aim of the amnesty it would certainly seem to run counter to the aim of the vigilance campaign in the sense that it will create an atmosphere rather of relaxation than increased efficiency.

24. In general I would say that these attempts to gain public support, combined with gestures towards the Western Powers, can be interpreted as proof that the Government feels moderately strong but not secure enough to do without the backing of the people. If it were really unsure of itself it would not dare to take measures having the effect of relaxing tension. On the other hand, this has certain disadvantages and seems to run counter to what Stalin was trying to do. If corruption and inefficiency still exist on a broad scale, then it would seem illogical to abandon [12] G.F. Kennan, ancien ambassadeur des États-Unis en Union soviétique; auteur d'ouvrages sur l'histoire diplomatique.

G.F. Kennan, former Ambassador of United States to Soviet Union; diplomatic historian.

or dilute the campaign to weed them out. One can only guess that these measures were proving too unpopular for the Government to wish to continue. On the contrary everything is being done to bring all shades of opinion behind the regime, including the amnesty, and even the practical restoration of Andreev,[13] who has been completely in eclipse.

25. One final point of considerable importance is the influence of the Army in the new regime. Bulganin has become War Minister and his deputies are Vasilievsky[14] and the very popular Zhukov,[15] whose startlingly quick return to a position of power is very significant. The relatively popular Marshal Voroshilov is head of state and though this is not a position of great practical importance, it can be interpreted as a sop to the Army. There are a number of indications that there may have been some discontent in the Army before Stalin's death, and it seems probable that the new Government is going to make sure that the generals are on their side. In this connection one should also note the appointment of Brezhnev[16] as political administrator in the Navy.

26. The next few months should prove very interesting as the Government will have to establish a working relationship between the top leaders, continue its control and prestige in the satellites, maintain the alliance with China, reduce international tension, or at least stabilize relations with the rest of the world, and at the same time establish its popularity and authority inside the USSR without relaxing too much the pressure under which the Soviet peoples must be maintained if the heavy demands on them are to be met.

SECRET

SOVIET FOREIGN POLICY

Reference: My Despatch No. 274 of March 31, 1953.

In my despatch under reference I attempted to analyse recent developments in Soviet internal affairs. In this despatch I shall outline the steps the new Soviet Government is taking in the field of foreign affairs and try to estimate what the intentions of the regime are.

2. Any solid analysis of what the foreign policy of the new Government is likely to be must depend to a large extent on an estimate of the men who run it, and their support in the Soviet Union. This is extremely difficult to do because of the paucity of material available which would throw any light on the personalities of these men.

3. I have seen many commentaries from abroad to the effect that the death of Stalin was a loss to the world because he was the great moderator, the man who really could keep the Soviet Union from plunging the world into war. I think just the contrary was the case. The world could hardly have reached its present sorry state without Stalin, and peace could have been had at any time in the last three years by a word from him. This is not the place for an examination of his character, but it seems to be that the Georgian highlander and professional revolutionary who had lived all his life dangerously was the kind of person who would play for great stakes and take very great risks, though it is true at the same time that he always seemed to know when to call a halt.

4. Malenkov, Beria and Khrushchev, on the contrary, hardly knew the world before the Revolution, were mere boys when it broke out and on the whole have come to the top through skill in handling the problems of governmental and Party administration. They are not revolutionaries in the sense that Stalin was, and I think that must make a great difference in their outlook. Furthermore none of them have been outside the Soviet bloc and must feel a certain lack of self-confidence in dealing with the outside world. Finally, Malenkov is a Russian (though probably with some Tartar blood), a man of the steppes, not of the mountains. All this is likely to lead to caution in handling foreign affairs, at least at the beginning.

5. One cannot, of course, ignore Molotov, who is an old Bolshevik, has travelled widely and has been closely associated with Stalin's foreign policy. He will undoubtedly be able to exercise a great deal more flexibility in his handling of foreign policy than his successor.

6. In addition to the character of the new men is the fact that there is no longer one supremely powerful and self-confident man at the head of the State. The men who do run things now plainly realize that they do not enjoy the same amount of popularity as Stalin did and are trying to adopt measures to increase their support and popular appeal in the country. I feel that before they can take a very firm line abroad they must first find out how strong they are internally. This will also apply in the satellites and particularly in China, the relations with which I am treating separately in my despatch No. 275 of April 2.†

7. I think also that the Soviet leaders have been for several months more anxious about the danger of war than for some time previously, and they may have genuinely believed that the change of regime might be the occasion for increased pressure from the West. Therefore their first acts have been aimed at reducing this pressure and increasing a feeling of greater willingness to co-operate with the West. In the following paragraphs I shall outline what these acts are:

(a) The speeches of Malenkov, Beria and Molotov at Stalin's funeral, and of Malenkov at the Supreme Soviet. The old abuse of the West was omitted, almost fervent declarations of peaceful intentions were made, and Malenkov declared that all problems could be solved peacefully, even with the United States.

(b) These statements have been followed up by a decline in the volume and nature of press attacks on the United States, and the "crimes" of the US in Korea have been played down. The press editorials have stressed again and again the Soviet desire for peace.

(c) In handling the case of the shooting of the Lincoln bomber, which was certainly not a premeditated act, the Soviet authorities took an unusually mild line, and proposed discussions to avoid such incidents in the future. There have been one or two smaller examples of greater willingness to co-operate in Berlin.

(d) Greater politeness has been shown to the diplomatic corps. We were exceptionally well treated at Stalin's funeral and at the Supreme Soviet, and Molotov has been quick to see a number of ambassadors, including the French, United Kingdom and Argentine.

(e) The United Kingdom Ambassador was suddenly called to the Foreign Ministry last week and informed by a very embarrassed Deputy Minister that the request to move from their present quarters, which had been presented practically as an ultimatum on Christmas Eve, was all a horrible mistake and, of course, they could stay on in the Embassy at Sofiiskaya if they wished.

(f) A few days later the United States Chargé d'Affaires was called to the Ministry and also told that they need not move from their present Embassy on Mokhovaya if they did not wish to. They have not made up their mind yet whether or not to accept this offer as their new building, which is nearly ready, may in the end prove more satisfactory.

(g) Visas were granted for nine publishers and editors of provincial US newspapers to visit the USSR. They arrived in Moscow on March 31.

(h) The Soviet authorities have agreed to send a warship to participate in the naval display at Spithead in connection with the Coronation.

(i) The Soviet authorities have offered to help to repatriate the United Kingdom civilian internees in Northern Korea. I understand from Sir Alvary Gascoigne[17] that there were nine of them. Molotov has now told him that two are dead, one cannot be traced, and the other six will be turned over shortly in Moscow, including Vivian Holt, the minister to Seoul.

(j) The French Ambassador has also been told that the Soviet Government will do all it can to find the twenty French civilian internees in Korea, though they claim they have not been able to trace all of them. Previously in the case of both the United Kingdom and French requests the Foreign Ministry had simply replied that they had no competence in the matter.

(k) The sudden agreement in New York on the appointment of a new Secretary-General of the United Nations.

(l) Finally, and certainly most important, the Chinese and North Korean offers to exchange sick and wounded prisoners of war in Korea, and to go on from there to negotiations for the exchange of other prisoners.

8. None of these items, except the last one, is in itself very important, but taken together they make a fairly impressive list of Soviet acts which, compared with the negative attitude of the last few years, certainly points towards a more co-operative attitude. I think personally that we should accept these at their face value and exploit the present Soviet policy for the purposes of peace, without necessarily accepting the view that the Russians have modified their ultimate aims. It may be that they wish to reduce tension a little bit in order to gain time to consolidate their internal position, or it may mean that they have decided the moment has come to attempt seriously to develop a modus-vivendi for the two systems. Whatever their ultimate purpose, I hope we in the West will not make the mistake of thinking the Russians are on the run and attempt to exert great pressure on them in order to cause the collapse of the system, or to get really big concessions such as an Austrian Treaty, and so on. Perhaps this will come in due course, but for internal reasons the Russians cannot cede too much at first, and outside pressure would only, in my opinion have the effect of rallying public support around the new leaders.

TELEGRAM 45 Moscow, April 4, 1953

CONFIDENTIAL

Molotov has now received all Ambassadors and Ministers. This afternoon he is to receive the United States Chargé d'Affaires on the latter's request. It is a courtesy visit but he will also on instructions raise the question of United States civilian internees in North Korea.

2. Do you think it would be appropriate for me to ask for courtesy call on Molotov? In view of the present more co-operative Soviet attitude it might also be possible to raise the question of Petsamo payment.[18]

CALL ON MOLOTOV

Reference: Your telegram No. 45 of April 4th.

It would be in order for you to call on Foreign Minister if he is receiving whole diplomatic corps including Chargés d'Affaires.

If you see him you should, on behalf of Canadian Government, welcome the cooperative attitude in certain matters shown recently by Soviet authorities and, specifically, assurances given by Molotov that Government of Soviet Union will support progress in negotiations leading to peaceful settlement in Korea.

You should not, repeat not, raise question of Petsamo during interview.

CALL ON MOLOTOV

Reference: My telegram No. 48 of April 16, 1953.†

On receipt of your telegram No. 39 of April 6, authorising me to request an interview with the Soviet Foreign Minister and to transmit a message from you, I asked to see the Chief of Protocol. He received me on April 9 and said he would inform the Minister of my request. Three days later the Protocol Department telephoned to say that Mr. Molotov would receive me "shortly". The morning of April 16 they telephoned again to ask me to come that afternoon at four-thirty.

2. Mr. Molotov received me in his office in the new Ministry of Foreign Affairs, where in fact he now sees most foreign representatives. There were only slightly more than the usual number of security police in evidence. I was taken by a member of the Protocol Department to an antichamber, and before I had a chance to sit down a secretary announced that the Minister was ready. I passed through two more antichambers and then into a large conference room, simply but well furnished. There was not a paper or document to be seen in any of the rooms.

3. At the precise moment I entered the conference room a door at the opposite end opened and Mr. Molotov appeared. He advanced to meet me and greeted me cordially, inviting me to sit down at a long conference table. A secretary who took everything down in shorthand was the only other person present.

4. Mr. Molotov commented on my Russian, which language we spoke throughout, though I repeated your message in English to make sure that there was no ambiguity. I replied that I was a "starii Moskvitch", an old Muscovite, having been secretary of the Embassy for a period after the war, to which he replied: "Oh yes, I know that". I then spoke briefly about the Conference of Foreign Ministers on Germany in Moscow in the spring of 1947 and said I had had the honour of meeting him then. He replied that that had been an interesting period.

5. After a brief pause I said I had been instructed by you to transmit a message from the Canadian Government. When he indicated his assent I stated that the Canadian Government welcomed the co-operative attitude in certain matters shown recently by the Soviet authorities and the special assurance given by the Foreign Minister that the Soviet Government will lend their support to negotiations leading to a peaceful settlement of the conflict in Korea.

6. Molotov replied asking me to thank you for the message and said he was pleased to hear the view of the Canadian Government. He went on to say that the policy of the Soviet Government had always been directed towards a peaceful solution of the Korean and other international questions. He added that he sincerely hoped that the hostilities in Korea could be terminated shortly. I said that the Canadian Government also wished for a peaceful settlement in Korea, and he reiterated that he hoped for a speedy truce.

7. Mr. Molotov's statement that the Soviet Government had always worked for peace in Korea is the kind of reply which would come quite naturally and which one might have been tempted to question. But the way in which he said that he sincerely hoped for an end to the hostilities seemed to put a different emphasis on his statement.

8. Mr. Molotov then changed the conversation to general matters. He asked me how I liked the Moscow winter. I replied that I felt quite at home as it was very much like the Canadian winter. He answered that unfortunately all he knew of Canada was the airport at Edmonton and that had been spoiled by the fact that his plane, on its way from Alaska to San Francisco for the United Nations Conference in March 1945, had had to circle the city for about an hour before it could land because of heavy fog.

9. Mr. Molotov mentioned Mr. Wilgress and asked me what he was doing now. He seemed very interested when I told him and requested me to send him his best wishes. He said he remembered him very well from the years when Mr. Wilgress had been Canadian Ambassador in Moscow. I half expected from this opening that he was going to raise the question of the restoration of normal diplomatic relations, but he did not pursue the subject further.

10. On leaving I thanked him for having received me, to which he replied that it was natural for him to want to know better the foreign representatives in Moscow. The interview lasted about ten minutes and he was extremely pleasant throughout. He seemed relaxed and in good health and spirits, infinitely more so than when I last saw him at the Supreme Soviet. This is the impression of most foreigners who have talked with him recently, and it may be in fact that the death of Stalin has removed a great load from the shoulders of all these men.

11. This is, I believe, the first time the Soviet Foreign Minister has received the Canadian representative in Moscow since Mr. Wilgress paid his farewell call on Mr. Molotov in April 1947.[19] It was useful in this sense, therefore. The reiteration of the assurance of Soviet intentions in Korea is also a useful piece of information since it tends to confirm the other bits of evidence we have that this time the Russians mean business.

12. The fact that he received me at all is also further proof that, for the moment at any rate, the Soviet authorities have adopted a more friendly and conciliatory attitude towards the Western representatives in Moscow. Even Mr. Vyshinsky was extremely elusive and very seldom saw the ambassadors accredited in Moscow. To date, incidentally, Mr. Molotov has seen most of the ambassadors and ministers,

CONVERSATION WITH MR. ROUDCHENKO[20]

During the past two and a half years I have maintained somewhat perfunctory relations with the Soviet Embassy. We have apparently been on their official list, although we have been able to accept about half their invitations. In the early autumn of 1951, the Counsellor of the Embassy, Mr. Roudchenko, after much dissembling, invited me to lunch. In those days, social functions à deux with Soviet officials were relatively rare. Although the conversation was amusing and interesting in its way, nothing of substance was discussed and Roudchenko was greatly at pains to avoid topics related to foreign affairs or work in general.

A few weeks later, Roudchenko accepted an invitation to dinner at our home; John Watkins[21] was also present. It was, as far as I know, the first occasion since 1945 that a Soviet diplomat had come to a Canadian home in such circumstances. We took him to a Shaw play at the Repertory Theatre and he compounded the infraction of official Soviet customs by returning afterwards for a drink which lasted until after midnight. During that memorable evening the conversation was safely dull. The only tangible result was a series of overtures, from Embassy officials high and low, who said how they, too, would like to see the Canadian theatre. We suggested they buy season tickets.

Although I saw Roudchenko briefly at the Embassy last November 7, I did not really talk to him for a year and a half before he telephoned me Friday night to say that he was anxious to speak to me in private. The repetition of this phrase, and other vague allusions, gave an air of mystery to the luncheon meeting which he proposed. In the event, it was extremely interesting.

We lunched Monday noon at La Touraine. I had assumed that our pleasantries of the past were at an end for two reasons. First, since our last meeting, the Bureau of Current Affairs had published my pamphlet on Soviet politics which no Soviet official could regard as friendly. Second, I at last had evidence that the Embassy had become aware of my lecturing activities at Carleton College, and indeed had flattered me to the extent of suggesting that a member of their staff might enrol as a student of Soviet Government!

On Monday in our conversation Roudchenko did me the honour of sparing the usual panegyrics about the great Soviet Union and the customary barbs about the United States. The purpose of the meeting was to impress me with the fundamental change of policy which Stalin's death had brought. Although I repeatedly and provocatively brought up the name of Stalin, quoted Stalin's words, and asked if they were still valid, he paid no lip service to the dead leader and went so far as to say with great emphasis: "Many, many, many things have changed since Stalin died." There was no subject from which he veered away, even when I introduced fundamental ideological points or nasty popular issues such as freedom of travel. In general, he was trying to give the impression — he is not exactly skilled in the subtleties of diplomacy — that we should talk business. He early made a speech that I "knew" Soviet Government and Soviet policies — not "sympathized with", or even "understood"; I knew the language and had long studied Soviet affairs. He implied that he knew that I was not a Communist, and that I knew that he was not a Western democrat. We all had our own ideas and should agree to differ. This was the time for accommodation. It was important that Canadians should see Soviet policy had changed fundamentally and that we should not be misled by our preconceptions of the past. It was to our mutual interest that we grasp the extent and significance of the change. Much of what he said would have been rank heresy in the mouth of a Communist (whether he is a member of the Party I do not know) a short time ago. He almost admitted that the Soviet Union had been wrong in some of its past restrictions, and he practically said that until now leaders had taken too rigid a view of the future Marxist development of the Soviet state.

Roudchenko's words might have more significance if he were a man of greater subtlety or importance, or if he were talking to a more important audience. One cannot ignore his conversation, however, since it was so obviously made under instructions and since he was so anxious, through endless repetition, to make points which he hoped would be considered by my associates. In these circumstances, I thought that you would be interested in the fact of the conversation; a fuller account of it is recorded in the attached memorandum.†

SOVIET PEACE OVERTURES[22]

One of the dangers implicit in the present Soviet peace overtures is the disillusionment which may follow in their tread if it proves either that the Soviet Government has no intention of serious negotiation or that negotiations prove discouragingly long-drawn out and the results attained seem meagre. A period in which hopes of a genuine settlement were raised in the West followed by a phase of deepening distrust in the fulfilment by the Communists of any agreements reached would create a situation more dangerous than that of the present cold war. There would then be a tendency to feel that all approaches had been tried, that all possibilities of negotiation had been explored and that nothing now remained but war as a solution of outstanding problems. Such a mood of disillusionment and impatience, particularly if it should develop in the United States, would be most dangerous.

2. Thus a period of better relations with the Communist world would present new problems. This would be particularly true if the approach to negotiation with Communist countries was at all an emotional one as it tends to be in the United States where opinion fluctuates so quickly from illusion to disillusion. Initial trust in the intentions of the Soviet Government can only lead to deepening mistrust in the performance of the Soviet Government. Belief in the possibility of co-operation with the Communist world can only lead to disappointment at the essentially uncooperative attitude which is implicit in the Communist faith. Expectations of Soviet "sincerity" are only too likely to be followed by embittered accusations of Soviet "insincerity". It is, therefore, very desirable that public opinion in Western countries should view the possibility of negotiation with realism and to realize from the start that any agreements which the Soviet Union enters into will be honoured only until the next twist of the Party line makes it desirable to dishonour them and that the Soviet Government will always implement its international obligations in the fashion most advantageous to the Soviet Union. If the West should become relatively weaker the Soviet Union would no doubt jettison any agreements attained. Anything that can be said to put the problem of negotiation with the Soviet Union to the public in realistic terms would be helpful. Unfounded hopes of a general and early settlement with the Soviet Union would be raised by the prospect of a "top-level meeting", e.g., between President Eisenhower, Churchill and Malenkov. A "top-level meeting" at the present time would be likely to produce precisely the reaction most to be feared. It would be enormously publicized, would raise hopes and can settle nothing.

3. For none of the larger differences between the Communists and the Western world are susceptible of settlement now and by the stroke of a pen. This applies to the unification of Germany, the unification of Korea, the solution of Indo-China, the disposition of Formosa and the admission of Communist China to the United Nations. This is not to say that these problems are insoluble but they are soluble only over a fairly long period of time and by a gradual process. The example of the prisoners of war issue in relation to the Korean armistice is instructive from this point of view. If agreement is reached on this question at Panmunjom it will not have been reached by a brief encounter of top-level political figures in a blaze of publicity but by long-drawn out negotiation, sometimes behind the scenes, sometimes in public. If the compromise finally reached represents a concession by the Communists, that concession will be masked by propaganda and by face-saving slogans.[23]

4. These observations may also apply to the projected political conference on Far Eastern issues. It is quite improbable that such a conference can, in the present political atmosphere, reach a real settlement of Far Eastern issues. If early and spectacular results are expected of the conference, it may be foredoomed to failure. Indeed, it is rather difficult to understand the light-heartedness with which Mr. Dulles seems to approach such a meeting when the possibilities of discord between the United States and its friends and allies, not to mention discords within the United States are considered. We have yet to learn that the State Department has arrived at any proposals to be put forward at such a meeting on Korea, Indo-China, Formosa or the admission of Communist China to the United Nations. Even if the State Department had firm positions for negotiation on these questions and had obtained the approval of President Eisenhower for them, it would certainly take many months to obtain Congressional support.

5. The only way in which it seems possible to envisage a useful political conference on Far Eastern questions would be, as you suggested the other day, to refer the outstanding problems to a continuing body responsible to the United Nations, which would report progress (or the lack of it) from time to time to the General Assembly. Any real solution to the problems would have to be the patient work of months of negotiation. The question of the Soviet veto would not in reality arise if the object of these negotiations was to secure agreement. The Soviet and Communist Delegations would, of course, possess the veto in the sense that no-one could oblige them, by majority vote, to enter into any agreements which were not acceptable to them.

6. It is not proposed in this note to consider the lines along which a settlement in Korea might be reached. A memorandum prepared in the Far Eastern Division will shortly be submitted to you on this subject.† It is fairly obvious, however, that the possibility of attaining an agreed unification of Korea is extremely remote. On the other hand, it would presumably be impossible for the United States, and probably for other members of the United Nations to abandon the ideal of the unification of Korea. The principle might have to be maintained as a target to be aimed at. In practice Korea might remain divided, probably for a long time. Similarly the principle of the withdrawal of forces from Korea might be acceptable to both sides. In practice, however, troop withdrawals would have to be staged over a period of time. Meanwhile, continuous negotiation with the Communist Chinese would be going on. This in itself would be important but, as you have pointed out, the only solution to the problem of the admission of Communist China to the United Nations would be a gradual and indirect one so that the United States would, bit by bit, become used to the practice of negotiation with the Communist Chinese within a United Nations framework.

7. The first step obviously is to take the heat out of Far Eastern issues in so far as this is possible and the first step towards this first step is the cessation of actual fighting in Korea (and perhaps in Indo-China). Then would follow a lengthy period of negotiation which might lead to the attainment of partial and precarious compromise in the Far East. During this whole period we in the West would have to avoid two things, first the demand for ultimate and ideal solutions which are unattainable without war and, secondly, any relaxation of our diplomatic vigilance and military preparedness. For at the first exhibition of weakness or gullibility on our part the whole fragile structure of a negotiated settlement might collapse.

8. Although these considerations are very familiar to you and can make no claim to originality, they may be relevant lest by any chance we should be approaching a period when negotiation with the Communist world may be possible. It would be disastrous if public opinion in the West and particularly in the United States came to hope that negotiation would obtain impossible results and opened up the prospects of an era of true cooperation with the Communists. For the failure of such hopes would lead to increased dangers of war.

OBSERVATION OF NEW SOVIET LONG-RANGE BOMBERS

As you know, up to the present time there has been no evidence that the Soviet Union has had a long-range bomber in operational use. The largest Soviet combat bomber has been the TU-4, a medium bomber which is a copy of the US B-29 and is capable of carrying atomic bombs on one-way missions to the heartland of North America.

Recently two more advanced Soviet bombers have been sighted by the service attachés and other officials of the US, UK and Canadian missions in the Soviet Union. These two new long-range bombers are:

(1) A large bomber, probably a jet engine type, similar in design and size to the US B-52 (which is a larger version of the B-47 which recently made the non-stop trans-oceanic flight to the United Kingdom and had sufficient fuel left over to fly to North Africa if required by weather conditions). This plane has only been seen from a distance of three miles and details on it are therefore still vague. From preliminary examinations of the photographs of this plane it would appear, however, that it would be capable of carrying atomic and hydrogen bombs and would have sufficient range to attack important targets on this continent on two-way missions;

(2) The type 31 bomber. Previously this aircraft had only been seen at the 1951 Soviet Air Show. In the last few months a number of these aircraft have been sighted in both Moscow and Kazan. The plane is comparable to the US B-36 but believed to have a better performance than the American plane, and is powered by four turbo-jet engines. It would have the capability of carrying atomic and hydrogen bombs and is estimated to have sufficient range to attack targets on this continent on two-way missions.

The present RCAF interpretation of these sightings, which is in line with the RAF and USAF views, is that it appears that the Soviets have a prototype of a long-range heavy bomber but that it will probably take from three to five years before these aircraft will appear in operational units. In the meantime it seems that a shorter range heavy bomber, the type 31 aircraft, has gone into production in limited numbers as an interim long-range bomber.

The development of these Soviet heavy bombers may usefully be viewed in connection with Soviet developments in the thermonuclear field. The Soviet Union has already announced the possession of a hydrogen bomb. From filter analyses made on this continent it appears that the Soviets have exploded a prototype of an H bomb and not merely conducted a preliminary thermonuclear explosion. The Soviet Union has apparently skipped the first stage of thermonuclear experimentation and exploded a bomb somewhat similar to that employed in the Einewetok explosion of 1951. In practical terms this means that the gap in thermonuclear research between the USSR and the United States has been considerably reduced and that in the course of the next few years the Soviet Union might conceivably draw level with or even overtake the United States.

It seems reasonable to assume that the Russians will in the foreseeable future have a supply of H bombs and the vehicle for delivering them on enemy targets. The implications in the sphere of global planning are only just beginning to be studied. However I think it is fair to say that this will give the Soviet Union considerably more striking power to use against North America in the event of a general war. Previously it has been thought that the Soviet concept of a war would follow the line that it would be impossible to defeat the entire Western World at one time, since it would probably be impossible to defeat decisively the principal enemy, the United States. Consequently the USSR would have to take two bites at the cherry by first overrunning most of the Eurasian land mass and creating a strong defensive position from which it would be possible at a future date to continue the war against the United States. Now the Soviet Union might conceivably believe that it would have the capability of defeating the West in one war.

These developments, I feel, reinforce the emphasis which Canada and the United States have placed on the importance of North America in Soviet strategy. As you know, we and the Americans have always considered that North America would be a major target in a general war and that the Soviet Union would attempt attacks on this continent in order to disrupt seriously the war effort of Canada and the United States and to force the United States and Canada to retain more military forces on this continent than would otherwise have been required for home defence. Moreover we have never ruled out the possibility of temporary seizure of strategic points in Alaska by means of airborne and amphibious operations. The United Kingdom on the other hand has considered that the Russian effort would be concentrated in Western Europe and that any attacks made on this continent would be minor in nature and be for diversionary purposes only, at least in the initial stages of the war.

Soviet possession of the hydrogen bomb and the means of delivering it on targets on this continent will probably give the USSR a relative advantage in this field over the western powers. Suitable targets for the H bomb are areas of large concentrations of population and/or industry, and there are more of such targets in North America than in the USSR. It is worth noting also that the total number of such targets even in the US is limited and that therefore a large stockpile of these bombs would not seem to be required. Probably something in the order of 25 to 50 bombs would be all that is necessary.

It is interesting to note the way in which the Russians have let the West know that they possess these weapons. The H bomb was announced publicly by Malenkov. In the case of the long-range bombers I am inclined to believe that the Soviet Union was willing to let the West know that these aircraft existed. Possibly they intended to have the type 31 planes seen near Moscow fly in the 1953 Air Show, but in any case they could presumably have kept these aircraft and the new large bomber in restricted areas if they did not wish knowledge of their existence to become known. On the whole the Soviet Union probably had more to gain than lose by this demonstration of potential strength. It may have wished the West to think that Russia is further ahead in this field than it actually is.[24]

Moreover it probably hopes to see a significant shift in emphasis take place in United States defence planning from strategic air offense to continental defence, which might weaken not only the strategic air build-up but the defence effort in Western Europe.

DESPATCH 858 Moscow, October 19, 1953

SECRET

A SURVEY OF INTERNAL DEVELOPMENTS IN THE USSR
FROM THE 19TH PARTY CONGRESS TO OUR DAY

A technocratic reorganization of the Government apparatus, a call for collective leadership in the Party, a more pro-consumer economic (and particularly agricultural) policy and a relaxation of the nationality policy seem now to be the four main points of the reforms made by Stalin's successors since the beginning of last March.

2. I have already tried to explain these reforms by the existence of certain social and economic pressures arising:

(a) from the difficulty of maintaining the tempo of industrial growth (which had fallen from +23% in 1950, to +16% in 1951, to +11% in 1952);

(b) from the difficulty of maintaining a steady increase in the labour force (which had grown by 2,000,000 in 1950, by 1,160,000 in 1951 and by 900,000 in 1952);

(c) from the difficulty of maintaining the tempo of the growth of labour productivity (which was +12% in 1950, +10% in 1951 and +7% in 1952);

(d) from the dissatisfaction of the population with the absence until Stalin's death of any significant pro-consumer trends in the second postwar five-year plan (the rise in sales to the population had tapered off from +25% in 1950, to +15% in 1951, to +10% in 1952);

(e) from basic difficulties in the rural economy which subsequent statements have revealed to be leading "straight to ruin", as Khrushchev admitted.

3. You will recall that I began speculating about the above social and economic pressures as soon as the results of the plan for 1952 had become known (cf. my despatch No. 139 of February 12, 1953†). If these pressures existed already under Stalin, if the "collective leadership" reform was germinating in the new Party by-laws adopted by the 19th Party Congress and, together with this, if the economic reforms appear in retrospect to be founded essentially on the basic law of socialism as "discovered" by Stalin in his "Economic Problems of Socialism in the USSR", then we are led back to events preceding Stalin's death.

4. In this despatch I would like to try to survey developments over the past year in order to trace their probable origin, and to show how they are reflected in the variations in the alignment of forces and personalities, the possible conflicts of opinion among the top Party leaders, and how current developments are affecting and might in the future affect these reforms. This study is by no means conclusive and of necessity does not cover all aspects of the very complex internal situation.

5. It is now approximately a year since the 19th Party Congress met, and this constitutes our first clear landmark, as it dealt with all the many issues of Soviet internal affairs, including economic policy, Party matters and the nationality question. These issues were naturally touched upon by several speakers at the Congress, but the most interesting performances were those of Malenkov, who took over Stalin's role as rapporteur, Beria, who took over Stalin's mantle on the nationality question and Khrushchev, who introduced the new Party by-laws.

6. I have asked Mr. Trottier[25] to analyse their respective speeches and the Congress materials in general to see if there is something which had escaped us at the time and which might have foreshadowed, directly or indirectly, some at least of the reforms and events which we have witnessed since the Congress. Our research has yielded interesting results, showing that certain statements made last October correspond, virtually word for word in some cases, with statements or newspaper editorials published subsequently in connection with the most important developments in the internal field.

7. The documentary evidence for this research is to be found in Annex A.† Briefly it shows that many of the lines of development followed after Stalin's death were hinted at in the speeches delivered at the Party Congress. For example, Beria was the only Soviet leader who mentioned the question of "national cadres" at the Congress. When Izvestia published an editorial early in June concerning the campaign for the promotion of national cadres, its wording was almost identical with that of Beria's speech.

8. Malenkov also hinted at the need to give more food to the people and more raw materials for light industry "in the next few years", which has since become explicitly defined in the two-three year programme which he outlined to the Supreme Soviet on August 8. Malenkov also criticized the lack of efficiency in governmental organizations, and one of the first things he did on taking office was to order a complete governmental re-organization. He also spoke at the Congress in favour of decreasing administrative staff, one of the favourite themes since then. Finally, he gave an interesting insight into the campaign launched after Stalin's death to prevent the Party from "supplanting Soviet and economic organs", in order merely to assist them.

9. Khrushchev did not say anything at the Congress on any of the points dealt with by Malenkov and Beria. He dealt strictly with the new Party by-laws, which in itself gives an indication of his importance in Party affairs, if not directly on policy matters. As for his silence on policy matters, it is in line with, and it might explain, the fact that he did not figure prominently in the March reforms. He was vaguely assigned "to concentrate on work in the Central Committee". However, this is not an accurate reflection of his real importance, either at the Congress or in March, or [25] P. Trottier, troisième secrétaire, ambassade en Union soviétique.

P. Trottier, Third Secretary, Embassy in Soviet Union.

at any time since then. His importance can better be measured by the following three indices, which I list in chronological order:

i) At the time of the Congress, he was the only one with Malenkov to have his picture reproduced in the press on a width of two columns, with the text of his speech;

ii) On January 13, Pravda's enumeration of the Soviet leaders who had attended the Polish opera presentation at the Bolshoi put him in the No. 6 position, a gain of two places in comparison with earlier listings;

iii) He is now officially No. 3 and First Party Secretary.

10. There can be little doubt that before and during the Congress most involved manoeuvring was going on among Stalin's lieutenants, with he himself playing an uncommitted game. It seems possible that he may originally have planned to build up Malenkov, and cut down Beria. But it also appears likely that he decided to build up Khrushchev, probably as a counterweight to the other two.

11. These manoeuvres of personalities could also be combined with the manoeuvre consisting in the publication of "Economic Problems of Socialism in the USSR" three days before the Congress. Stalin probably knew:

i) that Malenkov was thinking in terms of a more pro-consumer policy for the next few years; of a governmental reorganization; of putting the Party back in its place as an assistant, not an usurper or supplanter of Soviet and economic organizations; of liberalizing agricultural policy (Malenkov complained in his speech that "in many collective farms . . . the means of production are not attached to the brigades, a fact which leads to lack of personal responsibility" — this is the essence of the Venzher-Sanina[26] proposition which was severely criticized by Stalin in his treatise);

ii) that Beria was favourable to the promotion of national cadres; to national equality (Beria firmly declares in his speech that "in the struggle with the enemies of Leninism the Party advocated the Leninist-Stalinist nationality policy and ensured the complete and final overthrow of great-power chauvinism", read: great-Russian chauvinism); and to a quick passage to communism (Beria said in his speech that "the Soviet people has built (note the past tense) socialism and has entered the phase of the gradual transition from socialism to communism" while Stalin had attempted in his treatise to define strictly the three conditions for the preparation of the transition to communism).

12. It seems likely that Malenkov and Beria had only patched up their speeches with the hurried addition of a pious reference to his Bolshevik article in their very last paragraphs, and that Stalin knew this. It is interesting to note in this connection that Bagirov,[27] the first man to fall after Beria in July, had also said virtually nothing to the Congress about Stalin's article, but had concluded his speech with the words: "The 19th Congress will go down in the history of the Party and of the Soviet people as the congress of the building of Communism". Furthermore, the Communist Party of Azerbaijan was, between the Congress and Stalin's death, the only republican party to have been criticized in the central press (Pravda on January 5) for a failure to propagandize Stalin's economics pronouncement.

13. All this does not necessarily mean that there was an out-and-out struggle over economic policy at the Congress. After all, the new five-year plan, though long delayed, had been safely adopted and ideas of a pro-consumer policy were not fundamentally in conflict with the basic law of socialism, defined by Stalin as "the maximum satisfaction of the growing material and cultural needs of the population". But there was probably a conflict over tactics, particularly measures and quantitative allotments to the various fields of the national economy. This conflict, without having been deadly as yet must still have been serious enough, judging by Beria's fall to the No. 6 position at the opening session of the Congress (cf. Pravda October 6). But Beria fought back for his No. 4 position and was successful enough to regain it at the closing session (cf. Pravda October 15).

14. It is interesting to note that, when the composition of the Commission for Revising the Party Programme was published, both Malenkov and Beria were on it but neither Khrushchev nor any of the other more important members of the Council for Collective Farm Affairs — Andrianov,[28] Andreev[29] and Patolichev.[30] It is surprising not to see a single agricultural expert on a commission which was to revise the Party programme in the light of Stalin's Bolshevik article (cf. text of resolution appointing the commission) in which so much attention was devoted to the vital question of collectivized agriculture. Malenkov was perhaps getting ready to impose a policy of "attaching" the means of production to the work brigades of the collective farms (cf. paragraph 11 (i) above); or it may be that Beria's ideas of a prompt transition to communism were winning. We have only circumstantial evidence showing that the economists propounding such ideas and policies, Yaroshenko,[31] Venzher[32] and Notkin, whom Stalin had all attacked vigorously and by name in his Bolshevik article, were still not doing their self-criticism at the November 4-5, 1952, session of the Academy of Sciences of the USSR (cf. Problems of Economics, No. 12, December, 1952). If they had not yet made their self-criticism despite the fact that Stalin's paper (a) had been produced in economic circles as far back as February, 1952, and (b) had been made official policy at the Congress, then it is logical to think that they must have had protection in high places. Malenkov and Beria are the only two sufficiently influential leaders whose speeches designate as possible "protectors".

15. At this juncture, it became apparent that the campaign for the enforcement of Stalin's economics testament had to be more thoroughly organized and orchestrated. Suslov thus entered the scene on December 24 with a full-scale attack on Fedoseev[33] accompanied by an ominous-sounding reminder of Voznesensky's[34] fate three and a half years earlier.

16. It is possible that Stalin thought that his two lieutenants were organizing his succession a little too rapidly and were clinging to their ideas of governmental and economic reorganization a little too obstinately for his liking. It also seems well in line with Stalin's devious mental processes that he should have called his lieutenants to order by making Suslov attack Fedoseev, and for good measure, by airing the three and a half year old Voznesensky affair, thus dictatorially reasserting his authority on matters of economic policy.

17. It also seems as though he was carrying on another indirect attack against his lieutenants via Pospelov. Pospelov as a new member of the Secretariat appointed after Stalin's death who now appears with the leaders in official photographs, as the main individual commentator on the "thesis" about the 50th anniversary of the Party and as the executor of Bagirov's purge in Azerbaijan — thus presumably a Malenkov man — had been removed after the Congress from his post as head of the Marx-Engels-Lenin Institute and was not given the job of delivering the address (which he had previously done for four years) on the anniversary of Lenin's death.

18. The temporary fall from grace of Fedoseev and Pospelov between the Congress and Stalin's death while other theoreticians such as Yudin,[35] Chesnokov[36] and Suslov were promoted, their return to favour after Stalin's death while the latter were falling back into secondary positions, is another yardstick by which to measure the probable quarrel which was going on between Stalin and his lieutenants.

19. Stalin appears to have been fighting for the survival of his economics testament. But also he seems to have been attempting to assure himself of his almost exclusive place, after death, in the Soviet hall of fame when he had (via Khrushchev) the name of the Party changed in order to drop the appellation of Bolshevik at the Party Congress. It now seems in retrospect as though he had been suspecting and trying to anticipate his lieutenants' desire to return to Leninism when he tried to reduce the place of the Bolsheviks in the Party history. When Pravda on October 14th published the decision to change the name of the Party, this was done in large, heavy type, in a full spread across the entire front page. Pravda said that the appellation "Bolshevik expressed only the historical fact — which had already long lost significance — that at the second session of the Party in 1903 the Leninists gained a majority of votes . . .". Stalin may thus have been anticipating the intention of his lieutenants to celebrate that second session of the Party and thus to reduce (as they did) his position and role in the history of the Party.

20. Meanwhile, he had been trying to drown the authority of his lieutenants in the enlarged Politburo-become-Presidium. In the two official pictures published after the Congress (one of the Bolshoi Theatre meeting on the eve of November 7 and of the reviewing stand on Red Square on November 7), he was juggling them round, and the official order of precedence had given way to the laconic mention of "Stalin and his comrades-in-arms".

21. But these tactics do not seem to have been successful. Even if Fedoseev answered Suslov's[37] attack by making his self-criticism on January 4th, and even if chief editor of Problems of Economics Ostrovityanov[38] followed suit a few days later together with economists Leontiev,[39] Gladkov, etc. — the quartette of Yaroshenko, Notkin, Venzher and Sanina,[40] who had been criticized by Stalin himself, abstained completely from the demanded ritual. There is no firm answer possible to the question as to whether they were being protected again, but it is to be noted that their possible "protectors" emerged out of the anonimity of the laconic "Stalin and his comrades-in-arms" designation into their usual positions when Pravda for January 13, on the same front page which carried the news of the doctors' affair, reported the attendance at the Bolshoi on the previous night of "Stalin, Molotov, Malenkov, Beria, Voroshilov, Khrushchev and others". An explanation of this might be found in the revelation by Stalin's successors in March that a Bureau of the Presidium had been formed, but contrary to the provisions of the by-laws.

22. Be that as it may, matters seem to have somehow gotten out of hand for about a week or ten days after the announcement of the doctors' plot. Perhaps Stalin's lieutenants, or at least the more influential of them or the more liberal of them, were beginning to think that the old man had gone too far and that the enforcement of his economic testament by fear tactics was dangerous for the country. Unfortunately, we may never know what really happened behind the scenes as Pravda deprived us of a possibly precious clue by not publishing any picture of the Party leaders on the anniversary of Lenin's death.

23. We do know, however, that the speech delivered on that occasion (by Mikhailov)[41] contained but a short and rather cursory reference to the doctors' plot, which from there on petered out into a campaign against agents and spies of the West, but relatively even more so against gullibility, window-dressing, carelessness, complacency over past successes in the development of the country, thereby pointing to the economic difficulties as being the basic concern of the Soviet leaders, while they may have been arguing and disagreeing behind the scenes as to how to meet them.

24. Thus I think it is safer to say on the basis of the available evidence that, in the five-month period between the Congress and Stalin's death, the behind-the-scenes struggle was being waged by a Stalin who, since the Voznesensky affair, had not succeeded in imposing definitively his economic doctrines, who was anxious to make his posthumous position safe and to ensure future adherence to his economic testament, and who could not finally make up his mind about the succession.

25. That Stalin let the economics dispute go on for almost four years and that he died in the course of an unsuccessful attempt to settle it, as subsequent events have shown, may be taken as a sign that the Soviet body politic had outlived Stalinism or at least had developed contradictions the solution of which proved to be beyond Stalinism and Stalinist tactics. These contradictions are reflected in the alignment of forces as I have tried to show it in the light of the speeches and other Congress materials. At the time of Stalin's death they probably stood as follows:

(1) the growing class of technicians, probably headed by Malenkov, who under his leadership probably wanted to carry out the Soviet version of a managerial revolution;

(2) the Police, headed by Beria, who realized that his authority was being cut down;

(3) the Party, accustomed to controlling everything and apparently divided between those (Khrushchev probably) who wanted to go on controlling and those (Malenkov) who wanted to give some rope to the growing technocrats;

(4) the Army, probably also divided between its careermen and its Partymen.

26. Basically, however, the division is between the liberals and the non-liberals and from the above enumeration it is easy to classify as liberals those who are willing to take into account the growing technocrats and the growing minorities and as non-liberals the tough Party leaders accustomed to control and the Great Russians whose seat of power probably resides essentially in the Army.

27. Another division might also be made between Leninists and Stalinists, which would roughly correspond to the preceding one — the Leninists being those who correspond to the 1920 Bolsheviks who had to woo the then Tsarist intelligentsia of managers into new cadres and also to woo the national minorities into the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics; the Stalinists being those accustomed to control and not to woo. The Great Russians are probably allied with the latter but the alliance must be basically an uneasy one because Stalinism has not always been kind to those (viz. Zhukov)[42] who were too popular in Great Russia. However the alliance can be a strong one over a given period of time because of the Great Russians' dislike of the minorities and because of the Army's dislike of any efficiency reforms of the technocratic managerial class which might take into account the national economy's budget more than the military budget. I will come back to this further below.

28. In attempting to explain the events of the period between the Congress and Stalin's death, I have telescoped into that period much of what has happened since March. I have covered the events since March pretty thoroughly in various despatches. Briefly to resumé, it appears:

1) that Malenkov has carried out his governmental reorganization and his foreign economic relations policy; that "the next few years" for which he had promised a pro-consumer policy have become the object of a two-three year plan; that he has made an attempt at putting the Party in the role of assistant and not of "supplanter" of the Soviet and economic organs — all of which reforms were announced in his speech to the Congress;

2) that Beria attempted first to restore his personal position, with some success, and the prestige and power of the police even though this involved in the process pledging respect for legality and weeding out the anti-Beria elements (see the developments connected with the release of the doctors); that in doing so he may have decided to array on his side the sympathy of the national minorities (though this is not certain); that his bid for power or at least to retain his position precipitated exactly the opposite result, necessitating his removal.

29. The above shows that Malenkov was a "economic-organizational" liberal, while Beria was a "social-cultural" liberal. As I said in my despatch No. 747 of September 3, 1953,† of the members of the government after Stalin's death, "some (i.e. Malenkov) wanted economic liberalism and others (i.e. Beria) wanted social liberalism", though of course this phrase must be used with reserve since it does not accurately reflect what we mean by "liberalism" in the West.

30. After the elimination of Beria it seemed probable that only Malenkov had been high enough in the hierarchy effectively to oppose Beria; it seemed that Beria had been essentially a tough one, a Stalinist because he was like Stalin a Georgian, who wanted to buy popularity with social reforms that would not directly affect his presumably conservative Stalinist economic policy and who was promoting "legalism" only to cut down the para-legal activities of the Party in order to promote the rule of his MVD.[43] However, this assessment presupposed, as a premise, that Malenkov had had the Party, and Khrushchev in particular, fully behind him. This at first seemed to be the case, as Malenkov acted as rapporteur and directed the plenum where Beria's expulsion was decided.

[43] Ministère de l'Intérieur.
Ministry of Internal Affairs.

31. This hypothesis unfortunately fails to take into account the tensions between the Party and the Government, which wanted the former merely to assist it, not to supplant it. It also failed to take into account the role of Khrushchev, which was difficult to assess, if only for the simple reason that Khrushchev had no portfolio in a Cabinet which appeared to act autonomously and to have the Party in a subordinate position.

32. By putting the new agricultural programme clearly in charge of the Party, Khrushchev has put an end to Malenkov's intentions (explicit in his speech to the Congress) of confining the Party to political-ideological work. By putting the collective farms fully under the control of the Machine Tractor Stations, Khrushchev has also put an end to Malenkov's intention of "attaching" the means of production (viz. the machines in the Machine Tractor Stations) to the collective farms work brigades. Malenkov, in expressing intentions of this nature a year ago, must not have endeared himself unduly to Khrushchev and the Party and an indication that he did not have the Party fully under control after Beria's fall can be seen in the fact that the July "thesis" on the 50th anniversary of the Bolshevik party congress was signed only by its Department of Agitation and Propaganda and by its Marx-Engels-Lenin-Stalin Institute, and that the "thesis" has not been heard of now that Khrushchev has asserted himself as First Secretary (cf. my despatch No. 790 of September 25, 1953†).

33. At the same time we should not neglect the curious rise and fall of personalities in the Army, the relationship of which to the Party and Government leaders is still not at all clear. On July 16, after the arrest of Beria an important meeting was held at which the Army pledged its support to the Party, something which it had not been called on to do after the death of Stalin when it would have seemed more logical for this to occur. Comparing the list of those who attended with the men prominent at the time of the doctors' affair in January, we find that of the latter, comprising Vasilievsky,[44] Konev,[45] Shtemenko,[46] Levchenko[47] and Govorov,[48] only the latter was present on July 16. The rapporteur was Zheltov,[49] a newcomer, and a career military, not a career Party man. Especially conspicuous by his absence was Brezhnev,[50] a career Party man, ex-First Secretary in Moldavia, who was appointed Political Administrator in the Navy in March.

34. It is probable that there was a good deal of manoeuvring by the Party leaders for influence in the Army, but it is impossible at this stage to guess what the alignment is. A similar kind of jockeying has likely been going on in the Party. Pospelov, the Agitation and Propaganda Department, and the Marx-Engels-Lenin-Stalin Institute seem to have been used by Malenkov to increase his influence in the Party. But they have been countered by Khrushchev, and his men, such as Brezhnev, who has now been brought back into the Army, and Suslov who has again increased in importance at the expense of Pospelov. The juggling between the two latter is probably significant as it parallels their fortunes between the Congress and Stalin's death.

35. Another reflection of the manoeuvres in Moscow can be seen in Georgia where two purges have been made since Beria's fall. The first one was made against Beria's henchmen Dekanozov[51] and Mamulov, but kept the Party Secretaries well below Premier Bakhradze[52] and his leading Ministers in the Bureau of the Party. An Army man was brought into the Bureau in the person of Major General Efimov. This first purge can probably be ascribed to Malenkov, as he himself was keeping the central secretariat in a subordinate position to his own.

36. In mid-September, however, after Khrushchev had consolidated his position in the Party, a second purge was made which brought the Party Secretaries from positions Nos. 8, 9 and 11 in the Bureau to positions No. 1, 2 and 3. Major General Efimov was replaced on the Bureau by General of the Army Antonov,[53] Commander of the Trans-Caucasian Military District. This purge may be ascribed to Khrushchev.

37. In the play of forces, there has been a give and take which makes it unreasonable to paint Malenkov as a pure liberal and Khrushchev as a pure disciplinarian. Malenkov has obviously abandoned his theme of an "autonomous" government apparatus only assisted by the Party, in favour of greater control by the latter. The trend of the consolidation of Ministries is now reversed and the number of Ministries is on the increase. At the same time, Khrushchev and the Party have willy-nilly inherited a liberal policy which they can only, for the time being, patch up with disciplinarian measures. Malenkov is being conspicuously silent on matters of internal policy and he is concentrating on exchanging telegrams of praise and good wishes with Chinese and satellite leaders, and receiving their delegations.

38. The Party's Central Committee alone signed the first decree on the new agricultural programme as a whole. But this has been followed by three decrees on specific parts of the programme, all three signed by the Council of Ministers and the Central Committee. It may be that the Malenkov forces and the Khrushchev forces have reached something like a deadlock or a truce. But the alliance may not be an easy one. The technocrats to whom Malenkov had begun to grant autonomy must not like the current tightening, while those who are effecting this tightening must not be happy with the liberal policy they have inherited. The Army may be backing both horses at the same time. Rumours have it that it is "samostoyatelnaya" (independent). In such circumstances, the possibility of bonapartism is not to be discounted, especially since the new MVD chief is not very high in the hierarchy and at any rate not very conspicuous on formal occasions. The situation among the national minorities remains very uncertain. There are rumours that at the same time as the Party and the military commander of the Trans-Caucasian Military District have taken over control in Georgia, that there is a deportation of Georgians under way with Russians being sent in their place. The reaction of the peasants to a new agricultural programme which Malenkov has announced under its rosier "incentives and better pay" aspects but which Khrushchev has turned into a well controlled policy, also poses a serious question. On the whole, the situation seems to be pregnant with possibilities.

39. I apologize for the inordinate length of this despatch which, however, seemed necessary in order to give some idea of the alignment and inter-play of forces in a very complicated situation, and it should be borne in mind that this situation is extremely fluid. As a result I have not attempted to assign the more important personalities to rival groups as there is not enough evidence, to my way of thinking, to say definitely who is with whom. In particular until the mysterious and almost complete silence about Beria is lifted we must only guess what effect his elimination has had on the remaining members of the Party.

40. All we can hope to conclude at the present time is that:

(a) there are economic and social problems of considerable urgency the existence of which go back well before Stalin's death and about which I have been speculating since the beginning of the year;

(b) the solutions advanced to meet these pressures seem to have varied since Stalin's death with the inter-play of personalities;

(c) there is therefore a good deal more to the present jockeying for position than a simple personal struggle for power, though this naturally is still an important factor;

(d) the future of the current policies and of whoever is behind them will depend to a certain extent on the reaction of the consumer, the peasant and the national minorities.

CONVERSATION WITH MR. V. BOURDINE OF THE SOVIET EMBASSY

Mr. Bourdine invited me to lunch at the Chateau today. The main points of our conversation were related to the appointment of Ambassadors in our respective Missions, the situation in Korea, the Coronation and the removal of travel restrictions on foreigners in the USSR.

Exchange of Ambassadors

2. Early in the conversation, Mr. Bourdine said he would hope that it would be possible that something be done to improve the relations between our two countries. I told him that I agreed and would welcome any suggestion he would care to make. His immediate answer was that an easy improvement could come about by the appointment of a Canadian Ambassador to Moscow and of a Soviet Ambassador to Ottawa. In his view this would create a very favourable impression on the public at large in both countries and would help establish better and more frequent contacts at higher levels within the administration. I referred to recent developments in Yugoslavia and Greece where Soviet Ambassadors were appointed and asked him whether this was a new policy of his Government in filling the posts held during the last few years by Chargés d'Affaires. He said that he had no official information on this but thought that this was so; he added immediately that he was very glad that we had taken notice of these latest developments.

3. I merely added that this question was naturally a very important one and could only be considered at the highest level. Throughout the discussion on this subject I remained as non-committal as possible, neither wanting to encourage nor discourage Mr. Bourdine in conveying his message. If it is considered that encouragement should be given in letting the Soviet Embassy know that we would place no barrier in the way of their appointing an Ambassador, I could at a later date pick up the thread from where it was left.

Korea

4. Most of the conversation was devoted to exchanging views on Korea. I made clear at the start that we were intensely interested in seeing that an armistice be concluded at the earliest possible moment. I referred to Mr. Pearson's letter to President Syngman Rhee as an indication of how we felt. Bourdine agreed that it would be in the interest of all concerned if an armistice could be signed but added that Rhee had upset the apple cart considerably. I told him I hoped that it would still be possible that an armistice be signed. He did not demur.

5. I then added that in my view it was most important that the parties more directly concerned should get together once the armistice is signed at a political conference to discuss the problems related to Korea and, if the atmosphere proved to be propitious, also to discuss other problems. I emphasized the necessity of having to get together in order to discuss and eventually solve those problems now separating us. He fully agreed with this but said that it was difficult to see how it was possible to solve some of the important issues in the Far East when the United States proved to be so intransigent, particularly on such questions as Chinese representation. Specifically, he referred to recent pronouncements in the United States to the effect that Washington would cease contributing to the United Nations budget if the Chinese Communists were given United Nations membership. I said that a distinction should always be maintained between certain extremist elements in the United States and the Administration in Washington. Given time and a more propitious international atmosphere, the United States Government might be more forthcoming on such questions as Chinese representation. I said that in my view problems had to be considered piecemeal and that the settlement of one created a more satisfactory atmosphere in which others could be discussed and possibly solved.

6. Bourdine then referred with some enthusiasm to Mr. Pearson's recent declarations on the question of Chinese representation. He said that he had read his speeches with interest and hoped the Americans had fully understood his line. He was afraid, however, that their impact on the Americans generally might not be as great as he hoped.

7. Referring to the internal situation in Canada, Mr. Bourdine said that the postponement of an armistice in Korea might have some effect on the elections here. In his view, the Liberals might lose some seats if an armistice is not signed before the elections. Notwithstanding, he thinks that the Liberals will win with a comfortable majority.

Coronation

8. Mr. Bourdine said that he had read the reports of and comments on the Coronation with great interest. In his view there is little relation between the amount of space devoted to the event generally and the devotion of Canadians to the Crown. They are interested in the "show" and also wish to preserve a traditional link with the Crown. In his view, it has no other significance whatever. Our foreign and trade policies are less and less lined up with those of London and more and more with those of Washington. Personally, he thought that the ceremonies of the Coronation were perhaps overdone and outdated.

Travel Restrictions

9. Mr. Bourdine referred to the announcement made on June 22 about the liberalization of travel facilities afforded foreigners in the USSR. He said that he was very happy this had come about since it would afford foreigners, particularly diplomats, an opportunity of visiting "practically all of the Soviet Union" since the travel ban now applied only to very few cities and border regions. I told him that our colleagues in Moscow would certainly appreciate this move and added that perhaps we might have to look into our own situation here. Mr. Bourdine said that they would anxiously await developments and hope for the best.

Conclusion

10. Although most of the conversation was related to other matters, I think that Bourdine's objective was to sound me out on the possibility of exchanging Ambassadors. It seems to me that, as a result of this approach, this matter should be given careful consideration and, if necessary, followed up with the Soviet Embassy at the appropriate time.

11. Throughout the conversation I found Mr. Bourdine more forthcoming than usual and also less cocky. He refrained from the usual tirades. Even his references to the United States were moderate although he did point out the fact that President Eisenhower did not seem to be able to hold his own. I disagreed with him on this and said that as far as we, in Canada, could see the President had not fallen in the hands of the extremists and could even silence them if and when it was necessary.

12. To sum up my impression of our conversation, I would say that, within my limited experience in that field, it is the "sweetest" I have had with a Soviet diplomat. This could be interpreted to mean either that I have been taken for a ride or that Bourdine made a deliberate attempt to create an atmosphere favourable to discussing common problems. Or both.

APPOINTMENT OF SOVIET AMBASSADOR TO CANADA

1. I was called to Foreign Ministry at noon today by Gromyko[55] who stated that the Soviet Government intended to appoint an Ambassador to Ottawa. He then asked for agrément of Dmitri Stepanovich Chuvakhin.

2. According to biographical details given me by Gromyko, Chuvakhin was born in 1903 and is a graduate of Moscow Institute of Oriental Studies. He served as First Secretary in Washington from 1938 to 1942; and in Ministry of Foreign Affairs until 1945. He was appointed Counsellor in Belgrade in 1945 and transferred almost immediately to Albania as Minister, returning to Ministry of Foreign Affairs in 1952 where he has served until now. According to Gromyko, he speaks good English.

3. I said I would immediately transmit this information to you and he said he would be grateful for an early answer. He made no mention of reciprocity but was extremely affable throughout the entire interview.

AGRÉMENT FOR SOVIET AMBASSADOR TO CANADA

Reference: Our telegram No. 91 of August 20.

If you have not already acted on the instructions contained in my telegram under reference, please do not repeat not ask the Soviet authorities to inform us in advance of the date on which they announce the appointment of their Ambassador to Canada. On second thought, we think that this would appear to demonstrate excessive interest on our part in what the Minister wishes to treat as far as possible as a routine move.

2. In reply to press enquiries here resulting from news of the appointment, we intend to play down the appointment and to discourage speculation as to its importance.

3. Bourdine of the Soviet Embassy here has raised informally with officers of the Department the possibility of reciprocal appointment but has got no answer from us. When the press raise this question we shall say that consideration will have to be given to it in due course by the Government. For your own information, we consider that we shall have to reciprocate by sending an Ambassador but if the Soviet authorities raise the question of reciprocity with you, you should at this stage restrict yourself to saying that this matter will no doubt be taken under consideration by the Canadian Government. Ends.

DISCUSSION WITH MR. BOURDINE OF THE SOVIET EMBASSY

Today I lunched, at his invitation, with Mr. Bourdine of the Soviet Embassy in the Chateau Grill. It was an amiable occasion during which it seemed to me the discussion on both sides was franker than any I have ever had with a Soviet official. Either Mr. Bourdine himself has changed somewhat, or my original impressions of him were wrong. When he first came here several years ago he seemed to me nothing but a slick operator. Now, however, I am inclined to agree with Mr. Ford, who expressed a belief in the sincerity of Mr. Bourdine's convictions. It may of course be that recent trends in Moscow have given Mr. Bourdine a little more confidence in his license to speak if not freely at least more flexibly. He has of course always seemed to have a privileged position in the Soviet Embassy, and this I had always been inclined to attribute to the fact that he had been designated with special powers. I still think this is probably the case, but I have wondered somewhat if his greater contacts with Canadians may be attributed, at least to some extent, simply to the fact that he is the only member of the Soviet Embassy who is almost completely fluent in English, able to express accurately what he wishes to say or imply and able to understand the nuances of those talking to him.

Our conversation ranged over a good many current topics, and there was nothing particularly noteworthy in Mr. Bourdine's views. Although he expressed the conventional Soviet views on United States relations with Spain, the rising power of Germany and on recent developments in NATO, he expressed them simply and on the whole moderately and reasonably enough to lead one to believe that he was sincere. This sincerity struck me particularly when he produced his ingenuously orthodox interpretation of Canadian foreign policy as being dictated by the United States. Our acceptance of this position, according to Mr. Bourdine, was attributable simply to the fact that we knew that the withdrawal of American investment in Canada would ruin us. When I said that I thought there were few considerations which bothered us less in our attempt to formulate Canadian policies than worry about the withdrawal of American investments and emphasized the fact that we frequently differed from the Americans in our policies, he said that we did so only in small things. What would happen if Canada decided to become a close friend of the Soviet Union? The Americans would not tolerate such a situation, and we knew it. As this was a proposition which one could not deny with entire conviction, I emphasized the fact that we agreed with the Americans in basic matters of foreign policy not because we were forced to do so but because of our own free will we reached the same conclusions. Mr. Bourdine could not of course accept this argument. He is a good enough diplomat always to maintain the attitude that Canadians are misguided and maltreated children, not naturally sinful like the Americans but forced into error against their own better judgment. I was somewhat hurt when, during my effort to illustrate Canadian independence in foreign policy, Mr. Bourdine said that he could not remember how we had voted in the recent discussion in the UN on the composition of the Korean Political Conference. I protested: "Come, come, Mr. Bourdine; surely it is your job to study Canadian foreign policy as it is and not just as it is reflected in the Canadian Tribune". He replied: "To be quite frank, I never read that paper".

One thing which interested me was the complete frankness with which he accepted and discussed the changes in Soviet policy since the death of Stalin. He made no bones about the fact that Pravda's tone had altered, but complained that all these gestures by the Soviet Union had met with no response whatsoever from the United States. The Americans had immediately expressed distrust of Soviet intentions and had become still more provocative. I said that I personally thought the Americans might well have been more forthcoming, but I realized that they had many reasons for scepticism and that the gestures had not cut very deep. He asked me if I thought that the Korean truce was of no importance and I said that of course it was a matter of real importance but I did not consider it any more a concession on the Soviet part than on ours. He did not pretend that we had gained more than they out of the truce but emphasized again that this was an indication of goodwill.

On the subject of gestures he then proceeded to what was I think the main purpose of his conversation. He implied that the American failure to respond to Soviet gestures might be taken for granted but that he had hoped for more from Canadians. He said that Canadians would now be able to get better reporting on the Soviet Union because his Embassy had just that day received instructions to grant visas to a correspondent of the "Canadian Press" who was going to Moscow, and also to Gerald Clarke of Weekend Magazine. (He seemed pretty vague about this so-called "Canadian Press" correspondent, and as I was unaware of any such application I could not get very far.) Then he said that he personally had been extremely disappointed in our failure to appoint an Ambassador to Moscow before this. We had always indicated that if his Government took the first step we would respond. Our relations had had a bad period (he was very unspecific about this period). Now the Soviet Union had made a gesture to re-establish good relations, and we had made no response. This was very embarrassing for Mr. Teplov and for him personally. He implied that he had taken the stand to his own Government that if they appointed an Ambassador we would do likewise, but we had let him down. I told him that as I had recently returned to Ottawa I was unaware of what our intentions were in this respect, but I pointed out that if we were going to send an Ambassador to Moscow it was always difficult to make a sudden appointment because we had not many experienced senior officers and every change involved consequent changes which had to be thought out. As it was obvious from his previous conversation that he was entirely familiar with the change in Mr. Collins' plans, I pointed out that it was not quite true to say that their decision to send an Ambassador to Ottawa had met with no response on our side; we had at least altered our previous plans, thereby causing ourselves considerable difficulty. He placed or professed to place great emphasis on this matter and implied that his Government took a very serious view of our failure. At another time during lunch when I made polite inquiries about the date of arrival of his new Ambassador, he looked very mysterious and said that he knew nothing of the Ambassador's plans and had no official information from Moscow, but it was always possible that the uncertainty of the Soviet Ambassador's plans were related to our failure to do anything about appointing a Canadian Ambassador. He did not make this statement categorically, but there was no doubt at all that he intended to leave with me the impression that the Soviet Ambassador would not arrive here until we acted. Whether this was a ruse which he had thought up for himself I don't know, but I think it is not at all unlikely that the Russians would delay actually sending their man until it is clear that we intend to reciprocate.

Loans and Credits to the USSR

In 1945 three credits were extended to the USSR — $2.9 million for the purchase of hydro-electric equipment, $8.99 million for the purchase of wheat and flour, and $3.3 million for industrial equipment delivered after termination of mutual aid. The first has been wholly repaid. After protracted negotiations the USSR finally agreed to repay the $8.99 million credit in five instalments commencing June 1953. The $3.3 million claim remains unsettled. This claim arises out of the delivery of various items of industrial equipment to the USSR in the latter months of 1945 after the cessation of hostilities on September 2nd of that year. The USSR gave specific written assurances on October 9, 1945, that if agreement was not reached on the credit arrangements then under discussion, the Government of the USSR would pay in cash for all items delivered to it after September 2, 1945. Presentation of this claim was deferred while settlement of the larger $8.99 million claim, in respect of food shipments, was being pursued. Supporting documentation was prepared and the claim formally presented in Moscow in October, 1951. We have not been able to obtain any response whatever from the Soviet authorities. Our embassy representatives have raised the matter with the appropriate Soviet officials nine times with no result. They have neither denied nor recognized the claim — they simply state that they are not ready to give an answer. This claim is now seven years old and we have been trying without success for more than two years to get it settled. There is nothing much that can be done except perhaps to publicize the failure of the USSR to recognize its obligations. Such a step, however, might remove any possibility of collecting on the claim and might also prejudice future repayments on the other outstanding credit. Consequently it is recommended that no special step be taken to publicize the situation for the time being and that the Canadian Embassy in Moscow be asked to continue to press the Soviet authorities.

The USSR agreed in October, 1944, to pay $20 million in US dollars to the International Nickel Company of Canada Limited in compensation for the Petsamo nickel mines in Finland which were taken over by the USSR at the end of the war. The Canadian Government received the sums paid under the agreement and handed them over to the International Nickel Company. The final payment was due December 31, 1951. However, $2.9 million (US) is still outstanding because the USSR paid only 50% of the last five instalments in US dollars and proffered payment of the balance in inconvertible sterling. This form of payment was not in accordance with the agreement and unacceptable to the International Nickel Company. The USSR has since consistently refused to make any other form of payment, turning down flatly suggestions that payment in gold or Canadian dollars would be acceptable. The Canadian Embassy in Moscow has been making periodic representation to the USSR Government without avail concerning these outstanding amounts. It has been considered advisable that any publicity given to this matter be made by International Nickel Company rather than by the Canadian Government in view of the outstanding governmental claims against the USSR.

Ming Sung

In November 1946, a guarantee was given by the Government to a group of three Canadian banks (Dominion, Imperial and Toronto) in respect of a credit provided by them to the Ming Sung Industrial Company Limited to enable that Company to purchase specially designed ships for use on the Yangtze River. The Chinese Government agreed to act as the primary guarantor of the loan. The Company defaulted on the loan in June, 1951, and the Canadian Government became liable under the guarantee in October, 1951. It was then decided to try to recover the defaulted payment by instituting legal proceedings in Hong Kong under the mortgages which the banks hold on the ships. At this stage the Company advised that the crews refused to take the ships from Canton to Hong Kong. Under present circumstances legal proceedings are ineffective while the ships are in Canton. Under its guarantee, the Canadian Government has up to the present paid $2,523,174.78 in defaulted principal and $516,988.32 in defaulted interest to the three banks. The Chinese Government in Formosa has been asked, as the primary guarantor, to pay the defaulted amounts but that government has replied that it is financially unable to do so.

Export Credit Loan to China

Under a financial agreement entered into on February 7, 1946, and supplementary arrangements, a credit not to exceed $60 million was made available to the Government of China to be utilized up to December 31, 1948. At that date the total consolidated indebtedness of the Government of China amounted to $52,215,997.48. Difficulties first arose in respect of the principal payment of $1,740,000 due December 31, 1949. (Up to that time payments totalling $3.5 million had been received.) A partial payment of slightly over $1 million was arranged against the principal of $1.7 million due December 31, 1949, and payment of the balance, together with payments due for the next two years, was deferred by agreement until December 31, 1952. Deferred payments of principal and interest, amounting to $9,331,175.73, were due on December 31, 1952. This amount includes interest at 3 per cent on the deferred interest payments.

The Chinese Ambassador informed the Deputy Minister of Finance on November 28th last that his government was unable to meet the payment of $9.3 million due December 31, 1952, nor was his government able for the time being to meet any further instalments. In the circumstances two alternatives are open. Provision is made in the text of the financial agreement with China that if the debtor government defaults on any principal instalment of the loan, the whole loan becomes due automatically — whereas it is provided in the bonds, issued pursuant to the agreement, that where a principal instalment of a bond is defaulted, the whole issue of bonds becomes due only at the option of the Minister of Finance. In the opinion of the Solicitor to the Treasury the bonds constitute the primary obligation of the debtor and the Government would be justified in enforcing them according to their terms, although action could also be taken under the mandatory provision in the agreement. Under the terms of comparable loans extended by the United States to China which have also been defaulted, it is provided that if a payment is not made, the whole amount of the loan becomes due and payable. However, these clauses have never been invoked by the United States and no move has been made to formally declare China in default. From the information we have been able to gather on the position of the government in Formosa, it would appear that it is financially unable to meet payments on the Canadian and United States loans. Indeed the Formosan authorities are being supported by large grants in aid from the United States.

It is recommended (a) that no attempt should be made to enforce the acceleration clause against the Government of China, (b) that the loan should not formally be declared in default, (c) that payments be requested regularly when due, (d) that interest payments be calculated on the total indebtedness now outstanding without charging interest on unpaid interest payments, and (e) that all legal requirements be fulfilled in order to ensure that a valid claim can be made for all outstanding amounts if and when we recognize a government in continental China.

Export Credit Loan to Czechoslovakia

By an agreement of March 1, 1945, as amended, a credit not to exceed $19 million was extended to the Government of Czechoslovakia to be utilized up to December 31, 1948. The total consolidated debt at that date amounted to $16,673,706.82. Instalments on this debt became due on January 1, 1948, and are scheduled to be completed on November 27, 1954. All payments were received until principal in the amount of $3,330,000 with interest of $33,984.24 was not remitted when due on November 27, 1952. Nor was the interest payment of $83,250, due on January 1, 1953, received. The total overdue amount is now $3,447,234.24. The unpaid principal amount of the loan still outstanding is $9,990,000.

As in the case of China, the text of the loan agreement provides that if the debtor government defaults on a principal payment, the whole loan becomes due and payable. The terms of the bonds, however, likewise provide an option to be exercised by the Minister of Finance.

In December, 1951, a Czech representative commented, during trade discussions in Ottawa with Canadian representatives, that reduction in Canadian exports to Czechoslovakia of strategic materials might affect their capacity to service the loan. A further development took place in the trade field in November, 1952, when the Czech Government was informed that the Canadian Government would apply appraised valuations to certain imports from Czechoslovakia in accordance with Canadian law and consistent with the provisions of the GATT. This action was taken after repeated efforts over a considerable period to obtain permission from the Czech Government for Canadian representatives to investigate in Czechoslovakia the values of Czech goods which it appeared were being dumped into Canada. Czech embassy officials in Ottawa have intimated in informal discussions that their Government might be prepared to pay the amount owing on the loan if the action against Czech dumping were withdrawn. Canadian officials pointed out that there was no connection between these two matters, that the obligations under the loan were unconditional, and that the action against dumping was in accordance with our laws and in accordance with the provisions of our trade agreements with Czechoslovakia and other countries.

Under the terms of a US credit to Czechoslovakia, repayments can be made either in US dollars or in Czech crowns. In May, 1952, the Czech Government refused to make a payment in crowns. In the case of this loan, at any rate, the default cannot be attributed to trade policies causing difficulties for Czechoslovakia in acquiring the dollars to service the loan.

It is recommended that (a) we should not accept any proposal which would involve the withdrawal of our action against Czech dumping in return for an undertaking to meet the payments on the loan, (b) the Government of Czechoslovakia be informed that if the overdue payments are not remitted the whole loan will be formally declared to be in default and that this default will be reported to Parliament.

Loan to Indonesia — Request for release of the Netherlands guarantee

The credit extended in October, 1945, to the Bank for the Netherlands Indies, an agency of the Government of the Netherlands Indies, was guaranteed by that Government. Subsequently in 1947 the terms of the loan were revised and extended on condition that the obligations under both the original and supplementary agreements would be guaranteed by both the Governments of the Netherlands and Indonesia. The guarantee was requested in February, 1947, and later given in view of the impending transfer of sovereignty to Indonesia. Because of the political and economic uncertainties in Indonesia surrounding this transfer of sovereignty, the Canadian Government was not prepared at that time to make further credit available without the express guarantee of the Government of the Netherlands. The Canadian Government has now been requested by both the Governments of the Netherlands and Indonesia to release the Government of the Netherlands from its guarantee. The request is made on the grounds that after the unconditional transfer of sovereignty a guarantee from the Netherlands for a debt of Indonesia to a third country does not fit in with the present relationship between the two countries.

The Canadian Aide Mémoire requesting the Netherlands' guarantee left the possibility open that the guarantee might subsequently be waived if it were found possible to obtain from the government or governments succeeding the Government of the Netherlands Indies a guarantee acceptable to the Canadian Government. It was made clear at the time, however, that acceptability would not depend merely on technical legal points but was intended to have regard to political and economic considerations. The political and economic developments in Indonesia since transfer of sovereignty have not, however, been such that it would be prudent from the Canadian viewpoint to relieve the Netherlands of its guarantee. The original amount of the loan was $15.4 million, of which $9.3 million remains outstanding. Thus far all instalments have been paid on the due dates.

A similar request for release of the Netherlands' guarantee has been made to the US Government in respect of a surplus property credit extended to the Netherlands Indies in 1946. It is understood that the US Government is disposed for political reasons to grant the request. The Netherlands' guarantee of this loan was, however, given some time before the question of transfer of sovereignty arose and was not given, as in the case of the Canadian loan, because of the impending transfer of sovereignty.

Because (a) it was clearly understood at the time the guarantee was requested that its release would depend on political and economic circumstances in Indonesia and that present conditions in Indonesia are not such as enable us to have an unqualified confidence that the loan will be repaid, (b) the circumstances leading to the guarantee of the Canadian loan and considerations regarding its release differ substantially from that of the US loan, and (c) the balance of the loan is due to be paid off within the next 2½ years, it is recommended that the request for the release of the Netherlands' guarantee be not granted.

FINANCE; CURRENT STATUS OF EXTERNAL LOANS AND CREDITS

10. The Minister of Finance said that out of a total of $2,562.6 million of external loans, credits and guarantees made by the Canadian government, $1,843.9 million was outstanding but not due and $19 million was overdue as of January 2nd, 1953. The total of $19 million in overdue amounts was made up of a $3.3 million claim on Russia for deliveries made in the autumn of 1945, $3 million owed to three Canadian banks by the Ming Sung Company, $9.3 million owed by China on an Export Credits Insurance loan and $3.4 million owed by Czechoslovakia also on an Export Credits loan. In addition, the USSR still owed the International Nickel Company of Canada $2.9 million on the agreed total payment of $20 million in compensation for the Petsamo nickel mines in Finland which were taken over by Russia at the end of World War II.

He submitted recommendations as to the stand the government might take in respect of these various defaults.

An explanatory note had been circulated.

(Minister's memorandum, Jan. 20, 1953 — Cab. Doc. 15-53)

11. The Cabinet, after discussion, noted the report of the Minister of Finance and agreed that,—

(a) in respect of the $3.3 million overdue on deliveries made to the USSR in the autumn of 1945, no special steps be taken to publicize the situation for the time being but that the Canadian Embassy in Moscow be instructed to continue to press Soviet authorities for payment;

(b) any publicity given to the payment still due by Russia to the International Nickel Company of Canada be made by that Company rather than by the Canadian government;

(c) further enquiries be made to ascertain whether there was any possibility that the Nationalist Government of China might be in a position to honour in whole or in part its guarantee of the Ming Sung loan or to meet overdue payments on the Export Credits loan to China; it being understood that all legal requirements should be fulfilled in respect of both matters, in order to ensure that a valid claim could be made for all outstanding amounts if and when Canada recognized a government in continental China;

(d) in respect of the overdue amount of $3.4 million on the Export Credits loan of $16.6 million to Czechoslovakia, the government of that country be informed that Canada could not agree to discontinue action against Czech dumping in return for payment of the overdue instalments and that if these overdue payments were not remitted the whole loan would be formally declared to be in default and the default reported to Parliament; and,

(e) the Netherlands Government be not released at this time from its guarantee of the $15.4 million Export Credits loan to the Netherlands Indies.

DESPATCH 91 Moscow, January 28, 1953

CONFIDENTIAL

SOVIET DEBT FOR SHIPMENTS UNDER MUTUAL AID

Reference: Our telegram No. 12 of January 27, 1953.†

I attach herewith an office translation of the Soviet note No. 3/2E of January 26, and the original Russian text of the note† in which the Soviet Ministry of Foreign Affairs expresses its willingness to enter into negotiations concerning the question of our claim in respect of industrial equipment supplied to the USSR after the termination of mutual aid.

2. It took the Soviet authorities approximately 15 months to agree to our original note requesting negotiations. During that time I made repeated requests at various levels, both oral and written, in the Soviet Foreign Office for a reply without once getting any indication of what the Soviet attitude was. The fact that they did, however, eventually accede to our request is a further indication that the tactics of slow but continued pressure can pay off.

3. Since you sent me the instructions contained in your despatch No. S-456 of September 12, 1951 you may have modified your views in some respects concerning the tactics we should use when negotiations actually commence, and I should be grateful if you would let me have as soon as possible any additional instructions in this respect. In particular, as I mentioned in my telegram, I trust that the instructions contained in your despatch to resist strongly a Soviet attempt to obtain a further credit should be considered as our first and not our final position. It is obvious from the Soviet note that they are going to insist on repayment over a period of time, I should imagine somewhat along the lines of the agreement of September 1950. If our final position is to be cash repayment, even though we have an extremely good argument in its favour, I do not think we will get anywhere at all. Insistence on it is, of course, mandatory as a first argument and it may help us to get better terms in the long run but I think we must be prepared to accept some other form of repayment. My personal feeling is that the Soviet authorities may decide on a fairly rapid conclusion of the negotiations simply in order to contrast this with the treatment given the Americans on the question of lend lease.

4. I notice that in connection with the negotiations of 1950 concerning repayment of the food loan, you designated the Secretaries of the Embassy, Mr. Crowe and Mr. Stansfield,[57] to carry out the detailed negotiations with the representatives of the Ministry of Foreign Trade. I presume, therefore, that you would like to follow the same procedure this time and designate Mr. Black[58] and Mr. Trottier.[59] However, if you wish me to handle the matter I would, of course, be very happy to do so. In any case I would exercise normal supervision over the negotiations.

NOTE NO. 3/2E Moscow, January 26, 1953

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the USSR has the honour to inform the Canadian Embassy, in connection with the Embassy's note of October 9th, 1951, that the Soviet Government has instructed the Ministry of Foreign Trade to enter into negotiations with representatives of the Canadian Government on the question mentioned in the above note of the Embassy.

It should be kept in view that the indebtedness of the Soviet organizations, which will be fixed as a result of these negotiations, will be regulated on the basis of a credit, the conditions of which will be defined in the process of the negotiations.

SOVIET DEBT FOR SHIPMENTS UNDER MUTUAL AID

Reference: Your telegram No. 12 of January 27, 1953† and your despatch No. 91 of January 28, 1953.

You are right in assuming that insistence on a cash settlement of this debt is a first and not a final position to be adopted in negotiation with the Soviet Government. It is clear, in view of the wording of the Foreign Ministry's Note, that a cash settlement is rather unlikely. It must, however, be insisted upon in the first instance, for the reasons you have noted.

2. It is possible, moreover, that something can be done to make a cash settlement appear to the Soviet side as the less objectionable of two evils. Service costs have been incurred by the Canadian Government, in respect of the Soviet debt, to an amount in the vicinity of $500,000. It would be appropriate, in the early stages of negotiation, to stress that the amount of the cash settlement requested represents only the original cash payments made by the Canadian Government on behalf of the Soviet Government. Our representatives could go on to say that, while such costs are not involved in the claim for a cash settlement, the Canadian Government may be obliged to consider the whole question of service costs if any proposal for credit terms is made.

3. In the meantime, we should endeavour to prevent the stipulation in the Ministry's Note from becoming a subject for protracted correspondence, delaying the opening of negotiations. I attach a suggested note to the Ministry.† You will observe that the concluding paragraph of this draft note sidesteps the point raised by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, stating that the Canadian representatives will have full power to negotiate, and that all matters relating to the settlement of the Canadian claim are considered to be appropriate subjects for negotiation. It may be hoped that the reference to full powers will touch the pride of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and make it wish to avoid suggesting that Soviet representatives will not be as fully trusted by their Government as Canadian representatives are by theirs. I realize that this attempt to avoid the issue may well prove unsuccessful. If so, the next step will have to be considered in the light of the Foreign Ministry's reply. On the other hand, the Ministry of Foreign Trade may enter into negotiations without further correspondence, but have its negotiators state at the outset that they are bound by the stipulation made in the note of January 26. That would probably be satisfactory from our point of view, in that it would enable our side to make the point in paragraph 2 above.

4. While the statement on full powers outlined above may be usefully employed for tactical purposes, it is not in fact necessary at this stage to set forth full instructions for the conduct of negotiations. The first step is for the negotiators to ascertain whether there is agreement on the total amount of the indebtedness, as set forth in our Despatch No. S-456 of September 12, 1951. If the Soviet representatives challenge the figure of total indebtedness in any way, our representatives will of course call for a recess in which to study the Soviet representations.

5. If the total amount of indebtedness can be agreed upon, the next step is for our negotiators to state that the Canadian Government expects cash settlement. When this demand meets the expected Soviet response, our representatives should continue on the lines already suggested. If the Soviet representatives cite the agreement of September 1950 as a precedent, this should be answered in the manner suggested in paragraph 6 of the despatch of September 12, 1951.

6. I should anticipate that the initial negotiations would not go beyond this point. Either the Soviet representatives would request time to consider the question of the possible addition of service costs to the total indebtedness, if credit terms are requested, or the Soviet representatives would insist on putting forward specific proposals for credit arrangements and the Canadian representatives could similarly request time to examine those proposals.

7. At that stage, consideration could be given to our subsequent tactics in the light of your recommendations and your report on what had taken place so far.

8. I think the foregoing instructions, coupled with the material you already have on file, should prove adequate if early negotiations are entered into by the Soviet Government. In the event, however, that you wish to raise any questions in connection with these instructions, or in connection with the attached draft reply to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, it might be desirable for you to do so by telegram before you make any reply to the Ministry.

9. You may take it that Mr. Black and Mr. Trottier are authorized to conduct negotiations on behalf of the Canadian Government. I should only wish you to enter into the detailed work of negotiation yourself if a very senior official of the Ministry of Foreign Trade were named as one of the Soviet representatives. I consider this a most unlikely eventuality. You would, of course, be designated to sign any Exchange of Notes or other agreement resulting from the negotiations.

NOTE NO. 33 Moscow, March 11, 1953

The Canadian Embassy presents its compliments to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and has the honour to acknowledge receipt of the Ministry's Note 3/2E of January 26, 1953, informing the Embassy that the Soviet Government has instructed the Ministry of Foreign Trade to enter into negotiations with representatives of the Canadian Government regarding the Canadian Government's claim in respect of the industrial equipment delivered to the USSR after September 1, 1945.

The Embassy looks forward to learning from the Ministry of Foreign Trade the names of the officials who will be designated to meet with representatives named by the Canadian Government.

The Canadian representatives will have full power to negotiate on behalf of the Canadian Government. The Canadian Government considers, moreover, that all matters relating to the settlement of its claim are appropriate subjects for consideration in the course of the negotiations.

SESSION OF MUTUAL AID NEGOTIATIONS

Reference: My telegram No. 51.†

1. The first meeting took place today. Black represented the Embassy: Cheklin[60] and Spandarian[61] the Soviet Government.

2. We began by expressing our wish for early agreement on amount of debt and set forth our views on desirability of a cash settlement. Cheklin replied that his government felt that the correct amount of debt should be $3,118,960.24. His reasons were, firstly, that two diesel engines, 500 H.P., 8 cylinders, item 3, contract UN 9687, total cost $75,846.33, were not involved in debt as both engines were destined for minesweepers built by Canada for the Soviet Navy; secondly, that total cost of shipments made on S.S. Minchurin, items 1 and 2, UN 9157, to the amount of $83,335.47 is not properly a part of debt as ocean bills of lading are all dated before midnight September 1st, 1945. The amount of debt as suggested by Cheklin shows a discrepancy of $51.34 so that if we were to accept these claims, the debt would appear to be $3,119,011.58.

3. Cheklin then asked for an overall deduction to be made from the total sum of the debt because prices paid in Canada were much higher than prices paid for similar equipment bought at that time from the United States and the United Kingdom. He mentioned discussions with the Soviet Commercial Counsellor in Ottawa in 1945, but based his arguments for a scale down of the debt not so much on special agreement (para. 4 of your despatch No. S.456 of September 12th, 1951) but on the fact that the United States had granted a deduction of 10 percent to the Soviet Union for repayment on non-foodstuffs, Clause 2 (a), Schedule 11 Lend Lease between the United States and Soviet Union, in report to Congress on Lend Lease, September 30th, 1945 (page 51). Cheklin claimed that any deductions granted by the Canadian Government should be higher because of our higher prices and the fact that compressors and electric motors (which comprise nearly half the debt) cost nearly 50 percent less in the United States and the United Kingdom. He put forward as a preliminary figure an overall reduction of 30 percent but emphasized that this was only preliminary.

4. Cheklin then discussed credit payments and put forward suggestion of payments made on credit terms, using 1950 agreement as a precedent. We expressed the view contained in your instructions regarding credit payments and at the mention of $500,000 in service costs Cheklin suggested that the matter of payments be discussed at a later date once the amount of debt had been agreed. He intimated that the Soviet Government might be willing to pay in cash but that this depended on our attitude with regard to the overall reductions. The discussions closed on this point and Cheklin was told that we would bring his government's views to the attention of the Canadian Government.

5. I should appreciate receiving instructions, firstly, with regard to specific items which the Soviet Government claim are not part of the debt and, secondly, with regard to an overall reduction of the debt. The suggestions contained in your despatch of September 12, 1951, for resisting any scale down of the debt still apply but we are of the impression that the Soviet Government will do their utmost to obtain some reduction and that it is on this point that the hardest bargaining will take place. Insofar as the matter of service cost is concerned, if we are to raise this matter in attempt to obtain a cash settlement, it might be useful if we have details of costs to back up our case.

DESPATCH 354 Moscow, April 24, 1953

CONFIDENTIAL

MUTUAL AID NEGOTIATIONS

Reference: My Telegram No. 54 of April 22, 1953.

My telegram under reference gave the details of the first meeting with officials of the Ministry of Foreign Trade, but I thought it might be useful in this despatch to review the Soviet stand and make some suggestions for counter-proposals at the next meeting. The Soviet negotiators felt that two items were not part of the debt:

(a) The two diesel engines, 500 HP, 8 cylinders, item 3, contract UN9687, total cost $75,846.33, were destined for the minesweepers built by Canada for the Soviet Navy;

(b) The total cost of the shipment made on the S.S. Minchurin, items 1 and 2, UN9157, total cost $83,335.47, is not affected by the debt as the ocean bills of lading are all dated before midnight September 1, 1945.

I am in no position to judge the reliability of these claims though they seem reasonable, but in any case it should not be difficult to settle these two items and agree on the total amount of the debt at the next meeting.

2. The Soviet request for a scaling-down of the debt, because of higher prices in Canada than in the United States and the United Kingdom, and because discussions had at one time taken place concerning a special arrangement to lower prices (discussions which were broken off by the Soviet Government) seems to us to be based on rather flimsy ground. The figure of a 30% deduction is probably a try-on (Cheklin could give no basis for such a figure but stated that experts had examined the difference in prices and that this was their preliminary figure) and does not seem to be taken too seriously by the Soviet negotiators, who in the course of the conversation mentioned a possible final figure of 25%. It did seem to us however that they firmly believed that some deduction should be made and if we take our stand that there is no legal or moral reason for a deduction they are liable to let negotiations lapse.

3. Cheklin has by implication tied the question of a deduction to the method of payment by saying that: "A settlement of the deduction question will facilitate payment". I wonder whether we might not in return apply the service costs of approximately $500,000 to the request for a scaling-down of the debt. We might at the next meeting make a statement outlining our position with regard to a deduction and point out the lack of legal and moral reasons for such a deduction and then go on to say that we are willing however to apply the service costs against the debt and by waiving our right to these costs we in effect are reducing the overall cost by about 15%. If we use this argument, we of course lose our trump card in trying to use service costs to effect payment by cash.

4. The other alternatives are refusing to budge on our stand that there is no basis for a deduction in which case, as I have pointed out, negotiations might lapse, or haggling over a figure for deduction while still reserving our right to raise the question of service costs when the method of payment is discussed.

5. The method of payment question, as I mentioned in my telegram, was raised by Cheklin who suggested a credit arrangement taking the 1950 agreement as a precedent. When we raised the matter of service costs he suggested discussing the matter later once the deduction question had been settled. Cheklin stated that his Government would be willing to come to an agreement as quickly as possible but said: "Borrowing countries always want to repay by credit".

6. The meeting took place in Cheklin's office on the third floor of the same building which houses the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. It lasted 45 minutes, and was quite informal. No detailed notes were taken and both Cheklin and Spandarian were as affable as Armenian traders can be when attempting to strike a bargain. Cheklin told Black that he would be glad to meet him any time, that he was always available and that a further meeting could be quickly arranged by a telephone call to his office. I shall look forward to receiving your instructions on what should be the course we should follow in our next meeting.

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au chargé d'affaires en Union soviétique

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Chargé d'Affaires in Soviet Union

DESPATCH S-159 Ottawa, May 19, 1953

CONFIDENTIAL

MUTUAL AID NEGOTIATIONS

Reference: Your telegram No. 54 of April 22, 1953 and despatch No. 354 of April 24, 1953.

The information contained in your two communications under reference has been carefully studied. The following instructions cover the various points raised.

Deletion of two items

2. The Soviet negotiators may be informed that their representations have been considered and that the Canadian Government is prepared to reduce the amount of the claim to $3,119,011.58. As you noted in your telegram, this is the correct figure after the deletion of the two items in question. If the Soviet representatives continue to cite their figure of $3,118,960.24, they should be asked for an explanation of the discrepancy of $51.34.

Percentage reduction in total debt

3. Our representatives should state that the Canadian Government can find no grounds which would justify any percentage reduction in the total amount of the claim.

4. The claim represents the actual and direct costs incurred by the Canadian Government on behalf of the Government of the USSR in respect of the equipment delivered to and accepted by the Soviet Government. The costs incurred by the Canadian Government are based on the finally adjusted prices (f.o.b. plant) paid by the Canadian Government under contracts with Canadian suppliers. The prices paid are the same as the Government of Canada would itself have been willing to pay had the equipment been purchased for its own account. The prices paid were subject to the same control and close scrutiny which applied to all procurement by the Canadian Government from Canadian suppliers at that time. The prices have been reduced by the amount of taxes and duties included in the contract prices, representing an overall reduction of approximately 8% of contract prices.

5. The Soviet representatives referred to a reduction of 10% against contract prices, granted by the United States in respect of non-foodstuffs under an agreement signed on October 15, 1945 between the Governments of the Soviet Union and the United States. This arrangement was part of an overall settlement under which agreement was reached for the disposition of the undelivered articles which were in inventory or procurement in the United States for the USSR prior to the cessation of lend-lease arrangements. This agreement included a general undertaking by the USSR to accept delivery of those articles which were in inventory or procurement in the United States for the Soviet Union at that time, and it provided that the USSR would be released from its obligation to accept such articles only upon payment of any net losses to the United States Government, including cancellation charges, resulting from a decision of the USSR not to accept such articles. As the Soviet Government is aware, the Government of the USSR and the Government of Canada were not able to reach a general agreement in respect of goods originally ordered for the USSR but not delivered before the termination of Mutual Aid arrangements. As a result, the Canadian Government was obliged to incur expenditures totalling over $8 million on costs of cancellations effected on the instructions of Soviet representatives, cancellation costs resulting from stoppage of production on orders outstanding, and losses on stores declared surplus.

6. In the light of these losses incurred by the Canadian Government in the disposition of goods on order for the USSR, and in the absence of any undertaking by the Soviet Government to assume responsibility for such losses, the arrangement in respect of prices as part of an overall settlement between the United States and the USSR does not appear to be relevant to the present situation. In this claim the Soviet Government is simply requested to reimburse the Canadian Government for the net costs incurred by it in respect of equipment actually received by the Government of the USSR.

Comparison of prices

7. The Soviet representatives have suggested further that because prices of this equipment in Canada were somewhat higher than in the United States and the United Kingdom, an overall reduction of more than 10% should be made in the amount of the debt. On this point the Soviet representatives should be reminded that in the post-war period the major problem associated with equipment of this type, for which the requirements for post-war reconstruction purposes in the USSR and other countries greatly exceeded the supply, was obtaining actual delivery of the goods. Any comparison in this connection of prices at that time between alternative supplying countries is accordingly in the realm of theory rather than of real practical significance. Furthermore, in view of price trends since the early post-war period, the prices of the equipment included in the claim have proved in the event to be very much in favour of the purchaser.

8. Moreover, the Soviet representatives should be reminded that the Canadian Government did not resort to comparison of prices with other suppliers when arrangements were made to supply the USSR with wheat and other foodstuffs in the early post-war period. Wheat to a much greater value was sold to the USSR on the basis of the costs to the Canadian Government, at a time when wheat was being sold by other supplying countries at considerably higher prices.

9. The Soviet representatives should be told that in view of all these considerations the Canadian Government could not, in the absence of arrangements covering other associated costs, justify an overall reduction with respect to prices applicable under this claim, which is limited to a request for reimbursement of actual and direct costs incurred on the equipment delivered to the USSR.

Risk of negotiations being broken off

10. The warning contained in paragraphs 2 and 4 of your despatch under reference has been noted. For the moment, the possibility that an uncompromising attitude on our part might lead the Soviet side to break off negotiations is a risk which we must accept, while still endeavouring to minimize it. For your information, it would be extremely difficult, if not impossible, for the Canadian Government to agree to the further reduction of a claim which is already set at a minimum figure. Our case against any such reduction is unassailable in logic, and our arguments should be pressed with the utmost vigour. Only in the face of an imminent threat to break off negotiations should our representatives say that the Soviet arguments will receive further consideration; even in that event, our representatives should not imply that there is any real chance that the Canadian Government will change its mind.

Adding service costs to total debt

11. As we understand the suggestion in paragraph 3 of your despatch under reference, it is that we might increase the debt by adding service costs to the principal, and then concede to the Soviet Government a percentage reduction equal to the amount added. This proposal has been considered as a possible method of allowing the Russians to score a technical victory. On balance, however, it has been decided that the device should not be employed. It is important that the Soviet side should gain the firm impression that we are not prepared to compromise in any way on the principal sum of the debt. Moreover, as you have noted, we could not use service costs in this way and also as an argument against credit terms. If service costs were so used, we would be without bargaining counters for the balance of the negotiations.

Calculation of service costs

12. In the last paragraph of your telegram, you asked for details of service costs. It is not possible at the moment to give you a detailed statement. For your information, the basis of calculation is roughly the rate the Canadian Government must itself pay in its own borrowings. The preparation of a statement would be a task of some magnitude, however, and we are justified in not presenting a detailed account so long as we maintain the attitude that we are expecting the Russians to pay cash. If they specifically ask for a statement, of course, one can be provided. For the present, our negotiators should not themselves raise the subject of service costs again. If, by any chance, agreement is reached at the next meeting on the principal sum of the debt and the Soviet representatives make proposals regarding terms, our representatives should repeat that the Canadian Government expects cash payment, but say that the proposals will be examined.

1. The second meeting took place today. Trottier represented the Embassy, Cheklin and Spandarian, with Kuzminsky[62] as interpreter, the Soviet Government.

2. We began by summing up the proposals raised by the Russians at the first meeting and then answered them by stating our position, point by point, as outlined in your despatch under reference.

3. Concerning discrepancy of dollars 51.34 Soviet contention is that we erroneously charged dollars 135 for three compressor dies shipped on steamship Suvorov bill of lading No. 904. Contract price was dollars 27.50 per item or dollars 82.50 for three making a difference of dollars 52,50 which becomes dollars 51.34 after deductions of duties of 2.2 percent.

4. We went on to state our position concerning percentage reductions but did not mention the request for cash payments. Cheklin himself after some meditation raised the question of terms giving the impression that he was making the two matters of total indebtedness and conditions of payment contingent upon one another. He attempted to reply in detail to our arguments not, repeat not, very convincingly and he even contradicted himself a few times. He concluded that he was interested only in finding a practical solution. Again he associated the two questions of total indebtedness and conditions of payment and it was our impression that in his mind the discussions must include both points.

5. Throughout the meeting which lasted one hour and 25 minutes he seemed to discuss more or less at random in expectation that we would break the deadlock by a counter-proposal regarding a percentage reduction. Finally he asked outright whether we could not offer a reduction of 20 percent or even 15 percent. After we had briefly restated the Canadian position he suggested that both sides think the matter over again and that the first who would have something new should contact the other.

6. The Soviet negotiations did not, repeat not, bring up anything new and I think we cannot hope to obtain anything unless we are willing to depart from our present position and to make some proposal based on relative value to us of obtaining total sum owed in return for a concession on the terms of repayment or vice versa.

I attach a copy of a letter dated June 15, 1953, from the Department of Finance,† in reply to this Department's letter of June 8, a copy of which was referred to you.†

2. As you will see, Mr. Deutsch has agreed with the suggestion that our negotiators should allow some time to pass, to provide for the unlikely event of a Soviet concession towards our position and to avoid appearing over-anxious. In the meantime, it will be in order for you to let the Soviet negotiators know that we accept their figure for the total amount of the claim, to inquire whether they have anything new to offer as a result of their consideration of our arguments, and to say, if asked, that there is nothing to be added to the statement of our case made at the last meeting.

3. I should appreciate learning whether this exchange brings any reaction from the Soviet side. I should also be grateful for your views on the suggestion, made in the Department's letter of June 8, that similar inquiries might be made from time to time, and on the question of how long the present impasse should be allowed to continue in the absence of any move from the Soviet side.

DESPATCH 572 Moscow, July 16, 1953

CONFIDENTIAL

MUTUAL AID NEGOTIATIONS

Reference: My Telegram No. 96 of July 14, 1953.†

The Russians saved us the trouble of having to make periodical enquiries from them as well as of having to send, in answer to paragraph 3 of your despatch No. S-202 of June 23, our views on how long we should let the negotiations lag, as Mr. Spandarian himself telephoned the Embassy on Tuesday, July 14th, to invite Mr. Trottier to visit him on the afternoon of the same day.

2. As I have reported in my telegram, Mr. Spandarian conducted the meeting for the Soviet side, with the assistance of Mr. Kuzminsky, in the absence of Cheklin who left the Soviet Union for Argentina three weeks ago. After an exchange of pleasantries Mr. Spandarian asked Mr. Trottier if he had anything new to report on behalf of the Canadian Government. Our agreement to the Soviet request that the total amount of indebtedness should be reduced by $51.34 down to the figure of $3,118,960.24 was announced and Mr. Spandarian received this news with a show of satisfaction. In so doing, his manner contrasted with the attitude taken by Mr. Cheklin at the previous meeting when the latter dismissed the matter of the difference of $51.34 with the comment that it was a mere detail which could easily be solved if an agreement could be reached on the other questions.

3. Continuing in his amiable tone, Mr. Spandarian then stated in an emphatic manner that in order to hasten the solution of the question, he wished to inform us that he intended to submit to his Minister a new proposal. He then proceeded to explain that, since the Canadian Government was interested in a cash payment, he was willing to grant us satisfaction on this point provided we were willing to grant a "reasonable" reduction of the total indebtedness. When asked if he intended to stand by the request originally formulated by Mr. Cheklin for a reduction of 30%, he answered that no percentage figure should be discussed at this meeting but only the principle of his proposal for a payment in cash in exchange for a reasonable reduction. He laid stress on the word reasonable, adding that the reduction should, in his opinion, take into account the difference between the Canadian and the American prices as well as the amount of the reduction granted by the United States. As at the previous meeting the Soviet negotiators had expressed the view that the American prices were 40% lower than ours and as the reduction granted by the Americans was of 10%, the condition that those two factors should be taken into account is a fairly elastic one and Mr. Spandarian commented that they were ready to consider "any reasonable offer".

4. Mr. Trottier then stated that since he had no new instructions on this question, he was obliged to maintain our position that the difference between Canadian and American prices and the reduction granted by the United States were not acceptable to us. Mr. Spandarian answered very politely that he understood that we could not do otherwise than repeat our position on this point but he added that since his offer was made in order to hasten the solution of the question, we should reply as early as possible. He then intimated that if our reply was delayed too much, he might have to revert to his original stand. He was told that we would duly report his offer. The meeting lasted 20 minutes.

5. The new Soviet proposal is pretty much along the lines I had said I expected they might make — see my despatch No. 464 of June 5th.† This offer represents an appreciable concession in view of the fact that in the original Soviet note of January 6th, in which the Russians expressed a readiness to negotiate, the Soviet authorities had stipulated that their indebtedness "would be regulated on the basis of credit, the conditions of which will be defined in the process of the negotiations". In view of the continued Soviet insistence on a percentage reduction, and also in view of the intimation that if we do not accept their present offer, they might revert to their previous position, I seriously consider that we could not expect them to give in to all our conditions and that we should follow up this opening. We are in the position of trying to settle a bad debt and I think that the best way would be for us to close the matter as soon as possible by taking a payment in cash in exchange for a concession in respect of the total amount of indebtedness. The extent of this concession would of course be the object of some strenuous bargaining in which our argument about the interest of the debt could be pressed to the limit. I look forward to receiving your instructions in this respect.

I am attaching a copy of a letter dated July 27, 1953, from the Department of Finance, in reply to our letter of July 15, a copy of which was referred to you.† We subsequently sent the Department of Finance on July 28 your letter No. 572 of July 16, and have been informed orally by them that they do not wish to modify the suggestions made in their letter of July 27.

2. You will see from Mr. Deutsch's letter that he has agreed that we should meet the Soviet offer to pay in cash by offering to reduce the debt by 10%. In order that the Russians should not assume that this reduction represents only a first offer, Mr. Deutsch suggests that you could begin by reiterating our position. You could then inform them that, as a practical matter, we are prepared to accept a reduction of 5% in return for a cash payment. If the Russians reject this offer, you should endeavour to leave the door open for the resumption of negotiations with a view to securing final agreement on a reduction of 10% in return for a cash settlement.

3. I shall be interested to learn the reaction of the Soviet government to this latest proposal.

1. Fourth meeting took place with Spandarian and Ivanov[63] and with Trottier and Barker[64] for the Embassy.

2. Offer of five percent reduction was made in accordance with your instructions in despatch under reference. Spandarian observed both sides were now in agreement on principle of a cash payment accompanied by a reduction. Discussion ensued about basis for a "reasonable" reduction. Spandarian said that the United States-USSR agreement did not stipulate Soviet responsibility for equipment in the inventory and that therefore Soviet claim for a 10 percent reduction on the basis of American precedent still held. We protested and he admitted that he was not certain of this point and would study the matter again together with our proposal.

3. He recalled that Cheklin had already submitted for discussion a proposed reduction of 30 percent based on the 10 percent granted by the United States and on the fact that Canadian prices were higher. He added that in his personal opinion 10 percent would be a minimum figure. As he had no precise counter offer to make and as he was pressing for another meeting next week we withheld arguments about service costs so as to have something new on which to counter any offer they would have before we ourselves offer a 10 percent reduction.

4. Spandarian stated that he wanted to conclude the discussion as soon as possible and presented us with a draft of a note designed to settle the matter which reads as follows: "The Government of the USSR will pay to the Government of Canada for equipment and material delivered after September 2nd, 1945, in one payment to Canadian Bank (name to be inserted) X dollars (Canadian) and X cents.

All mutual claims of both Governments in connection with delivery by Canada to the USSR of above mentioned equipment and materials are held to be finally settled by this".

5. Please telegraph before Sunday, August 23rd, if this draft is satisfactory or, if not, the text which you would be prepared to exchange in case agreement on reduction is reached next week. We suggest the inclusion in the draft of a date of payment.

Fifth meeting took place today at the request of the Russians with same participants as last time.

2. Spandarian promptly stated that in view of last Canadian proposal of a five percent reduction he had convinced interested Soviet organizations that they should reduce their demands. He made firm offer of ten percent which he said would be minimum acceptable to them. Implying this was a major concession, he urged final agreement should be reached next week on total sum of indebtedness and on text of notes to be exchanged.

3. Russians are clearly anxious to wind up negotiations and I would therefore appreciate your early instructions concerning time of payment and text of notes.

Delighted at progress of negotiations. You and your officers are to be heartily congratulated on your skilful handling of this matter.

2. Suggest Soviet draft note might be amended along following lines:

Quote: The Government of the USSR will pay to the Government of Canada, on or before September X, 1953 (insert agreed date not more than one month from date of note), for equipment and material delivered after September 2, 1945, in one payment to the Receiver General of Canada through the Bank of X in X (any Canadian chartered bank, its location in Canada to be indicated), the sum of Canadian $2,807,064.22.

All mutual claims of both Governments in connection with delivery by Canada to the USSR of above-mentioned equipment and material are held to be finally settled by this payment. Unquote.

3. You should of course accept offered ten per cent reduction, with good grace and whatever show of reluctance you can muster. If the Russian side are acting in good faith, they should not object to early and specific date of payment.

4. If agreement can be reached along these lines, you are of course authorized to sign the resulting note without further reference to Ottawa.

During a visit to the Department on November 14, 1952, Mr. F. Noblet, Assistant Treasurer of the International Nickel Company of Canada in New York, said that his company was considering the possibility of accepting, in England, the amounts in sterling which have been offered by the Soviet authorities, assuming that some procedure for doing so would be acceptable to the United Kingdom authorities. Mr. Noblet has said nothing further to us about this possibility and in a letter of January 27, 1953, commenting on the draft note enclosed with your despatch under reference, he makes no reference to the possibility discussed in November.

2. We are considering, with the Department of Finance and the Bank of Canada, whether it would be desirable to pursue Mr. Noblet's earlier suggestion, either with the International Nickel Company or with the United Kingdom authorities. Until some decision is reached, I do not think there will be much point in sending further communications to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

In my despatch under reference, I told you that consideration was being given to following up a suggestion made by the International Nickel Company of Canada last November. This was that some means might be found of accepting, in England, the amounts in sterling which have been offered by the Soviet authorities.

2. It has now been decided that any initiative in this connection should be left with the International Nickel Company. Since the International Nickel Company is apparently not prepared to pursue the idea at the present time, we can continue to press the Soviet authorities for payment. For this purpose, the draft note forwarded with your despatch No. 14 of January 7, 1953, would be satisfactory. The words "is still outstanding" in the penultimate sentence of the draft note should be changed to "remains unpaid". This will make it clear that the amount about which we are protesting has not been received in Canada, rather than that the sum is still outstanding on the Soviet books, since the Soviet claim is that their books have been cleared.

3. I should be grateful if you will let me know in due course when this note has been delivered.

The Canadian Embassy presents its compliments to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the USSR and has the honour to refer to the latter's aide mémoire of January 2, 1953,† concerning the payment of compensation owing to the Canadian Government for the nickel mines at Petsamo.

The Canadian Government cannot accept the contention of the Soviet Government that the latter has fulfilled its obligations under the terms of the protocols of October 8, 1944, and September 29, 1947, since the sum of US $2,916,625 remains unpaid. PETSAMO

While it was not considered desirable for you to raise the subject of Petsamo in your interview with Mr. Molotov, we do think it might be useful to re-open the question at this time on a lower level.

2. Our idea is that you might seek an appointment with the Head of the Second European Division and discuss the matter informally with him. It would be better, we think, to deal with someone who is familiar with the subject, rather than with someone, say, at the Deputy Ministerial level who might put you off by claiming ignorance. On this occasion, in order to vary the approach, you need not present a note or aide mémoire, although you might carry a copy of your latest note to serve as a point of reference.

3. You might begin by observing that the Canadian Government has been gratified to note the desire expressed recently by various representatives of the Soviet Government to settle outstanding issues with foreign governments. You could then say that the balance of the Petsamo payments, which has not been received by the Canadian Government, constitutes one of the few unresolved issues between our two Governments. You might conclude by expressing the hope of the Canadian Government that the Soviet Government might see its way clear to re-examine the Petsamo question with a view to its possible final settlement.

4. If, for any reason, you do not consider that an approach of this sort would be appropriate, I should be grateful if you would let me know. Otherwise, I shall be looking forward to learning what kind of reception you meet with.

PETSAMO

Reference: My letter No. 253 of August 10,† and telegram No. 84 of August 4.†

As I informed you in my telegram No. 84 of August 4, 1953, the United Kingdom Treasury has agreed to permit the transfer, to the account of the Mond Nickel Company, of the sterling offered by the Soviet Government. The International Nickel Company is anxious to take advantage of this decision, although the Company would, of course, still prefer to receive payment in dollars if that were possible.

2. I appreciate your concern lest the reopening of negotiations with respect to Petsamo might at this juncture prejudice other negotiations which you are conducting with the Soviet Government. However, since the negotiations on the other matter have now led to the signing of an agreement, there seems to be little danger that the Russians might attempt, by associating the two problems, to delay the solution of either. In the circumstances, therefore, I think you will agree that the Petsamo negotiations might be reopened.

3. I would suggest that this might be done orally by means of an interview with an appropriate high level official of the Soviet Foreign Ministry. I am attaching to this despatch a draft Memorandum to serve as the outline of the statement which you should make at the time of your interview.† At the end of the interview you should leave a copy of the Memorandum with the Ministry.

4. You will note from the attached Memorandum that the Soviet contention that they are under no obligation to pay the balance of the debt in dollars has still not been accepted and you should once more request payment in that currency. You should go on to say that arrangements have recently been made with the United Kingdom Government which enable the Canadian Government to accept payment in sterling in this particular case. You should, therefore, explain that, if the Soviet Government should still find it impossible to fulfil its obligation in dollars, the Canadian Government would appreciate receiving as soon as possible the balance of the debt in sterling.

5. If, during the presentation of your statement you should sense that you are being given a favourable hearing, you might at your discretion, suggest that the Soviet Government might wish to pay part of the balance in dollars and part in sterling. This possibility is not, however, included in the text of the memorandum for it is not desired at this time to press for terms which might involve a new series of protracted negotiations.

6. If you are satisfied with the procedure suggested, it would be appreciated if you would arrange as soon as possible to take up this matter with the Soviet authorities. We shall naturally be anxious to have your report, which I hope will record some degree of progress in this matter.

On receipt of the instructions contained in your despatch No. S.290 of September 15 I asked for an interview with a Deputy Minister of Foreign Affairs and on September 28 was received by Mr. Zorin,[67] who ranks after Mr. Gromyko in the Ministry. During the oral statement which I made along the lines of the first three paragraphs of your suggested memorandum I noticed that Mr. Zorin's face was taking on a more and more annoyed look and his brows were contracted in a frown. I paused at the end of the third paragraph, but getting no sign whatsoever from him which I could possibly interpret as meaning that the Soviet Government might reverse its previous stand, or consider favourably a suggestion that part of the unpaid sum be paid in dollars, I decided I should not bring up the question which you mentioned in paragraph 5 of your despatch. I therefore went on with the last paragraph of the memorandum, then handing him a copy of what I had said orally. I attach a copy for your files.

2. Mr. Zorin hesitated a few minutes and then replied that our memorandum would have to be studied by the competent authorities as it was too technical for him to give a final answer then and there. He added, however, that it seemed to him, speaking personally, that the question could be settled fairly quickly by a sterling transfer as suggested by us. He asked a few questions concerning the relationship of the International Nickel Company of Canada to the Mond Nickel Company of England and also why the United Kingdom Treasury had not previously authorized the transfer. I answered that I believed the Mond Company was a subsidiary of the International Nickel Company, and in reply to the second, that as the Soviet Government had been informed on many occasions both by us and the United Kingdom, the latter's exchange regulations do not permit a transfer of sterling to a dollar account. I did not explain to him why the United Kingdom Treasury had changed its mind now.

3. Apart from the lack of favourable reaction on the part of Zorin to the first parts of the memorandum, which did not lead me to believe that any useful purpose would be served by raising again the question of at least part payment in dollars, I still believe that the Russians would not back down from the position they have taken so categorically and so many times. We have now given them an out which I believe they will probably seize. To raise again the question of fulfilment of their obligations in dollars would, I think, only have led to another fruitless exchange of correspondence.

Aide-mémoire

Moscow, September 28, 1953

On February 20, 1953, the Canadian Embassy, on instructions from the Canadian Government, sent to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the USSR a note protesting against the failure of the Government of the USSR to complete payment in United States dollars of the amount owing as compensation for the Petsamo Nickel Mines under the terms of the Protocols of October 8, 1944 and September 29, 1947. The note drew attention to the fact that the sum of United States $2,916,625 remained unpaid.

The Canadian Government has at all times rejected the claim of the Government of the USSR that the balance due is, at its option, payable in the pounds Sterling equivalent. It will be recalled, moreover, that remittance to Canada could not be made in pounds Sterling in any case, by reason of United Kingdom exchange regulations.

The Canadian Government reaffirms its contention that, under the terms of the Protocols cited above, the Soviet Government was and remains obligated to complete payment of the full amount of the compensation in United States dollars, or in gold. Apart from the strict interpretation of the Protocols, the Canadian Government would wish to receive the amount owing in United States dollars, in preference to any other form of payment. The Canadian Government therefore asks the Soviet Government once more to consider whether payment of the outstanding sum of United States $2,916,625 could not now be made.

If, however, the Soviet Government still cannot see its way clear to making payment in United States dollars, or in gold, the Canadian Government wishes to inform the Soviet Government of the following. As a result of special financial arrangements between the International Nickel Company in Canada and the Mond Nickel Company in the United Kingdom, the United Kingdom Treasury has now indicated that it will in this instance permit the transfer of Sterling to the account of the Canadian Government. Failing the completion of the outstanding payments in United States dollars or in gold, therefore, the Canadian Government would be grateful if the Soviet Government would make the necessary arrangements for the transfer to the account of the Canadian Government of the Sterling equivalent of United States $2,916,625. When this transfer has been completed, the Canadian Government will — notwithstanding its position with respect to the Protocols of October 8, 1944 and September 29, 1947 — regard the Soviet Government as having discharged in full its obligations under the Protocols.

Circular note from Foreign Ministry, dated 22nd June, 1953, relaxes travel restrictions on diplomats and foreigners in USSR. Major changes are:

(a) Right of transit, but only transit, through Vladivostok and Nakhodka via trans-Siberian;

(b) With the exception of twenty kilometer zone along the border, travel is permitted to all the Ukraine except Western Oblasts, Crimea except Sebastopol, Feodosia and Kerch;

(c) On the Volga and the western coast of Caspian down to and including Baku;

(d) To all central Asian capitals plus south Kazakhstan, central Uzbekistan, central and east Turkmenistan;

(e) Most cities on the list, in accordance with 1952 restrictions, are now free except Omsk, Tomsk, Nobosibirsk, Krasnoyarsk, Jrkutsk, Yenissei way and Taimir Okrug;

2. Minor changes are made within Moscow Oblast compared with 1952 restrictions but automobile travelling is permitted on three Chaussees to Oblast limits with the right to stop in Klin and Zagorsk. Forty kilometer limit still applies and notification is required to go beyond as previously.

CONFIDENTIAL

RELAXATION OF SOVIET TRAVEL RESTRICTIONS

Repeated June 24 Washington EX-1129; London No. 1100.

Considerable public interest has been aroused here by the announcement from Moscow. We have not yet seen the full text of the Soviet note and in the meantime, in reply to press enquiries, we have said that the question of our own restrictions on travel by Soviet personnel will be reviewed in the light of the new Soviet regulations when we have had an opportunity to study them.

2. Since the restrictions in NATO countries grew out of NATO consultation, we assume that the subject will be discussed in the Council and that action by individual NATO countries would be inappropriate until this discussion has taken place.

3. Our initial impression is that the remaining Soviet travel restrictions are still considerably greater than those we have applied on Soviet personnel. Moreover, while we should like to express our gratification at the Soviet relaxation, there is little that we could do to relax our own restrictions without abolishing them altogether. At the moment the only type of relaxation on our side that appears feasible would be an extension of the radius of the unrestricted zone around Ottawa from twenty-five to fifty miles. If early discussion takes place in the Council, you might express this as our preliminary view.

SECRET. IMPORTANT.

RELAXATION OF SOVIET TRAVEL RESTRICTIONS

Reference: Your telegram No. 529 of June 23 and our telegram No. 513 of June 24†.

At the council meeting on July 1, at Lord Ismay's suggestion there was a preliminary discussion of this matter. Your view was confirmed that the Soviet concessions have been slight, relative to the restrictions that remain.

2. The United Kingdom permanent representative reported in detail on the extent of the Soviet relaxation; in the opinion of his government, there might be a political advantage in making some gesture in return. It was felt that the radius of the restricted zone in the United Kingdom might be extended from 25 to 35 miles around London. No action would be taken without prior consultation with the other NATO countries. In view of the indication given in your telegram under reference, we reported that we might be prepared to take action along the lines envisaged by the United Kingdom. This was also acceptable to Belgium and France, but Italy and the United States were not inclined to make concessions because their regulations were more liberal than the remaining ones in the USSR.

3. After some discussion, it was agreed that if action was to be taken in this regard it had to be taken quickly and that there would be an advantage if such member countries as were prepared to do so could announce at the same time that they were to make some reciprocal gesture (although not necessarily taking the same steps in view of the fact that identical measures have not been taken by all the NATO countries). It was further agreed that permanent representatives would report the council discussion to their respective governments and indicate by Monday July 6 next whether they were prepared to take any part in concerted action at a time to be determined later. The matter is to be discussed again at the next meeting of the council on July 8. If action were to be concerted by a number of NATO countries the Secretary-General, in a press conference, might give background information on the scope of the Soviet measures in an effort to present this Soviet move to public opinion in a somewhat more realistic perspective than seems to have been done hitherto by the press in the various NATO countries. It was also agreed that NATO and National Press statements should be issued simultaneously.

4. Action Required : We propose to advise the Secretary-General that if a number of NATO countries are prepared to make a gesture we might relax the restricted zone around Ottawa, as indicated in your telegram of June 23. We should be glad to learn, before Monday July 6, whether you concur.

RELAXATION OF SOVIET TRAVEL RESTRICTIONS

Reference: Your telegram No. 544 of July 2.

It will be in order for you to inform the Secretary-General that we are prepared, if a number of other NATO countries plan similar action, to relax our own travel restrictions by increasing the unrestricted zone around Ottawa.

2. At the July 8 meeting you might also express our view that precipitate action is not desirable. In the past, the Soviet authorities often prevented travel to destinations which were nominally open, and it seems possible to us that the intent of the new Soviet regulations might similarly be nullified in practice by administrative obstacles. A waiting period of a month or six weeks should provide evidence of whether the Russians mean what they say. For your information, we also think a delay might be useful if the United States, particularly, is not at the moment inclined to join in a gesture of the kind being considered.

3. We are concerned that the United States and Italy may not agree to act with the majority. If a majority of NATO countries were opposed to any relaxation we would not of course, wish to make any move ourselves. If, however, it turns out that a majority do intend to make the gesture but not the United States and/or other important NATO members, we would urge that no concerted action be taken but that members act independently and not simultaneously. In that case no public reference should be made to the consultation on the subject which has taken place in the Council. Ends.

IMPORTS FROM CZECHOSLOVAKIA AND POLAND; VALUES FOR DUTY[69]

22. The Minister of National Revenue, referring to discussion at the meeting of May 22nd, 1952, recommended that a new directive be sent to customs officers, modifying the original directive concerning the establishment of values for duty of imports from Poland and Czechoslovakia and adding three items to the list of goods subject to valuation.

The new directive had been prepared because certain goods were coming from Poland and Czechoslovakia at values which appeared to be below the legal values provided by section 35 of the Customs Act and Poland and Czechoslovakia would not permit first hand verification in the place of origin. The items to be added to the list were toys, cut glassware and pencils. It had originally been planned also to add umbrellas but that was now considered to be unnecessary. The revised wording of the directive would put it in accord with Canadian obligations under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

An explanatory memorandum had been circulated.

23. The Cabinet approved the recommendation of the Minister of National Revenue and agreed that a revised directive be sent to customs officers concerning the establishment of values for duty of certain importations from Czechoslovakia and Poland and adding certain items to the earlier list of goods on which appraisal should be made under section 38 of the Customs Act.

Note du ministre des Finances pour le Cabinet

Memorandum from Minister of Finance to Cabinet

SECRET Ottawa, December 17, 1953

TRADE AND FINANCIAL RELATIONS BETWEEN CANADA AND CZECHOSLOVAKIA

1. In the past year a number of difficulties have arisen affecting economic relations between Canada and Czechoslovakia. In trade matters, Canada found it necessary in the absence of adequate information concerning home market values to impose appraised values on certain Czech goods under Section 38 of the Customs Act. On the financial side Czechoslovakia defaulted on the repayment of the post-war export credit granted to her by Canada. A note has recently been received from the Czech Government protesting once again the valuation procedures in effect against Czech imports and requesting consultations with the Canadian Government on this matter. The purpose of this memorandum is to review briefly recent developments in economic relations between the two countries and to consider the appropriate line of policy to be taken in response to the recent Czechoslovakian representations.

2. Examining economic relations from a Canadian point of view, it would appear that the significant problem concerns the Czechoslovakian debt to Canada. The post-war export credit granted by Canada to the Czechoslovak Government had been used to the extent of [$]16.7 million; repayments of principal and interest reduced the figure to [$]9.99 million by November 1952. Under the terms of our financial agreement with Czechoslovakia, the debt would have been fully repaid by November 1954. Czechoslovakia has, however, defaulted on the payment of capital and interest due since November 1952. Total amount of principal and interest instalments now due on the loan is $7,013,810, made up of two principal payments of [$]3,330,000 each, due November 1952 and November 1953, and interest on the outstanding balance calculated at 2½%, which at December 1, 1953, amounted to $353,810. The financial agreement provides that in the event of default on a payment of principal, the whole balance of the loan becomes due and payable. After a number of reminders and warnings sent to the Czechs when payment became overdue were ignored by them, the Canadian Government declared the loan to be in default and invoked the provision of the agreement requiring immediate repayment of the entire balance. In April of this year, the Czechoslovak Chargé d'Affaires replied to our representations concerning the default and complained about restrictions imposed by Canada on trade with Czechoslovakia. He stated that in view of these restrictions, his country had temporarily withheld payment of the 1952 instalment due on the loan. We have, of course, made it clear that the commitment to repay the loan constitutes a binding and unconditional obligation of the Czechoslovakian Government, and is in no way related to trade questions.

3. The initial complaint by Czechoslovakia concerning trade relations referred both to export controls on certain strategic materials and to the special valuation procedures applied to certain Czech imports. However, their last note refers only to the latter question. It may be useful, therefore, to recall the circumstances in which the Canadian Government applied these measures to certain classes of Czech goods entering Canada. In the past few years a number of representations have been received from Canadian manufacturers complaining that some categories of Czech imports were arriving in Canada at abnormally low prices. Under the Customs Act the normal procedure for dealing with such complaints is to investigate the fair market values in the country of export. Accordingly, efforts were made to obtain Czechoslovakian consent to have Canadian Customs officials investigate these values in Czechoslovakia. These efforts, persisting for over a year, produced no Czechoslovakian co-operation, and in November 1952 the Canadian Government decided to appraise certain categories of Czech imports under Section 38 of the Customs Act. This valuation procedure provides that for purposes of appraisal for Customs duties, a maximum advance valuation of 50% over invoice values may be made; this measure now applies to the following list of Czech goods: ladies fabric gloves, towels and towelling, hats and hoods, woollen piece goods, glass in sheets, Christmas tree ornaments, cotton thread, toys, cut glassware, and pencils. (See Appendix — Table III)†

4. In their recent note, Czechoslovakia protests that Canada's special valuation procedure is contrary to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and requests consultations on this matter under the terms of Article XXII of that Agreement. In considering an appropriate reply to the Czechoslovak representation, it would appear that decisions are required on the following points.

(1) Should we agree to consult?

(2) If so, where should such consultations take place?

(3) What line should we pursue in such consultations?

5. Under GATT the obligation to afford a member adequate opportunity to consult is unconditional; hence, if Canada wishes to conform to her GATT undertakings, we should be prepared to consult.

6. On the question of what line to take in such consultations as may be held, there would appear to be two alternatives. On the one hand we can continue our present position, i.e., to insist that in the absence of an opportunity to investigate home market values in Czechoslovakia, we have no alternative but to apply the special valuation procedure; and that such action is consistent with GATT. With this approach the loan question would not be discussed in the consultation proper, and in any representations we make on the loan we would continue to insist that there is no relationship between trade matters and the unconditional obligation to repay the loan. Judging from past experience it is unlikely that Czechoslovakia will allow a thorough investigation of fair market values in their country. Hence, if we continue to insist on this right, it appears that a satisfactory solution to the trade problem will not be found. Since Czechoslovakia links the trade problem to their financial obligations, it is in turn unlikely that repayment of the loan will result from this approach.

7. As a practical matter it is unlikely that the Czechs will repay the loan unless some compromise is found on the trade question. If it is considered sufficiently important to obtain repayment of the loan, it may be useful to consider an alternative line of approach whereby in the course of the consultation, while maintaining the principle that the obligation to repay the loan is unconditional, we would be prepared to search for a practical solution to the trade problem as part of a general settlement which would include repayment of the loan. It would appear that any such settlement would involve at least a modification of our present valuation procedure. In this connection it may be possible to work out some arrangement with the Czechs to verify fair market values in a manner which would not run afoul of the limitations imposed under Czech law on disclosure of what may be regarded as security information and at the same time would meet the requirements of our Customs law. One possibility is that the Department of National Revenue might be able to obtain satisfactory information required to verify values from the staff of our Prague Legation.

8. In considering the alternative line of approach it should be noted that overall trade with Czechoslovakia is no longer of real importance to Canada (See Appendix — Tables I & II†). For this reason, trade considerations would not in themselves justify a modification in present valuation practices, were it not for the loan aspect of the problem. Exports have fallen to an annual rate of $150,000 and are expected to remain low, largely as a result of the continuing need to apply strategic export controls. Imports have declined to an annual figure of $2.8 million, due in part to the imposition of the special valuation procedure and consist mainly of non-essential soft goods. While the modification of present valuation procedures might result in some expansion of Czech imports, their volume was not substantial even before the imposition of these procedures and is not likely to grow significantly. However, it can be expected that some objections will be raised against the growth of any such imports, particularly by the Canadian glove and textile industries. Even under present circumstances there is some evidence to show that the prices of certain Czechoslovakian goods are being lowered in an attempt to get under the present appraised values.

9. In the light of the above considerations it is recommended that:

(1) The Canadian Government should agree to consult in accordance with the provisions of GATT.

(2) Such consultation should be held in Ottawa with no publicity.

10. Before these consultations take place, consideration should be given as to whether: (a) we should seek to find a practical solution both to the trade and to the financial problems, which would involve modifying the present valuation procedure or substituting for it some other arrangement which would meet the requirements of our Customs law, in order to obtain repayment of the loan, of which principal of $9,990,000 and interest of $353,810 is outstanding; or (b) we should continue to hold our present position, i.e., to insist that in the absence of an opportunity to investigate home market values in Czechoslovakia, we have no alternative but to apply the special valuation procedure.

CZECHOSLOVAKIA; TRADE AND FINANCIAL ARRANGEMENTS

4. The Minister of Finance, referring to the discussion at the meeting of December 18th,† said the significant problem in economic relations with Czechoslovakia was its debt to Canada. The post-war export credit granted by Canada had been used to the extent of $16.7 million and repayments of principal and interest had reduced the figure to $9.99 million by November, 1952. Under the terms of the agreement, the debt would have been fully repaid by November, 1954. Czechoslovakia however, had defaulted on payment of capital and interest due since November, 1952. The financial agreement provided that, in the event of default on a payment of principal, the whole balance of the loan became due and payable. After a number of warnings to the Czechs, the Canadian government had declared the loan to be in default, and had invoked the provision of the agreement requiring immediate repayment of the entire balance. Earlier this year, the Czechoslovak Chargé d'Affaires replied to the Canadian representations and complained about restrictions imposed by Canada on trade with Czechoslovakia. He stated that, in view of these restrictions, Czechoslovakia had temporarily withheld payment on the loan. In reply, it had been clearly indicated that the loan constituted an unconditional obligation of the Czechoslovakian government and was in no way related to trade questions.

The Czechoslovakian initial complaint concerned export controls on strategic materials and valuation procedures. Their latest representations referred only to the latter question. In the past few years, representations had been received from Canadian manufacturers complaining that some Czech imports were arriving in Canada at abnormally low prices. Efforts had been made to obtain Czech consent to have Canadian customs officials investigate these values in Czechoslovakia, but no co-operation had been forthcoming and it had been decided to appraise certain categories of Czech imports under section 38 of the Customs Act which provided a maximum advance valuation of 50 percent over invoice values. As a result, such imports had practically disappeared from the Canadian market.

Czechoslovakia had protested that this special valuation procedure was contrary to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and had requested consultation. It was for decision whether or not Canada should agree to consult and, if the decision were in the affirmative, where such consultations should take place and what line should be pursued at the discussion. Under the GATT, the obligation to afford a member adequate opportunity to consult was unconditional.

In any consultations, Canada could maintain its present position on valuation of Czech imports and insist that there was no relationship between trade matters and the obligation to repay the loan. It would be unlikely that repayment of the loan would follow from this approach. If it were considered sufficiently important, however, to obtain repayment, a more practical solution to the trade problem might be sought. This might involve some modification of present valuation procedures.

An explanatory memorandum had been re-circulated.

(Minister's memorandum, Dec. 17, 1953 — Cab. Doc. 343-53)

5. In the course of discussion, it was pointed out, —

(a) that Canada had not supported proposals to have Czechoslovakia removed from the GATT; and,

(b) that it would be advisable to hold the discussions in secret but there was no guarantee that this could be done and, in any event, it was doubtful if difficulties would ensue if it became known that discussions were being held.

6. The Cabinet noted the report of the Minister of Finance on current trade and financial arrangements with Czechoslovakia and agreed,

(a) that in accordance with the provisions of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, Canada accede to the request of Czechoslovakia to consult on special valuation procedures which had been adopted in respect of Czechoslovakian imports;

(b) that the consultations be held in Ottawa with as little publicity as possible; and,

(c) that, once arrangements had been made for the consultations, further consideration be given to the course to be pursued in the discussions; it being understood that Canada's agreement to consult did not in any way alter or reduce the obligations of the Czechoslovakian government under the post-war export credit agreement, but that Canada would examine the trade and economic position to see what mutually satisfactory arrangements might be made.

Note de la Direction européenne pour la Direction juridique

Memorandum from European Division to Legal Division

SECRET Ottawa, January 22, 1953

POLISH ART COLLECTION IN CANADA

You will recall that at the Heads of Divisions meeting on January 5, Mr. Pearson mentioned his interview in New York with the Polish Foreign Minister on the subject of the Polish art collection in Canada. Mr. Pearson told the Polish Foreign Minister that on his return to Ottawa he would again look into this matter to see if there was any way in which progress might be made. Mr. Pearson promised to get in touch with the Polish Legation in Ottawa if there was anything to report.

2. Recently Berlis[70] of this Division has made a thorough review of the six volumes of file 837-40 ("Entry into Canada of Polish Art Treasures"), and I am attaching for your information an up-to-date summary of the file which Berlis has prepared.†

3. You will recall that the portion of the art collection which remained in storage at the Records Storage Building was removed from Canada by the Polish Legation and returned to Poland in 1948. Portions of the collection which still remain in Canada are as follows:

a) 23 trunks and 1 wooden case at the Provincial Museum in Quebec City;

b) 2 trunks at the Bank of Montreal, Ottawa Branch;

c) 8 trunks which may be at the Polish Catholic church in Killaloe, Ontario, although this has not been confirmed.

4. The collection in Quebec has been "impounded" by the Premier of that Province, who has stated publicly that a release will be granted only in compliance with a court order. Although attempts have been made to draft letters to the Premier of Quebec on the subject of the Polish collection, no letter has in fact been sent to him. Mr. Duplessis' statements would give no ground for expecting that correspondence would accomplish much. However, as the federal Government has, according to the legal opinion which you prepared on November 22, 1949, responsibility in international law with respect to that portion of the art collection impounded by the Quebec authorities, we should perhaps give further thought to means by which Mr. Duplessis might be persuaded to release the Polish property.

5. There is no reason to suppose that Mr. Duplessis' views have changed, but I doubt whether we should assume that this is so without examining possible means of verification. Obviously a public rebuff should be avoided, but I am wondering whether Mr. Duplessis could be sounded out on the Polish art collection when some representative of the federal Government, such as the Minister of Justice, has an opportunity of talking to him on another subject, or at a social gathering. Or could an indirect approach be made to Mr. Duplessis through another member of the Quebec Government, or possibly through the Church authorities?

6. If other approaches should fail, I am wondering whether it would be a useful exercise to investigate again the legal procedures whereby the federal Government could require provincial authorities to give up property for which the federal Government holds responsibility in international law? I do not suppose that it would be politically desirable for the federal Government to engage in a legal battle with the Quebec Government, but perhaps on the official level it is our duty to consider this possibility.

7. I turn now to the portion of the art collection held by the Bank of Montreal. Mr. Heeney[71] and Mr. Erichsen-Brown[72] had talks with the Bank's solicitors in 1951, but there is no report on file to indicate that the Bank made its final position known to us. It might be appropriate to raise this matter once more on a high level with the Bank, and in view of your knowledge of previous discussions I should be interested in having your comments on this possibility.

8. Finally, there remains the part of the art collection which may be stored in the church at Killaloe. For the moment, I am at a loss to suggest what might be done about Killaloe, unless perhaps the cooperation of the Church authorities might be enlisted. I wonder whether your Division has any thoughts on this part of the problem?

9. I regret that I have not been able to propose any brilliant solution for the perplexing problem of the Polish art collection. However, it may be useful if this matter is once more thoroughly reviewed, and in the course of such a review thought can be given to the care and preservation of the collection, as well as to possible means of effecting its return to the Polish state. As a starting-point, your Division may wish to comment on some of the points in this Memorandum, following which representatives of our two Divisions might discuss the matter and suggest what further action would be appropriate.[73]

Note de la Direction juridique pour la Direction européenne

Memorandum from Legal Division to European Division

SECRET Ottawa, February 27, 1953

POLISH ART COLLECTION IN CANADA

Since receiving your memorandum of January 22 on this subject we have undertaken a review of the legal aspects of this question. We have looked once more at the underlying principles of international law and at the various factors which have had the effect of modifying the application of these principles to the present case. In this memorandum I propose to summarize briefly our conclusions in this regard and to suggest the legal procedures, which might result in a settlement of the question, if it were not for the fact that it would not be politically desirable for the Canadian Government to take such steps. In its conclusions this memorandum does not depart substantially from the legal opinion given by this Division on November 22, 1949.

2. The Polish art collection continues to be the property of the Polish State and the present Government of Poland is fully competent to exercise this proprietary right. Notwithstanding the special responsibility which the Canadian Government is deemed to have in international law for the protection of Polish State property while it is situated in Canada, the Canadian Government cannot be held responsible for the disappearance or removal of part of the collection from the Records Storage Building, since the articles were removed in accordance with the arrangement for storage by the then lawful custodians. In any event, the responsibility in such matters is subject to the criterion of due diligence, which implies that the Canadian Government should use every means at its disposal to afford protection to the property but that, if this has been done, the Government cannot be held accountable for any injury which may have resulted. The Canadian Government since the disappearance of the collection has exercised due diligence in carrying out investigations to determine the whereabouts of the missing portions of the collection. Due diligence does not extend to taking legal proceedings to recover property of a foreign state which has fallen into private hands, unless some overt crime has been committed. In the present case the Canadian Government cannot be held responsible for instituting criminal proceedings against the persons in possession of those portions of the collection of known whereabouts. No evidence has been advanced to support the contention that a crime under the law of Canada has been committed.

[73] Note marginale:/Marginal note:
Reply has been sent. Please return to European Division. G. M[urray]

3. From the time of the "impounding" of part of the collection by the Quebec authorities, however, the Canadian Government must be deemed to have become encumbered with an unfulfilled obligation in international law. A Canadian official had thereby assumed jurisdiction over Polish State property which by well-established principles of international law was immune from such jurisdiction. Canada's position at law, with respect to this part of the treasure, is therefore considerably weaker than with respect to the other portions. The Canadian Government has admitted moreover, some responsibility for preventing the deterioration of any part of the Polish art collection known to be situated in Canada. Therefore, if the matter should ever come before an international tribunal, there is some likelihood that the Canadian Government might be held to be responsible for the recovery of the Quebec part of the collection, for the physical safekeeping of the whole collection and, failing to do these, might be held liable to compensate Poland for any injury suffered. The Canadian Government cannot validly plead constitutional shortcomings as an excuse or reason for not carrying out its responsibilities in international law.

What Legal Action is Available

4. The Polish authorities have taken the position that criminal proceedings should be instituted by the Canadian Government against the "unlawful possessors" of the Polish art collection. In cases of unlawful possession, however, it is more usual for the rightful owner to set the wheels of justice in motion by making a complaint to the appropriate authorities, except where the police have located stolen property as a result of investigations following a theft. There would appear to have been no theft in Canada of the Polish art collection. In 1945 the then legally appointed guardians, in accordance with an agreement of storage, removed the articles from the Records Storage Building as they were entitled to do. "As a courtesy", the RCMP subsequently located these missing articles. Political considerations apart, the Canadian authorities were not obliged — and indeed were precluded from doing so — to take criminal proceedings against the possessors. It is most doubtful whether the criminal action lies in this matter, even if the Polish authorities should see fit to institute it by laying information and complaint in the normal way prescribed by the Code of Criminal Procedure.

5. As for civil proceedings, in both Quebec and Ontario the law provides a right of action for the recovery of movable property of one person, which is being wrongfully detained by another. The legal actions in question are usually open to the owner or to any other person with a lawful right to possession of the property concerned. Whether these civil actions are still open to the Polish Government might depend on the law of prescription in Quebec and the Statute of Limitations in Ontario. It is more than likely that prescription or the Statute of Limitations would be inoperative, or would not be invoked against a foreign sovereign but the point perhaps bears more careful examination by domestic lawyers. There might be other aspects of domestic law which would have a bearing on the legal recourse now open in Canadian courts to the Polish Government. These are questions primarily to be determined by the attorney or advocate, who might be chosen to represent the Polish authorities in the appropriate civil proceedings. Since the Polish Government has shown no disposition to undertake legal proceedings in Canada, it is doubtful whether the Department or the Legal Division has any responsibility for examining more fully the processes afforded by the law of the two provinces concerned. If, however, the Polish authorities should now be precluded from taking such proceedings at law, for whatever reason, Canadian spokesmen should be very careful in future about urging the Polish authorities to seek recourse in the ordinary courts of Canada.

6. At best, this approach to the problem of the Polish art collection is hardly worthy of the conduct of relations between sovereign states, however necessary it might be because of local circumstances in Canada. From the point of view of international law, it is understandable that the Polish State might not wish to become involved in civil proceedings in Canadian courts; in effect submitting to the jurisdiction of these courts, since the property involved is in se immune from such jurisdiction. The Polish authorities would run the risk of being met with counterclaims which might be decided against them. Under ordinary circumstances Poland might reasonably expect its claims with respect to the property to be dealt with through diplomatic channels. The complicating political factors — international and domestic — have placed this case on a footing not readily duplicated in the annals of international law. Accordingly, it is difficult to find not only precedents but legal justification for the various departures from the customary international practice in such matters.

7. A possible solution, but not one likely to attract much support, nor one which I should recommend, would be to refer the constitutional aspects of this case to the Supreme Court of Canada. Such a reference could probably be made under Section 55 (d) or (e) of the Supreme Court Act (1927 R.S.C. Chapter 35). The constitutional question would have to be framed in such a way that the decision of the Supreme Court would state whether (and if so, how) the Canadian Government might, in order to carry out its international obligations, compel a provincial government or official to take the necessary action. In view of the findings of the Privy Council with respect to the treaty power, it is all too likely that any such reference would go against the Canadian Government, even if it were disposed to run the political risks involved in making the reference.

8. Another possibility which was considered last summer was for the Canadian authorities to take action under the regulations administered by the Custodian of Enemy Property. At the time we obtained from the Custodian an opinion, which suggested that the property of enemy and friendly states in the proscribed area vested automatically in the Custodian. If this principle could be extended to apply to the Polish art collection, it would be within the legal competence of the Custodian now to seize the collection in whatever hands it might rest. Even though I have considerable doubt about the political feasibility of such action, I am taking steps to clarify one or two points in order to determine the legality of such a procedure.

9. From time to time a suggestion has been made that the case might be referred to the International Court of Justice. Had the Polish Government been seriously concerned about the recovery of the collection, it might have taken this step some time ago. Canada might have been charged with failure to carry out its international obligations. This charge would have been particularly sticky with respect to the portion of the treasure located in the Provincial Museum at Quebec. There is good reason to believe that the ruling of the International Court might go against Canada. This is not to say, however, that the problem of restoring the collection to Poland would be resolved.

10. Mr. Duplessis has said that he will release the part of the collection stored at Quebec on the order of "a competent court". He has not stated what court or courts he would consider to be "competent". It is a matter for conjecture whether he would so consider the International Court of Justice. If the International Court were to reach a finding against Canada and were to issue an order for the restoration of the collection to Poland, and if the Quebec authorities refused to recognize the validity of the decision or the order, the position of the Canadian Government would be even more embarrassing and difficult than it is at present. The Government might well be faced with an alternative to performance of paying compensation to Poland. This live possibility is a most compelling reason for not taking the initiative in referring the matter to the International Court of Justice.

Out of Court Settlement

11. Efforts have already been made to obtain the release of the missing portions of the art collection by reaching some sort of agreed settlement with the present possessors. Approaches to the Quebec Government have been made, and might still be made, through political, social or religious channels. These offer the most likely line of settlement and might be fully examined in any joint memorandum prepared by European and Legal Divisions.

12. In previous negotiations with the Bank of Montreal there was some suggestion that the part of the collection deposited with the Bank might be released to the Polish Government, if a suitable undertaking indemnity were to be provided by the Canadian Government. Whether such an undertaking should be given is not merely a question of policy, since the Bank would almost certainly require to be indemnified in terms of money and since there might not exist any legal authority which would permit the Government to enter into such an agreement. The views of the appropriate Departments of the Canadian Government would have to be sought to determine the legal and financial implications. As an alternative, it is possible that this part of the collection might be released, assuming the Canadian Government were to make such a request to the Bank and to express its approval, over the signature of one of the original depositors,[74] namely Mr. Zaleski, who returned to Poland. This suggestion is based on the (likely) assumption that the second joint depositor, Mr. Polkowski, could not be persuaded to assist in obtaining the release of this part of the collection.

13. Finally, consideration might be given to the possibility of an agreed settlement by the parties concerned, that is, between the Polish Government and the persons in possession of the collection. In the present international circumstances, the exiled Poles are likely to be even less cooperative than they were in 1947, when Mr. Brockington[75] made his offer for restoring the collection. Nor is the Polish Government likely to be better disposed to deal now with the "traitors to Poland". In short, the possibility of this sort of settlement appears to be remote.

POLISH ART COLLECTION

The following are the arguments which have normally been used to combat Polish propaganda with respect to the art collection in Canada:

(a) The Canadian Government has no responsibility for the art collection which, by agreement reached at the time of its entry into Canada, was to remain the property of the Polish state;

(b) The Polish Government can seek recourse through the Canadian courts;

(c) The dispute is one between the Polish Government and Polish citizens, and it would not be proper for the Canadian Government to intervene.

2. One by one these arguments have lost force.

(a) We can no longer say that the Canadian Government has no responsibility, because we probably have responsibility in international law for that part of the collection held by the authorities of the Province of Quebec.

(b) The question has now been raised whether the law of prescription in Quebec, and the Statute of Limitations in Ontario might prevent the Polish Government from instituting civil proceedings in those provinces, and in the meantime we should refrain from saying that the Polish Government can seek recourse through Canadian courts.

(c) It has now been agreed that Babinski[76] and Polkowski should be granted permanent landing immediately, and if this should happen before amendments to the Citizenship Act are passed, they could become Canadian citizens without delay. This would nullify the argument that the dispute is one between the Polish Government and citizens of Poland.

3. SECRET Ottawa, April 4, 1953

POLISH ART COLLECTION

The Department of Justice has replied to our letter of March 12† in which we asked for an opinion on whether legal action was still open to the Government of Poland in Quebec and Ontario to recover the Polish state property, which the Polish authorities have alleged to have fallen into the wrong hands. We also asked for an indication of the nature of the actions which might be open and we sought particular advice on the question of prescription.

2. The Department of Justice has either misunderstood our request or is reluctant to express itself on these points. In the reply Mr. Varcoe[77] takes the position that the Department of External Affairs "would be well advised to continue to take the position that the Canadian Government is not under any duty to intervene on behalf of a foreign government in a dispute concerning the title or right to possession of property". He does not consider that he should "undertake to advise the Polish authorities in any way as to the cause of action" which might be open in the Canadian courts. He adds that, in any event, the position under the law of Ontario and Quebec would depend on "certain facts with respect to the personal property in question which are probably not available to us".[78]

3. As you know, we have no intention of intervening on behalf of the Polish Government nor of changing our policy with respect to the Polish art collection. What we wanted to know was whether it was advisable to continue to suggest to the Polish authorities that redress in this matter might be obtained in the Canadian courts. I must disagree with Mr. Varcoe's opinion that the Canadian Government has no obligation with respect to this property which is in no sense "personal property". Our legal opinion on Canadian obligations is to my mind completely sound in international law. As you are well aware, it concludes that there is an unfulfilled obligation with respect to the part of the Polish art collection, known to be located in the Quebec Provincial Museum. Were it not for the constitutional and political difficulties involved, it seems likely that we would have no alternative but to advise the Canadian Government to take the necessary action to discharge its unfulfilled obligation as regards this portion of the collection.

4. There was never any question that the advice received from the Department of Justice on the questions related to the legal action open, if any, should be conveyed to the Polish authorities. We required this advice, which relates to questions of domestic law, in order to determine what our policy should be with respect to public pronouncements on this point. I fail to see how our letter of March 12 could be interpreted as asking the Department of Justice to give advice to the Polish authorities.

5. Mr. Varcoe's last paragraph has all the appearance of evasive tactics. I am not aware of any facts relating to the property which are not available to us and which might have a bearing on the legal position. What we have asked the Department of Justice to do is to place themselves in the position of the advocate or lawyer, who might be called upon to advise the Polish authorities on what legal action might be taken to recover the property being wrongfully detained. Any domestic lawyer should be able to produce a few suggestions in this regard.

6. We are not likely to get much satisfaction out of a second attempt to elicit the required opinion on the points mentioned. The Department of Justice seems anxious to wash its hands of the whole affair. In my view this makes it all the more important for us to check carefully in future when we are making public reply to Polish allegations about the collection. I am inclined to recommend that we take a more non-committal line with respect to the redress which might be open in Canadian courts.[79]

7. If you agree, perhaps this memorandum or a revised version might be brought to the attention of European Division. In any case, the appropriate officers in that Division should see the reply from the Department of Justice.[80]

TELEGRAM 298 Ottawa, December 4, 1953

CONFIDENTIAL. IMPORTANT.

POLISH TREASURES

Last night the December 15 issue of Maclean's Magazine appeared carrying 6 pages of photographs by Karsh of that part of the Polish Treasures which is stored in the vaults of the Quebec Provincial Museum. We have heard a rumour that these same photographs may be carried in Life.

2. The Polish Delegation may make a protest over this new incident. It will be offensive to them that the treasures, which they cannot even see, can be photographed by a private citizen.

3. The text in Maclean's is carefully worded. It comprises for the most part a description of those treasures which have been photographed and of their histories. There is an account of the arrangements under which the photographs were taken. Apparently Karsh suggested to Premier Duplessis that it was a pity that so much beauty remained hidden. The text suggests that Mr. Duplessis then authorised elaborate, secret preparations for the photographing of the collection.

4. Only two political comments appear, which we quote in full below:

(a) "In 1948 while Free Poles and Red Poles wrangled over possession Premier Maurice Duplessis sequestered the treasure and placed it in the guarded vaults of the Provincial Museum."

(b) "But since agents of Red Poland had more than once tried to hijack the treasures, their removal from the guarded vaults to be photographed had to be carried out in deep secrecy".

This latter statement is more provocative, because the Polish Government considers that it has a right to the treasures. While they have tried several times to recover them, there is no evidence that they have ever tried to "hijack" them.

5. We cannot be sure what comments Life would make, if it should carry these photographs. However, it will probably be somewhat more offensive to the Poles, and will almost certainly bring a protest.

6. If you should have to reply to a Polish protest you should make the following statement, which you may amend, if the context should require it. Text begins:

"The Canadian Government did not, at any time, accept the custody or control of the art collection which reached Canada in July 1940. It was a representative of the former Polish Government in exile in London who, in fact, explicitly accepted this responsibility on behalf of his Government. The Canadian Government has accordingly rejected the contention of the present Polish Government that Canada assumed responsibility for the safe-keeping of the collection and its eventual restitution to the beneficial owners.

The major portion of the collection was removed from storage, prior to Canada's recognition of the present Polish Government on July 6, 1945, by representatives of the only government then entitled to act on behalf of the Polish State. On August 23, 1946 representatives of the present Polish Government took possession of that part of the collection which had been left on Federal Government premises. A further difficulty has resulted from the fact that the joint custodians, one of whom has remained in Canada while the other gave his allegiance in 1946 to the present Government of Poland, have disagreed as to the beneficial ownership.

The Canadian Government has maintained that the Polish Government may take proceedings at law in a civil action to recover these treasures. This is a step which the Polish Government has consistently refused to take." Text ends.

7. The above statement has been carefully phrased to avoid certain legal difficulties in our position. You should be careful to consider them if you should find it necessary to amend the text. These difficulties are:

(a) that, while we have maintained that we are under no obligation to take action to recover these treasures, in fact there is an unfulfilled obligation resting on the Canadian Government with respect to that part of the collection which has been impounded by the Quebec Provincial Museum. There are obvious reasons why we wish to avoid publicly recognizing this obligation.

(b) it is possible that the courts might rule that under the Statute of Limitations in Ontario and the law of prescription in Quebec the Polish authorities would now be precluded from taking proceedings at law. We have requested the advice of the Department of Justice on this question, but they have not given an opinion.

8. It is possible that the Polish protest might make the charge that the treasures, in particular the tapestries and manuscripts, are deteriorating. You might suggest that these photographs give evidence that this is not the case. You should phrase this comment carefully, as we have no proof that some articles have not deteriorated.

9. Should you wish background information on this dispute, you could refer to Porter's article in the July 15, 1953 Maclean's, which is concise and accurate, though naturally franker than we can be in public.

POLISH ART TREASURES

We are attaching for your information two departmental memoranda† and a telegram[81] to the Canadian Delegation to the United Nations, which were hurriedly prepared when the photographs of the Polish art treasures first appeared in Maclean's. We are also attaching a set of the photographs and text of the article.†

2. These memoranda were prepared because we expected an immediate protest from the Polish authorities, either here or at the United Nations. Nothing has happened as yet. But it is scarcely possible that the Polish Government can overlook this development after these same photographs have appeared in Life. (Although we have not seen them, we have been assured that they will appear.) It is also probable that Life's text will be more provocative.

3. If the Poles should make a protest, we intend to reply with a statement along the lines of the one included in our telegram to the Canadian Delegation.

4. Whether or no the Polish Government should make a protest over the publication of these photographs, it is our intention to review our position concerning the art treasures. We should be grateful for your views on the two following questions:

(1) Do you think the Polish Government sincerely desires the return of the treasures? Or do they prefer that they remain in Canada, so that they can continue to belabour us for failing to return these treasures? There has been a strange silence on their part since the campaign over the Chopin manuscripts, in spite of the article by Porter in the July 15 issue of Maclean's. Can their silence be explained by the possible desire of the Soviet and satellite governments to avoid unnecessary provocation of the Western powers?

(2) What do you estimate to be the views of the Polish people towards the fact that these treasures remain in Canada? Do you think that the Polish government gains general support when they criticize us for holding the treasures? Or do the people prefer to know that they are stored in Canada, safe from the hands of their Communist leaders? This question can be asked in another way: do you think the Polish Government would gain popular approval if the treasures were somehow to be returned to Poland?

DESPATCH 614 Warsaw, December 27, 1953

SECRET

POLISH ART TREASURES

Reference: Your letter No. S.411 of December 9, 1953.

There has been no reaction here, official or unofficial, to the publication of the photographs of the Polish art treasures. Perhaps the Poles do not consider Maclean's important enough to warrant action. Life, however, is one of their favourite whipping-boys, and they may be waiting for a chance to develop a dual propaganda approach.

2. In any event, I am glad to hear that you plan to review the whole question. In Mr. Carter's[82] absence, I am answering the questions you raised in your letter in case you plan to start your review immediately. Mr. Carter's knowledge of the question is, of course, much more adequate than mine, and he may wish to amend my comments on his return. If this turns out to be the case, we will notify you immediately.

3. It is difficult to say whether the Polish government sincerely desires the return of the treasures. In one respect, I suppose they do not; as long as the treasures remain in Canada, the Polish government has a stick with which to beat us. But they have been beating us with the same stick for years now, and perhaps their propaganda has reached the point of diminishing returns. They probably feel that the issue is an embarrassing one for us, but as propaganda for domestic consumption, the whole thing probably has lost some of its edge. Most Poles who read now know that the treasures are in Canada, and have formed their own opinions about the subject.

4. The silence which has prevailed during the past few months may result from the government's realization of the inefficiency of its propaganda, or it may simply be that there have been other more important items to be processed by the propaganda mill. The current campaign against the Church, the opposition to EDC, the attacks on Adenauer, the "Praca" incident — all these have prompted reams of propaganda, and, I should think, have provided the public with too many points on which to focus its attention. It may well be that the silence results from a desire to "ease international tension", but I doubt if the Poles would hesitate to raise the issue if they thought it would be useful.

5. However, although our possession of the treasures provides the Polish government with a weapon (which probably is decreasing in value), it would be inaccurate to assume that the government's attitude towards the subject is determined solely by a cynical weighing of its propaganda value. The régime has been assiduous in its efforts to build up in the Poles a sense of pride in their past attainments, and in its own one-sided way has attempted to "bring culture to the people". Castles and churches have been restored, historical relics have been preserved, and research into the past has been encouraged. The fact that this policy has been directed along certain political lines should not obscure the fact that the régime has a respect for culture comparable in its intensity to that shown by a business tycoon to whom culture has come late in life. And because the treasures represent the heart of Polish culture and the soul of Polish history, the government probably wants them back.

6. I realize that I have said that the government both wants, and does not want, the treasures returned. But since it would like to have its cake and eat it too, it probably would be satisfied either way. If this is true, and if the disposition of the treasures would not affect appreciably the Polish government's position, our decision should be based primarily on the effect it would have on us.

7. I do not think there is any unanimity of opinion about the subject among the Poles. One group of Poles, who are out of sympathy with the régime (and whose present position, because of this, is not particularly influential), know the facts of the case, and do not accept the official "theft" interpretation. Indeed, they probably are happy to see the treasures in a safe place, partly because they expect another war eventually and, partly because they would prefer the treasures to be in the hands of a Polish government other than the present one. If we decide to hold the treasures until after these two eventualities, we may find them on our hands for a long time. On the other hand, these Poles probably would not judge us too harshly if we were to return the treasures. The treasures, after all, would be returned to Poland, and not to the personal possession of its communist leaders.

8. Another segment of Polish society — the artists, the historians, the intellectuals generally — have a professional, as well as an emotional interest in the treasures, and would welcome their return. The younger members of this group probably feel they owe much to the régime, and the older members must conform in order to pursue their vocations. As a result, the government's propaganda probably has taken root, and has induced resentment of our position. Return of the treasures probably would not produce warm friendship for Canada, but it would at least remove one concrete source of hostility.

9. This leaves the "men on the street" who, it must be assumed, accept at least some of the government's propaganda as the truth. After being told the same story for years, many probably feel that the Canadian government did "steal" the treasures. If the treasures were returned, the Polish government would probably cast us in the role of a repentant thief; in any event, we can be sure that the return of the treasures would not be allowed to enhance our position in the eyes of the general public.

10. In general, though, the Polish government would derive little political advantage from the return of the treasures. It would probably build itself up as the saviour of Polish culture, and the return could be interpreted as yet another victory of the "peace camp" over the immoral West, but this line of necessity would be short-lived and at any rate would be less damaging to us than the propaganda weapon that now exists. At the same time, any slight increase in goodwill the communists might gain in Poland would be balanced by the effect the return of the treasures surely would have on Polish nationalism. They are, after all, the core of the Polish tradition, and any bolstering of this tradition fits in quite well with our desire to preserve the Pole's sense of national identity. The return of the treasures would remove us from our present embarrassing position, and if effectively publicized by CBC-IS[83] (and perhaps the BBC[84] and VOA[85]), would provide us with useful propaganda material. Polish notes on the subject have been accompanied by press articles, student protest meetings, and circulars to artists, musicians, museum curators, etc. outside Poland. This approach has probably had some effect, and the return of the treasures would strengthen our position among these people in friendly countries.

11. Return of the treasures might influence the Polish government's thinking about some of the outstanding issues between us, although this is unlikely. We could raise the issue of compensation for nationalized properties, or some of our consular cases, at the same time as the question of the treasures, but the dangers inherent in this approach obviate its advantages.

12. Our main gain would be the removal of a source of embarrassing propaganda, which eventually might have an effect on our friends as well as our enemies. The fact that the treasures are held by a provincial government invalidates our original claim that the Government of Canada is not responsible for the treasures. The trial of Bishop Kaczmarek and the arrest of Cardinal Wyszynski have made an approach to Mr. Duplessis unadvisable during the past few months. Whether an approach will be feasible in the future depends, I suppose, on how difficult you think our present position may become.

POLISH ART TREASURES

Reference: My despatch No. 614 of December 27, 1953.

I should like to express my agreement with the ideas set out by Mr. Bauer in despatch No. 614. There are one or two points which are worth expanding. I do not think that the comparative silence of the Polish press and radio and other propaganda agencies in recent months is due to a desire to avoid provoking us. I would say rather that the Poles felt that they had exploited the treasures issue as much as they could for the time being and they were waiting for a new aspect before starting up again. The publication of the pictures in Maclean's may have given them what they were waiting for. So far, however, there has been no reaction, either official or in the press or radio, to the publication of the pictures.

2. I agree with Mr. Bauer that most ordinary Poles would like to see the treasures in the Wawel Castle where they belong. I think that many Poles would look on the issue from a non-political point of view. They would feel that these things were part of the heritage of Poland and belong in Poland where the Polish people can see them. The treasures are of great interest to the conservatively minded people as well as to those who support the régime, because they are part of Polish history. As Mr. Bauer points out, and as other people have pointed out in the past in the large mass of memoranda on the files, it is not in our interest to deprive the Polish people indefinitely of relics which would serve to keep alive the feeling of Polish national identity. I should say, however, that Mr. McGreer was of the opinion that many Polish people would be glad to see the treasures in safe custody in Canada.

3. I feel that the points raised in your letter S.411 of December 9 are secondary ones. I suggest that a discussion of the treasures should start from the legal opinion that there is an unfulfilled obligation on the Canadian Government with respect to those treasures which have been impounded by officials of the state in Canada. We should seek to fulfil our international obligations. It is the non-fulfilment of this obligation which has made the Polish propaganda at various times rather embarrassing to the Canadian Government. Up to now the Poles have not made the best use of this effective legal point, and they have tried to introduce too many arguments, but some day they may realize where the strength of their argument lies and then their propaganda could be considerably more embarrassing.

4. I would suggest that the subject for discussion should not be "Should we try to return the treasures?" but rather "What can be done to facilitate the return of the treasures?". The next step for some months has apparently been an approach to the authorities of the Province of Quebec. The recent anti-Catholic events in Poland do not create a good atmosphere for such an approach, but on the other hand the publication of the pictures in Maclean's provides a point of departure. I would therefore suggest that we should wait for several weeks to see if a protest or other reaction is forthcoming from the Polish authorities, and then that some form of approach be made to the authorities of the Province of Quebec.

You will notice that the Polish authorities claim that our Note No. 145 of October 30th, of which I attach a copy,† misrepresented the position about the possible visit to Poland of a Canadian customs official. The Poles have, however, taken two and one-half months to protest against the text of our Note of October 30th and even now they do not say that they would permit a visit to Poland of such a customs official. I have no particular comments to offer on the remainder of the note. Le ministère des Affaires étrangères de Pologne à la légation en Pologne [Traduction]

Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Poland to Legation in Poland [Translation]

NOTE NO. D III AP 23282/1/53 Warsaw, January 20, 1953

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs presents its compliments to the Canadian Legation in Warsaw and in connection with the Legation's note of October 30, 1952, No. 145, concerning Canadian customs charges on goods exported from Poland to Canada, has the honour to advise the following:

On May 28, 1952, in a note addressed to the Polish Legation in Ottawa, the Canadian Ministry of Foreign Affairs advised that it was meeting with certain difficulties in establishing the value of Polish glass wares exported to Canada, this value being the basis for calculating the amount of the customs charges.

After having examined the matter, the Polish Legation in its note of July 7, 1952, gave full particulars which evidently were recognized as sufficient since the Canadian authorities did not make any further stipulations or claim additional particulars to be given.[88]

Nearly at the same time, the Canadian Legation in Warsaw in its note of July 4, 1952, asked as a preliminary enquiry what attitude the Polish Government would adopt towards a proposal to send to Poland, in case of need, a Canadian official who would examine the costs of goods exported to Canada. The Canadian Legation asked in addition in the same note, whether the Polish Government was prepared to facilitate the provision of information concerning the prices and costs of production of these goods.

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs explained to the representative of the Legation on October 16, 1952, that the only matter at issue concerning the prices on Polish exports had been meanwhile cleared up, and that the Ministry was always ready to give any information necessary to elucidate whatever doubts arise in relation to the prices on any other articles exported to Canada. Referring to the eventual proposal of a visit of a Canadian official to Poland, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs expressed the opinion, that the extent of commercial relations between Poland and Canada did not require particular investigations in Poland by Canadian customs authorities. The Ministry of Foreign Affairs expressed at the same time its readiness to consider any new proposals by the Canadian Government.

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs feels compelled to recall the development of the question in full detail considering that the Legation's note of October 30, 1952, at variance with the facts quoted above, states that:

[88] Note marginale:/Marginal note:
Have we made any further move in Ottawa.

"the Polish authorities do not wish a Canadian customs official to visit Poland in order to obtain information concerning the value of goods exported to Canada".[89]

The purpose of such distortion of facts in the note by the Canadian Legation becomes clear in the light of the procedure of the Canadian Government in relation to Polish goods exported to Canada. On November 4 already, Mr. McCann, a member of the Canadian Government, publicly declared that additional customs charges would be clamped on the goods exported by Poland. On November 10, it became evident by published data, that the Canadian Government had increased by about 50% the customs charges on a series of Polish export goods, a number of textile goods, glass wares and Christmas tree decorations among other things. Press and radio commentaries of November 18, 1952, based on official information, stated that these moves on the part of the Canadian Government meant a policy directed against the import of Polish goods.

This procedure on the part of the Canadian Government leads to an entire stoppage of Polish exports to Canada and is a violation of the Canadian-Polish Trade Convention of July 3, 1935, of its Article III in particular which reads:

"Articles produced or manufactured in Poland shall not, on importation into Canada, be subjected to other or higher duties or charges than those paid on the like articles produced or manufactured in any other foreign country".

The Polish Government resolutely protests against this unmotivated procedure of the Canadian Government in relation to Polish exports; it is at variance with clearly stated commitments and the Polish Government feels compelled to appraise it as a glaring and inadmissible discrimination.

The Polish Government resolutely claims an immediate abrogation of discriminatory customs orders, making possible the sale of Polish goods in Canada on principles respected in relation to other countries and provided for in the Polish-Canadian Trade Convention.

The Polish Government states at the same time that Polish exporters have been told to furnish any information necessary to justify the invoice value of the goods exported by Poland.

La légation en Pologne au ministère des Affaires étrangères de Pologne

Legation in Poland to Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Poland

NOTE NO. 48 Warsaw, April 30, 1953

The Canadian Legation presents its compliments to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and has the honour to refer to the Ministry's Note D.III AP 23282/1/53 of January 20th concerning the verification for duty purposes of Polish goods imported into Canada whose invoice values appear to be too low to meet the requirements of Section 35 of the Canadian Customs Act.

The note of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs has been carefully studied and it appears that the nature of the valuation procedures which the Government of Canada has been obliged to adopt has been misunderstood. Accordingly, the Canadian Legation has the honour to draw to the attention of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs the following facts.

The principles of customs valuation as outlined in the Canadian Customs Law are applicable to imported goods from all sources and afford equality of valuation treatment of goods from all countries. They are in no way discriminatory or arbitrary or otherwise out of harmony with Article 3 of the Canadian-Polish Trade Convention of July 3, 1935.

From the above facts the Ministry of Foreign Affairs will understand that there is no desire or intention to apply any adverse differential treatment to goods from Poland but only to ensure uniform treatment according to principles of customs valuation applicable to imports from all countries. It should be noted that this feature of Canada's Customs Law serves to safeguard fairly valued Polish imports in the Canadian market against competing imports from other countries which might be entered at unverified low values.

The Canadian Legation trusts that this information will clarify for the Ministry of Foreign Affairs the circumstances in which the Canadian Government has found it necessary to appraise certain imports at an advance over invoice values. Should the Ministry of Foreign Affairs wish to consult further on this matter, the Canadian Legation will be pleased to do so.

The Canadian Legation takes this opportunity to renew to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs the assurances of its highest consideration.

Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Poland

NOTE NO. D.III.AP.23282/28/53 Warsaw, July 29, 1953

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs presents its compliments to the Canadian Legation in Warsaw and with reference to the Legation's Note No.48 of April 30th, 1953, concerning the verification of Canadian customs charges on Polish goods exported to Canada, has the honour to advise the following:

It is stated in the Canadian note that "the character of the valuation procedure which the Canadian Government was obliged to apply has been misunderstood" (misinterpreted) and that "there is no desire or intention of applying adverse differential treatment on goods from Poland but only to ensure uniform procedure, in accordance with the principles of customs valuation, which is applied to goods imported from all the countries." It is further stated in the note: "It should be stressed that this part of the Canadian Customs Law is to safeguard the fairly valued Polish imports in the Canadian market against competing imports from other countries which might be entered at unverified low values."

From the foregoing it might follow that the Canadian Government is defending the endangered Polish interests in its territory.

So far, however, practice shows that entirely different methods have been applied than those referred to in the Legation's note of April 30th, 1953. A simple calculation indicates that this practice makes impossible the imports of properly evaluated Polish goods into the Canadian market.

It is enough to quote as an example the calculation of charges to be paid on goods purchased by the firm Douglas & Co., Montreal:

Christmas Tree Toys, price		$43.18[90]
(1) Allegedly "higher quality" charge arbitrarily established by customs authorities:	$21.27
(2) 17.5% customs charge on the arbitrarily established value of $64.-	$11.20
(3) Customs charge on packing	$ 0.23
(4) 10% sales tax, calculated on the arbitrarily established "value" of $64.- and on the charges as in (2) and (3), i.e. on a total of $78.43	$ 7.84
TOTAL CUSTOMS CHARGES	$40.54
TOTAL COSTS FOR IMPORTER		$83.72

(Calculated according to "Customs Canada, Entry for Home Consumption" Entry 22530).

As a result of the arbitrary evaluation of goods by the Canadian Customs authorities, the importer has paid nearly the double of the initial price.

It should be stressed that, before the discriminatory customs regulations were introduced, an importer paid for the same goods $13.13 of customs charges or about three times less than he pays now.

Canadian clients withdraw now their orders for Polish goods as prohibitively expensive in comparison with identical goods coming from other countries which are not encumbered by any such charges.

This is clear evidence to the fact that the prices quoted by Polish exporters are world-market prices[91] and that the customs charges imposed by Canadian authorities make the sale of Polish goods in Canada impossible.

In this connection, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs adheres fully to the statement in its note of April[92] 20th, 1953 and stresses that the action taken by the Canadian Government is meant to stop entirely Polish exports to Canada and is an obvious act of economic discrimination.

In accordance with the note of January 20th, 1953, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs renews its request for a revision of the Canadian Government's attitude towards Polish imports and for the abrogation of discriminatory customs regulations, stating once again that Polish exporters are prepared to supply any information necessary to justify the prices in their offers.

We have examined carefully the representations made by the Government of Poland in the light of the previous correspondence with them on this subject and can see no justification for their contention "that the action taken by the Canadian Government is meant to stop entirely Polish exports to Canada and is an obvious act of economic discrimination."

2. Under Canadian law, valuation for duty purposes is based on the fairmarket value of the imported goods at which they are sold for home consumption in the country of export in the usual course of trade under fully competitive conditions in like quantities. The law imposes responsibility for the ascertainment of such value in respect to imports from all countries. Where such value cannot be ascertained for some reason, such as goods not being sold to the domestic trade, being produced solely for export, the law requires valuation for duty purposes at the cost of production in the country of export plus a reasonable addition for administration, selling cost and profit. The facts regarding home market selling prices, or cost of production, must be ascertained, as no provision is made in the law for acceptance of export prices in default of value determination under the legal requirements.

3. The facts necessary for value determination are only available in the country of export, and verification as such can only be undertaken there. Where any doubt exists as to the authenticity of certified invoice values, those charged with the responsibility of values determination have no authority to waive full verification. First-hand examination of exporters' records are conducted and facilitated in the United Kingdom, the United States and other countries, as occasion arises, and fair values in accordance with the facts as ascertained are determined. Cases do arise where exporters decline to make their records available, which necessitates appraisal at values sufficient to ensure compliance with the legal requirements. While the Department is loathe to resort to arbitrary valuations from failure of co-operation by exporters, such action is imperative, and nothing can be done to mitigate the effects accruing due to such failure. Assurance of full compliance with the law must obtain in respect to imports from all countries, and waiving this requirement in respect to one country could not be justified to other countries exporting competitively to Canada.

4. In respect to the importation referred to, Montreal Entry C-22530, examination shows the invoice value to have been advanced fifty per cent with duties and sales tax collected on that basis. As Christmas tree ornaments are of a class or kind produced in Canada, special duty applied to the extent of the difference between the invoice value so advanced and the selling price to the importer in Canada.

5. It may be pointed out that these articles produced in Canada are also subject to the sales tax.

NOTE NO. D.III.23282/41/53 Warsaw, November 27, 1953

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs presents its compliments to the Canadian Legation in Warsaw and, acknowledging receipt of Note No. 111 of October 9th, 1953 concerning Canadian Customs charges on Polish exports to Canada, has the honour to state the following:

The Canadian note endeavours once again to prove that the Polish authorities misinterpret the procedure of verification of customs charges which the Canadian Government has applied to exports from Poland.

However, the Canadian note does not quote any concrete facts nor does it contain any real case which would justify the procedure of the Canadian authorities in respect to Polish exports.

The Canadian Government states in its note that the Canadian authorities are loath to resort to arbitrary valuations of imports and apply them only in case of failure by exporters to cooperate with the Canadian Customs authorities.

In this connection the Polish Government wishes to remind that in its note of July 29th, 1953, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs has stated that "Polish exporters are prepared to give all information necessary to explain the establishment of the offered price". Such a standpoint should entirely satisfy the requirements of the Canadian Customs law and should eliminate the charging of Polish exports with arbitrarily fixed duties.

In addition, the Canadian note attempts to justify the discriminatory regulations on behalf of countries exporting competitively to Canada. These regulations tend to lead in reality to the completely contrary result of making free international exchange impossible by imposing on Polish exports high duties of a prohibitive character.

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs maintains in their entirety the assertions contained in its notes of January 20th and July 29th, 1953, and hopes that the Canadian authorities will revise their attitude to Polish exports.

The reply of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs to your note of July 29[93] is being studied by the Government depart[ment]s concerned. As you probably are aware, the problem involved in the Polish case is similar in many respects to the problem which we have with Czechoslovakia.

In the circumstances, it seems unlikely that we will be prepared to make any substantive reply to the last Polish note pending careful study here of the line which we will pursue in any discussions with Czech officials on the question of verification of value for duty purposes and we suggest that, if you have not already done so, it might be appropriate to send an acknowledgment to the Polish Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

SITUATION IN INDOCHINA

Background

A military stalemate, deteriorating in favour of Vietminh has prevailed in Indochina for some time. The situation has become serious and recently the United Kingdom, the United States, and Australia began to step up their military aid to the French in the form of aircraft and supplies. As a result of France's lack of military success though, they have become increasingly critical of French strategy and tactics in Indochina.

2. For a considerable time, moreover, the French have sought to share the burden of the conflict and have met with some success in this connection at NATO, Canberra, and Washington, where the Indochinese war is becoming viewed more and more as a part of the West's struggle against Communism. The French have also tried to link the war with a settlement in Korea. On March 28th, a press release issued by the State Department summarizing recent talks with French Ministers stated that the "prosecution of operations in Indochina and Korea cannot successfully be carried out without full recognition of their inter-dependence." (It might be pointed out, however, that the United Kingdom has made serious reservations about this.)

Recent Developments

3. Early in April, the Franco-Vietnamese military position was further weakened by Vietminh's invasion of the Kingdom of Laos. Vietminh forces are now reported within 20 miles of Luang Prabang, the Laotian capital, and latest information has it that the French — outnumbered by more than two to one — will not be able to hold the city owing to lack of reserves. They cannot use Vietnam troops in Laos, because of local enmities, and their only reinforcements are their French African and Foreign Legion units.

4. On April 13th, the King of Laos appealed through radio and press to the nations of the free world urging formal condemnation, presumably by the United Nations, of the Vietminh invasion. The French, who control Laotian foreign affairs, did not take too kindly to this move, since they prefer to consider the war in Indochina as an internal struggle within the French Union. However, our Embassy in Washington reports that when Mr. Dulles was in Paris for the recent NATO meeting he expressed himself to French Ministers as being in favour of referring the invasion of Laos to the Security Council, but not to the General Assembly, for the moral advantages of having the aggression stigmatized and in order to embarrass Russia vis-à-vis China should Russia be unable to veto a resolution condemning Vietminh aggression. The French were said to have maintained their previous attitude of reluctance to bring the problem to the United Nations, but to have told him that they would re-examine the possibility of doing so. We are asking our Washington Embassy to investigate this matter further.

5. On April 22nd, the French Embassy sent us formal notes on behalf of the Laotian and French Governments, officially advising that Laos has been invaded. Noncommittal formal acknowledgements were sent in reply, but we have asked our missions in Paris, London, New York, and Washington for more information concerning the significance behind the French notes.

Communist intentions

6. It is still too early to assess Vietminh intentions. Their recent announcements about setting up a free Laotian Government and a "Thai homeland" are important political moves which have serious implications going beyond the borders of Indochina. Apparently the Vietminh already have a Laotian princeling in reserve as a puppet for their free Laotian Government.

7. It is doubtful whether the Vietminh invasion of Laos was undertaken without consulting the Chinese. We have no information on this, but if the invasion has the blessing of the Chinese, the implications go clearly beyond Indochina. On the other hand, Vietminh may have begun its campaign strictly on its own without the cognizance of either Peking or Moscow.

8. The situation is still very fluid. Events are moving swiftly and as fresh information comes in, new reports will be prepared.

9. Attached are copies of the three telegrams on Indochina which have come in within the last week.†

Note du sous-secrétaire d'État suppléant aux Affaires extérieures pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum from Deputy Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TOP SECRET Ottawa, May 6, 1953

SITUATION IN INDOCHINA

The military situation in Indochina has now become critical. The Laotian capital, Luang Prabang, is under siege; Vietminh forces are within a few miles of the Thai border and Laos is nearly split in two. Our Embassy in Paris reports that "the French are now putting their greatest hope to stop the Vietminh advance in the yearly rains which are due to begin soon and that the French Government appears to be overwhelmed by developments in Indochina and willing to study any solution which might help to solve a situation considered by many as catastrophic".

2. The French also appear willing to grant greater internal independence to the Associated States of Indochina as a result of the invasion. The original Franco-Cambodian negotiations on the subject in Paris in February and March of this year broke down. Subsequently, King Norodom Sihanouk of Cambodia made a statement to the press in New York last April that the Cambodians might rally to the Vietminh if France did not grant greater independence to the Associated States. This frank warning by the pro-French monarch, combined with the embarrassment caused the French Government by the Laotian appeal to the free nations of the world on April 13th (outlined in my memorandum to you of May 1st on this subject), has now brought the French to the point of seriously considering greater Cambodian control over the administration of financial, military, and judicial affairs.

3. Telegrams have arrived from our Missions in London, Paris, and Washington concerning Mr. Dulles' suggestion last week (see the aforesaid memorandum) that the invasion of Laos be referred to the Security Council, but not to the General Assembly. These telegrams (3) are attached.† They indicate a fair amount of agreement among the three Governments about bringing the invasion to the attention of the Security Council, although no firm decision about doing so has as yet been taken by any of them. They also indicate that all three Governments seem, at the time of writing, opposed to referring the matter to the General Assembly. Of the three, the French are of course most hesitant about having the invasion brought before the Security Council for fear of stirring up another anti-colonial debate, although most French cabinet ministers are now reported to be in favour of doing so, with only M. Bidault holding out against it. The British seem willing to go along with Mr. Dulles' suggestion, but would be unquestionably opposed to any move to brand Communist China as an aggressor in Indochina.

4. Foreign Office and State Department arguments now current for bringing the war in Indochina and the invasion of Laos to the attention of the Security Council run along the following lines:

(1) Such a step would probably have a useful effect in bolstering the wavering governments of Southeast Asia. The Thais and Burmese in particular are uneasy about developments in Laos and by the designation last January of Chili in Southern Yunnan as the capital of a semi-autonomous Thai republic in Communist China. For example, the Shan tribes of northern Burma are technically Thais.

An unconfirmed JIC[1] report states that Tiang Sirikhan, a pro-Communist Thai MP, is now in Rangoon trying to organize a Thai Government-in-exile among supporters of the former Thai Prime Minister, Pridi, who is believed to be in China at the present time. It is also said that Tiang has recently visited Luang Prabang, the probable capital of the new "free" Laotian Government.

(2) Reference of the problem to the United Nations might assist the United States administration with Congress in stepping up the flow of arms not only to Indochina but to the whole of Southeast Asia as well.

(3) It might serve as a brake on the Chinese and the Russians, who may not be anxious to have Asian opinion consolidated against them at the present time, (this argument seems to be of doubtful validity); and

(4) By emphasizing the international implications of the war in Indochina, it is hoped that its "colonial war" connotations might be lessened in the eyes of Asian nations.

(5) Thailand might allow military supplies to be shipped through its territory to the French and Laotian defenders if the United Nations so requests.

5. Some of their reasons against such a move are that the British are already overstretched in their defence commitments; tempers might be raised by such a debate and armistice negotiations in Korea thereby prejudiced; it might degenerate into another anti-colonial debate; and it would, in fact, be difficult to keep Communist China out of Council discussions of the subject.

6. What the United States seems to have in mind in its suggestion to have the invasion of Laos studied by the Security Council is the submission of a general resolution condemning the Vietminh aggression and asking member states of the United Nations to assist in repelling it. Such a resolution would of course be vetoed by the Soviet delegate, who would probably argue that the war in Indochina is a civil war in which the United Nations is not competent to interfere. However, the discussion arising out of the submission of such a resolution might bring forth an indication of the type of solution whereby it might be possible to end the conflict.

7. Although we are not directly concerned in the matter, as we are not members of the Security Council, our views may be sought. Largely because there seems to be no other peaceful way of studying and handling the issue effectively at the present time, our opinion is that if reference to the Security Council cannot be avoided, there may be some advantage in having the matter aired in the Security Council and perhaps even in the General Assembly. We think that in the "thrashing out" of the issue which would ensue in either the Security Council or in the General Assembly,[2] the "colonial" aspects of the war would be so forcibly presented by the delegates from such Asian countries as Pakistan, in the Security Council, as well as Burma, India and Indonesia in the General Assembly, that the United States delegation would be convinced that a resolution which would endeavour to "internationalize" the conflict into a United Nations responsibility would not muster sufficient support. Moreover, such an airing might indicate the outlines of an eventual compromise solution, possibly under United Nations auspices. At the present time, for reasons of national prestige and for strategic considerations, it is difficult for the French to accept a solution other than one achieved primarily by military means.

8. However, we think it would be advisable to support the British in their opposition to any resolution that would single out Communist China as an aggressor in Indochina. Although the Chinese Communists are supplying material and technical aid to the Vietminh, there is no more reason at present for condemning Communist China for aggression in Indochina than there is for condemning the Soviet Union as an aggressor in Korea. Moreover, such a step might well jeopardize the chances for an armistice in Korea and for a general settlement in the Far East.

9. In conclusion we recommend, if you approve, that Canada would have no objection to a discussion of the invasion of Laos and the war in Indochina in either the Security Council or the General Assembly[3] but would be opposed to any resolution which would name Communist China as an aggressor in Indochina.

previously reported; (2) the French are definitely opposed to referring the invasion of Laos to the United Nations; (3) the French wish to link the war in Indochina to an armistice in Korea by stressing the indivisibility of peace in the Far East.

2. In this last connection, the French have suggested that the 16 governments which have contributed forces to the United Nations command in Korea should make a declaration expressing solidarity with the French over the invasion of Laos. The preliminary view of the State Department is that such a declaration "would seem to arrogate authority which rests with the United Nations in trying to connect in this way the United Nations action in Korea with the invasion of Laos, which is an issue which is not before the United Nations". Moreover, Mr. Dulles is still said to be strongly in favour of having the invasion of Laos referred to the Security Council.

3. For the reasons expressed in the memorandum on this subject submitted to you yesterday, as well as for those presented below, we still think it would be preferable to have the problem of Indochina referred at least to the Security Council rather than to resort to any of these proposals by the French.

4. An inflexible statement now referring to the indivisibility of peace in the Far East might jeopardize current prospects for an armistice in Korea and for a general Far Eastern settlement. Consideration should perhaps be given to the advantage of tackling one problem at a time in the Far East in the hope that the solution of one problem might ease the tension on others and help in solving them. It is doubtful that all of the 16 governments concerned would support a declaration of this nature. A declaration by the 35 governments which recognize Laos and which are members of the United Nations merely represents an attempt to bypass the United Nations, an organization especially created to deal with such problems. It is also doubtful whether such a declaration would receive the support of all these governments. Such declarations as these would only serve to enhance in Asian eyes the colonial connotations of the conflict in Indochina, as both the 16-nation and 35-nation groups proposed include all the main Western powers and do not include some of the Asian nations most interested in the problem.

5. In view of the very definite French decision to oppose reference of the problem to either the Security Council or the General Assembly, the US may drop its insistence on discussion of the situation in the UN. Despite this, however, we suggest that Canada should continue to express preference for having the problem of the invasion of Laos aired in the Security Council.

6. In conclusion, therefore, we recommend, if you approve: (1) that Canada should oppose both French suggestions concerning 16-government and 35-government declarations of solidarity; and (2) that Canada should not oppose reference of the issue of the invasion of Laos to the United Nations.

DEVELOPMENTS IN INDOCHINA

I have just been reading your attached memorandum of May 7. I am coming round more and more to the view that the only way out in Indochina is by a negotiated settlement with the Indochinese and Chinese Communists, that the French will never win the war there and that the best that their friends can do for them is to try to get them off the hook on which they are writhing. This would require the "internationalizing" of the Indochinese question in one way or another.

2. When it comes to the best method of "internationalizing" the problem of Indochina in search for a settlement I think there is room for discussion. My own first reaction was favourable to submitting the question to the United Nations (the Security Council, not the General Assembly). I am beginning to have some pretty serious doubts now as to whether this would really achieve results. What would come of a submission to the Security Council except an embittered public discussion in which the non-Communist governments represented might be split to the profit of the Communists.[4] I am rather attracted by the suggestion contained in paragraph 3 of WA-1121 of May 6,† put forward by M. Bidault that "it might be better to take up the question of Indochina in relation to discussions for a Far Eastern settlement". This is interesting as it amounts to a French suggestion for "internationalizing" the problem. Only instead of putting it into the Security Council or the General Assembly they would have it dealt with by the Political Conference following on an armistice in Korea. I think this is a better suggestion on several grounds:

(a) it would allow time for private representations to be made in Moscow and Peking which might lead the way to an eventual settlement in the Conference. Such a private negotiation would be more likely to be fruitful than discussion in the Security Council;

(b) Communist China would be represented at the Political Conference and is not represented on the Security Council;

(c) I am impressed by the argument that the injection of this issue into the Security Council at this time might embitter relations with the Soviet Union and Communist China.

SECRET. IMMEDIATE.

SITUATION IN INDOCHINA

Reference: Your teletype WA-1121.†
Repeat London No. 775; Permdel No. 215.

Following from the Acting Under-Secretary, Begins: As the military situation in Indochina may not be quite as serious as has previously been indicated, and as the French, as indicated in your telegram under reference, are now definitely opposed to referring the invasion of Laos to the United Nations, I am coming around more and more to the view that the only way out in Indochina is by a negotiated settlement with the Indochinese and Chinese Communists. This would require the "internationalization" of the Indochinese question in one way or another.

2. I am completely opposed to the French proposal for declarations of solidarity by interested governments. An inflexible statement now referring to the indivisibility of peace in the Far East might jeopardize current prospects for an armistice in Korea and for a general Far Eastern settlement. Consideration should perhaps be given to the advantage of tackling one problem at a time in the Far East in the hope that the solution of one problem might ease the tension on others and help in solving them. It is doubtful that all of the 16 governments concerned would support the declaration proposed by the French. A declaration by the 35 governments which recognize Laos and which are members of the United Nations merely represents an attempt to bypass the United Nations, an organization especially created to deal with such problems. It is also doubtful whether such a declaration would receive the support of all these governments. Such declarations as these would only serve to enhance in Asian eyes the colonial connotations of the conflict in Indochina, as both the 16-nation and 35-nation groups proposed include all the main Western powers and do not include some of the Asian nations most interested in the problem.

3. In view of the very definite French decision to oppose reference of the problem to either the Security Council or to the General Assembly, the United States may drop its insistence on discussion of the situation in the Security Council. Reference of the problem to the Security Council would not lead to any constructive proposals for its solution. However, in view of the French desire to "internationalize" the problem, I think the question could best be aired at a political conference, either in the one envisaged as following an armistice in Korea or in a separate conference.

4. This suggestion might have the following advantages:

a) it would allow time for private representations to be made in Moscow and Peking which could lead the way to an eventual settlement in conference. Such private negotiations would be more likely to be fruitful than discussion in the Security Council;

b) Communist China would be represented at the Political Conference and is not represented on the Security Council;

c) I am impressed by the argument that the injection of this issue into the Security Council at this time might embitter relations with the Soviet Union and Communist China.

5. The countries participating in this proposed conference should, I suggest, be limited to those most concerned with matters in this part of the World.

6. You might wish to obtain the reaction of the Minister to these views, if he is available, before discussing them informally with the State Department.[5] Message ends.

Memorandum from Far Eastern Division to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

SECRET Ottawa, June 19, 1953

(Through UN Division)

INVASION OF LAOS — THAILAND'S APPEAL TO THE SECURITY COUNCIL

On May 8, 1953, the Thai Ambassador to Washington saw Secretary of State Dulles and other senior officials of the State Department to inform them that the Thailand Government had decided to appeal to the United Nations concerning the invasion of Laos. The State Department made it clear that the United States was definitely in favour of Thailand submitting the complaint to the Security Council and would give the Thai Delegation all help and support. The French and the British, however, at that time, were definitely not in favour of Security Council action on this matter. Until May 18, in view of the withdrawal of the Vietminh forces in Laos, the Thailand Government did not press for consideration of its case before the United Nations. We were informed on May 19 that the Bangkok Government had reconsidered its position and had decided to introduce the subject under Article 34 of the United Nations Charter. The Thai Ambassador in Washington explained that it was not his Government's intention to "condemn anyone", but rather contemplated a Security Council decision to send a committee of the Peace Observation Commission to Thailand. Thailand had hoped to schedule her appeal to the Security Council to coincide with the installation of Mr. Lodge as the President of the Security Council in June.

2. In a telegram to our Permanent Delegation in New York on May 25, 1953,† we stated:

"We are still of the opinion that reference of the problem to either the Security Council or the General Assembly is of doubtful value. However, we cannot influence in any way the question of whether the issue should be dealt with in the Security Council. Nevertheless, if, as the Thai Ambassador suggests in the New York Times despatch, the Thailand Government does not intend to 'condemn anyone', but merely wishes to have a Peace Observation Commission appointed under the aegis of the 'Uniting for Peace' resolution, then the question may not prove to be particularly explosive."

3. Despite a report in the New York Times of June 3, 1953, that the Prime Minister of Thailand was still determined to introduce his resolution in the United Nations, no move in this direction has yet been taken. On June 4, our Embassy in Washington learned from the British Embassy that Secretary of State Dulles had summoned the Thai Ambassador on June 1 to advise him that, in the United States' view, it would be advisable for Thailand to avoid taking action in the United Nations on the grounds that it would be unwise for this to be done when there was no French Government in being which could be consulted. Thailand, as a matter of courtesy, agreed to await the formation of a French Government but, prodded by the United States, still intends to take action shortly thereafter. Mr. Hoppenot, the French Delegate to the United Nations, spoke rather bitterly to our Delegation in New York about Mr. Dulles' insistence that this matter must be brought before the Security Council. He said that, prior to Mr. Dulles' return from the Middle East, the French Embassy had convinced the State Department that this appeal should be dropped and that only a letter should be sent to the Security Council members. We had been apprised earlier that Mr. Dulles' adamant attitude on this issue was based upon his belief that the United Nations was "the town meeting of the world" where such international issues as the invasion of Laos could be brought before the bar of world public opinion.

4. In telegram No. 1154 of June 12, 1953, a copy of which is attached,† our High Commissioner in London reported that Selwyn Lloyd, in his review of affairs in Southeast Asia at the meeting of the Commonwealth Prime Ministers, "saw advantage in the United Nations accepting responsibility for the Siamese frontiers". On June 3, Sir Gladwyn Jebb informed the Thai Ambassador in Washington that the United Kingdom Government favoured in principle an approach to the Security Council, but also favoured delay because of the truce negotiations in Korea. An officer from the Australian High Commission in Ottawa has shown us an Australian Department of External Affairs telegram which indicates that they regard the Thailand appeal as not altogether disadvantageous for the following reasons:

(1) The Thai appeal is only aimed at the establishment of United Nations observation machinery to meet any emergency on the Thai border;

(2) Since the Thai appeal would be based on the existence of a threat to Thailand, the danger of anti-colonial attacks on France would be lessened;

(3) A limited reference of this nature would tend to focus the attention of the countries in Southeast Asia to the dangers of Communist encroachment rather than to the French "colonial" policy in Indochina;

(4) The presence of an international body in Thailand might establish the fact of aggression against Thailand.

Thus, the United States, the United Kingdom, and Australia are now united in their opinion that the Thai appeal, which is only aimed at publicizing the Communist threat to Thailand, should not be discouraged, although, for different reasons, they believe that the discussion of this issue should be temporarily postponed.

5. The whole question of French policy in Indochina has again come into prominence by the press report from Saigon on June 14 that King Norodom Sihanouk of Cambodia has fled into self-exposed [sic] exile to Thailand. He has stated that he will not return until such time as France extends the provisions of the Pau Agreements of 1949 into full independence. On June 16, the New York Times, in a despatch from Bangkok, reported that King Norodom Sihanouk, who exiled himself from Cambodia to dramatize his country's demand for full independence from France, declared through an official spokesman here today that he would ask Thailand to raise the question of Cambodian independence in the United Nations. To date, however, Thailand's Delegate in New York has not yet received any instructions from Bangkok for a United Nations debate on Cambodian independence demands.

6. You will note from the attached telegram No. 1154 from London† that Tahourdin, head of the Southeast Asian Department of the Foreign Office, has asked our High Commissioner in the United Kingdom what our present views are on the proposed Thai appeal. I attach, for your signature and approval, subject to the concurrence of UN Division,[6] a telegram to our Permanent Delegation in New York[7] (repeated to Washington and London) which summarizes our latest thinking on the Thailand appeal to the Security Council regarding the invasion of Laos.[8]

INVASION OF LAOS — THAILAND'S APPEAL TO THE SECURITY COUNCIL

Reference: Our teletype No. 255 of May 25 (repeated to Washington as EX-926),† WA-1349 of June 3,† No. 309 of June 8 from Permdel,† and No. 1154 of June 12 from London.†

Repeat Washington No. EX-1124; London No. 1094.

Following from the Under-Secretary, Begins: We note from your telegrams under reference that the United States and the United Kingdom, with certain reservations, favour in principle a Thai appeal to the Security Council concerning the invasion of Laos. We have also ascertained that the Australian Government feels that an appeal to the United Nations of the kind contemplated by Thailand might not be altogether disadvantageous.

2. As mentioned in teletype EX-255, it is still our opinion that Canada should not try to influence in any way the question of the reference of the issue to the Security Council, since we are not represented on that body. Canadian policy toward Indochina has been consistent with our cautious approach to Southeast Asian problems generally, as reflected in our attitude towards a Pacific Pact, our non-participation in recent discussions for closer military cooperation in Southeast Asia, our limited diplomatic representation in the area and, in contrast to Australia, the United Kingdom and the United States, our delayed recognition of the Associated States of Indochina under the terms of the Pau Agreements.

3. As for the specific question of Thailand's appeal to the Security Council, we believe that Thailand's objective of securing the appointment of a Peace Observation Commission to examine the situation on the Thai border is the least objectionable of all the proposals so far advanced. There may even be some benefit in this suggestion as Peace Observation groups have rendered notable services in other areas in the past. Since the appeal would be based on the existence of a threat to Thailand, the danger of anti-colonial attacks on France would be lessened. If other nations more directly concerned with this problem (e.g., the United Kingdom, the United States and Australia) are in favour of the Thai appeal to the Security Council, we would raise no objections, it being understood, of course, that the Thai appeal will not associate Communist China with the aggression in Laos. We would hope that the appeal will be delayed until (a) a new government is formed in France and (b) an armistice in Korea has been concluded.

4. If the Thai appeal is referred to a reconvened session of the General Assembly, under the Charter and in accordance with the consistent Canadian position concerning the functions of the Assembly, there would seem to be no reason why Canada should oppose the inclusion of the item on the agenda. On the other hand, we would prefer that the reconvened session of the Assembly had no other business to discuss than the Korean armistice and the subsequent political conference. An extraneous debate on the Thailand appeal could conceivably serve to impede a Korean settlement. Ends.

State Department officials began to express wariness of the projected Thailand appeal, when it was learned through the United States Embassy in Bangkok that the King of Cambodia was suggesting to the authorities there that the Thailand Government should present to the United Nations his complaints against the French. The King has now returned to Cambodia and it is not expected that the Thai Government will jeopardize its chances of support by agreeing to the King's request.

2. We learn from the State Department that the Thai Ambassador saw Mr. Dulles early this week to ascertain the Secretary's present view on the timing of Thailand's appeal. Mr. Dulles counselled further postponement, saying that the United States would not be in a position to give Thailand full support until after the Bermuda conference.

1. I asked Khoman[9] of Thailand this afternoon what the present position was with regard to Thailand's projected appeal to the Security Council. Khoman said that whereas the situation had been sufficiently complicated before, it was now even more complicated because of the recent activities of the King of Cambodia. He told me that his government was making another review of the situation in the light of this new development and that he did not know what the outcome would be.

2. Khoman added that Thailand, though in favour of the independence of colonial peoples, did not approve the "forceful measures" employed by the King of Cambodia. Thailand believed that matters of this kind should be settled by negotiation.

Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Secretary of State for External Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL Ottawa, July 28, 1953

INDOCHINA

Through Canada House in London, the Foreign Office has brought to our attention its latest views on: (1) Indochina; and (2) on Thailand's proposed appeal to the Security Council over the invasion of Laos.

(1) Indochina

The Foreign Office is uneasy about the military and political aspects of the war in Indochina, both of which it considers to be bad. It reasons that both phases of the struggle are now inseparable and that, unless something very much like Commonwealth status is granted to the Associated States soon, heavy defections to the Vietminh will continue. As a result, France's military position in Indochina is likely to go from bad to worse as soon as the Vietminh launches a new attack.

The Vietminh are reported to be preparing a large-scale offensive for next fall after the monsoon rains. The flow of supplies from Communist China to the Vietminh is now said by the Australians and British in Saigon to be as high as 3,000 tons per month, as against a monthly total of about 500 tons earlier this year. The French too are thinking of an offensive of their own, the so-called "Navarre Plan" now under study in Paris, which calls for an additional 20,000 men and an expenditure of $285,000,000 in Indochina, but both the Australians and the British doubt whether, without full independence to spur the Vietnamese on in the struggle, the French can meet the coming Vietminh offensive successfully.

The French Government is still pondering the issue of independence for Indochina, with some members of the cabinet (President Auriol and M. Bidault, for instance) favouring maintenance of the status quo and no changes in the structure of the French Union; with others (M. Reynaud)[10] urging full Commonwealth status for Indochina.

[10] Paul Reynaud, membre de l'Assemblée commune de la Communauté européenne du charbon et de l'acier; membre de l'Assemblée nationale de France et président de la Commission des finances. Paul Reynaud, Member of Common Assembly of European Coal and Steel Community; Deputy in National Assembly of France and President, Committee on Finances.

The recent Foreign Ministers' meetings in Washington shed very little light on current French policy on the subject and the ambiguity of their paragraph on Indochina in their communiqué indicates that the French cabinet is still split on the issue. It is possible that, in line with M. Laniel's[11] statement of July 3, a transfer of some powers to the Associated States will occur (for instance, in the fields of justice and finance, where the French still retain some control) although foreign and military affairs will continue to remain in French hands. This is hardly Commonwealth status and it is obvious that the Associated States themselves have little freedom of choice in the matter. It thus seems likely that the political status quo will remain pretty much unchanged in Indochina during the coming months and that France's hedging about full independence now will have the effect of further weakening her military position there next fall.

(2) Thailand's appeal to the Security Council

Owing to the serious implications of such a prospect for Southeast Asia, the Foreign Office now favours a Siamese approach to the Security Council about the invasion of Laos and the appointment of a Peace Observation Commission to investigate Thailand's northeastern frontier. The Foreign Office bases its decision on the following: (1) the coming Vietminh offensive is being substantially abetted by refugees from Indochina (some 60,000) now living in Thailand along the Laotian border; (2) that unbiased information would be helpful to the UN; (3) that increased Vietminh political and military successes would have serious repercussions in the whole area; and (4) that an appeal to the Security Council and a visit by a UN Peace Observation Commission, preferably before the expected Vietminh offensive, would do much to strengthen the Thai Government's will to resist.

These seem to be good arguments in favour of an appeal to the Security Council and the appointment of a peace observation commission. They are substantially the views of Australia and the United States, as well. Moreover we think that if the Vietminh is successful in driving the French out of Laos next fall and in pushing them back elsewhere, the UN might be caught unprepared for a sudden appeal from Thailand for quick action to meet the emergency. Knowledge of the presence nearby of a UN Peace Observation Commission might also act as a deterrent on the Vietminh and perhaps to an even greater extent on Peking, especially if the Political Conference on Korea is in progress.

We are therefore wondering if the time has not now come for us to be more specific in our own policy on the subject. Until now, our stand has been somewhat lukewarm, in that so far we have been willing only to "raise no objections" to an appeal to the Security Council. I would suggest that we now make known that we are in favour of the Siamese proposal, on the understanding of course that any appeal to the Security Council would be made only after an armistice in Korea; that it would contain no mention of Communist China; and that it would limit itself to requesting that an investigation be held. Do you agree?[12]

We have now passed on the views contained in the memorandum attached to your despatch to Tahourdin, of the South East Asia Department. Tahourdin was pleased to have these views and was glad to know that we had reached a position substantially the same as the United Kingdom.

2. Tahourdin said that the appeal was for the moment on the shelf, and he had heard nothing recently from the Siamese to suggest that they intended to lodge the appeal in the near future. Prince Wan is, however, on his way to New York and it may be that he will discuss the question with friendly delegations on his arrival. Tahourdin's opinion, however, is that it would be rather difficult for Thailand to make the appeal in the immediate future as the situation in Indo-China is ostensibly quiet. It might be, therefore, that no appeal would be made until Viet Minh open a new offensive in the fall.

3. Meanwhile the situation was somewhat confused by the expressed French desire to have Indo-China discussed at the Political Conference on Korea, and also by the slowness of the French in starting political discussions with the Associated States. These are not scheduled to begin until September, and on this time-table it is hard to see how a satisfactory political settlement could be reached in time for the results, if satisfactory to the Associated States, to have their full impact on the public, and thus to gain their full support in meeting a new Viet Minh offensive. Although the French have, as you know, adopted in large measure the Navarre plan, no action has yet been taken on it, and so far as Tahourdin knows there has been no preliminary move to despatch the additional troops from France requested by Navarre. He thought it a pity that the French Government had not been able to move quicker, and now that they were faced with an internal crisis he doubted whether any decisive action could be taken by them in the near future. If the present French Government fell he doubted whether any successor government would be prepared to take the difficult decision which the present government had taken, at least in principle, to support fully the Indo-Chinese war, and to come to a satisfactory political settlement with the Associated States.

Extract from Memorandum by Far Eastern Division

CONFIDENTIAL Ottawa, November 16, 1953

CANADA'S POLICY ON INDOCHINA

In looking over our files, I have not found any one study which carries succinctly our approach to the war in Indochina. I have therefore thought that it might be useful at this time to summarize in one document the various aspects of Canadian policy on Indochina.

Our approach to Indochina has so far been governed by our policy on the Far East in general and on Southeast Asia in particular. Historically, Southeast Asia has not been an area of much interest to Canada; commercially, our relationship has been rather barren; and, politically, our connections are still embryonic. In the circumstances, our approach to the whole area and, especially to Indochina, has been somewhat distant and reserved.

Against this broad background, current Canadian policy on Indochina can be presented under the three following headings: 1. Military aid; 2. Technical assistance and trade; and 3. Political approach.

1. Military Aid

In its military phases, Canada's policy on Indochina although reserved, is sharply defined. No military commitments and no direct military aid of any sort have been sanctioned by the Government. Modest sales of military equipment, e.g. radios, aircraft, military vehicles, and spare parts, et cetera, to the French army's procurement agency in Saigon by private Canadian firms have been allowed provided that clearance from this Department has been obtained.

On the other hand, however, France receives substantial Mutual Aid from Canada under NATO auspices. About $32,500,000 worth of such Aid has reached her since 1950, some of which has no doubt gone to Indochina, either directly from Canada or mostly indirectly from France (in that Canadian Mutual Aid may have allowed her to release corresponding amounts of arms and equipment at home for use in Indochina). Since Canada exercises no control over and undertakes no inspection of the uses to which its Mutual Aid is put once it has left Canadian shores, it is difficult to say what, if any, Canadian Mutual Aid to France may reach Indochina, but it is to be presumed that some does. Nevertheless, the Canadian Government does not sanction the diversion of its Mutual Aid to Indochina and all requests made by France over the last three years that she be authorized to divert to Indochina Mutual Aid allocated to her by Canada under NATO have been turned down by the Government in the light of assurances given by the Government to Parliament that Canada would not be concerned with the overseas dependencies of European powers as a result of the North Atlantic Treaty.

2. Technical Assistance and Trade

On both these counts, Canada's policy is also clear-cut. Both Vietnam and Cambodia are members of the Colombo Plan's Consultative Committee on Technical Assistance and we are prepared to view sympathetically any requests which the three Associated States may submit for such assistance, although few in fact have been received. In considering such requests here, the French Government will be kept informed of any action being contemplated to meet them, presumably through the French Embassy in Ottawa.[13]

Insofar as any trade is possible with Indochina at the present time, there are no official objections to Canadians doing business with the Associated States in non-strategic goods (and in strategic goods when approved by this Department). However, the actual volume of Canadian trade involved is insignificant in terms of Canada's total foreign commerce, for instance, for the six-month period ending in June of this year, our imports from the French East Indies[14] came to less than $1,000; while our exports during the same period amounted to $257,000 (mostly spare parts and equipment) to the Direction du Matériel des Forces Armées en Extrême-Orient in Saigon.

[13] L'annotation suivante a été dactylographiée sur notre copie du document:
The following was typed on this copy of the document:
The procedure for keeping the French Government advised of such requests is now being worked out. At this stage of the Economic Division's thinking on the subject, the French Government would be informed of developments by letter through the French Embassy here.

[14] L'annotation suivante a été dactylographiée sur notre copie du document:
The following was typed on this copy of the document:
In DBS [Dominion Bureau of Statistics] parlance, (whence these statistics come) the French East Indies embrace the three Associated States and the French comptoirs in India.

3. Political Approach

Politically, our approach to Indochina has been wary and aloof. We long hesitated, for instance, in recognizing the independence of the Associated States, but in qualified terms we finally did so, however, more in order to please France than to herald the newly granted "independence". We are now willing to support reference of the war in Indochina to the Security Council (but not to the General Assembly) in the hope that ensuing discussions would indicate a solution to the problem, but we have agreed to support a move, if made, only on the understanding that an appeal to the Security Council in this connection would contain no mention of Communist China. We are also ready to support the creation of a United Nations Peace Observation Commission to investigate the situation along the border of Laos and Thailand, provided that it too would not involve Communist China in its surveys and that it should limit itself to making an investigation only. Both aspects of this policy stem from Thailand's abortive proposal last spring to bring the Vietminh invasion of Laos to the attention of the Security Council.[15] As, however, the Vietminh has to a great extent withdrawn its forces from Laos and as no further invasion of Laos has since taken place, no Siamese appeal to the Security Council has been made and presumably none will be made, unless the situation in Indochina worsens.

Conclusion:

As the political and military situation in Indochina, whence these aspects of Canadian policy spring, is still roughly the same, no changes in our approach would seem to be warranted at the present time. However, should the situation deteriorate rapidly in Indochina during the new campaign season and, especially, if France should face the prospect of a complete debacle there or if some successor to the Laniel Government — under pressure of developments both at home and overseas — have to undertake a negotiated settlement there, it would be necessary to reconsider Canada's policy on Indochina, in the light of the serious strategic implications which such developments would have not only for Indochina itself, but especially for the rest of Southeast Asia.

FLOOD RELIEF FOR JAPAN

In the past few months Japan has experienced two disastrous floods, the first in the southern island of Kyushu in which 1,000 persons were reported dead or missing, 4,000 injured and something like 20,000 dwellings washed away or partially destroyed. The second flood, in mid July, affected the southeastern section of the main island of Japan including the metropolitan districts of Osaka and Mie. This disaster is apparently more serious than that in Kyushu and in all some 65,000 individuals are said to have been affected, either by death, injury, or inundation of accommodation.

2. The Japanese Government and national and international relief agencies have been providing relief in Kyushu and a very substantial physical contribution has been made by United States forces in Japan. The Canadian Red Cross has made $20,000 in Canadian funds available to the Japanese Red Cross. British Commonwealth Forces in Korea have released certain supplies suitable for disaster relief. Mr. Mayhew, the Canadian Ambassador, reports that the United States military authorities have already despatched aid to the new disaster area on the main island and that the Japanese Government has inaugurated a relief programme.

3. The Ambassador has sent messages of sympathy on behalf of the Canadian Government to the appropriate Japanese authorities in connection with both floods. He reports that the Japanese budget for natural disasters amounts to only Y[en] 4 billion whereas damage in the Kyushu area alone has been privately estimated at Y[en] 150 billion ($440 million). Mr. Mayhew has emphasized the need for additional foreign assistance and has asked to be informed immediately if the Canadian Government is proposing to render immediate or long term aid.

4. Apart from the humanitarian aspect of the matter, there are a number of reasons why some gesture by Canada would be useful at this stage. Japan occupies a key position in Asia and from the point of view of our long term political interests, it would seem desirable to show that Canada is not disinterested in developments there. In connection with the possible conclusion of a trade agreement with Japan, it would also appear important to increase public awareness of our interest in that country. The presence of Canadian troops in the area may make it particularly appropriate to do something for Japan on this occasion.

5. The Canadian Red Cross Society have advised that amongst other things supplies of powdered milk and canned meat are required in the flood areas. The fact that considerable surplus stocks of these two commodities are presently held by the Canadian Government with little prospect of commercial sale may increase the desirability of making any aid available in this form.

6. Possibly, a gift of canned pork and powdered milk might, with the agreement of the Canadian Red Cross, be financed from the funds still uncommitted of the amount provided by the Canadian Government earlier this year for flood relief in the United Kingdom and the Low Countries. In this connection, the National Commissioner of the Red Cross Society has advised that of the total available for European flood relief (approximately three million dollars, including the one million dollar Government contribution), roughly one half remains uncommitted. He has advised, however, that the balance is required to finance rehabilitation projects which are coming forward. Apart from the administrative difficulty of using for Japanese flood relief, funds which have been turned over to the Red Cross for another purpose, there is a danger that expenditure of some of these monies in Japan might be misunderstood in Europe. It would appear also that a procedure of this kind might require subsequent legislative action. A suitable alternative might be to make use of the Contingency Fund of the Department of Finance.

7. It is submitted that if aid is to be provided for Japanese flood relief, it should be in an amount large enough to generate good will (say $50,000) and should be made available quickly in order to heighten the impact of the gift both in Canada and Japan.

Recommendation

It is recommended that:

(a) flood relief be made available to Japan in the form of canned pork and powdered milk in the amount of $50,000;

(b) the above contribution be financed from the Contingency Fund of the Department of Finance;

(c) the division of the Canadian contribution as between canned pork and powdered milk be decided by the Secretary of State for External Affairs on the basis of need, as advised by the Canadian Red Cross or the appropriate Japanese authorities;

(d) for the purposes of this gift, powdered skimmed milk, whether spray-dried or roller-dried, be obtained from the Agricultural Prices Support Board at cost, and that canned pork be procured at the price established for previous sales to relief organizations such as CARE[16] (27.8 cents per pound f.o.b.[17] Vancouver);

(e) authority be granted to the Secretary of State for External Affairs to arrange for the delivery of relief supplies to Japan in the most expeditious manner practicable and that the shipping charges involved be met from the funds approved for Japanese flood relief and/or by the Government of Japan if the Japanese authorities are willing to pay all or part of these costs.

FLOOD RELIEF FOR JAPAN

6. The Minister of National Defence, as Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs, said that, in the last few months, Japan had experienced two disastrous floods and the Canadian Ambassador there had emphasized the need for outside assistance. There were a number of reasons why help by Canada would be useful at the present stage, apart from humanitarian considerations.

The Canadian Red Cross Society had advised that supplies of powdered milk and canned meat were required, among other things, in the flood areas. It was recommended that assistance in the form of such items be provided.

An explanatory memorandum was circulated.

(Acting Minister's memorandum, Aug. 4, 1953 — Cab. Doc. 161-53)

7. The Cabinet approved the recommendation of the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs and agreed:

(a) that flood relief be provided to Japan in the form of canned pork and powdered milk to the amount of $50,000; the division of the contribution as between the two items to be decided by the Secretary of State for External Affairs on the basis of advice by the Canadian Red Cross Society or the appropriate Japanese authorities;

(b) that the powdered milk be obtained from the Agricultural Prices Support Board at cost and the canned pork at the price established for previous sales to relief organizations such as CARE (27.8¢ per pound f.o.b. Vancouver);

[17] Franco à bord/Free on board.

(c) that the Department of Finance decide whether to finance the contribution from their contingency fund or in some other fashion that would be appropriate; and,

(d) that authority be granted to the Secretary of State for External Affairs to arrange for the delivery of the relief supplies in the most expeditious manner practicable and for shipping charges to be met from funds provided for Japanese flood relief or by the government of Japan, if the Japanese authorities were willing to pay all or part of the costs.

LETTER NO. 933 Tokyo, September 17, 1953

BENEFIT BALL FOR THE RELIEF OF FLOOD VICTIMS

I do not know whether you are interested or not in the Ball which we held at the Embassy on September 10th for the benefit of flood victims in central and southern Japan. It was I think a success. At least I have never done anything which earned us so many kind and appreciative remarks. There were about 450 in attendance. The enclosed copy of the letter which accompanied the cheque we sent to the Japanese Red Cross will give you the vital statistics.†

2. The Nippon Hoso Kyokai (Japan Broadcasting Commission) supplied the music and the games were run on a self-sustaining basis, that is the prizes were bought out of the funds taken in at the various games. I supplied the food and other refreshments. The catering was too big a job to be done by our own staff and we contracted caterers from outside who did an exceptionally good job. They probably provided a little bit more food than was necessary but it was a very tasty and nicely served supper.

3. I think the Ball has done us a great deal of good in this community as well as providing a substantial sum of money for the relief of the flood victims.

4. In the planning and holding of the Ball we came up against a couple of problems which I should like to take up with you. It would be much easier to cope with this form of entertainment if we had a marquee of our own. We had to borrow one for this occasion from the Imperial Palace. We need at least another 150 verandah-type chairs and an awning over a portion or possibly all of the east end of the residence. Since my arrival we have had three fairly large affairs. We have permitted the Tokyo Women's Club to use the Embassy twice for music recitals and on each occasion we have had to borrow 150 chairs from the British Embassy. For the Ball we had to borrow an additional 100 chairs from Ebisu Camp. As these three occasions were more or less benefit parties we did not feel too much under an obligation but if we were to entertain on such a scale entirely on our own we would hesitate to ask for this equipment. However, we will be forwarding a formal request when we are able to get estimated costs for the three items mentioned.

Memorandum for Cabinet

TRADE DISCUSSION WITH JAPAN

1. At the meeting of November 19th, 1952, the Cabinet considered the general lines to be followed in discussions with the Japanese concerning the proposed most-favoured-nation trade agreement. The discussions have proceeded since that time on the basis of the Cabinet's directions, but a stage has now been reached at which further direction is urgently necessary. At an early stage in considering this matter, the Cabinet agreed that it was important not to give any impression that Canada was trying to protract or delay the negotiations. There has been some indication recently that the position of certain Canadian exports in the Japanese market, particularly dissolving woodpulp, may be threatened by the absence of a satisfactory agreement. The importance of Japanese-Canadian trade to Canada has increased in the last year or so. The proportion of exports to imports was 6 to 1 in 1951, but in 1952 the balance in favour of Canada was 8 to 1. It is, therefore, more important even than when the Cabinet had this matter last under consideration to avoid anything that might endanger Canadian exports to Japan.

2. At the November 19 meeting, the Negotiating Group set up by Cabinet on July 31 (consisting of A.E. Ritchie, Department of External Affairs; J.J. Deutsch, Department of Finance; and C.M. Isbister, Department of Trade and Commerce) were instructed:

(1) to seek a reservation of the right to apply fixed values on imports which cause or threaten to cause serious injury to Canadian industry; and

(2) to seek certain assurances from Japan concerning the treatment of Canadian exports; including an undertaking by Japan not to discriminate against imports from Canada in the application of trade and exchange restrictions, which would in effect be additional to any safeguards afforded by GATT in the event that Japan is admitted to GATT.

3. The Cabinet memorandum concerning the type of assurances that should be sought from Japan on the treatment of Canadian exports was as follows:

"It could be pointed out to the Japanese at the outset of the negotiations that the proposed extension to them of most-favoured-nation rates represented a major concession, particularly as they reflect the results of negotiations in GATT. In the light of this, and the fact that Japanese imports into Canada would not be liable to any form of discrimination, the Committee consider that we would be justified in asking for similar non-discriminatory treatment of Canadian exports to Japan. This would apply particularly to the 100% surtax on the present tariff duties which the Japanese authorities may, under existing legislation, impose on goods from any country discriminating in any way against Japan. It would apply also to quantitative import restrictions and the allocation of foreign exchange, which are at present being administered by the Japanese on a discriminatory basis. The starting position should probably be to insist on complete non-discrimination between hard and soft currency countries. If the position could not be maintained in the course of negotiations it might be desirable nonetheless to have the principle of non-discrimination spelled out in the agreement with the reservation that, if the Japanese found it necessary to depart from this principle, they would enter into full consultations with us at our request. The last position to which we might move would be to insist at least on the non-discriminatory allocation of exchange among the hard currency countries. The question whether we would be prepared to retreat this far would have to be decided at the time in the light of the progress achieved in the negotiations as a whole."

4. Initial discussions were held with the Japanese on the basis of a draft agreement submitted by Japan. The Japanese draft was found to be unsatisfactory in several respects and had to be substantially modified to take into account the Canadian point of view. Accordingly, a revised draft of a most-favoured-nation trade agreement was submitted to Japan as a basis for negotiations which included:

(1) an escape clause to permit, in certain circumstances, the imposition by Canada of increased values for duty; and

(2) provisions requiring complete non-discrimination by Japan in the application of trade and exchange restrictions.

5. Since then several discussions have been held with the Japanese on the basis of the revised Canadian draft agreement. As a result of these discussions the position of the Japanese Government on the two main proposals contained in the revised draft has now become clear.

6. It would appear that the Japanese Government is prepared to accept the principle of a valuation procedure which would permit, in certain circumstances, the imposition of increased values for duty on imports causing or threatening to cause serious injury to a Canadian domestic industry. The Japanese have indicated a preference for covering the escape clause on valuation by means of an exchange of notes rather than by way of a formal provision in the Agreement itself, but have not excluded the latter possibility. Accordingly, it is not expected that the inclusion of satisfactory provisions relating to valuation will create any difficulties, although the details remain to be worked out.

7. With respect to the Canadian proposal requiring complete non-discriminatory application of trade and exchange restrictions, the Japanese Government are not prepared to accept such an undertaking. In their view, uncertainties affecting the future of the Japanese balance of payments, and the widespread inconvertibility of currencies, make it imperative for them to retain the right to impose discriminatory trade and exchange restrictions in order to safeguard the external financial position of Japan. The Japanese have put up several counter-proposals, but these offer no real protection to Canada against the continuation and extension of discriminatory trade and exchange restrictions affecting Canadian exports. While these proposals are, of course, unacceptable to us, it is clear that provisions requiring complete non-discrimination will not be acceptable to the Japanese.

8. The Negotiating Group has attempted to find a way out of this impasse by devising a formula which, while recognizing the realities of the Japanese balance of payments position, would at the same time give reasonable assurances for the principal Canadian exports to the Japanese market. It is considered that such a formula should include the following provisions:

(1) an undertaking by Japan not [to] discriminate against Canada in favour of other hard currency sources of supply; and

(2) an undertaking by Japan not to impose any trade or exchange controls which have the effect of discriminating against traditional Canadian exports to Japan.

9. The Negotiating Group considered that the most effective way to cover these points was to include in the draft agreement a specific reference to a list of Canadian exports to Japan for which we seek complete non-discriminatory treatment. The Negotiating Group is aware that the inclusion in the Agreement of special safeguards for a list of key exports raises a number of presentational difficulties. At best, any special list of export products would have to be strictly limited in number if it is to have a reasonable chance of being acceptable to Japan. Exporters of other products might object to the fact that their products were not included on the list entitled to full non-discriminatory treatment. Other objections might arise because the special list comprises mainly basic foodstuffs and other primary products. Canadian manufacturers, who would have to meet increased competition from Japanese imports, may argue that the Japanese concessions with respect to these basic primary products were obtained at the expense of the Canadian manufacturing industry. The Negotiating Group would have preferred a formula stated in more general terms to cover our position but was unable to devise a general provision which covered the situation adequately. Appendix "A" to this memorandum contains a revised article dealing with trade and exchange restrictions which meets the criteria set out above and which, in the view of the Negotiating Group, may provide the basis for an acceptable compromise between the Japanese and Canadian positions.

10. It should be pointed out that the appended list of export items selected for special treatment are commodities which combine the following characteristics:

(1) they are finding or are expected to find an important continuing market in Japan;

(2) they are obtainable by Japan from non-dollar sources of supply;

(3) the Canadian producing these goods would be seriously affected if the Japanese market should be closed or severely restricted.

These products account for about 85 per cent of Canadian exports to Japan in 1952. Although 9 commodities are included in the special list, the most important are barley, wheat and woodpulp which together have made up about 60 per cent of our total exports to Japan in recent years. The attached list of export products for which we propose complete non-discrimination can, therefore, be regarded as a negotiating list, and certain deletions could be made without impairing seriously the value of the concessions sought from Japan.

11. Total imports into Japan of the products in the special list account for about 17 per cent of Japanese foreign exchange allocations, so that, in the view of the Negotiating Group, the inclusion of a list of roughly this magnitude should not create insurmountable financial difficulties for Japan. At the same time, it should be noted that implementation by Japan of a proposal along these lines would involve substantial changes in the present Japanese system of trade and exchange controls. It would limit Japan's freedom in making bilateral agreements by which exclusive trade privileges are exchanged with a number of countries; and might also involve some additional hard currency expenditures for the importation of the listed products. For these reasons Japan may find it difficult to agree to a proposal of this kind. From the Canadian point of view, however, it is important that we should seek to obtain some assurances along the lines contained in our proposal which offer real benefits for our exporters.

12. The provisions described above concerning the use of trade and exchange restrictions by Japan would, the Committee believes, give Canada a number of important assurances affecting the treatment of Canadian exports to the Japanese market. While Japan would retain the right to continue to impose trade and exchange restrictions for the purpose of protecting her balance of payments, certain clear limitations would be placed on Japan's right to apply such restrictions in a manner which discriminated against imports from Canada. Under these provisions, Canadian exports to Japan would be assured the following treatment.

13. With respect to the list of principal Canadian export items which are specifically enumerated in the draft agreement, any balance of payments restrictions imposed by Japan would have to be completely non-discriminatory. That is, Canadian exporters would have the right to compete for all Japanese imports of these commodities on the same basis as the exporters of any other country, regardless of whether the currency of that country is hard or soft. The specified list of Canadian exports are basic foodstuffs or raw materials, essential to the Japanese economy, so that Japan will no doubt continue to import these goods in substantial quantities. Because these goods are also available from soft currency sources of supply, an undertaking by Japan to give Canada equal treatment with all other suppliers would constitute an important commitment by Japan of real significance to Canada's export trade.

14. With respect to all other Canadian exports Japan would retain the right to apply trade or exchange restrictions in a manner which favoured imports from soft currency countries. Japan would not be permitted, however, under the proposed provisions, to discriminate against Canada in favour of other hard currency countries, i.e., the United States.

15. Appendix "B" to this memorandum contains a statement indicating the principal products which enter into Canadian trade with Japan.

16. The Negotiating Group would like to have direction as to whether inclusion in the Agreement of provisions along the above lines appears to be appropriate. If, in the view of Cabinet, this line of approach is appropriate, the Negotiating Group recommends that:

(1) authorization be given to transmit to the Japanese Government a revised draft article on trade and exchange restrictions, to include the provisions suggested above and described in Appendix "A", as a basis for negotiation; and

(2) the Negotiating Group report back to Cabinet when the views of the Japanese Government on this proposal, or on variants of this proposal which might be acceptable to us, have been ascertained.

NEGOTIATING GROUP

APPENDICE A
APPENDIX A

ARTICLE IV

Trade and Exchange Restrictions

1. No prohibitions or restrictions shall be applied by either Contracting Party on the importation of any article, the growth, produce or manufacture of the other Contracting Party or except as provided in legislation affecting essential security interests, on the exportation of any article consigned to the territory of such other Contracting Party, unless the importation of the like article of all third countries or the exportation of the like article to all third countries is similarly prohibited or restricted.

2. In all matters relating to the allocation of foreign exchange, and to the administration of foreign exchange restrictions, affecting transactions involving the importation and exportation of goods, each Contracting Party undertakes to accord to the other unconditional most-favoured-nation treatment.

3. Both Contracting Parties recognize that the existence of balance of payments difficulties in many countries, and the widespread inconvertibility of currencies, do not permit the immediate and full achievement of non-discriminatory application of trade and exchange restrictions affecting imports. Accordingly, notwithstanding the provisions of this Agreement, either Contracting Party may, in the application of trade or exchange restrictions affecting imports, for the purpose of safeguarding its external financial position and balance of payments, temporarily deviate from the provisions of paragraphs 1 and 2 of this Article, provided that:

(a) if either Contracting Party maintains any trade or exchange restrictions affecting imports, such restrictions shall be applied in such a way as to avoid unnecessary damage to the commercial or economic interests of the other Contracting Party;

(b) if either Contracting Party maintains any trade or exchange restrictions affecting imports which deviate from the provisions of paragraphs 1 and 2 of this Article, such restrictions shall not be applied in such a way as to result directly or indirectly in discrimination as between countries whose currencies are convertible;

(c) if either Contracting Party maintains trade or exchange restrictions affecting the importation of any of the articles listed in Annex "A" to this Agreement, such restrictions shall be so administered as to conform fully with the requirements of non-discriminatory treatment contained in paragraphs 1 and 2 of this Article.

Table I shows that in 1952 Japan was Canada's 4th largest export market. Exports to Japan at a figure of $103 million were exceeded only by exports of $2,307 million to the United States, $746 million to the United Kingdom and $104 million to Belgium. This compared with exports to other principal markets of $81 million to Brazil, $55 million to India, $50 million to Australia and $48 million to France. With respect to individual Canadian industries, Japan constitutes a highly important market for a number of products of which barley, wheat and woodpulp have been the three major exports to Japan in recent years. In 1952 Japan was Canada's largest market for barley, taking some 27 per cent of all Canadian barley exports; the 6th largest market for wheat, absorbing some 6 per cent of our total wheat exports; and the 3rd largest market for dissolving pulp as well as an important outlet for other grades of woodpulp. The woodpulp industry in British Columbia is particularly dependent on the Japanese market for rayon pulp.

Table II shows that imports from Japan in 1952 amounted to $13 million, approximately ⅛ the value of exports to that market. It should be noted that imports from Japan are spread over a wide variety of manufactured goods many of which are also produced in Canada. At present, imports from Japan are subject to the higher rates of our general tariff and this, no doubt, helps to explain the low level of imports from Japan. If a Most-Favoured-Nation agreement is concluded with Japan, Japanese goods would enter Canada at the lower tariff rates which now apply to all other countries entitled to most-favoured-nation treatment. It is to be expected that this would result in increased competition from Japan for a wide range of goods manufactured in Canada.

TRADE DISCUSSIONS WITH JAPAN

19. The Minister of Finance, referring to discussion at the meeting of November 19th, 1952, said the negotiating group had now advised that a point had been reached, in the discussions with Japan concerning a most-favoured-nation trade agreement, at which further direction from the Cabinet was necessary. It appeared that the Japanese government was prepared to accept the principle of a procedure that would allow the imposition of increased values for duty on imports causing or threatening to cause serious injury to domestic industry. They were not prepared to give an undertaking for complete non-discriminatory application of trade and exchange restrictions. To meet the situation, the negotiating group had devised a formula which, while recognizing the realities of the Japanese balance of payments position, would give reasonable assurances for the principal Canadian exports to the Japanese market. The formula was set forth in a note from the group.

An explanatory memorandum had been circulated.

(Memorandum, Negotiating Group, undated — Cab. Doc. 152-53)

20. The Cabinet noted the report of the Minister of Finance about discussions with Japan on the proposed most-favoured-nation trade agreement and agreed:

(a) that the negotiating group be authorized to transmit to the Japanese government a revised draft article on trade and exchange restrictions to include provisions, as submitted, as a basis for negotiation; and,

(b) that the negotiating group report back to the Cabinet when the views of the Japanese government on the proposal, or on variants which might be acceptable to the government, had been ascertained.

CONFIDENTIAL Ottawa, September 15, 1953

Dear Mr. [K.] Inagaki,

At our meeting yesterday afternoon, you asked if we could supply drafts of the modifications which might be made in our latest proposal to meet certain points which had been raised by you during the meeting on August 26. As I told you yesterday, we are not in a position to put forward any modifications formally at this stage, since we have not had an opportunity to ascertain the views of our Ministers.

I am very glad, however, to let you have on an informal basis the modifications which the group of officials concerned would be prepared to recommend to Ministers. Accordingly, I am enclosing tentative drafts relating to:

(a) alterations which might be made in Section 3(b) of Article IV of our proposal of July 9; and

(b) the substance of an Exchange of Notes which might take place concerning the treatment of existing commitments and specific import plans of the Japanese Government.

I trust that these indications of the kinds of changes which we have in mind will enable you to give further consideration to our proposals.

Yours sincerely,

A.E. RITCHIE

Suggested Text for an Exchange of Notes

As a temporary and limited exception to the provisions of Article IV, para 3(c), the Canadian Government recognizes that Japan may be obliged to maintain discriminatory controls affecting the importation of Canadian wheat, barley and woodpulp, only to the extent necessary to fulfil the specific import plans and commitments described below which are in force between Japan and third countries at the time of the signature of the Canada-Japan Trade Agreement. Upon the expiry dates noted below of these import plans and commitments, the provisions of Article IV, para 3(c) shall come fully into effect with the exception that a period of 30 days is granted after each of the said expiry dates, to allow for the entry into Japan of goods ordered under these trade plans and commitments prior to their expiry dates.

Wheat

to the value of US $27 million (F.O.B.) in the period January 1 to December 31, 1953. (Trade and Payments Arrangement with Argentine Republic signed April 30, 1953).

Barley

to the value of US $3.8 million (F.O.B.) in the period January 1 to December 31, 1953. (Trade and Payments Arrangement with Argentine Republic signed April 30, 1953).

Barley

to a maximum of two hundred thousand long tons per year in the period November, 1952 to November, 1955. (Agreement for Sale and Purchase of Australian Barley signed November 14, 1952).

Wood Pulp

to the value of US $1.34 million in the period April 1, 1953 to March 31, 1954. (Trade Agreement with Sweden signed May 7, 1953).

Mr. Inagaki[18] met in this Department on September 11 with the Canadian negotiating group to indicate the formal reply of his Government to the proposals which the Canadian side had made on July 9 and which had been the subject of further discussion during Mr. Togo's visit to Ottawa on August 26.

2. Mr. Inagaki stated that, while the ultimate objectives of his Government were similar to those of the Canadian Government as reflected in the proposals of July 9, the Japanese Government did not feel able to move as far in the direction of a non-discriminatory policy as those proposals would require. Mr. Inagaki then submitted an alternative draft. This alternative text would permit Japan to deviate temporarily from the non-discrimination requirements of the Article. A copy of the Japanese counter-proposal is attached. In addition, Mr. Inagaki indicated that his Government would be prepared, either in the Agreement or in a separate (possibly confidential) Exchange of Notes, to guarantee that dollar allocations for the import of wheat, barley and woodpulp during the twelve-month period from October 1953 through September 1954 would not fall below a specified minimum.

3. At that meeting the Canadian group refrained from commenting on the substance of the Japanese proposal and merely sought clarification of the following points which were somewhat obscure:

(a) if dollar allocations could be guaranteed for only a year, was it appropriate to envisage in paragraphs 3(a) and (b) of the Japanese proposal that deviations from the principle of non-discrimination should be permitted for a period of two years and that the consultation regarding the application of that principle in the future should take place at the end of two years?

(b) would the guaranteed minimum "dollar allocations" be for purchases from the dollar area alone or might some part of them be absorbed in purchases from other countries?

(c) what guaranteed minimum quantities did the Japanese Government have in mind; would they be expressed as an absolute amount or as a percentage of total imports or as a combination of the two?

4. Mr. Inagaki undertook to secure clarification on these points by Monday if at all possible.

5. On Monday afternoon, September 14, the Canadian group again met with Mr. Inagaki to receive the additional information which he had secured from Tokyo. With respect to the questions which had been asked at the previous meeting, Mr. Inagaki was able to reply that:

(a) his Government would be willing to have the period in paragraph 3 of the Article reduced from two years to one year in order to make it co-terminous with the period covered by the guaranteed minimum dollar allocations;

(b) the guaranteed minimum dollar allocations would be reserved for purchases from the dollar area;

(c) the Japanese Government would prefer to express the guaranteed minima as percentages of total imports, and they would suggest that the percentages might be:

	Dollar Allocation as Proportion of Total Imports of the Particular Commodity
Wheat	74%
Barley	63%
Woodpulp (sulphate and sulphite)	72%

6. Mr. Inagaki emphasized that these percentages represented minimum dollar purchases and that, in fact, purchases from the dollar area would probably be substantially larger (particularly since it was already evident that amounts scheduled for delivery under bi-lateral agreements would not be forthcoming). He explained that these percentages had been arrived at after allowing for commitments or expected purchases from non-dollar sources. He gave the following figures in support of the calculations:

	Total Expected Imports	Imports Expected from non-Dollar Sources	Imports Expected from Dollar Sources
Wheat	1,550,000 tons	400,000 tons	1,150,000 tons
Barley	800,000 tons	300,000 tons	500,000 tons
Woodpulp	90,000 tons	25,000 tons	65,000 tons

7. Mr. Inagaki explained that the figures for barley were somewhat low for the reason that current stocks were relatively high. He asked that all of these figures (which were illustrative and might be altered in practice) should be regarded as confidential.

8. The Canadian officials informed Mr. Inagaki that, while they had not had an opportunity to ascertain the definite views of Ministers, their own reactions were generally unfavourable to the kind of proposal which he had put forward. They expressed the hope that the Japanese Government would be prepared to re-examine the Canadian proposals of July 9. In this connection, they offered to supply Mr. Inagaki with tentative drafts of the modifications which they would be prepared to recommend to Ministers to meet the two points raised by the Japanese side at the meeting on August 26. The Canadian officials also undertook to secure Ministerial views on the Japanese proposal as soon as possible and to communicate them to Mr. Inagaki. It was pointed out by the Canadian group that consideration of the Japanese application for temporary admission to the GATT would be difficult if by that time an agreement between Canada and Japan had not been concluded or was not in sight.

9. On September 15, a letter was sent to Mr. Inagaki outlining the modifications in the proposals of July 9 which the Canadian officials would be prepared to recommend. A copy of that letter is attached.[19] Mr. Inagaki was also told orally on that day that some of the Ministers primarily concerned had already expressed their views on the draft which he had submitted and that those Ministers found his proposal unacceptable. It was appreciated that the Japanese authorities had made an effort to meet certain of the points which had been made by the Canadian group in the negotiations; the proposition which they had submitted, however, was one which could not be readily reconciled with the general lines of the commercial policy which Canada has followed and which she has advocated internationally since the war. While the Japanese draft of Article IV acknowledged the objective of non-discrimination, the specific provisions did not move in that direction. The provision suggested by the Japanese Government would not really reduce the element of possible discrimination in Japanese trading arrangements with other countries. To the extent that it might appear to reserve a fixed portion of the Japanese market for dollar suppliers, it might even be represented by non-dollar countries as involving discrimination against those countries. Such a provision would generally give the agreement the appearance of a fairly rigid bilateral commodity trade deal of the sort to which we have taken exception in the past (even though in this case the quantities or percentages related to the whole dollar area and not just to Canada). The hope was again expressed that Tokyo would reconsider the Canadian proposals of

[19] Le document 1085./Document 1085.

July 9 with the modifications suggested by officials. It was also re-emphasized that any failure to approach an agreement could not fail to affect Canada's attitude towards Japan's application for provisional admission to the GATT.

10. Mr. Inagaki said that he would report this reaction to Tokyo and would ask that further thought be given to the earlier Canadian proposals. He remarked that in any further consideration which his people might give to our proposals they would probably wish to know:

(a) whether other existing commitments beyond those listed in the attachment to our letter of September 15 could be excepted from the non-discrimination requirement of Article IV; and

(b) in what manner we would propose to determine whether any future transactions were non-discriminatory, especially when the nominal price might be distorted by the fact that the transaction was part of a barter deal or was subject to multiple currency practices.

11. Mr. Inagaki was told that these were matters which could be discussed when his authorities had studied our draft further if they then wished to make any specific suggestions. The assumption underlying the whole agreement was, of course, that all of its provisions would be interpreted and administered reasonably by both sides.

12. At the end of the talk on Tuesday, Mr. Inagaki referred to the fact that his Minister of Finance, accompanied by senior officials, would be visiting Ottawa in a few days, but that he did not think they intended to have substantial discussions about the draft agreement or other matters. He understood that the visit was in the nature of a courtesy call.

13. Mr. Inagaki explained that he himself would be absent in Geneva for two weeks or so and that in the interval the Ambassador would handle any negotiations which might be possible. In addition, Mr. Udo[20] and Mr. Tachibana[21] would be available for any technical discussions that might be required.

Article IV (contreproposition japonaise)

Article IV (Japanese counterproposal)

[Ottawa], September 11, 1953

1. No prohibitions or restrictions shall be applied by either Contracting Party on the importation of any article, the growth, produce or manufacture of the other Contracting Party or except as provided in legislation affecting essential security interests, on the exportation of any article consigned to the territory of such other Contracting Party, unless the importation of the like article of all third countries or the exportation of the like article to all third countries is similarly prohibited or restricted.

2. In all matters relating to the allocation of foreign exchange, and to the administration of foreign exchange restrictions, affecting transactions involving the importation and exportation of goods, each Contracting Party undertakes to accord to the other unconditional most-favoured-nation treatment.

3. Both Contracting Parties recognize that the existence of balance of payments difficulties in many countries, and the widespread inconvertibility of currencies, do not permit the immediate and full achievement of non-discriminatory application of trade and exchange restrictions affecting imports. Accordingly, notwithstanding the provisions of this Agreement, either Contracting Party may, in the application of trade or exchange restrictions affecting imports, for the purpose of safeguarding its external financial position and balance of payments, temporarily deviate from the provisions of paragraphs 1 and 2 of this Article,

(a) for a period of two years from the date of entry into force of this Agreement.

(b) At the expiration of the two years referred to above, the Contracting Party applying such restrictions shall agree to consult with the other as to their further application. If agreement is not reached within thirty days thereafter, the other Contracting Party shall be free to terminate this Agreement in its entirety by giving sixty days' notice in writing to that effect.

(c) If either Contracting Party maintains any trade or exchange restrictions affecting imports, such restrictions shall be applied in such a way as to avoid unnecessary damage to the commercial or economic interests of the other Contracting Party.

TRADE NEGOTIATIONS WITH JAPAN; JAPANESE MEMBERSHIP IN GATT

20. The Secretary of State for External Affairs referring to discussion at the meetings of July 6th,[22] and September 9th, 1953,[23] submitted a memorandum on trade negotiations with the Japanese and the accession of Japan to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

An explanatory memorandum was circulated.

(Minister's memorandum, Sept. 29, 1953 — Cab. Doc. 224-53) †

[22] Le document 1084./Document 1084.

[23] Le document 423./Document 423.

21. The Minister of Trade and Commerce, said that while he was in Geneva, in connection with the eighth session of Contracting Parties to the GATT, the Japanese delegation had sought Canadian support for their provisional admission. Although the Japanese recognized that the Canadian position in this connection was conditional upon conclusion of a satisfactory trade agreement with Canada, they showed, at the time, little inclination to pursue negotiations.

The United States had advised the Japanese to conclude a trade agreement with Canada on the basis of the latest Canadian proposals. The difficulty, from the Japanese point of view, had been their desire to make bilateral agreements, and their objection to concluding an agreement with Canada which would stand in the way of a discriminatory bilateral agreement with the Argentine. The Japanese fear was that, unless they could renew concessions to the Argentine on wheat, they might lose some of their markets in that country. They had expressed the desire informally, to obtain a specific escape clause by which they might obtain release from the Canadian government of their obligations, should they need to make a discriminatory arrangement with countries such as the Argentine.

The Japanese proposed to defer application of the principle of non-discrimination for at least a year when the position would be subject to review. Meanwhile, they would be prepared to guarantee dollar allocations for importation of wheat, barley and wood pulp, most of which were obtained in the dollar area and which were the three most important exports from Canada. This proposal was not considered acceptable because it could not be reconciled with Canadian commercial policies. Consideration had been given to whether the Japanese might be able to accept Canadian proposals if Canada were to amend them by exempting 5 percent, or possibly 10 percent, of Japan's total imports of wheat from non-discriminatory requirements for a period of one year.

22. In the course of discussion, the following points emerged:

(a) It would be undesirable to meet the Japanese request for an escape clause or grant them the exemption of a percentage of imports from the non-discriminatory provision. Any such arrangement would make it very difficult to give Canadian support for the admission of Japan to GATT.

(b) If, in the negotiation of a trade agreement with Canada, the Japanese were allowed a measure of discrimination, the reaction of certain Canadian manufacturers of products similar to those imported from Japan would be unfavourable.

(c) It appeared that further negotiations with respect to the trade agreement with Japan would be continued in Ottawa rather than in Geneva. Directions could be given to the Canadian negotiators as required, and it would be best to observe developments further before making any substantial concessions.

23. The Cabinet noted the reports of the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Secretary of State for External Affairs concerning trade negotiations with Japan and discussion at Geneva of Japanese membership in the GATT and agreed:

(a) that the bilateral negotiations for a trade agreement with Japan should be continued in Ottawa and the Canadian negotiating group be instructed:

(i) not to pursue discussion of any percentage exemption of Japanese imports from non-discrimination requirements;

(ii) not to make any move for the reduction of the original list of Canadian commodities to be accorded full non-discriminatory treatment; and,

(iii) for the time being, to reaffirm the proposals for full non-discriminatory treatment for the list of commodities, with the sole exception of specific Japanese bilateral agreements now in force;

(b) that the Canadian delegation to the meeting of the Contracting Parties to the GATT be instructed:

(i) if a position had to be taken before a satisfactory bilateral agreement with Japan had been reached or was assured, the delegation should indicate that, in the absence of a suitable basis for trading relations between Canada and Japan, Canada would not be able to apply the GATT to that trade, although it would have no objection to other countries so doing with regard to their trade; the delegation to be authorized to intimate that, in the event that future bilateral discussions resulted in the establishment of an acceptable basis for trade, the Canadian government would then be prepared to consider having the GATT govern Canadian-Japanese trade relations, subject to the provisions of the bilateral agreement;

(ii) if, by the time a position has to be taken, a bilateral agreement has been reached or can confidently be expected, the delegation should agree to the application of the GATT to trade relations with Japan, on the understanding that the bilateral agreement would prevail in any respect in which it went further than the GATT in the direction of non-discrimination; and,

(iii) in the case of either (i) or (ii) occurring, the delegation should discourage the granting of excessive latitude to the Contracting Parties to take action against Japanese exports when their own trade was not directly affected.

TRADE NEGOTIATIONS WITH JAPAN

7. The Minister of Trade and Commerce, referring to discussion at the meeting of September 29th, 1953, reported that the reaction of the Japanese government to the revised Canadian proposals about commodities covered in existing trade agreements between Japan and other countries, had now been received. Japan was prepared to accord non-discriminatory treatment to the nine Canadian commodities mentioned, namely, wheat, barley, wood pulp, flaxseed, primary copper, lead in pigs, zinc spelter, synthetic resins, and milk powder, provided Canada would agree to exempt from non-discrimination the amounts of wheat which Japan proposed to include in a renewed agreement with the Argentine and the proposed trade agreement with Turkey. These amounted to US $27 million for the Argentine, and US $6 million for Turkey. If this proposal were agreeable, the Japanese government would be prepared to import a minimum of 450,000 tons of wheat from Canada in the current wheat year. This amount would probably have to be increased because of the poor Japanese crop prospects.

The proposed agreement included the right of both countries to impose increased valuations for duty on imports causing or threatening to cause injury to domestic industry. Canada had the power to do this under section 43 of the Customs Act, subject to certain conditions provided for in the "escape clause" of the GATT. The Japanese would not wish to have this article appear in the agreement as it might cause difficulties in securing ratification by the Diet. It was proposed that the matter be dealt with through a published Exchange of Notes. The Japanese also proposed that the paragraph dealing with complete non-discrimination for the nine Canadian commodities would not appear in the agreement, but the understanding would be spelled out in a public Exchange of Notes. The actual amounts of wheat exempted would not be stated nor would the countries concerned. These matters would be included in a separate and secret Exchange of Notes.

The vote on Japan's temporary accession to the GATT was likely to be taken in the next few days, and now that agreement between Canada and Japan appeared to be settled, the Japanese were anxious to receive Canadian support for their accession.

It was recommended, with the concurrence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of Finance, that Cabinet indicate whether an agreement along the lines suggested would be acceptable and that, if it were, Canadian officials be authorized to meet with the Japanese officials to put the agreement in treaty form and work out the text of the proposed Exchange of Notes. Direction was also sought as to whether the substance of Article II on special valuation procedures be published in an Exchange of Notes rather than in the text of the agreement and whether, on receipt of the confirmation of the Japanese government's acceptance of the agreement, Canada was prepared to support the temporary accession of Japan to the GATT.

(Memorandum, Secretary of State for External Affairs, Oct. 20, 1953 — Cab. Doc. 256-53)†

8. In the course of discussion, it was pointed out that the principal difficulty, from the Canadian point of view, would be the existence of a secret Exchange of Notes. Even so, everything would be known except the countries which Japan wished to exempt from non-discrimination and the dollar amounts of wheat involved. If questions were asked in Parliament, it might be stated that, while Canada disliked being a party to such an Exchange of Notes, it was necessary to secure an agreement which appeared to be in the best interests of the country. The advantage of the agreement was so great that the government felt it should accede to the Japanese request.

9. The Cabinet agreed:

(a) that a trade agreement between Canada and Japan along the lines outlined was acceptable;

(b) that Canadian officials be authorized to meet with the appropriate Japanese officials to put the agreement in treaty form and to work out texts for the Exchange of Notes proposed;

(c) that the substance of Article II, on special valuation procedures, be dealt with in a published Exchange of Notes rather than as part of the text of the agreement, on the understanding that, in the exchange, the Japanese would recognize Canada's right to resort, in specified circumstances, to special valuation procedures;

(d) that the portion of Article IV dealing with complete non-discrimination be dealt with as a published Exchange of Notes rather than as part of the text of the agreement, and that the reservations in the case of wheat be covered by notes not to be published;

(e) that, on receipt of confirmation of Japanese acceptance of an agreement as outlined, authority be given to the Canadian delegation to the GATT to support the temporary accession of Japan to the General Agreement; and,

(f) that, if Japan's application for accession to the GATT was accepted, authority be given to the delegation in Geneva to state that Canada would be prepared to work out with the Japanese a suitable instrument for the application of the General Agreement between Canada and Japan as soon as the bi-lateral agreement between the two countries has been ratified, and on the understanding that the bi-lateral agreement and related undertakings would prevail in any respect in which they differed from or were not specifically provided for in the GATT.

CANADIAN TRADE AND GOOD-WILL MISSION TO LATIN AMERICA
JANUARY 5 THROUGH FEBRUARY 10, 1953[1]

The Mission was planned, headed, and skillfully directed in the field by the Rt. Hon. C.D. Howe, Minister of Trade and Commerce. The following businessmen, with their indicated association connections, made up the Mission:-

Mr. James S. Duncan, Chairman and President of the Massey-Harris Co. Ltd., Toronto, who also represented the Canadian Manufacturers' Association.

Mr. D.W. Ambridge, President and General Manager of the Abitibi Power & Paper Co. Ltd., Toronto, and representative of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. K.F. Wadsworth, President and General Manager of the Maple Leaf Milling Co. Ltd., Toronto.

Mr. Frank L. Marshall , Vice President in Charge of Export for the House of Seagram, Montreal, and representing the Canadian Inter-American Association, of which he is President.

[1] Il s'agit ici du seul rapport détaillé de la mission commerciale de bonne entente dans les dossiers du ministère du Commerce. Pour le rapport du très honorable C.D. Howe sur cette mission, voir Canada, Débats de la Chambre des communes, 1952-1953, volume III, 26 février, pp. 2555-2563. This is the only comprehensive account of the Goodwill Trade Mission located in Department of Trade and Commerce files. For Rt. Hon. C.D. Howe's report on the mission, see Canada, House of Commons, Debates, 1952-1953, Volume III, February 26, pp. 2419-25.

Mr. Jean-Marie Bonin, General Manager of the La Cooperative Agricole de Granby, Granby. Mr. Bonin was also representing la Chambre de Commerce de la Province de Quebec.

Mr. Alex Gray, President of the Gray-Bonney Tool, Co. Ltd., Toronto, who represented the Canadian Exporters' Association.

Mr. Clive B. Davidson, Secretary of the Canadian Wheat Board, Winnipeg.

Government Members of the Mission

Mr. W. Fred Bull, Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce, ably assisted and directed, on all phases of the Mission.

The Department of External Affairs was ably represented by Mr. Jules Léger, Assistant Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. Alfred Savard, Area Trade Officer for Latin America in the Department of Trade and Commerce, was secretary of the Mission.

Mr. Maurice Schwarzmann, of the Treaty Division of the Department of Trade and Commerce, who acted as Private Secretary to Mr. Howe.

Mission Itinerary and Departure

The Mission left Ottawa on Monday morning, January 5th, 1953, at 10 a.m.

A formal Dinner had been tendered the Mission by Dr. Heitor Lyra on Saturday night, January 3rd, in Ottawa at the Brazilian Embassy. Dr. Lyra, the Brazilian Ambassador, in a humorous vein, forecast some of the speech making that would be encountered on the Tour, and counselled that brevity be featured in our replying speeches.

Sunday, January 4 was devoted to final planning meetings of the Mission, held at the Chateau Laurier.

The Mission take-off on the morning of January 5 was smooth and the weather excellent. Cabinet Ministers Pearson, Abbott, Garson, and others, were at Rockcliffe Airport to bid the mission godspeed. The Prime Minister was not in Ottawa when the Mission departed, having spent the New Year week-end at his home.

The Mission travelled in the RCAF C-5 aircraft, which carried HRH Princess Elizabeth and the Duke of Edinburgh on their Tour of Canada in 1951. The C-5 aircraft and its smart RCAF crew created real interest and admiration at the various points visited. On the occasion of departure from the various cities numerous government officers and business men took occasion to inspect the plane. At one stop a lady visitor made the amusing request to see the powder room used by Princess Elizabeth on her Tour.

Fine Travelling Facilities

The Mission travelled on diplomatic passports throughout, and were thus cleared through customs and immigration with no technicalities whatsoever, and without opening and inspection of baggage. Flying weather was good to excellent throughout the journey. The RCAF boys handled the plane beautifully, over deserts, jungles and mountains, all in strange terrains.

The Mission members were formal guests of the State in Brazil and Uruguay, with the accompanying motorcycle police escorts throughout our stay. The Rt. Hon. C.D. Howe was guest of state in Argentina.

The Mission period ran exactly five weeks from the morning of departure from Ottawa, January 5, to the morning of return departure from Mexico City on February 10. Distance travelled — approximately 20,000 miles. 15 cities visited, in 10 countries.

The seven industrial and business men members of the Mission paid their own living and air travel expenses throughout the Tour. The Government people on the Mission performed prolonged and invaluable services pre-planning the Mission, and in coordinating it with local governments throughout the Tour.

Policy and Approach of the Mission

These were strictly informal. It was made clear from the start that the Mission as such, would not undertake to conclude treaties or sell goods. The Mission had complete and intimate contact with the heads of states, their cabinet ministers, the leading bankers and bankers' groups, Chambers of Commerce, and manufacturers' associations, throughout the various countries. The Mission was at times divided into two and three groups, and in between visits, the various business men representing leading Canadian industries had an opportunity for full discussions with their counterparts in Latin America. This approach was highly successful.

Approach of other Missions

Over recent years commercial missions have visited these Latin American countries, from several European and Far Eastern countries. These missions tended to over-stress somewhat the direct selling and commercial approach. Our approach created a much more favourable reaction, and a decidedly warm reception. Independent banking and business authorities in several of the countries indicated that our Mission had received by far the greatest governmental, commercial and press recognition of any overseas mission that had visited the country concerned, since the war.

Mr. Howe's Leadership

Great credit for the Mission approach followed, and the results achieved go to the Rt. Hon. C.D. Howe. He set a very friendly yet dignified standard in our contacts throughout the Mission's travels. His reputation as a great builder in Canada had preceded him to practically all countries, and his pleasing smile and friendly manner clinched an outstanding recognition for himself, and for the Mission throughout our trip.

Points stressed on the Mission

Mr. Howe and the Mission members stressed the following points:-

1. Canada, now the third largest trading nation in the world, second only to the US and the UK, is keenly interested in developing greater trade with each country on a long-term basis

2. Canada is interested not only in selling but equally interested in buying, realizing that trade has to be a two-way operation

3. That the economy of Canada is to a large degree, or almost wholly, complementary to most of the countries visited. We require constantly increasing quantities of such products as:-

a) Cotton

b) Coffee

c) Nuts of various varieties

d) Citrus and Tropical Fruits

e) Rubber

and despite our own increasing production in those fields, substantial quantities of petroleum for our eastern seaboard, and iron ore for our rapidly increasing steel industry

4. That Canada is in a position to supply not only newsprint, aluminum, grains, potatoes, apples, cod-fish, lumber and similar basic commodities, but also capable of shipping large quantities of heavy and light manufactured goods, definitely competitive in quality and price, as indicated by growing percentage of the latter type products in our total exports

5. Canada's organized interest in buying as well as selling was described and also specifically stressed in the form of invitations to various countries to send their own trade missions to Canada.

The above fundamentals were stressed in virtually all speeches. The very notable growth in production and consumption of Canada was explained, and their importance stressed as an indication of the great purchasing and supplying power that Canada represents for the producers and importers of the various countries visited.

Reactions to the foregoing specific approaches were most favourable. (See attached comments by countries.)

General Findings

Practically every country visited expressed a keen interest in developing direct shipments of their coffee, sugar or other products to Canada, rather than indirect shipping as prevails in some cases at present. The Mission concurred heartily in this.

Canadian Investments

These are very substantial in some of the countries, particularly Brazil through the Brazilian Traction, Venezuela; and to a degree, in Colombia and Mexico. The Latin American countries would all welcome more Canadian capital investment. Profit returns have been excellent in several of the Republics, and some members of the Mission took occasion to check investment possibilities for their own industries, and possibly for their counterparts in Canada.

Canadian Embassies and Trade Commissioners

The high standard of efficiency, good taste and energy displayed by our Embassies and Trade Commissioners was most impressive. The young men in the Trade Commissioner Service, many of them veterans of the army, navy or airforce, were outstanding in their assistance and cooperation with the Mission. And more important, they displayed outstanding qualities of character, energy and capability in their activities within the various markets. Each of them spoke the language of his posted country, some with exceptional skill. They displayed also a good grasp of the psychology and basic character of the peoples in the different countries visited.

Conclusions

The Mission's effort was an exceptionally strenuous one but at the same time, interesting and inspiring. Each member of the Mission returned to Canada feeling that very worthwhile over-all results had been achieved by the Mission, highly pleased with the leadership and fine example of the Mission head, Minister Howe, and likewise pleased with the genial good nature, perseverance and adaptability displayed by each member of the Mission toward his fellow members, and to the contacts made at each city the Mission visited.

It is felt that strong and valuable impetus has been given to trade and cultural intercourse between Canada and Latin American. The scores of fellow business men of the Mission members in Canada, should now see to it that the present excellent background for substantially increased trade with the Latin American countries is fully realized upon. Intelligent new or expanded effort on the ground is the means to this required follow through.

CANADIAN TRADE AND GOOD-WILL MISSION, COMMENTS BY COUNTRIES IN THE ORDER VISITED

Puerto Rico

Was the first stop on our itinerary. The visit was informal and unofficial. However, a fine buffet dinner was given the Mission by The Royal Bank in San Juan. The Mission members met leading Puerto Rican business men. Moving pictures were shown of the great developments in Puerto Rico since the war, and the keen interest in greater two-way trade was clearly indicated. The Mission made a short tour by automobile of central San Juan.

Brazil

This country was one of the high points of the Mission, which is understandable, as our two-way trade with Brazil is the largest of any country visited — close to $100 million in 1952. The Mission spent 3½ days in Rio, and three days in Sao Paulo. Contacts were complete and animated, with government, financial, industrial and commercial leaders of the country. The Mission was presented to President Getulio Vargas. An exceptionally fine press was had in Brazil. Mr. Chateaubriand, who has been termed the "Lord Beaverbrook of Brazil", and who is the owner of several leading newspapers and radio and television stations, took the Mission to his heart, as it were. He and Mr. Howe became great friends. He was also very close to Messrs. Duncan and Ambridge. Mr. Chateaubriand rode on the Mission plane on its flight from Rio de Janeiro to Sao Paulo. Every phase of the Mission's activities, and statements of purpose, were widely publicized. One of Mr. Chateaubriand's papers photographed Mr. Howe with the subject title "The Churchill of Canada".

Very fruitful discussions by individual business men were held in Brazil, and the Secretary of the Wheat Board concluded substantial sales of wheat to the Brazilian Republic.

Careful discussions were held with the Brazilians on the matter of possible future purchase by Canada of Brazilian cotton. Questions of the grading of peanuts and other similar commodities were also reviewed. In a word, a foundation was laid, which if properly followed through upon by Canadian industry, should result in larger two-way trade with Brazil.

Argentina

A cordial reception was given the Mission by the Argentine Government. An interesting visit was had with President Juan Perón, and full meetings were held with leaders of government, banking, industrial and commercial circles in Argentina.

After two difficult crop years, the present year promises a bountiful crop for Argentina, which will go far to re-establish her international purchasing power.

The economy of Canada is somewhat more competitive with Argentina's than with those of the more tropically situated republics. Nevertheless, a large field for trade exists, and there are reasonable opportunities for building back Canadian-Argentine interchange to a considerably larger figure than that prevailing today. Argentina is keenly interested in expanding its commercial and cultural relations with Canada.

Uruguay

Here again there is some competition between the animal husbandry and agricultural production of Uruguay with that of Canada, but there are many fields in which two-way trade can be developed, and these were explored in interesting meetings with various sections of business and industry in Uruguay. The Mission had the pleasure of meeting the President of the Governing Commission of Uruguay. The two day and one night stay in Uruguay was busy, interesting and productive.

From Uruguay the plane flew all afternoon, with a one hour refuelling stop at Rio de Janeiro, and thence all night to Belem, Brazil, where a five-hour operational stop was had.

A take-off was then made for Port-of-Spain, Trinidad.

Trinidad

The Mission spent two days and one night here on an unofficial call. Fruitful discussions were held with Mr. Gomes, the head of the elected government, and with the alert and well-informed Sir Hubert Rance, Governor of Trinidad. Interesting discussions were held on further liberalization of two-way trade, and in the inspection of the industry and commerce of Trinidad.

Venezuela

The Mission flew directly from Port-of-Spain to Caracas, and spent five busy days in this capital city of the thriving Venezuelan republic. Venezuela enjoys a very heavy export trade balance with Canada, due to our large imports of petroleum for the eastern seaboard. The republic is quite disposed to purchase more from Canada, and some of the business men of the Mission laid the foundations for rather substantial increases in their shipments to this country, particularly in the fields of powdered milk, pulp and paper, and perhaps spirituous beverages.

Maracaibo

Two nights and one day were spent in this thriving centre of the petroleum industry in Venezuela. A rather full inspection of Shell Oil camps and installations was made. The Mission members were guests at a joint meeting of the Chamber of Commerce, and International Rotary. Individual members laid plans for expanded sales to this booming city and its environs.

Colombia

The Mission flew from Maracaibo to Bogotá, Colombia, where a visit of three days and four nights was made. Colombians were outstanding in their hospitality. The Mission was received by the President of the Republic, and by the Secretary of Foreign Relations, who tendered a delightful Luncheon, attended by leading commercial, industrial and financial groups. Of outstanding interest in Colombia was our visit to the salt mines just outside Bogotá, on January 30, 1953. We were the luncheon guests of the President and Board of Directors of the Bank of the Republic. On this occasion, Mr. Frank L. Marshall presented a speech in Spanish on behalf of the Rt. Hon. C.D. Howe. This presentation gave a complete picture of industrial Canada today, and outlined the great market Canada constitutes for Colombian products, and its equal importance as a source of supply for Colombia. The mention of a recent initial purchase of 1500 tons of rice by Canada on this occasion, drew a warm response of appreciation from Colombian financial and business interests. A mimeographed copy of this speech is attached, together with copy of the Montreal Star comments of January 31, 1953.†

The Mission departed from Bogotá at 8 o'clock on Sunday morning, February 1st, reaching Barranquilla at 11 o'clock, where the Mission remained for a luncheon tendered by The Royal Bank, at the beautiful Hotel del Prado. Departure from Barranquilla was made at 3 o'clock for Ciudad Trujillo.

Dominican Republic

This country has progressed very substantially in its production, imports and exports, over the past decade. Canada established a Trade Commissioner's office in the Dominican Republic about a year ago, and two-way trade is developing rapidly with the Dominican Republic. The Mission arrived in Ciudad Trujillo at 5.45 and was entertained at three receptions from 6.15 until midnight. The first two by the cabinet officers of the Republic, and the third, a buffet dinner at the home of the Trade Commissioner. At 7.45 a.m. the next day, the Mission drove out into the country to inspect the government operated sugar mill, which with additions now being completed, will be the largest sugar refinery in the world. The mill is modern, clean and efficient throughout, and is a great credit to the country.

Returning to Ciudad Trujillo at 9.30 a.m. the Mission placed a wreath at the tomb of the Liberator of the Republic, visited the President of the Republic, and then departed for Haiti at 10.30 a.m.

Haiti

Arrival 12 noon. After visiting the President of the Republic, the Chamber of Commerce, and the Minister of Foreign Relations, the Mission was tendered a delightful and most ample Luncheon at the Sans Souci Hotel, by the business and financial community of Haiti. A speech in French was made on this occasion by Mr. Jean-Marie Bonin. Mr. Bonin's presentation was received with interest and warmly applauded. After the luncheon the Mission was shown one of the attractive new mountain-side hotels, and visited the mountain-side residence of the Minister of Foreign Relations, and departed at 5 p.m. for Havana, Cuba.

This particular 24 hr. itinerary (5.45 arrival Ciudad Trujillo — 5 p.m. departure Haiti) was perhaps a little more strenuous than the general run of itineraries of the Mission, but not a great deal more so.

Cuba

The Mission was received at a most pleasant interview by President Batista of Cuba, who spoke to us in English. He was keenly interested in the development of closer relations between Cuba and Canada, as were the various ministers, commercial and industrial groups with whom we conferred over the next three days. Our two-way trade with Cuba is substantial. The Royal Bank of Canada gave a Luncheon at the Havana Tennis Club, attended by over 150 guests. From Cuba the Mission flew to Mexico, arriving on the afternoon of February 5, which was a legal holiday.

Mexico

The Mission was conducted by motor cycle escort to its headquarters in the Reforma Hotel, which incidentally is managed by a former Montrealer, Mr. Ray Frappier, who headed the LaSalle Hotel in Montreal for many years. Needless to say, Mr. Frappier gave the utmost attention and consideration to the Mission.

Our programme in Mexico was particularly active and effective. Interesting meetings and discussions were held with the Bank of Mexico, the Chamber of Commerce (which wishes a special liaison committee with the Canadian Chamber of Commerce), the Association of Importers and Exporters, and with leading Government ministries and other business groups. President Ruiz Cortines received the Mission and showed the same keen interest in its visit and activities as displayed by business and industry. Most Mission business men found new or continued active interest in their lines in Mexico, and made arrangements for expanded effort. Means to a direct west coast shipping service between Canada and Mexico were discussed. Mexico is also much interested in direct air connections with Canada.

Through Canadian Pacific Airlines service between Mexico City and Vancouver will soon be inaugurated.[2]

The Mission was delightfully entertained in Mexico by the Ambassador, First Secretary and Trade Commissioner, and by Sr. Salvador Ugarte, dean of Bankers in Mexico. Also by the Distributors for products of some of the Mission members.

The Mission departed from Mexico City on the morning of February 10 on a bright sunny day, with a feeling of genuine accomplishment from its 5 day visit to Mexico, and the five week tour of Latin America. Many important government and business people saw the Mission off to Canada.

I am attaching hereto a few comments on the Organization of American States which have been prompted by my visit to Latin America. I know that Canada's attitude towards the Organization raises difficult and complex problems; I am not in a position to give an answer to many of them. The attached notes, however, might serve as a basis for discussion and it is in that spirit that they are submitted to you.

THE ORGANIZATION OF AMERICAN STATES

The problem of Canada's association with the Organization of American States has not been raised officially during the visit of the goodwill Mission to Latin

[2] Les documents 556-581./Documents 556-81.

America. A few newspapermen here and there asked the odd question about the attitude of Canada on this matter but no real interest was shown either by the press, Government officials or private individuals we happened to meet. There was much more interest shown in Canada's role at the United Nations, centering particularly on Mr. Pearson's Presidency and on our participation in the Korean conflict than there was on the Pan-American issue.

Our Heads of Missions on the other hand, at least those that were willing to be drawn out of the usual clichés, held varying opinions. General LaFlèche told me that he feels that Canada should join the Organization to help combat Communism and the influence of General Perón[4] throughout Latin America as well as to give a helping hand to the United States within the Organization. Mr. Hébert on the other hand pointed out that in his view it would be useless to join the Organization until we had made up our minds that Latin America should become a major field in Canadian policy and economy.

This situation coupled with the interest shown in Washington about our eventual role in the Organization should prompt us to review our position on that question.

At present our policy, in summary, is that we are quite happy to remain outside the Organization, that we should do nothing to encourage an invitation but that if an invitation were unanimously addressed to Canada by Member States we could not very well turn it down. The reasons advanced for this lukewarmness towards the OAS have not varied much over the years. They are those that were advanced ten years ago. The situation, however, has changed in some respects.

The main change is probably related to our trade with Latin America. We have now passed the $500,000,000 a year mark and look forward to increasing that trade as rapidly as possible. The general line taken up till now is that the fact that we do not belong to the OAS has not prevented the growth of our commercial relations with Latin America. There is a more positive way to envisage the situation: would our being associated with the Organization actually help further our commercial interests in that part of the world? Competition is getting more and more keen, particularly from European countries, and there is little doubt in my mind that we would be helping at least indirectly Canadian trade if we were more forthcoming in our position about the OAS. There is a psychological factor here which cannot be weighed in dollars and cents but which nevertheless has some importance.

A second reason why Canada's attitude vis-à-vis the OAS should be reviewed is found in the opening of the three new missions we have recently established in Colombia, Venezuela and Uruguay. The more missions we have in Latin America the more interest will be shown in our joining the Association. The initiative of one Latin American country would be sufficient at any Organization meeting to create an atmosphere leading to a unanimous invitation. It would be odd indeed if while opening new missions on the one hand we were less forthcoming about our joining the Union on the other. We are more exposed today to a unanimous invitation than we were before opening the three new missions.

[4] Général Juan Domingo Perón, président de l'Argentine.
General Juan Domingo Perón, President of Argentina.

The third consideration relates to the advantages of working as closely as possible with Latin American countries in order better to bring their policies in line with our own at the United Nations. The Latin American countries are becoming more and more aggressive and more and more independent of United States leadership at the United Nations. This trend will probably continue to develop and the only way it can be checked is to create an understanding in as many spheres as possible between their interests and ours. While there might not be much direct discussion of United Nations problems during meetings of the OAS, there are nevertheless certain issues which are closely related and those issues are discussed often by men, particularly government officials, who also represent their country at the United Nations. Never before have we had so close contacts with Latin American representatives as we are maintaining in New York. These contacts should even be more intimate than they are now. They would become easier if they were intensified by our association with the work of the OAS.

Fourthly, we often use the argument that it is better for us not to join the OAS because, were we to join, the Latin Americans would then realize that our connections with the United States are of such a nature that we could never take a different line from that adopted by Washington. This theory is not particularly applicable to the OAS and there is no more danger of such a situation developing there than there is in NATO or in the United Nations. Our relations with the United States are of such an intimate nature that they will always influence profoundly our relations with any other country or alliance.

It may be that because of the reasons mentioned above there should be a change of emphasis, if not of policy, in the way we envisage our relations with the OAS. I suggest that we might be more forthcoming than before in our approach to that problem. I see, for example, that in the last Circular Despatch sent to our Missions in Latin America on this subject, it is said that "you will appreciate that discussion of the question at this stage with officials of the OAS or any governments that are members of the Organization would not be desirable since it might well lead to additional pressure for us to send observers to the 1953 Conference before the Canadian Government has had an opportunity to formulate views on the matter". As a result our Heads of Missions make it a point not to mention the problem. This is rather unhealthy since it could very well convey the impression generally that we are ignoring the OAS altogether. Either the Latin American countries take the OAS seriously and then they feel slighted by such an attitude or they don't and then there would be no discomfort to discuss it.

From what I have heard, the issue is not very much alive; this is a further reason why we might be more forthcoming than before if and when it is raised. We need not give the impression that we are begging for an invitation but we could give the impression that were it to come it would be seriously considered bearing in mind our other commitments and interests.

This is suggested mainly because there is always a danger that too negative an approach is harmful to the sort of cooperation we want to develop with Latin American countries individually. We might have reached the stage where we could allow our Heads of Missions and the Department more freely to discuss the matter and listen to the reasons advanced by those parties interested in our joining the Association.

I have not commented on the specific problem of whether or not we should discuss the matter of advising the State Department that we would accept to be represented as an observer at the OAS Conference to be held this fall since I gather that the American Division will be looking into the matter in the near future. It could be inferred, however, from the remarks made above that I would be in favour of accepting the role of observer for the Conference. If we could maintain our status of observer for the next ten years, without being pressed into actual membership, I would have little hesitation in recommending that it be accepted. Whatever way we look at our relations with Latin America during the next ten years, I feel that it is in Canada's interest that they become more intimate. The argument in favour of an increase of our trade need not be repeated although it cannot be too strongly emphasized. We must maintain and even increase our exports if we are to keep a healthy economy and there are few if any markets in the world so rich as those found in Latin America. Come an intensification in the cold war and even actual global war we would need all the support we could muster from that part of the world; come a more happy period we will still need the markets. In my opinion, we cannot lose if we play the Latin American card and it is not too difficult a card to play. If a more forthcoming attitude towards the OAS helps us at all in this respect I submit that we should adopt it.

THE ORGANIZATION OF AMERICAN STATES

I have read over with interest the memorandum attached to your memorandum of February 23rd and in which you give a few comments on Canada's attitude towards the Organization of American States.

2. I think the arguments you advance in favour of Canada's association in some form or other with the Organization of American States have a great deal of validity. The only question in my mind is whether or not we are yet ready for this step. I cannot detect any interest whatsoever among the Canadian public in favour of Canada being associated with the Organization of American States. Any move in this direction therefore would not be likely to have much popular support in spite of all the arguments we could advance about the advantages we would be deriving by becoming associated more closely with the Latin-American countries. At the same time there would be a section of Canadian opinion which would feel that this move was another step in the direction of weakening our ties with the Commonwealth. Even though it might be easy to counter such an argument, I fear the net result would be that the association of Canada with the Organization of American States would give rise to some unfavourable comment and this would not be compensated for by much favourable comment.

3. Given this situation something can be said for our policy in lying low and doing nothing to encourage an invitation for Canada to join the Organization of American States or even to be associated through the sending of an observer to the next conference.

4. I must admit that you have put forth the best case I have yet seen in favour of a more active policy and your memorandum should help to provoke a good deal of thinking by the senior officers of the Department. Perhaps when they have had an opportunity of thinking over what you have written we might have a thorough discussion of this whole subject.

INTER-AMERICAN CONFERENCE

Recently both Mr. Dulles and Mr. Lodge have mentioned to me the possibility of Canada sending an observer to the forthcoming Inter-American meeting which is being held, I believe, at Cuba.[5] I gave a non-committal but sympathetic response to the suggestion, which is one that we should give serious consideration to.

I shall want to discuss this matter with you on my return.

(For Mr. Léger)

THE ORGANIZATION OF AMERICAN STATES

I do not altogether agree with the arguments in your undated memorandum on this subject. It is certainly true that the trade side of our relations with Latin American countries is the most important aspect of our policy. I think, however, that one can only speculate in very general terms about whether membership in the OAS would do anything to increase the trade figures. There is certainly something to be said for the point of view that in hard-headed business transactions the Latin Americans are not likely to place undue importance on membership.

2. One of the things that has always troubled me about Canadian membership in the OAS is that we might find ourselves in the uncomfortable position of having to take sides with either the United States or the Latin bloc. I suspect that the line between the United States and the rest is more sharply drawn in the OAS than in any other organization to which we belong. In the United Nations and in NATO there is a shifting and regrouping of interests, so that sometimes we are with the United States and sometimes in opposition. It would be a very heavy responsibility to assume the role of "mediator" or "interpreter" between the United States and the Latins. It should not be overlooked that one reason which has impelled Latin American countries to think seriously about our membership in the OAS is the desire to have a counter-weight to the United States.

3. In addition to the absence of much enthusiasm in Canada for this move, there does not seem to be a great deal of enthusiasm in Latin America either. It seems to me that a prerequisite for our joining should be a pretty definite demand by opinion in both areas. As far as Canada is concerned I think there has been more interest shown in the House of Commons in recent years in our joining a Pacific pact than in our joining the OAS. Mere token membership in anything is pretty unsatisfactory. If there is not much interest in Canada and if membership serves no real needs the danger is that we sit at the table, go through a few vague motions and look rather ridiculous.

4. I do agree that we should not be as coy about the subject as we have been in the past and that there is no reason why the topic should be avoided in discussions with Latin Americans. In fact, it would be interesting to have an assortment of their views as to why they would or would not like to have us in the Organization. I think it would be well worth while to seek the Minister's approval for a rather more open-minded attitude and communicate this to our Missions as well as using it in our discussions here with Latin American Missions.

CANADA'S OBSERVER STATUS WITH THE ORGANIZATION OF AMERICAN STATES

Following for Minister from Wilgress, Begins: When in Ottawa you mentioned that Messrs. Dulles and Lodge had referred to the possibility of Canada attending as an observer the next Inter-American Conference of the OAS in Caracas.

2. From our point of view in the Department we would hope that a decision could be postponed for at least a few months.

3. My reasons for suggesting this are, firstly, that the Conference itself (which was due to be held in the fall of 1953) has now been postponed until February or March 1954. It would seem safer to await until we are closer to the time of the Conference before making a firm decision concerning this quinquennial meeting. A second reason is that a departmental study on the OAS has just been undertaken. It seems necessary to know fully the implications of Canadian participation in the OAS before taking a step — such as attending as an observer — which would bring Canada much closer to this organization.

4. I suggest, therefore, that, if the matter is raised by either Mr. Dulles or Mr. Lodge, you might wish to tell them that the Department is giving serious consideration to the proposal that Canada should attend as an observer the Tenth Inter-American Conference of the OAS but that, in view of the change of date for the opening of the meeting, there appears to be less urgency in coming to a decision.[6]

Memorandum by Head, American Division

CONFIDENTIAL Ottawa, September 14, 1953

ORGANIZATION OF AMERICAN STATES

In the course of a conversation which I had with Mr. Heitor Lyra, the Brazilian Ambassador, who had come to see me in order to introduce his new secretary, Mr. Mario Calabria, Mr. Lyra enquired whether, should the Council of the Organization of American States establish a category of Observer States (i.e. Canada), Canada would be prepared to attend as an Observer the Tenth Conference of OAS at Caracas on March 1 next. Mr. Lyra stated that the Brazilian Ambassador to OAS in Washington had made this enquiry of him.

2. I said to Mr. Lyra that I did not quite know whether Canada would, under the circumstances outlined by him, attend as an observer. We had not yet thought the matter through. Mr. Lyra pointed out that a proposal to establish a status of Observer States to the OAS would meet with general approval though personally he thought that Argentina and Guatemala, for instance, might raise some slight objections on the basis that Canada should come in either as a full member or not at all. Mr. Lyra thought that once Canada became an Observer State it would, sooner or later, feel the necessity of joining the OAS, but he would not make any assessment of the time factor. Mr. Lyra thought that the United States would much welcome Canada's participation in the OAS, since Canada would then help to interpret the USA to Latin America. I pointed out that we could readily see this role of a catalyst, a role which was fairly important but did require a continuous provision of energy if the role is to be played at all! In fulfilling such a role on occasion, we had found that it made heavy calls upon our Departmental energies and expansion could not be lightly contemplated. I also said that Canada might find it embarrassing to have to opt either for the Latin Americans or for the United States in a manner which might offend either group. Mr. Lyra said that in the political field no commitments would require to be undertaken by Canada. (Presumably he meant that Canada could always make reservations to treaties giving rights or imposing obligations). As for hemispheric defence, he could not see that Canada would have anything to do in South America. Canada is inextricably bound, it is true, with the USA for defence of North America, but that is the situation which obtains today. Mr. Lyra thought that our main interest was in the economic field and that the OAS might be of some use.

3. I dwelt (as indeed did Mr. Stark)[7] upon some of Canada's potential domestic political difficulties concerning Canada's membership in the OAS. These difficulties stem mainly from indifference of the Canadian public to the OAS, due possibly to lack of knowledge. It was not likely, under present circumstances, that the Government would wish to join the OAS outright. As to being an Observer State, we would have to consider the matter seriously in the not too distant future and Mr. Lyra could rest assured that he would be among the first to know of our views on this subject once we come to a decision.

DESPATCH 370 Caracas, October 20, 1953

10TH INTER-AMERICAN CONFERENCE OF THE OAS — COLONIES OF EUROPEAN COUNTRIES IN SOUTH AMERICA

Reference: My despatch No. 267 of December 30, 1952.

In my despatch under reference, I gave you my preliminary views on the desirability of Canada accepting observer status at the 10th Inter-American Conference of the Organization of American States, which is being held in Caracas in the spring of 1954.

2. It was then my view that it would be undesirable for Canada to accept observer status since this would materially weaken our position when the question of our full membership in the OAS was subsequently raised. I still believe that full membership may not be in Canada's interest since, on most major issues where the United States and the Latin-American group differed, we would be placed in the unenviable position of losing rather than gaining friends by our support of either side. I believe that it would be most difficult and embarrassing to decline an invitation to join and, in my opinion, the receipt of such an invitation would be a logical result of our acceptance of observer status at the forthcoming conference. With your despatch No. X-179 of October 28, 1952, you sent to the Consulate General here a State Department memorandum of September 3, 1952, which discussed observer status for Canada at the Conference. I believe that the reasons advanced by the State Department for our acceptance are inconclusive arguments why we should get involved.

[7] W.G. Stark, chef de la section de l'Amérique latine, Direction de l'Amérique.
W.G. Stark, Head, Latin American Section, American Division.

3. I am more strongly than ever of the opinion that it would not be in Canada's interest to accept observer status. I have had this confirmed by the Venezuelan reaction to the recent political difficulties in British Guiana. The press has given considerable front-page publicity to the United Kingdom Government's handling of the situation there and most reports have been based on the premise that European countries have no right to have colonies in the Western Hemisphere. By chance, I had no matters to take up with Dr. Otañez,[8] the Foreign Minister, at his regular Wednesday afternoon meeting with members of the Diplomatic Corps which was held on October 14 and, consequently, I did not attend. Apparently, members of the press were waiting at the Foreign Ministry and, as each Ambassador or Minister came out, they were asked to give their views on the political situation in British Guiana. The following day these interviews were front-page news and I was pleased that I was not placed in the awkward position of having to make a statement. In this connection, I assume that in due course I will be receiving the Government's views on the situation. Since Canada has such a large investment in British Guiana, it is only reasonable that at some time I will be asked the Government's views and I would like to know how you wish this dealt with.

4. On Friday evening, October 16, the Foreign Minister, Dr. Otañez, called a special press conference and made a statement concerning Venezuela's attitude on the situation in British Guiana. I am attaching hereto a translation of Dr. Otañez' remarks† and you will note that he stated the Venezuelan "government confirms its conviction that to-day more than ever the existence of vassal countries and the continued existence of a colonial régime is inappropriate within the boundaries of the Americas." He reiterated this point in answers to questions following the handing out of the communiqué by saying that "colonies must disappear from the Americas", although he qualified this in a later statement that they must disappear "without violence through the self-determination of peoples". He also stated that it was his opinion that the whole question of European colonies in South America would be discussed at the 10th Inter-American Conference and that, while Venezuela would not itself raise the question, the government was disposed to support any motion condemning the existence of European colonies.

5. I believe that it is likely that considerable discussion will take place at the 10th Conference on the question of the European colonies in South America and it is but one of the problems that Canada would find embarrassing should she be a full member of the OAS. I visualize that this and other similarly awkward questions will be raised periodically and it strengthens my belief that we have little to gain and, possibly, much to lose by joining the OAS. After all, being members of the United Nations and NATO, it would appear that in these we can cover matters of prime political concern as affecting ourselves and South America. I do not believe that Canada's trade with Latin America will be prejudiced by not joining the OAS, since it is my impression that those countries are inclined to deal with the country which will make the better deal or a more convenient deal, such as on a barter basis; nor do I think our trade will be increased by joining.

[8] Aureliano Otañez.
Dr. Aureliano Otañez.

DESPATCH 569 Mexico, December 17, 1953

CONFIDENTIAL

ORGANIZATION OF AMERICAN STATES

Reference: My Telegram No. 9 of November 27th.†

There is still little indication of public interest here in the Tenth Annual Conference to be held at Caracas next March. The agenda of the conference, which became publicly available at the end of October, was published in full by the leading newspapers. Very little was written about it editorially.

2. The air telegram under reference was sent because we are now within less than three months of the opening of the meeting in Caracas and, as yet, we have no indication of the final decision on the question of Canada's acceptance or non-acceptance of the status of observer, nor have we been asked to make any sounding about the Mexican reaction to this invitation.

3. In the absence of any knowledge of Canada's intention, room is naturally left for speculations. For example, there was published here on November 29th a dispatch from the United Press which includes the rather misleading remark that "it is understood that the present Canadian government prefers closer ties with the Commonwealth to a direct political association with the American republics within the inter-American regional system". I attach a translation of the item in case you have not seen it.†

4. I do not intend to go into the merits of our association with the OAS in this despatch. There is one point, however, which I feel compelled to make: it would be a serious mistake to turn down an invitation for observer status sponsored by Washington for reasons which date from pre-war days. The world, as well as Canada's and Latin America's positions therein, has changed so much during the last two decades or so that what may have been valid at that time may no longer hold good to-day. United States policy towards Latin America is more cooperative and flexible, thus reducing the possibilities of friction; our trade has increased more than ten-fold but competition, particularly from Continental European countries, is becoming keener; our diplomatic relations already cover a good part of the continent; the Latin American bloc, particularly in the field of economics and international finance, is becoming more and more restive at the United Nations, and even the political leadership of the United States is at times questioned. These, and other factors, must be taken into consideration when discussing this problem.

5. There may, however, be other valid reasons why an invitation to accept observer status should not be encouraged at this time. I doubt that the reason advanced by the Canadian Ambassador in Venezuela in his despatch No. 370 of October 20th is one of them. Personally, I also believe that the line taken by the United Press correspondent in the attached article is misleading although one must recognize that, in view of the lack of guidance in this matter, any interpretation is as good as the other.

6. These considerations are motivated by the fact that too negative an approach to this problem may be harmful to the sort of cooperation we want to develop with Latin American countries individually. Whatever way we look at our relations with Latin America over the next ten years or so, I feel that it is in Canada's interest that they become more and more intimate. If a more forthcoming attitude towards the OAS helps us at all in this respect, then the most serious consideration should be given to the invitation which has been extended to the Canadian Government by the State Department.

COMMERCIAL ARREARS

The debts owed by Brazil to Canadian firms are now estimated at about $12 million, of which about $4 million represent amounts covered by the Export Credits Insurance Corporation. These debts are mostly in US dollars and form part of the approximate global figure of $400-450 million owed by Brazil on US dollar account. Some exchange was gradually being released by Brazil in payment of Canadian accounts up to March 1953 but since then such payments have ceased. (However a few debts were settled at the time of the payment of the first two $60 million dollar instalments of the Export-Import loan, presumably because of difficulties in segregating Canadian from US accounts.)

We are concerned lest Brazil's preoccupations with United States indebtedness and her negotiations over the Export-Import loan, as well as similar negotiations with other countries, may tend to give priority to these debts; and that if no action is taken by Canada, the payment of Canadian accounts will be delayed indefinitely and considered together with remaining miscellaneous dollar debts.

It has therefore been decided that we should make formal representations to the Brazilian Government. I should be grateful if you would present the following note to the Foreign Ministry as soon as possible.

Text of note begins:

The Canadian Embassy presents its compliments to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and has the honour to refer to the long history of close and friendly trade relations between Brazil and Canada. These cordial relations and the desire of both countries to expand and develop their mutually advantageous trade were warmly reaffirmed during the visit to Brazil early this year of the Canadian Goodwill and Trade Mission headed by the Rt. Hon. C.D. Howe.

The Canadian Government is aware of the serious exchange difficulties which during the past few years have tended to delay payments for Brazilian imports from other countries, including Canada. The amounts owing to Canadian firms are believed to be in the neighbourhood of $10 million, and relate to shipments made as far back as the latter part of 1951 and through 1952. This estimated total, though relatively small, represents of course a very substantial commitment for the Canadian suppliers concerned.

Canadian exporters with outstanding accounts in Brazil had expected that the recent measures undertaken by the Brazilian Government would have led to an accelerated rate of repayment. Unfortunately, such is not the case. On the contrary, while funds had previously been released from time to time by the Bank of Brazil in partial settlement of overdue Canadian accounts, since March of this year there has been an almost complete cessation of such interim payments. Canadian suppliers have thus been placed at a further disadvantage in recent months vis-à-vis their competitors in the Brazilian market.

The Canadian Government is confident that the Brazilian Government, in releasing funds in settlement of commercial arrears, does not intend to place Canadian suppliers in a position less favourable than heretofore. In consequence, the Canadian Government wishes to bring this matter to the attention of the Brazilian Government in the hope that the Brazilian Government will take steps to ensure that settlement of arrears on goods of Canadian origin will be resumed as soon as possible, thereby correcting a harmful situation and protecting the long-run trade interests of both Canada and Brazil. Text ends.

We are concerned that there has been no reply to our last note on this subject. We have observed that, apart from its use of funds from the Export-Import bank loan, Brazil is also reported to be drawing on its own dollar resources for the settlement of arrears and that, under the new Brazilian import and exchange regulations, 30% of all exchange earnings are being set aside for debt liquidation. In addition, it would appear that arrears owing to United States exporters are being progressively liquidated and that Brazil has agreed to settle outstanding debts owing to the United Kingdom.

In the circumstances, Canadian exporters are at a serious and growing disadvantage with respect to their competitors and we feel that further early representations are desirable.

It would be appropriate if you could approach the Brazilian authorities as soon as possible after you have presented your credentials to express the concern with which the Canadian Government views the long delay in settling debts owing to Canadian exporters and to express our hope that it may soon be possible for the Brazilian authorities to resume payment of Canadian accounts. In general, we suggest that it would be advisable to follow substantially the same line adopted in our last note (the text of which was contained in our telegram No. 53 of August 20.)

In our view the Brazilian authorities could meet these outstanding amounts without imposing too great a strain on their dollar resources. Undoubtedly, they would probably like to bargain with us about some form of financial assistance but this should be resisted. You might wish to point out, however, that, although commercial credits have been extended from time to time, financial assistance of this sort will become more difficult if outstanding obligations are not met. Consequently it would be in Brazil's interest if action could be taken to meet outstanding obligations to Canadian exporters.

COMMERCIAL ARREARS

Reference: Your telegram No. 64 of November 3rd.

1. You asked me in above telegram to raise the question of our commercial arrears with Brazilian authorities. I raised it during my official call on November 13th with the Minister of Finance, Dr. Oswaldo Aranha.

2. Aranha, called to office four months ago by President Vargas to rescue Brazil from her financial difficulties, has in his four months of office introduced a number of sweeping measures, including the Aranha plan for auctioning off foreign exchange to importers.

3. While the effects of his involved activities on economy are still obscure, one evident result is that he has become the man of the hour in Brazil and a favoured contender for the presidency in the 1954 elections.

4. As he has no colleague of anything like his stature or influence in the cabinet, everyone with a cause or a complaint knocks at his door; and he has not had time to build up a dependable staff; he himself makes most of the decisions. He is frantically busy and he is terribly harassed perhaps in part by fear of (group corrupt) manipulation, and special arrangements he has chosen may be beyond him for all his skill and adroitness.

5. He has these qualities and courage, intelligence and experience as well. He planned the revolution that led Vargas to power in 1930. He has been Ambassador to the United States, President of United Nations Assembly and has held many important cabinet posts. But the task he now struggles with calls for self-discipline, restraint, consistency; good sober judgment and a sure sense of economic values. He may never have need for these qualities as much as he needs them now: there are indications he may not have acquired them.

6. There are in particular his erratic and puzzling statements on foreign investments in Brazil, on which I will report separately. He has attacked specific United States companies for what he says are specific abuses. He has been quoted as going so far as to try to deprive foreign investors of any credit for economic development of Brazil, though he has denied it. In one way or another his most extreme remarks have been explained away or toned down. Sometimes, as in the latest New York Times incident, he has done it himself: but others including victims themselves of his attacks have done it for him.

7. They are ready, even eager, to make allowances for Aranha because they think he is the best man in sight for Brazil and for foreign interests here, political and economic.

8. Because of this background, I decided I would try to use my official call for more than the customary formal exchange of politenesses. What little hope we have rested, I felt, with him and not in importuning helpless officials of Foreign Ministry to whom we put in our note and who have for three months left it unanswered.

9. Aranha received me for half an hour in an intimate, direct way that made it easy for me. I have no doubt he did so because of your letter to him about me. Aranha began by mentioning it, speaking in warmest and highest terms of you and I know he has mentioned the letter to others in and out of government.

10. I found Aranha not only ignorant but I consider (group corrupt) about the way Canada trades with the world and the way Brazil trades with Canada. He did not know that we dealt in United States dollars. He thought his own exchange would not allow Brazilians to buy Canadian goods with United States dollars they bought at auction.

11. His ignorance about Canada was not [a] complete surprise to me. When his plan was introduced, we had to induce the Bank of Brazil to telegraph all agencies that United States dollars could be used for Canadian purchases, to correct the impression Aranha had created when answering questions about his plan in the House.

12. I had first to explain to him how his plan worked for Canada: that Brazilians could (group corrupt) United States dollars for Canadian imports. I said that this meant, in the last analysis, that Canadians competed directly with United States produce markets for limited supply of United States dollars the Brazilian importers had at their disposal; that we accepted this stiff competition but could not afford to work under any disadvantage vis-à-vis our United States competitors or those of any other country. Canadian traders were at the moment under a disadvantage in that the commercial arrears totalling some eleven million dollars were unpaid from April, 1952, while Brazil was to some extent paying other creditors out of her own resources under one scheme or another — the loan agreement with the United States, the settlement with the United Kingdom and agreements of various descriptions with other countries.

13. When payment was being made out of proceeds of a loan, as from 300 million dollars from United States there was little practical point in our complaining about it. It happened that we could not lend to Brazil because we were not like the United States a creditor country. Like Brazil we needed capital. (I think it is time that the Brazilians be given to understand we will not lend them money. I suspect they have been vague hoping we might and that [the] longer arrears remained unpaid the better the chances. We have been making our position quite plain to Brazilian officials).

14. When, however, payments to any country were made out of Brazil's own resources we felt we too should receive our share particularly when payments to some countries were made in return for treatment which we had freely given to Brazil without driving a bargain for it. Other countries whose markets were guarded by restrictions could demand their price for granting Brazil access to it. Others with exchange control could bargain with granting of exchange to their importers, who wanted trade with Brazil. Stating traders have their weapons too, which we do not use like in saying to our coffee importers that they should hold up their purchases, amounting to over twenty million dollars a year, until we could come to terms with Brazil. We made exchange freely available: we offered Brazil an open market, simple customs procedures and a low tariff, on the whole far lower than the United States. We should not be penalized on this account. It was in Brazil's interests to treat a country that acted as we did favourably, as an encouragement to others to follow our lead: against her interests to put us at a disadvantage.

15. I suggested now was a profitable moment for Brazil to begin payments to us. The Aranha plan, though it had not put Brazil in funds, opened new prospects and gave a fairer chance to all to enter the Brazilian market. On the strength of Aranha's actions, we were advising all Canadian firms interested in Brazil to take a new look at prospects under his plan. A beginning on arrears would be an added stimulus to trade. For a small outlay, a fair share of what Brazil is devoting to such payments from her own resources, she stood to benefit, perhaps even in direct commercial credits, far more than she stood to lose.

16. Aranha said it was time Brazil gave some thought to Canadian case. He certainly saw no reason for Canada being at a disadvantage for he thought Brazilians might prefer to deal with Canada. But Brazil's position was bad; far worse than he had thought when he took office. (I will send you data separately). The terms of American loans weighed very heavy. True, the original terms have been modified: the date of beginning of payments had been deferred; but payments have been compressed into shorter periods. He seemed to resent it as a hard bargain. Nevertheless, he would see if anything could be done and would discuss it with his advisers. I expect to hear within the next few days.

17. Because Brazilian foreign exchange outlook is so dark I am not hopeful, still there is an outside chance that Aranha may see fit to make some payments on our accounts. If he does not I think we will have to let the matter rest for a while. There seems no point in forcing the Ministry of External Relations to answer our old note. Without Aranha's consent there is nothing they can do for us and if we press them to answer they will have to say no. It seems better to leave note unanswered and wait for another opportunity.

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Secretary of State for External Affairs

DESPATCH E-75 Ottawa, May 30, 1953

URUGUAY IMPORT RESTRICTIONS

The Department of Trade and Commerce has informed us that the Commercial Secretary in Buenos Aires has advised about a recent case of discrimination against Canadian goods in the allocation of foreign exchange for imports by Uruguay. In a circular dated November 6, 1952 an exchange quota of $80,000 was made available for importation of seeds into Uruguay from the United States. Canadian seeds apparently were not eligible for importation under this quota and a Canadian seed exporting firm sought the assistance of the Department of Trade and Commerce in obtaining the removal of this discrimination. Recently a similar case occurred when an exchange quota, notified on March 28, 1953, of $100,000 was established for imports of antibiotics from United States only.

2. I understand that the Honorary Commercial Agent for Canada in Uruguay, on investigating this case, was told by officials of the Exchange Control Commission that licenses for imports from the United States may be utilized for merchandise of United States origin and/or from Canada, except in cases where the Commission expressly stipulates otherwise. It would appear, therefore, that the Uruguayan authorities seem to feel free to discriminate as between the United States and Canada.

3. Article II of the Canada-Uruguay Trade Agreement provides for equal treatment in the allocation of dollar exchange. It reads "The Contracting Parties will grant each other in all matters pertaining to the allocation of exchange made available for commercial transactions or in the allocation of quotas, either in respect of exchange or in respect of quantitative control of imports, treatment not less favourable than is granted to any other country".

4. As the ability of Canadian firms to compete in the Uruguayan market is impaired by this discrimination, and moreover as it is not in accordance with our Trade Agreement with Uruguay, I should be grateful if you would bring this matter to the attention of the Uruguayan Government and let me know what reply you receive. In addressing your note to the Foreign Ministry, it should state our concern about this discriminatory treatment and express our hope that Uruguay will in future ensure equality of treatment for Canadian goods in the allocation of dollar exchange.

CANADA-URUGUAY TRADE AGREEMENT — ADDITIONAL PROTOCOL

After waiting three months we have finally received an answer to the official protest which you had asked me to address to the Department of Foreign Relations concerning a concrete case of discrimination against Canadian goods in the allocation of foreign exchange. You will find enclosed a copy of the reply in the original language (Spanish)† and my own translation in English of the said text.

2. The Bank of the Republic, which is the competent authority in this matter, states, in substance, that the terms of the Trade Agreement existing between the two countries cannot be interpreted in any other way than that "to a given volume of commercial exchanges between two or more countries should correspond an equal allocation of foreign exchange in each instance". Elaborating on this point, the Bank authorities add that "Canada benefitted, for the payment of her exports to

This reference should actually be to Document 1111; see paragraph 1 of Document 1113.

Uruguay, from the reserve in foreign exchange obtained by Uruguay through her exports to the United States".

3. This interpretation of the Treaty imposes, of course, a very restrictive conception of the commercial relations which should exist between countries. Your comments on this point would be greatly appreciated, not only for our enlightenment in the present discussion, but mostly for our future guidance in this respect. Both the Bank of the Republic and the Head of the Economic Division insist in private conversations, on the necessity for us to individualize more our purchases from Uruguay as for instance in the purchases of Uruguayan wool from Boston. It would help materially to build the foreign exchange reserve so badly needed in cases such as those mentioned in your letter under reference. At the present time, our wool purchases made in Boston are credited in US dollars to the United States, and unless our imports from Uruguay are clearly defined and reported it seems that we may run again against this difficulty.

4. I remain at your disposal for whatever further action you may consider desirable in this case.

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Le ministre des Relations extérieures d'Uruguay au chargé d'affaires en Uruguay [Traduction]

Minister of External Relations of Uruguay to Chargé d'Affaires in Uruguay [Translation]

[Montevideo, n.d.]

Mr. Chargé d'Affaires,

I have the honour to refer to your note regarding the allocation of foreign exchange for the importation of goods by Uruguay, and the provisions of the Trade Agreement existing between our two countries respecting this question.

In this connection our Department has communicated with the Bank of the Republic asking for a report on an apparent case of discrimination in the recent allocations of foreign exchange.

The following answer has been received from the Bank of the Republic:

"In the opinion of this General sub-administration the provisions invoked (by the Canadian Embassy) cannot have another meaning than to a given volume of commercial exchanges between two or more countries should correspond an equal allocation of foreign exchange in each instance. It is evident that if we did act otherwise one or the other would suffer a prejudice.

"But such is not the situation in the present case, if we cast a glance at the commercial exchanges between Uruguay and Canada during the years 1949, 1950 and 1951:

(These figures have been supplied by the office of the Comptroller of Imports and Exports).

	Canada		United States of America
	Exports	Imports	Exports	Imports
1949	846,000	2,495,900	50,305,000	39,517,000
1950	1,898,000	1,796,000	129,150,000	39,266,000
1951	845,000	6,056,000	102,442,000	140,025,000
	$3,589,000	10,347,000	281,897,000	218,808,000
	More Imports $6,758,900		More Exports $63,089,000

"We regret that we do not have on hand the complementary figures for 1952 nor for the first six months of the present year, which should undoubtedly show the same trends.

"It seems obvious that the claim of the Canadian Embassy is not a reasonable one and that Canada has benefited, for the payment of her exports to Uruguay, from the reserve in foreign exchange obtained by our country from our exports to United States.

"It is also fair to add that the policy adopted by the Bank in all matters of allocation of foreign exchange generally follows the principle of reciprocity in commercial relations. If this principle had been strictly adhered to in the case of Canada a restriction of her exports to Uruguay would have undoubtedly followed, and we must further add that the trend observed in the commercial exchanges between the two countries do not leave us any other alternative but to envisage with a restrictive mind the requests for allocation of foreign exchange of purchases to be made in the said country.

"With the assurance etc.

LETTER NO. 196 Montevideo, October 15, 1953

URUGUAY IMPORT RESTRICTIONS

Reference: Our letter No. 194 of October 13, 1953.

Our letter No. 194 of October 13th, was given the wrong reference and the wrong subject matter although it refers to the general subject of Canada-Uruguay trade. The reference should have been your Despatch No. E-75 of May 30th and the subject, Uruguay Import Restrictions. Also your despatch was marked "secret" and our letter was inadvertently sent by registered airmail.

2. On the same subject I wish to add the following quotation from the Regulations of the Bank of the Oriental Republic of Uruguay dealing with exchange control on exports and imports. This quotation will throw further light on the attitude adopted by the Government of Uruguay in their dealings with Canadian trade matters. It is revealing of the strict interpretation given to trade agreements concluded between Uruguay and other countries. It is also an indication that our trade relations with Uruguay will not be easy unless the balance of trade with this country reaches some kind of equilibrium.

3. The above mentioned quotation reads as follows:

"Import quotas allotted to each country. -

The Bank of the Republic shall fix the import quotas according to the monthly statistics of the amount of foreign exchange invested by the other countries in the purchase of Uruguayan produce, at the rate of at least 75% of the said amounts, under deduction of the sums necessary to the service of External Debt, if any.

The said contingents may be fixed at the rate of controlled market or free market, according to the kind of foreign exchange yielded by each purchasing country.

Those countries which habitually buy Uruguayan products are in a more advantageous situation that enables them to sell their goods to Uruguay, as it creates the means that are necessary for the payment of their own merchandise.

However, certain raw materials and articles are produced only in countries that have no import contingent available. In those cases, collective quotas are fixed, the allotment of which is made with a restrictive criterium because, as Uruguay depends on exportation for its resources, it must needs give the preference for imports to the countries that buy Uruguayan products, in order to avoid disturbances in its commercial balance."

LETTER NO. 189 Ottawa, December 17, 1953

URUGUAYAN IMPORT CONTROLS

Reference: Your letter No. 194 of Oct. 13 and No. 196 of Oct. 15.

The reply of the Government of Uruguay to your last note on discrimination against Canada in the allocation of foreign exchange is unsatisfactory and indicative of a restrictive and incorrect interpretation of both the spirit and the letter of The 1936 Trade Agreement between our two countries.

2. It is apparent that Uruguay's policy is to allocate foreign currency to importers in proportion to the amount of that currency available from the proceeds of Uruguayan exports to the country concerned. The implication is clearly for bilateral balancing of exchange regardless of whether or not the currency in question is convertible. By following such a policy, Uruguay discriminates against Canada and in favour of the United States in the allocation of dollar exchange. Since Uruguay applies this policy to all countries they argue that it is non-discriminatory and in accordance with the provisions of Article II of our Trade Agreement which states:

"The Contracting Parties will grant each other in all matters pertaining to the allocation of exchange made available for commercial transactions or in the allocation of quotas, either in respect of exchange or in respect of quantitative control of imports, treatment not less favourable than is granted to any other country."

3. We cannot agree with this restrictive interpretation of Article II which would render meaningless the most-favoured-nation provision of that Article and which is contrary to the generally accepted usage and intent of that provision. As a matter of interest, if we did agree with the Uruguayan interpretation of this Article, Canada would have grounds for imposing restrictions on imports from Uruguay now, inasmuch as our trade statistics show that Canadian exports to Uruguay for the first 9 months of 1953 amounted to some $1.6 million as compared with imports from Uruguay totalling $2.4 million in the first 8 months of 1953.

4. In the circumstances we feel that it is essential that you should make further representations to the Uruguayan Government, particularly in view of the latest case of discrimination brought to our attention by the Commercial Secretary in his letter of December 1 to the Director of the Trade Commissioner Service describing the allocation by Uruguay of an exchange quota of $200,000 for imports of pneumatic tires and tubes from the United Kingdom, France and the United States only.† In the enclosure to this letter you will find an outline of the main points which can be used in your note to the Foreign Ministry.† You will observe that we have drawn attention to the implications of Uruguay's accession to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT). As you know, Uruguay has announced its intention to accede to GATT and the attached draft note was prepared on the assumption that Uruguay's final accession would proceed as a matter of course. However, if by the time you make your representations it is clear that Uruguay has decided not to carry out its announced intention of acceding to GATT, there would, of course, be little point including the references to GATT in your note.

5. In addition to the points referred to in the enclosure to this letter, you may wish to mention to the Uruguayan authorities that even in the absence of treaty obligations it is difficult to see the purpose of the procedure adopted by Uruguay. There may be some logic to such procedure when applied to the trade of countries with inconvertible currencies and which then maintain controls on imports from Uruguay. In trade with Canada a country with freely convertible currency and with no controls over trade such segregation of accounts does not appear to us to serve any real purpose either in safeguarding Uruguay's balance of payments or increasing Uruguayan exports. In fact, the only results of such action would be to reduce the opportunities for obtaining competitive goods for the Uruguayan economy, and to undermine the confidence and goodwill which exist in Canada towards our trade with Uruguay.

LETTER NO. 6 Montevideo, January 11, 1954

URUGUAYAN EXPORT CONTROL

Reference: Your letter No. 189, dated December 17, 1953.

Your suggestion to send a further protest to the Uruguayan authorities on discrimination shown in the past against Canada in the allocation of foreign exchange has been studied bearing in mind recent developments along these lines. Whether on account of our previous protests, or on account of the personal interventions of both the commercial secretary and myself, there seems to exist an improvement in the attitude towards Canada in this regard.

2. Following the Commercial Secretary's arrival in Montevideo a certain number of formal calls were arranged to afford him an opportunity to meet the government officials dealing with foreign trade. We first visited the Chief of the Economic Division of the Department of Relaciones Exteriores. We later called on the head of the Bank of the Republic and other officials of the same institution stressing in all cases the importance attached by the Canadian Government to equality of treatment between nations in the dollar area, especially the United States of America, when any amount was allotted for imports from these countries. The reception everywhere was friendly but a little elusive.

3. It is thought that we finally knocked at the right door when we paid our call on the controller of the Import and Export Board who stated to us that, as far as he was concerned, he saw no reason why Canada should not figure amongst the prospective suppliers on the same footing as the United States, whenever a quota was opened in our area. Immediately after our visit, and probably too soon to expect any tangible result, another quota was announced omitting again the name of Canada. In agreement with the Commercial Secretary, a letter was directed to the Controller on December 1st (copy enclosed†) reminding him of his promise and requesting for Canada equality of treatment with other competitors.

4. Since then, only one quota was granted and Canada was comprised among the prospective tenderers. The Commercial Secretary makes a constant examination of all the quotas granted for imports which have not revealed any inimical action against us. Although no reply has been received to our letter of December 1st, it may be that a change of heart has taken place on the part of the Uruguayan authorities.

5. For these considerations, and the Commercial Secretary's memorandum on this subject (copy enclosed) supports these views, it may prove more profitable to hold your letter in abeyance unless the Import and Export Control Board reverts to their objectionable practice. If and when a recurrence of discrimination against Canada happens, immediate use will be made of your letter.

URUGUAYAN IMPORT CONTROLS

Referring to: Letter from the Under-Secretary of State of External Affairs dated December 17th 1953.

1. While agreeing entirely that the theory the Uruguayan Authorities follow in granting foreign exchange on a bilateral basis is unsatisfactory, I am not sure that in practice this theory is always followed. Just at present I don't think Canada can complain.

2. You will recall that when we called on the Head of the Economic Section of the Uruguayan Department of External Relations, the bilateral theory was strongly defended, and when we called on the Central Bank it was again defended; when, however, we visited the Foreign Exchange Control Board Chief,[14] we were relieved to find that that individual felt that as far as he was concerned there was no difference between Canadian and American dollars.

3. Subsequently, when the next case came to my notice of an import quota being made available from the United States but not from Canada, you protested to the chief of the Uruguayan Import and Export Control Board. I suggested this for two reasons. Firstly, he was the most sympathetic to our point of view. Secondly, it is he who is in the firing line, as it were. In other words, the Economic Section of the Department of External Affairs formulates policy, the Central Bank makes the amounts of Foreign Currency available, but it is the Import and Export Control Board which, as far as I could ascertain, decides what to do with the monies made available by the Bank.

i.e. Import & Export Control Board.

4. We wrote to the Chief of the Import and Export Control Board on 1st December last requesting that Canada be named as a supplier every time the USA was. Although we have not been favoured with a reply there has, since that time, been no recurrence of the practice, objectionable to us, of naming the United States but not Canada as a supplier.

5. Under the circumstances I would think it inadvisable to dispatch a note along the lines suggested by your Department to the local authorities at this present juncture, but to hold the draft letter in readiness should the Import and Export Control Board again revert to the objectionable practice referred to above. It is possible that if we refrain from making an official protest to the Uruguayan Department of External Relations the present satisfactory allocation of import quotas may continue. On the other hand it is possible that if we do send a note of protest, stronger or more detailed instructions might be sent down to the Import and Export Control Board whereby Canada would be mentioned less often as a supplier.

6. Regarding the final paragraph of the letter you have received from the Department, while reiterating that the theories followed by the Uruguayan Authorities in the granting of exchange are objectionable, I do not find it difficult to see their purposes. Their bilateral approach to trade and the fact that their trade figures (which are always very late) show an unfavourable balance, from their point of view, with Canada, forces me to devote more thought to the importation of Uruguayan merchandise than would otherwise be the case.
